Germany, Italy, France, and Japan were in ruins after World War II. Today they are part of the vanguard of the world of the future, with so much wealth that they now try to export in order to avoid problems of having surplus capital within the country.

But in all these countries, great efforts have been made to improve the condition of the people: How? Very simply: through the establishment of high taxes and the implementation of ambitious social security programs, using the resources collected through the high tax rate.

The tax system is a suitable mechanism for redistributing wealth, and if it is used sensibly, it enables productive businesses to continue to operate without problems and even to expand.

But on the contrary, a state takeover generates incompetence, bureaucracy, shortages, corruption, and in the end, poverty.

It isn't difficult to realize which course we should choose, if we want changes in a framework of freedom, peace, and prosperity. These are some of the issues that our Assembly members should keep in mind so that, in drafting the new constitution, they may create an instrument of justice and progress capable of promoting, without demagogy, the transformations that will lead us to wealth, the well-being of the majority of the people, the modernization of the nation, and a significant expansion of our autonomy, without eroding our freedoms, human rights, and the possibility of developing--without red tape--all the creative potential of the mind.

7679
CSO: 3010

BORGE SPEAKS AT FUNERAL OF ASSASSINATED OFFICIAL

PA011556 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0300 GMT 1 Oct 80

[Excerpts] The funeral of Companero Rodolfo Amador Gallegos, chief of state security operations in Matagalpa department, and his brother, Francisco, was held this afternoon in Matagalpa. As we have reported, they were both assassinated by Pedro Pablo and Paul Zeledon Rivera who are being actively sought.

Guerrilla Commander Javier Carrion, chief of the 4th military region, Companero (Ausberto) Paladino, on behalf of the mass organizations, and Interior Minister Commander Tomas Borge Martinez spoke at an event after the funeral mass in the San Jose Church. The interior minister highlighted the revolutionary qualities of the murdered companeros and then referred to those who call for a demilitarization of the country as our process is being threatened and as crimes like the one against the Amador Gallegos brothers are being committed. Here is Commander Tomas Borge's statement:

[Begin Borge recording] They are cowards and criminals by definition and they are defying us. If they have achieved anything it is that we (?have lost) our patience with the enemies of our revolution and of our people. They have achieved this. And we not only want the criminals who killed the Amador brothers to know this. We are going to pursue them wherever they are and the full weight of revolutionary justice will implacably fall upon them. It is not only these two criminals. We are talking about those who are behind them, the enemies of the people, enemies who wear different faces. Sometimes they wear the faces of politicians. Sometimes they hide behind a newspaper or a radio station. More guilty than those who commit the crimes are the cowards who are behind them, promoting those crimes. We will be implacable with one as well as the other.

That is why a companero here referred to the articles in a Nicaraguan newspaper by an individual who expressed alarm and protested the fact that we have militias and armed men and protested the spirit of defense of the revolution and the fatherland. What would happen if we disarmed ourselves? What would happen to our brother militiamen? What would occur if we were so childish and idiotic as to believe in that peace which our enemies offer us? Let us suppose that we threw the rifles that we won in combat into the sea. Then the guardsmen outside the country and the enemies inside the country and their godfathers, would destroy this revolution in 24 hours.

Real power decides the country's destiny and the real power is the organized people. It is the organized masses who are not organized in some haph zard way but who are the organized and armed masses. Our people will have to be armed. We have a country of armed men and women, of armed men, women, old people and children.

We must be very clear because there are some people who have [false] expectations, who have not even understood who has the power in this country. They have not realized that the armed workers and peasants have the power in this country.

We want them to know that this cannot continue. We want them to know that no one can afford the luxury of messing around [manosear] with the Sandinist revolutionaries and the Sandinist revolution no matter who he thinks he is, no matter how pretty his face is, no matter how perfumed his armpits are. We will never permit our revolution and our revolutionaries to be disrespected.

CSO: 3010

BUSINESSMEN AT LIMA MEETING CRITICIZE SANDINISTS

PA261806 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0224 GMT 25 Sep 80

[Text] Lima, 24 Sep (EFE)--Nicaraguan businessmen voiced here today their opposition to a leftist dictatorship being installed in their country.

"We did not want the rightist tyranny and now that we have the experience, we will not permit pressures from a leftist tyranny," Jorge Salazar, representative of the Higher Council of Private Enterprise, has stated.

In a news conference, Salazar said that the government's plan for 1980 is "very good," but "unfortunately it is not being fulfilled."

"For example, elections will not be called until 1984, but the people want to exercise this democratic right as soon as possible," he added.

Salazar noted that the Nicaraguan people are trying to achieve a democracy "to which they are entitled, after so many years of tyranny," but it appears that "the Sandinist government is overzealous and there is the risk that it could be transformed into a leftist dictatorship."

"We trust that businessmen of all democratic countries will support us so we can manage to rebuild our country's destroyed economy, which runs the risk of remaining as it is," Salazar stressed.

"The democratic elections held in Peru are a model which we would like to put in practice," he said.

Salazar headed the Nicaraguan delegation to the 16th Latin American Congress of Industrialists which ended today in Lima.

On Tuesday, the Nicaraguan businessmen at the congress charged that the Cubans control a large part of the business structure in the fields of transportation, communications, security, and police organizations of their country.

Ismael Garcia, president of the Chamber of Commerce of Nicaragua, noted that his country is not in a position to have a Marxist dictatorship, "which is envisaged in the political horizon" of Nicaragua.

The Nicaraguan businessmen also reported that the defeated Somozist regime left behind a $3 billion deficit in reserves and a $1.6 billion foreign debt.

CSO: 3010

FUNCTION OF PRESS IN REVOLUTIONARY SOCIETY DISCUSSED

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 23 Aug 80 pp 3, 14

/Article by Ignacio Briones Torres: "Journalism and Revolution"/

[Text] It should come as no surprise that only after 19 July were some issues, issues which have been debated throughout the world for a long time, discovered and discussed in our country. We have barely emerged from the shadows.

On the topic of journalism and its function in society, and the journalist and his duties toward the people, while there have been some beginnings of a debate--especially in the enlightening years of the final struggle against the dictatorship--the issue of what can and what should be said is an inexhaustible and never-ending topic, since the responsibility of the journalist can in no way be separated from the historic tasks that the Popular Sandinist Revolution has set concerning the achievement of our national enhancement, the rescue of our authentic national values, and the political, social, and economic development of our people.

The recent holding in Managua of the fifth meeting of the news agencies pool of the nonalined countries, along with the persistent and unflagging campaign to spread false information about our revolutionary system, make the debate now going on in Nicaragua a current issue. This debate deals with freedom of expression, the journalist's exercise of his profession, the ideological struggle, national sovereignty, the right to self-determination, and the undeniable need to smash forever the old concepts which have for so many years been used to change thousands of journalists all over the world into eunuchs, most of them imbued with the false objectivist and "impartial" philosophy of journalism.

In this regard, the expert, Hector Mujica, has written: "Deformed by the implacable exercise of their profession, journalists are accustomed to saying that their function is limited solely to informing. Let others express their opinion, say reporters. These 'others' are editorial writers, the writers of articles featured on the editorial page, and columnists paid to defend special interests." And most of these special interests, we add, never correspond to the interests of the immense majority of our peoples.

The U.S. school has managed to impose on many of our countries the false objectivisit philosophy, which many accept and respect without any judgment. The journalist's bondage to the rule of the "five Ws" (what, who, in what way, when, and where), by always ignoring the question "why," has led to the worst and crudest distortions of the facts, distortions which are printed in the daily press.

This school--or the application of its postulates--entails a deliberate distortion, a plan of cultural penetration and domination that has led to the alienation and weakening of journalism and of journalists.

Methods of deception have been raised to the category of a science by those who, in the imperialist nations, manipulate the great underdeveloped world to which we belong. The press is being "magazinized" with topics that are sometimes termed "human interest" stories, but which, in reality, are only superficial. This is how journalism is given a supposed "entertaining" nature whose purpose is to separate men from the heroic days which must still be completed if we want to achieve, or rather, to construct our own destiny.

All of the Nicaraguan press--except the workers, students, party, and revolutionary journals, which have always been in a minority--have traditionally been under the influence of North American journalism. That meant that the press has followed their guidelines and copied proimperialist formulas, which amounts to saying that they have placed themselves in the service of the interests of Washington, thus taking an obvious antinationalist and anti-internationalist position.

We find this to be true when we just review what we might call "the major Nicaraguan press" of recent decades, including the radio and television media. The difference can be seen today by just listening to the radio, watching television, or reading journals which serve the people, and comparing them with those which support the forces of counterrevolution.

The revolutionary journalists have worked to develop a new form of journalism, working at the side of the people, guiding, orienting, clarifying, educating, organizing; by its very nature, this is a break with the old traditions. The second type of journalists are clinging desperately to the old formulas, realizing that the great masses of the people--who have been deformed by these very journalists--are still bearing the burden of what was meant by freedom of the press.

The first category, the revolutionary journalists, are working to create the new society which we all want. The others are persisting in the defense of a system that is now falling into ruin all over the world, which in our country the Nicaraguan people--at the cost of their heroic blood--began to bury a year ago. The revolutionary journalists, working with the mass organizations, with our Vanguard, and with all progressive Nicaraguans, are creating the nation of the future for the new generations still to come. The others want, and are fighting stubbornly, so that these new generations will continue to be victimized by exploitation, ignorance, and dependence, as we were.

We should distinguish, then, between what the bourgeois classes mean by freedom, and what the true freedom of the majority of the people is. And we should also realize that the bourgeois concept of freedom of the press means, in essence, their freedom to tell their truth, which is equivalent to their right to defend the privileges they have always enjoyed at the cost of the exploitation of the people.

The meeting we mentioned earlier also discussed the term, the New International Information Order. Its objectives are explained by our comrade Juan Somavia on this page.

There can be no free journalism without a free nation, proclaimed our UPN [Union of Nicaraguan Journalists] and the unforgettable Union of Radio Journalists, during the crucial days of the anti-Somozist battle. Today, through the heroic action of our people led by the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front], we have a free nation. More than ever before, we must create a free journalism. That means a popular, anti-imperialist, internationalist journalism. A journalism always at the side of our people; against the enemies of the people. To achieve this state of affairs, we must increase our knowledge of those issues, which have been, to a certain extent, ignored, those issues to which we referred at the beginning of this article. One of those issues we have just begun to cover here.

7679
CSO: 3010

COUNTRY SEEN SEARCHING FOR OWN SYSTEM

Amsterdam ELSEVIERS MAGAZINE in Dutch 23 Aug 80 pp 34-37

[Report by Sig. W. Wolf: "Uzis Passed Beyond the Steps of the Presidential Palace"]

> [Text] Suriname's President Chin A. Sen has experienced hard times. Intrigues from the left and right attempted to overthrow his government. The coup d'etat of 25 February did not seem to have penetrated enough into society. Therefore the Uzis passed beyond the steps of the presidential palace last week. A triumvirate now has nestled itself firmly at the top.

Somber expressions showed on the faces of members of Suriname's completely new National Military Council (NMR) when on 3 March, a week after the coup d'etat, they had had a first meeting with President Ferrier. The visit lasted barely an hour. It took 4 hours before Sergeant Bouterse, one of the leaders in the coup d'etat of 25 February, read a statement in the Independence Hotel about the presentation of the NMR in the presidential palace, with a lump in his throat. The president and the NMR had agreed that the army "would direct all its actions and activities within the constitution to the interest and well-being of the entire Surinam population." It was abundantly clear: the president ultimately would still have his say. The Uzis had knocked the Arron Government off its seat, but they had been silenced on the steps of the palace. As would appear later, that caused great exacerbation among the military.

After the rapid intervention of the government and army leadership, the new president, Dr Henk Chin A. Sen, stated with relief that the First Surinam Republic had died and that now the second one was being born. The funeral speech had been ready for a few weeks already. The last "monarch" of the First Republic, President Ferrier, had over-estimated himself and the democratic inclination of the army. Convinced of his carefully developed, almost untouchable authority, he had announced his intention of presenting the budget to the parliament that had been pushed aside, in a formal session on 1 September. That intention loomed like a specter before Prime Minister Chin A Sen and Army Commander Daisy Bouterse. A president who acted as if nothing had happened prior to 25 February and who jauntily dallied before a festive hall with disputed members of parliament, was hard to swallow for the military. Prime Minister Chin A Sen obviously was of the opinion that President Ferrier went diametrically against all the agreements with this deed. During the next 2 years parliament would be ignored in order to enable the government and the army to drastically reform the political organization. Instead of political parties on a racial basis, there would be parties with an ideological character. In this manner the reformers wanted to get even with the decayed system which was Suriname's downfall.

The constitutional crisis which had been announced with Ferrier's audacious plans turned out to be an excellent opportunity for Prime Minister Chin A Sen and the army to get rid of radical obstacles in the revolutionary proceedings. In the past months it had been repeatedly obvious that President Ferrier wanted to utilize the personal powers offered to him by the constitution. Among these are the consulting of the Advisory Council in effecting laws, treaties and state decisions. This Advisory Council, made up of persons appointed by Arron, the prime minister who was removed from office on 25 February, didn't demonstrate any great hurry in supplying advice on the proposals made by the government. To the contrary; everything indicated that they, together with Ferrier, didn't mind supporting the old Arron stars and their adherents.

Thus the study of the special court to prosecute persons who had been guilty of serious forms of corruption had already lasted over 2 months without having made any progress. Meanwhile those persons were freed and some of them, such as former Minister Michael Brahim and Arron advisor Ewalt Karamat Ali, were able to escape. In a stealthy manner, political- and family-nepotism were brought back again. Ferrier let himself be more and more won over by the old order which is opposed to the ambitious reforms of Chin A Sen. The prime minister apparently watched this with misgiving. Chin A Sen had the military intervene primarily because he noticed that in his cabinet some ministers adopted the Ferrier-Arron line, which threatened his reform program.

He was afraid of losing credibility when it became clear that, in the hurry with which his cabinet had been put together, the fact that some of his ministers did not have clean hands had escaped attention. In addition, appointments in key positions in government posts and in semi-government agencies caused suspicion in the population. Thus a formerly dismissed director of Suriname's national airlines, Surinam Airways, was brought back in order to take charge of that airline company.

Trouble arose also within the National Military Council. At the end of May, however, peace had been concluded when the NMR and the army leadership announced unanimously that the country would be governed by the government and no one else. Within the NMR, however, relations between leftist and rightist members were very troubled. The leftist members of the council -- Chairman Sital, Abrahams and Joeman -- let themselves be taken in tow by leaders of leftist groups. The conflict within the NMR surfaced when Chairman Sital and Council Member Joeman made a trip on their own accord to Nicaragua to celebrate the first anniversary of the overthrow of the Somoza Government. In Managua both NMR members embraced PLO Leader Arafat and Cuban President Castro. The latter even promised arms aid. After their return from Nicaragua, Sital and his followers were turned out of the NMR. It was disappointing to army leader Daisy Bouterse and Prime Minister Chin A Sen that Sital refused to let himself be promoted out and simply rejected a high post in the army. He refused to serve under his former friend and colleague Bouterse and gave preference to going his own way. This attitude is extremely dangerous for a military person who has acquired a taste for the revolution.

President Chin A Sen, continually plagued by conflicts with President Ferrier, the difficulties within his cabinet and the bickering within the NMR, was going under. He was faced with the choice of either giving up and leaving the fight for power up to the Ferrier-Arron block or the Sital group, or of staying on and blocking the way of the two groups craving power. Chin A Sen opted for staying on, because it was clear that otherwise Sital's leftist group would ultimately be the winner. This would be impossible also for Army Commander Daisy Bouterse to swallow. Thus he hurried to the presidential palace last week and forced Ferrier to resign.

The eliminating of the left and the right in Surinam fits very well into the tough policy which Chin A Sen had planned when he took up the post of prime minister in March. Also clearly recognizable in this policy is the hand of Dr Andre Haakmat. Chin A Sen brought the latter as his advisor and confidant to Paramaribo last March from Amsterdam, where he was an inspector of education. After last week's coup, he was appointed vice prime minister, minister of foreign affairs, justice, police and the army.

In 1963, together with Haakmat and Mr Eddy Bruma, Chin A Sen founded the Party of the Nationalist Republic, a primarily Creole party with a large following among the youth and intellectuals. In the course of time the political ideas diverged, but nationalism continued to stand as the common goal. Haakmat is an exceptional person. An erudite one seldom meets any longer. Moreover he is not only extremely intelligent, but also someone with great energy. He took his doctorate in economy and law. He also studied psychology, didactics, pedagogy and philosophy. He did all those studies in his free time, just as he had a practice as licensed psychotherapist in his free time. During the negotiations on the independence of Surinam in 1975 he designed an allocation regulation in which, amongst others, a plea was made for the stability of Dutch aid to Surinam. The Dutch delegation turned a deaf ear to that proposal. During the recent visit of Minister De Koning to Surinam, the stability turned out to be the breaking point in the debate between Surinam and the [Dutch] minister of development aid.

The triumvirate of Chin A Sen, Bouterse and Haakmat will settle the future developments in the country. One need not worry about the support of the population. The latter will accept everything for the moment being, as long as it does not mean restoration of the old system of nepotism and criminality or limitless power for the military.

Surinam and the Surinamers are by no means ready for any political system which would be absolute, totalitarian or even moderately totalitarian. In elections during past years the Surinamers have rejected by absolute majority every government which has its foundations in so-called Marxist-Leninist thinking or variations thereof, despite the devotion and honest conviction of primarily many young intellectuals who tried to market their philosophy, principles and views in the city and in the country. The new triumvirate is facing the almost impossible task of reining in the country administratively and economically because manpower is lacking, the battle against corruption is stagnating, and wage demands and prices are increasing greatly.

The toughest task however will be to reshape the parliamentary-democratic political system into an individual model with an individual trait, useful for individual Surinam needs in constitutional law and politics. The current model, of Western European origin and strongly influenced by Western Europeans, is sustained by monarchial, feudal and colonial philosophies from a distant past. With the sad result that only the repetitive coup d'etat, although without great massacres so far, offers any solace. But it does indeed increase fear and uncertainty in the population and it more and more erodes faith abroad.

8700
CSO: 3105

VENEZUELAN OIL MINISTER DISCUSSES OPEC MEETING

AU191043 Rome ANSA in English 0833 GMT 19 Sep 80

[Excerpt] Rome, 19 Sep (ANSA)--The Venezuelan minister of petroleum, Humberto Calderon Berti, named guarantees for crude supplies matched by guarantees for technical and technological assistance as the key for future comprehensive policy to govern relations between oil producers and consumer nations in a statement delivered last night in Rome.

Speaking to a group of cabinet ministers and figures from Italy's economic and banking circles, gathered for a conference sponsored by the Italo-Venezuelan Chamber of Commerce and the People's Bank of Novara, Calderon Berti cited his country's relations with Italy as an example of the direction producer-consumer dealings should take.

Calderon Berti mentioned the "complementary nature" of the two nations' offerings and said that Venezuela is seeking to develop new forms of agreement with Italy.

"We are laying the groundwork with the Italian Government," the oil minister disclosed, "for negotiations that can be termed revolutionary in the context of international relations because they are based on guarantees for oil supplies for Italy in exchange for technological assistance for Venezuela."

In general, according to the minister, the problem for the future will not be the price of oil but the supply. "The price of petroleum," he said, "does not represent its real value."

"We are not aiming at sharp increases in the price of petroleum," the minister explained, "but we do not want the real value of crude to decline. The relationship between economic growth and consumption is a factor which we feel should be incorporated into the price of crude," he added.

Moving on to the meeting in Vienna of the petroleum, finance and foreign minister from the organization of petroleum exporting countries, which he attended before his arrival in Rome, Calderon Berti affirmed that, "The meeting was a success. Contrary to what the Western press reported, it was not a failure."

The Venezuelan minister went on to explain,"OPEC is not a club of rich nations which sets the price of crude. The Vienna conference continued the search for new mechanisms on which to base pricing policy.

"The goal is to allow the producing countries to avoid seeing their earnings decline and to give the industrialized nations the chance to forecast the trend of crude prices," Calderon Berti said.

Looking to the future, the oil minister disclosed that the OPEC conference slated for Baghdad will formulate "new proposals for a system to determine oil prices based on three factors: indexing the price on the base of the rate of inflation the industrialized countries export to the OPEC members, linking prices to a basket of currencies and not exclusively to the dollar, and a quarterly updating of prices."

Back on the general issue of producer-consumer dealings, the Venezuelan cabinet minister said that the OPEC conference in Vienna managed to lay the groundwork for new relations between the industrialized and producer countries and warned, in this connection, that the consumers must learn to export the technology really needed by the developing countries and not merely those goods and services the rich nations want to market.

CSO: 3020

END

JPRS 76616

14 October 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2201

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76616

14 October 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2201

CONTENTS

BAHAMAS

Growing Unemployment To Be Investigated by House Committee
(Gladstone Thurston; THE TRIBUNE, 18 Sep 80)..... 1

Briefs
Haitian Refugees Arrested 3

BRAZIL

Newly Elected FIESP President Speaks of Reforms
(Salomao Schvartzman, Durval Ferreira; MANCHETE, 20 Sep 80)..... 4

Vice President Interviewed on Political Situation
(Aureliano Chaves Interview; MANCHETE, 20 Sep 80)..... 8

Polls Show People Support Figueiredo Against Terrorism
(Murilo Melo Filho; MANCHETE, 13 Sep 80)..... 12

Poll Shows Scepticism on Promised Inflation Drop
(Murilo Melo Filho; MANCHETE, 20 Sep 80)..... 17

Tavares To Remain as Second Army Commander; Interview
(Various sources, various dates)..... 22

'Liberalization Is Untouchable'
Condemns 'Any Terrorist Act', Milton Tavares Interview

New Saudi Envoy Says He Will Not Interfere in PLO Relations
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 9 Aug 80)..... 30

Comments at Inter-American Symposium on Energy; Document
(Various sources, various dates)..... 32

'Not Government's Problem Alone'
Risks of Economic Stagnation, by Joao Figueiredo
Emphasis on Integrated Development
Political Side of Problem
Sizable Agricultural Expansion Required
Human Side of Crisis
'No Electric-Power Crisis'
PETROBRAS Sticks to Petroleum

National Claims in Antarctic Still Undefined
(O GLOBO, 10 Aug 80)..... 45

Langoni Says Established Strategy Will Not Change
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 3 Sep 80)..... 48

Student Support for Netto's Economic Policies Seen
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 2 Sep 80)..... 51

Braspetro Investments Total $400 Million in 8 Years
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 29 Aug 80)..... 53

Petroleum Production in 1980 To Increase 17 Percent Over 1979
(O GLOBO, 27 Aug 80)..... 56

Serra Pelada Produces 1.1 Tons of Gold During August
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 4 Sep 80)..... 57

EMBRAER Announces Purchases of Aircraft by France
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 4 Sep 80)..... 58

New Alcohol Program Designed Exclusively for Export
(JORNAL DO BRASIL, 28 Aug 80)..... 59

Cement Firms To Form 'Pool' for Mining Coal
(O GLOBO, 26 Aug 80)..... 63

New Agricultural Frontiers Said To Ensure Food Supply
(Delfim Netto Interview; O GLOBO, 2 Sep 80)..... 64

Briefs
August Inflation 6 Percent 67

CUBA

U.S. 'Neocolonialist' Ideological Crisis in Latin America Noted
(OCLAE, Jun 80)..... 68

Risquet Honors Sailors, Port Workers With FAR Award
(Jorge Risquet; GRANMA, 6 Sep 80)..... 78

Workers Pledge Efforts To Honor Second PCC Congress
(Gloria Marsan Sanchez; BOHEMIA, 15 Aug 80)..... 84

Wage Reform Being Implemented Slowly
(Renato Recio; TRABAJADORES, 19 Aug 80)..... 97

Country Joins MULTIFERT Multinational Enterprise
(JUVENTUD REBELDE, 27 Aug 80)..... 98

Havana Construction Enterprises Fail To Fulfill Their Plans
(Jose Gabriel Guma; GRANMA, 23 Aug 80)..... 99

Briefs
Ciego de Avila Calculating Centers 100
Tuna Catch for 1979 100
New Havana Floating Dock 100
Isle of Youth Infant Mortality Rate 100
Cuba's Ports Handle Over 8 Million Tons 101
Computer Systems Pass Tests 101

GUADELOUPE

Despite Murder Attempts, Dijoud Says Situation Calm
(LE MONDE, 20 Sep 80)..... 102

JAMAICA

Crimes Act Brings Security Forces Under Pressure
(ADVOCATE-NEWS, 12 Sep 80)..... 103

MEXICO

Text of JLP's Fourth Annual Report to the Nation
(EL DIA, 2 Sep 80)..... 105

PERU

Report on Prime Minister Ulloa's Speech to Congress
(EL COMERCIO, 28 Aug 80)..... 168

Economic Crisis
Government Plans
Massive Employment Program
Education Budget
Real Wage Declines
Foodstuffs Import Allocation
Mining, Industry Promotion

GROWING UNEMPLOYMENT TO BE INVESTIGATED BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 18 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Gladstone Thurston]

[Text] GOVERNMENT last night heeded Opposition pleas and appointed a committee to investigate the Bahamas' growing unemployment problem.

Requested by official opposition leader Norman Solomon, the committee is to place particular emphasis on finding practical ways to help the unemployed become productive and self-respecting citizens.

Appointed to that committee were Solomon (chairman), James Knowles (SDP, Clarence Town), J Henry Bostwick (FNDM, Montagu), Sinclair Outten (PLP, St Barnabas), Frank Edgecombe (PLP, Fox Hill), J Russell Ford (PLP, Mayaguana), David Knowles (PLP, Salem).

In his address on the topic, FNDM leader Mr Bostwick hit out at "the inertia, the lack of care and concern" demonstrated by Government. "We live these problems every day. We see desperation in the faces of the people; we see hunger; we see crime; the disease of unemployment is catastrophic."

Mr Bostwick said there are places where he hesitates to go for fear of giving the appearance that he is doing all right while there are others who are not doing well at all.

"I am literally scared because we have failed to pay attention to the wants and needs of the people of this nation," Mr Bostwick said.

The people of this country, he said, were indoctrinated into believing that they don't have to sweat and toil to make it.

And, in setting itself up as the big brother capable of handling everything for those who can't handle it for themselves, the Government has succeeded in planting the seed of Communism in this country, Mr Bostwick said.

"I know they have got to be scared with what they see on the horizon," Mr Bostwick said. "By their sins of omission they have created the monster which haunts them. I say to this Government that they have created the monster by failing to make adequate use of the inherent talents of the Bahamian people by providing them with the opportunity and will to be an independent people."

In reply, Deputy Prime Minister Arthur Hanna recalled that the Government some time ago said that its first priority is to tackle the unemployment problem in the country. Since that time, Mr Hanna said, great strides have been made.

The problem of unemployment, Mr Hanna said, has gripped the world over the last few years and the Bahamas has suffered as a result.

"We have our plans and we feel our plans will succeed in combating the unemployment problem," Mr Hanna said.

Sizable sums, he said, have been committed to alleviate poverty and suffering until the Government can come to grips with the unemployment problem.

Prime Minister Lynden Pindling, Mr Hanna said, was quite right in his assessment that the Government sought to provide full employment by this year.

"I don't think he is too far off," Mr Hanna said. "We are now on the brink of a break through on this massive human problem ... there is no higher priority than the problem of human suffering. That is why the Government has determined that hence and forever, no Bahamian shall ever starve and those of us who have and want more must wait that those of us who have none could get some.

"Today, I think it is true to say that if there is any Bahamian who is unemployed and can't eat, they have a right to the basic requirements of life and the whole system of government has been geared towards this end."

The Bahamas, he said, has weathered the problem of unemployment and inflation better than any other country in this part of the hemisphere.

"Last year I was able to say that our reserves reached an all time high," Mr Hanna said. "We have weathered the storm and our finances are sound."

He invited the Opposition forces to join with the Government in trying to solve the problem of unemployment. "We all have ideas how to do it," he said. "Why don't we all pool our ideas."

CSO: 3020

BRIEFS

HAITIAN REFUGEES ARRESTED--Thirty-six Haitians were arrested from their small, unseaworthy boat which was apprehended north of Highbourne Cay, Exuma, by the Bahamas Defence Force Tuesday. The Haitians, several of whom are women, were brought to Nassau yesterday by the patrol craft HMBS Abaco, which was under the command of Senior Lieutenant Edwin Munroe. According to the Ministry of Defence "the boat was in an unseaworthy condition, with no water or food." The Haitians told authorities they were on their way to Nassau at the time of arrest. Up to press time it was unclear as to where they would be held prisoner. More than 90 Haitians only recently were deported after spending almost three months at the make-shift Athol Island prison. Reason: no room at Her Majesty's Prison, Fox Hill. [Text] [Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 25 Sep 80 p 1]

CSO: 3020

NEWLY ELECTED FIESP PRESIDENT SPEAKS OF REFORMS

Rio de Janeiro MANCHETE in Portuguese 20 Sep 80 pp 18-21

[Article by Salomao Schvartzman and Durval Ferreira: "Luis Eulalio Vidigal, Captain of Captains"]

[Text] The news spread like fire on a windy day: Luis Eulalio Bueno Vidigal Filho won in the two elections which made him the new president of the Sao Paulo State Federation of Industries [FIESP], an election which focused the attention, not only of the press of the entire country on the new headquarters of the FIESP on Avenida Paulista in Sao Paulo, but also that of public opinion itself, which became engrossed with the challenge of the 41-year-old Luis Eulalio, who defeated the venerated and tireless Theobaldo de Nigris, sixth president of the organization, who had been in power for 14 years.

Perhaps because he was born a few months before the outbreak of World War II, Luis Eulalio was affected by the consequences of the conflict, and while still very young, heard the political discussions of his grandfather, Gastao Vidigal, thus beginning his apprenticeship and becoming a competitor in everything he undertook.

In one of the times that I met Luis Eulalio, when his name was already being mentioned as a candidate for the post, he was resigning from the presidency of the National Automotive Components Industry Union (SINDIPECAS], he looked me well in the eye and called me by name in Hebrew, something he always does when he sees me and he dropped the bomb: "You do not believe me either, right?"

I did not lie. I told him that I was a friend of Theobaldo, although not a voter, but that only he, Luis Eulalio, had the chance of making the elections have a surprising outcome. And it took place. Whoever watched the counting of the votes in the second balloting when the margin of victory of the young Eulalio was greater, can never forget the explosion of joy of his campaign comrades, a picture of which was carried by all the newspapers. The emotional impact was so great that President Joao Figueiredo, this week in Sao Paulo, commented on the historic photograph to Luis Eulalio: "You know," said the president of the republic, "it looked as if you were celebrating a goal by Flamengo, making the fans in Maracana Stadium explode."

I went with reporter Durval Ferreira to Beira-Rio in Porto Felix, two hours from Sao Paulo, where Luis Eulalio was resting that Sunday after the stress of 2 years of hard campaigning. I found him weighing 10 kilos more, the result of the tensions of recent months. Surrounded by his wife Ligia his son Luis Eulalio Neto, 16 years-of-age, daughter Silvia, five, and the baby, Luis Fernando, only 2-years-of-age, the new leader of the powerful Sao Paulo industries knows that his task will not be limited to simply applauding the official actions of Brasilia. He will sit at the table of the National Monetary Council as a member who brings with him a political force he does not deny and which comes from being the president of the most powerful industrial organization of the country. "You know, Shloime, things are going to be very hard at the end of a very difficult year. I know I have the obligation to be the spokesman for a new spirit of the Sao Paulo industry, which does not fear tomorrow because it trusts in the president of the republic today. Moreover, I have the certainty that from now on I shall never be left out of the great national decisions." Salomao Schvartzman.

"Basically, my election has the significance of a complete change in the union election system and without any pretensions of any type I would even say that this will be so not only in Sao Paulo but in the entire country," begins Luis Eulalio Bueno Vidigal Filho. He speaks without hesitation, with the conviction of those who know that their words truly express what they think. He explains further: "In Sao Paulo, particularly, there was the myth that Nadir Figueiredo was unbeatable in an organization representative of the industrial businessmen such as the FIESP. Myths such as that existed and still exist in other states. We here in Sao Paulo decided to confront them. That is why I say that elections in Sao Paulo served for the entire country."

In Rio there was a renewal such as ours, with Atilio Joao Donato confronting a machine of the type that was installed among us. And he was inspired by our work, he tells me, renewing his personnel and averting a confrontation between the existing situation and the opposition, since the proponents of the former concluded by not even presenting a slate." Luis Eulalio then points out that the change which took place will certainly not mean only the changing of persons but a change in the system of work, a more up to date action. Obviously the work he will face in order to put his ideas into practice will demand a great effort, if we consider the gigantic size of the FIESP. As a higher echelon organization it enfolds 108 union organizations and it administers SESI [Industrial Social Service] and SENAI [National Industrial Apprenticeship Service], as well as the National Industry

Center, making up an administrative conglomerate with a budget of nearly 40 billion cruzeiros. Seeking a more precise way of measuring it, Luis Eulalio calls attention to the size of the budget which is greater than that of 17 Brazilian states. "What we actually intend to do is to reinvigorate those agencies and not just make them younger. But we shall do it with caution. I have some ideas for SENAI, for example, related to its professional training courses, which I shall impose, obviously after accurate studies, with the same thing happening with respect to SESI, which operates more in the welfare sector."

Now, appearing with a young and dynamic leadership which managed to obtain popular acceptance, it is natural to ask about the political future of this other Lula, the Lula of management. But he cuts the subject short, although he leaves room for possible future activities: "Although I will not say that I shall not drink of this water, I do not intend to have a political career. I would like for other young leaders to appear with the willingness to assume the positions and vacancies that await them. They will have all the support of our group, even for political posts. It would be a support based on prestige and to give strength to new leaderships." However, speaking of his administration to be sworn in soon, he says without hesitation: "At first I believe our relationship with the government is going to change," he says. Change, how? He speaks lengthily about details "I particularly want to participate before any event takes place. If I cannot participate, I would prefer to be quiet. I am not in the habit of crying over spilt milk. It is of no use to argue about something that has already taken place. I therefore advocate participation before any decision is made, since it is a function of the central government whether it is the executive or the legislative branch." Luis Eulalio goes even further in the intended relationship between the FEISP, the government and technocrats. He acknowledges that FISEP will have great political power henceforth; nonpartisan political power. And he intends to use that arsenal. How? He answers, always without hesitation: "The best word I can find is 'lobby.' I believe it is legitimate for us to use a lobby in the defense of business interests, particularly of small and medium businesses, the most unprotected. But that lobby will operate in the open and not in offices or behind the scenes. The FIESP also worked behind the scenes. We shall operate the lobby in the glare of spotlights, in the center of the stage. The public shall always know what we are doing and how we are doing it. We shall use all communications media and channels offered to us to strengthen industry. It shall be another change in the FIESP, depending on the power I have." After that statement, there followed the question as to how he views the problems of small and medium businesses. Emphasizing his words to give them more conviction, he said: "Their problems are subordinated to conditions of competition and bureaucratic obstacles to such a point that they suffer more from them than big business; this without taking high interest rates and difficulty in obtaining capital into account. And this is caused by one conditioning characteristic: since the small businessman does practically everything in his company, he cannot give himself the luxury of having specialists to help him clear his area so that his game can be swifter."

Luis Eulalio is actually a youth who assumes leadership of FIESP with defined and very clear ideas on everything that directly or indirectly affects businessmen. With respect to salaries, he believes that there is no need for specific legislation for those who make salaries over 30 minimum wage levels. They would be ruled by the laws of the market. With respect to wage controls, he favors lessening the gap which separates the lowest and highest levels. He declares he has suggestions to make to the government in the areas of exports--he acquired much experience through activities in that field in trade missions abroad in the company of Presidents Geisel and Figueiredo--loans and even the reform of the CLT [Consolidated Labor Laws], where he believes the idea on representation in the system of elections for federations and confederations should be changed. "Elections should be direct in the unions and proportionate in federations and confederations. The number of employees in each area shall decide that representation. In sports, there are examples in which this is being done. The Tennis Confederation conditions the representation of its members according to the number of tennis courts in each state." With respect to the multinational companies, he believes that they only need specific legislation to rule their actions in the country. "There is unfavorable talk about the multinationals, but the truth is that they do what the law allows. Foreign capital is beneficial provided it is watched and priority is frankly and openly given to national capital." He believes in a future alliance among Brazil, Argentina, Mexico and China, joining Brazilian raw materials and development, Mexican petroleum and technology, Argentine engineering and food and the capacity for consumption of the Chinese.

Inevitably Luis Eulalio is led to speaking about Lula, the metal workers union chief and now political leader. "I always defined and practiced direct negotiations. The best way of solving problems is through dialog, the only way to find conciliation between naturally antagonistic positions. To negotiate does not mean surrender. Negotiations are accomplished, maintaining firm and even hard points of view and positions, without that meaning capitulation by one side or the other. An agreement means that both sides gave in. Any other way means an imposition.

"Within that framework I believe that Lula is a great union leader with an amazing capacity for organization. But he did not know how to negotiate and as a politician he will not be what he was as a union leader."

8908
CSO: 3001

VICE PRESIDENT INTERVIEWED ON POLITICAL SITUATION

Rio de Janeiro MANCHETE in Portuguese 20 Sep 80 pp 36-37

[Interview with Vice President Aureliano Chaves by Haroldo Hollanda of MANCHETE; place and date not given]

> [Text] The vice president of the republic, Aureliano Chaves, declared that the position of rejection of terrorism assumed by President Joao Figueiredo guarantees the process of democratization. He felt that the entire nation supports the position of the president. Aureliano Chaves believes that a dialog between the government and the opposition is not a weakness by the one proposing it but an objective for improving the democratic regime. He believes that the 1982 elections will test the present party framework.
>
> At the same time that he advocates pluralist representation, he condemns the legalization of the Communist Party as long as that party remains "dogmatically totalitarian." Aureliano Chaves does not see a solution for Brazil in a parliamentary system, although he acknowledges that it does well in many countries.

[Question] Are the recent terrorist attacks aimed at making democratization unfeasible?

[Answer] The terrorist attacks, besides their characteristic of brutality, claiming innocent victims, are aimed at destroying the structure of society, always attacking constituted authority in particular. They deserve the rejection of all and the firm determination of the authorities to suppress them. President Joao Figueiredo, at the same time that he vehemently condemns terrorist activities and orders measures to curb them, reaffirms his irrevocable determination to carry out his project of a political opening. We are seeing that the nation as a whole supports him.

[Question] How can interests be compatibilized and a government of national unity achieved?

[Answer] I made no proposal or suggestions with a view toward national unity. This is beyond my purview. I am not a political spokesman for the government. I only sought to comment on the praiseworthy action of President Joao Figueiredo, who stretched out his hand to all Brazilians. An extended hand is a gesture of conciliation. The symbolism of that gesture was not unaccompanied. He added several government actions, among them amnesty, showing in a very clear way the desire to avoid radical positions which do not help the process of improving our political institutions, and seeking a lasting democracy. Thus, what I tried to emphasize was that initiatives seeking conciliation should not be interpreted as weakness of the one proposing them nor capitulation by those accepting them, nor the abdication of positions by each of them. They should be viewed as an understanding that it is possible to find point of convergence in the greater interest of the country and the democratic system.

[Question] Do you believe the present party framework is liable to changes as of the 1982 elections?

[Answer] In a society such as the Brazilian, which is subject to many changes, it is very difficult to make assertions such as "This is final," and "This will not change." What is important is to consider the fact that Brazilian society is a plural society. As such its political representation has to be pluralistic. With respect to many parties, I believe that they should remain. Now, with respect to the various compositions of the Brazilian multiparty system, it is natural that there be changes even because it is at the polls that political affinities consolidate or break. The 1982 elections are the first electoral tests for the present multiparty system of Brazil. I do not believe that there is a willingness on the part of the Brazilian people or their representatives to return to the two-party system.

[Question] Do you believe that the legal functioning of the Communist Party should be allowed?

[Answer] When the Communist Party assumes power it is discriminatory. It does not allow the existence of any other political organization as a choice. As long as the Communist Party remains dogmatically totalitarian I do not believe that democratic societies should allow its free operation.

[Question] Do you favor the convocation of a constituent assembly?

[Answer] I have not yet been convinced that the convocation of a constituent assembly is the best path to political normalization. On the contrary, it could really be the suitable climate for arousing emotions. There is a clear, undeniable determination by the government to obtain democratic normalcy. This can be done without a constituent assembly which always brings with it the idea of a break between a certain constitutional structure that is dying and another which is being born. In our view this does not fit within the present Brazilian reality in which there is the willingness by a victorious revolution to adjust itself gradually to new times in perfect synchronization with its own democratic inspirations.

[Question] Could the seriousness of the economic crisis lead to a political regression?

[Answer] At this moment I do not see the right climate for that, although it is not my custom to be a soothsayer. I do believe that everyone, men of the government and of the opposition, the leaders who represent our society, should make an effort together aimed at using an open debate, which democratic life encourages for all, to seek proper solutions for our present difficulties, which although great are fleeting and can be surmounted. At this time we should all get rid of the dangerous idea that economic and social crises lead to standby governments.

[Question] Do you believe that Brazilian political development will allow our people to practice the parliamentary system?

[Answer] I have a great respect for the representative figures of parliamentarianism in Brazil since the time of their founders such as that of Gaspar Silveira Martins and Assis Brazil and up to the sane, respected and singular personality of Raul Pilla. I am not, however, convinced that in the present stage of Brazilian society the most suitable solution would be the implantation of the parliamentary system. I believe, however, that discussion on the subject is useful.

[Question] Do you believe that the mixed district vote could contribute to the improvement of our political customs?

[Answer] The adoption of the mixed district vote should be preceded by a broad and consistent debate. It is not an unquestioned matter. Therefore, anything that seeks a greater stability for the democratic life of the country should be examined carefully. As far as I am concerned, I have not yet taken a position with respect to the subject.

[Question] Should or should not a legislator have full legislative immunity guaranteed in the performance of his duties?

[Answer] Legislative inviolability is inherent in the exercise of the people's representation. What appears to be important is that this inviolability does not become immunity which makes the legislator immune while committing excesses during his term of office.

8908
CSO: 3001

POLLS SHOW PEOPLE SUPPORT FIGUEIREDO AGAINST TERRORISM

Rio de Janeiro MANCHETE in Portuguese 13 Sep 80 pp 11-13

[Article by Murilo Melo Filho: "What the People Think of Terrorist Attacks and the Political Opening"]

[Text] If the objective of the terrorist who placed bombs at the OAB [Brazilian Bar Association] and the Chamber of Councilmen was to destabilize the government, they obtained the exactly opposite result: they strengthened the position of President Figueiredo, around whom all the political forces of the country, including the opposition, have rallied, and there is the overwhelming support of public opinion, according to the results of a popular survey made last weekend by LPM-Burke at the request of MANCHETE and which in short was aimed at learning what the people were thinking of terrorist attacks and the political opening.

It is true that the survey was made under the emotional impact of the Uberlandia speech in which the president of the republic dramatically offered himself as the target of terrorist attacks, attacks which he called "criminal" and which in his opinion should avoid the sacrifice of innocent people.

The presidential speech led the principal opposition leaders to generalized applause. Senator Tancredo Neves, national president of the Popular Party went as far as to consider it the most important speech made up to now by President Figueiredo, who he believes deserves the solidarity of the entire nation at this time in which terrorism is the common enemy.

It was in that climate that 81 percent of the persons surveyed said that the president should continue with his hand outstretched within his policy of conciliation, while 19 percent said that he should withdraw his hand.

The ratio also indicates that the Brazilian people, conciliatory by nature, condemn radicalisms of any nature, preferring to support a policy of national unity. The opposition leaders themselves, after remaining in an inflexible position with respect to the conciliatory appeals by the president of the republic, now show themselves to be much more understanding in view of the serious situation being faced by the country. There have already been preliminary contacts during a dinner held by Senator Jose Sarney, which was attended by Senators Jarbas Passarinho, Luiz Vianna Filho and Minister Ibrahim Abi-Ackel on the government side, and by Senators Paulo Brossard and Tancredo Neves as representatives of the opposition.

Forty nine percent believed that the process of political opening is still insufficient, while 16 percent believed it to be too much and 35 percent believed it to be enough. This ratio shows that public opinion expects new official initiatives that will intensify the process of democratization.

In the previous question, 57 percent were in favor of that opening while 32 percent were not and 11 percent simply did not answer. After 16 years of standby governments, the process of democratization has simply become irreversible. Even after the terrorist attacks, repeated statements by the president of the republic and his leaders leave not the slightest doubt as to that determination of taking it to its final consequences.

Still within the framework of a political opening, 86 percent of those interviewed showed they were in favor of direct elections for governor, elections which the government intends to reinstitute in October 1982 through a constitutional amendment already sent to Congress, even at the risk of being defeated in important states such as Sao Paulo, Rio Grande do Sul, Parana, Minas Gerais and Rio de Janeiro, where the opposition shows itself to be strong and in the majority. Only 11 percent showed themselves to be against the direct process for electing governors and 3 percent did not answer.

Almost the same proportion (80 percent) favor direct elections for president of the republic, something the government wants done indirectly through the Electoral College, whose majority should obey its orders in selecting the successor to President Figueiredo in 1985.

That great majority shows that public opinion is anxious to return to the polls so that by means of direct vote they can freely elect their government leaders at the state and federal levels. In the states, Planalto Palace intends to heed that popular desire by returning the right to elect their governors directly to the people. However, on a national level, Planalto Palace is ready to maintain the indirect process, even if it is contrary to the opinion of the 80 percent surveyed.

In the economic area, 31 percent of those polled believe that the main cause of the rise in living costs is government incompetence, while 29 percent blamed the economic model, a total of 60 percent who blame the reasons for inflation on internal factors which depend on our will. Twenty-nine percent blamed that inflation on the external factor of increases in petroleum prices, which does not depend on our will, while only 7 percent said that it was caused by incompetence of businessmen and 4 percent did not answer.

In the chapter on terrorist attacks as such, there was a very clear doubt as to their origins. Questioned on whether the recent attacks were made by the right, the left or others, 23 percent blamed them on the right and 24 percent on the left, which in a way contradicts the general impression that the present Brazilian terror is of clearly rightist origins. Thirty-three percent blamed it on other sources, while 3 percent were unaware of the attacks and 17 percent did not answer.

The following question was whether the objective of those attacks was to put an end to the political opening or whether there was some other objective: 54 percent answered that the objective was to put an end to the opening, while 46 percent answered that the objective was another. Of that 46 percent, one-fourth--11.5 percent--answered that the goal was the overthrow of the present government.

Offering one more proof of confidence in official measures for finding those guilty of the attacks, 61 percent said that they sincerely believe in them and 39 percent said they do not believe in them.

Questioned on the reasons for those attacks, 48 percent answered that it is because there is a group dissatisfied with the policy of the government, while 30 percent blamed them on the existence of groups unsatisfied with the economic direction of the country. It is seen that a total rate of 78 percent are not satisfied with either government policy or economics since it was dissatisfaction against both which is blamed for the attacks. Twenty-two percent said that those responsible were simply criminals without any political purpose in their actions.

The Military Police are completely discredited in the eyes of public opinion as the force most indicated to suppress the attacks. Only 7 percent of those surveyed expressed opinions in their favor, while 19 percent indicated the Federal Police, already officially appointed by the government to investigate the attacks on the OAB and the Municipal Council. The great majority (42 percent) believed that the armed forces should be in charge of suppressing them--the army should be placed in the streets to fight them--while 21 percent said that repression should be carried out by all the police together and 11 percent sceptically indicated that none of them should be activated.

Forty-eight hours after the attacks of the OAB headquarters and the Chamber of Councilmen, the magazine MANCHETE contracted the LPM-Burke Surveys and Research Company to make a survey of public opinion on those acts of terrorism. Six hundred persons over 18 years-of-age of both sexes and of all social classes were polled in the Rio-Sao Paulo axis. They were polled during the past weekend. Armed with a questionnaire previously approved by our editorial staff, LPM researchers made the survey of popular opinion. The results follow:

1. Were the recent terrorist attacks made by the right, left or others?

Right: 23 percent
Left: 24 percent
Others: 33 percent
Unaware of the attacks: 3 percent
No answer: 17 percent

2. Is the objective of those attacks to put an end to the political opening or do they have another objective?

Aimed at political opening: 54 percent
Other objectives: 46 percent

3. Do you believe the government is sincerely interested in discovering those guilty for those attacks?

Yes: 61 percent
No : 39 percent

4. You believe that the reason for those attacks is because there is:

A group dissatisfied with the policy of the government: 48 percent
A group dissatisfied with the economy of the country: 30 percent
A group of criminals: 22 percent

5. In view of recent attacks, President Figueiredo declared he will maintain a policy of an extended hand for national conciliation. Do you believe that President Figueiredo should continue with his hand extended or should he desist from that conciliation policy?

He should continue with an extended hand: 81 percent
He should desist from a conciliation policy: 19 percent

6. Do you believe that the following should be activated to suppress terrorist attacks?

Military Police: 7 percent
Federal Police: 19 percent
Armed Forces: 42 percent
All police jointly: 21 percent
None of them: 11 percent

7. Do you favor the political opening as it is being carried out by the Figueiredo administration?

No: 32 percent
Yes: 57 percent
No answer: 11 percent

8. The political opening process of President Figueiredo is:

Sufficient: 35 percent
Too much: 16 percent
Not enough: 49 percent

9. The main cause for the rise in cost of living is:

Petroleum: 29 percent
Government incompetence: 31 percent
Businessmen's incompetence: 7 percent

10. Elections for governor should be:

Direct: 86 percent
Indirect: 11 percent
No answer: 3 percent

11. Elections for president of the republic should be:

Direct: 80 percent
Indirect: 18 percent
No answer: 2 percent

8908
CSO: 3001

POLL SHOWS SCEPTICISM ON PROMISED INFLATION DROP

Rio de Janeiro MANCHETE in Portuguese 20 Sep 80 pp 130-133

[Article by Murilo Melo Filho: "What The Brazilian Thinks of Inflation and Wages"]

[Text] The most surprising and impressive result of this public survey was the popular scepticism about government promises that inflation is going to decline by the end of this year. While those promises guarantee that rates will fall from the present 106 percent to about 80 percent by 31 December this year, 91 percent of the people questioned believe that is impossible and only eight percent believe it can happen. Also significant was the predominance of those who prefer a shock treatment instead of the gradual measures which up to now have been put into effect in the fight against the rising cost of living. Sixty-three percent said that stricter measures should be adopted and 32 percent believe that inflation should be fought little by little, as is being done up to now.

Six hundred thirteen persons over 18 years-of-age of both sexes were surveyed this weekend in the Rio-Sao Paulo axis by LPM-Burke Surveys and Research on the two main problems which today interest millions of Brazilians: inflation and wages. Their replies are as follows:

1. Do you believe that inflation is going to decline by the end of the year?

Believes: 8 percent
Do not believe: 91 percent
No answer: One percent

2. Do you believe that inflation should be fought with stricter methods or little by little as is being done?

Stricter methods: 63 percent
Little by little: 5 percent
No answer: 4 percent

3. Does the policy of semiyearly wage increases contribute to inflation?

Yes: 58 percent
No: 38 percent
No answer: 4 percent

4. Should the present wage policy of semiyearly increases be maintained or reformulated?

It should be maintained: 40 percent
It should be reformulated: 57 percent
No answer: 3 percent

5. Do you believe that the government should continue with its program of great projects such as that of the Itaipu Hydroelectric Project, for example, during this phase of the struggle against inflation, or should it desist temporarily from these great projects?

It should continue: 58 percent
It should desist: 37 percent
No answer: 5 percent

6. What is the main reason for the rise in price of products?

The price of petroleum: 30 percent
Actions by middlemen: 12 percent
Incompetence of government agencies: 28 percent
The multinational companies: 8 percent
Payment of the foreign debt: 17 percent
No answer: 5 percent

7. Do you believe that distribution of food should be controlled by the government to reduce the rise in prices?

Yes: 71 percent
No: 26 percent
No answer: 3 percent

8. What aspect of inflation affects you most?

Housing: 13 percent
Food: 43 percent
Transportation: 4 percent
Education and health: 13 percent
All aspects: 26 percent
None: 1 percent

9. What class suffers most from inflation?

Workers: 69 percent
Middle class: 21 percent
The rich: 0 percent
All classes: 9 percent
No answer: 1 percent

10. Do you believe that monetary correction should or should not end?

It should end: 40 percent
It should not end: 52 percent
No answer: 8 percent

11. Do you or do you not believe that the economic crisis may affect the political opening?

Yes: 60 percent
No: 31 percent
No answer: 9 percent

12. Are you against or for family planning?

In favor: 78 percent
Against: 19 percent
No answer: 3 percent

13. Do you believe that a reduction in the number of children born can contribute to improving the distribution of income?

Yes: 74 percent
No: 25 percent
No answer: 1 percent

The majority have an opinion contrary to that of the government in these two answers: first, expressing their disbelief in the presidential optimism with respect to a decline in the rates of inflation by the end of the year, and second, when they express themselves in favor of adopting a more strict action against inflation and not as is being done up to now with gradual measures. In a certain way, the two answers have consistency: precisely because actions are not adequate, public opinion disbelieves in a drop in inflation rates by the end of the year.

In the area of wages, 58 percent believe that the policy of semiyearly increases contributes to increasing inflation, while 38 percent believe that it does not. Consistently, 57 percent also believe that the policy should be reformulated, while 40 percent believe it should be maintained. These replies were very important and timely because it is precisely at this time that Minister Murilo Macedo is concluding the studies with Minister Delfim Netto, which will be examined by President Figueiredo for the reformulation of the present wage policy.

Expressing an opinion on any policy of recession or deflation, 58 percent answered that the government should continue with its program of large projects such as the Itaipu hydroelectric project, while 37 percent said the government should stop them. With this answer, the majority of people surveyed supported the present government policy in favor of maintaining the present rate of projects.

The price of petroleum was indicated by 30 percent of those surveyed as the main cause of the present rise in the price of products, while 28 percent attributed it to incompetence of government agencies, 17 percent to commitments on the foreign debt, 12 percent to activities of middlemen and 8 percent to activities by multinational companies.

It is seen there that public opinion is divided almost equally on the origins of the present Brazilian inflation: half believe that it is due to external factors and the other half to domestic reasons.

Supporting greater government intervention in the sale of basic articles, 71 percent believe that distribution of food should be controlled by the government as a measure to reduce the rise in prices, while 26 percent believe that such distribution should not be controlled by the government.

Food appears next as the item most affected by inflation with 43 of the answers, while 13 percent said that it was housing and another 13 percent said it was education and health. Only 4 percent said it was transportation, but 26 percent said that all items were affected by the inflationary spiral.

Although the people surveyed belong indiscriminately to all social classes, the number who believe that workers were the class most affected by inflation (69 percent) predominated, against 21 percent who thought it was the middle class. No one said it was the rich and 9 percent believed that all classes suffer as a result of the rise in the cost of living.

By these answers, the majority of the persons surveyed meant to say that the wealthier class is practically not affected by inflation because it compensates for its effects with other advantages, while the workers suffer its effects more directly.

Favoring the maintenance of the present financial policy in the question having to do with monetary correction, 52 percent said that it should not be abolished against 40 percent who said it should be.

Sixty percent of the people surveyed were fearful that the present process of political opening could be affected by the economic crisis, while 31 percent believe that one thing has no effect on the other.

Another figure, which in a certain way is surprising, was the one having to do with the overwhelming favorable opinion on family planning (78 percent), while only 19 percent were against it. Next, also consistently, 74 percent said that fewer births can contribute to improving distribution of income, while 25 percent did not. Both answers should strengthen the position of the present government, which favors family planning.

8908
CSO: 3001

TAVARES TO REMAIN AS SECOND ARMY COMMANDER; INTERVIEW

'Liberalization Is Untouchable'

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 30 Aug 80 p 15

[Text] While waiting for President Figueiredo at Congonhas Airport yesterday, Gen Milton Tavares, commander of the 2d Army, asserted that "liberalization is untouchable," and that he will not be leaving Sao Paulo. "The communists," said the general, "would like that, but I am not leaving."

Tavares made reference to liberalization in answer to a question about the criminal assaults that took place in Rio de Janeiro and the other reply was in regard to rumors that he would be leaving the 2d Army command.

In a meeting with the press, the general spoke about the source of the assaults: "As I have said, terrorism of the right is exactly the same as terrorism of the left. It is a bunch of lunatics that are incapable of associating with others democratically, because what was done was so stupid, so idiotic, that there is simply no explanation." Tavares asserted further that the assaults had the intention of creating a climate of agitation.

The 2d Army commander said he was not a "clairvoyant" when asked whether all the recent assaults--those in Rio de Janeiro and the series of assaults on newsstands--were related to each other. When one of the reporters persisted, Tavares replied: "I am not a clairvoyant; I am not going to answer you."

Shortly after these statements, President Figueiredo, accompanied by six cabinet ministers--including Justice Minister Abi-Ackel--landed in Sao Paulo 20 minutes ahead of schedule for a 4-hour visit to the city.

After being received by the governor of the state, by the 2d Army commander, other authorities and PDS [Social Democratic Party] deputies, Figueiredo went to the residence of Milton Tavares for "a personal visit of old friends," as explained later by Mass Media Minister Said Farhat.

From the home of Milton Tavares, the president went to the Santo Amaro Riding Club, but not all the cabinet ministers went with him.

Condemns 'Any Terrorist Act'

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 26 Aug 80 p 6

[Interview with Gen Milton Tavares, commander of the 2d Army, in Sao Paulo on 25 August: "General: Brazilians Support Redemocratization"; names of correspondents not given]

> [Text] Sao Paulo--The commander of the 2d Army, Gen Milton Tavares de Souza, said yesterday he hopes "the dispairing, the Cassandras and those who predict calamity will not hinder Brazil in its permanent national objective of living democratically."
>
> "Let me repeat that President Figueiredo is determined about redemocratization, as he always was," added the general, "and that all Brazilians of good will stand with him."
>
> These statements were made in an interview after the ceremonies to observe Soldier's Day at general headquarters, interrupted for a few moments when Gen Milton Tavares de Souza collapsed as a result of sunstroke, as diagnosed by Adib Jatene, physician and state health secretary, who was present at the ceremony. In a short while, however, the 2d Army commander recovered and returned to preside over the ceremony.

The Interview

The interview with the 2d Army commander follows:

JOVEM PAN: General, you weren't feeling well during the ceremony. Are you better; are you feeling good?

[Tavares] Thank the Lord, yes. Something new happened to me today. After 46 years in the service, for the first time a mild case of sunstroke got the better of me. I had a slight sunstroke, but as I am of the Infantry and the infantryman must suffer, in a short time I was in good shape.

TV Bandeirantes: The Army minister's order of the day called for unity in the armed forces against the perennially dissatisfied. Who are they?

[Tavares] Mainly those who belong to the international communist movement, the demagogues, the self-seeking, the evil Brazilians.

TV Globo: General, the PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Mobilization Party] and many opposition deputies want a constituent assembly in Brazil. What does the Army think of this? Would it be a solution for the nation's problems?

[Tavares] That is a question of a political nature, which I should like you to excuse me from answering.

Radio Bandeirantes: General, what do you think of the Brasilia perquisites?

[Tavares] Look, "perquisite" has become a bad word. It has been used a lot to undermine authority. We of the Army can speak with authority and, if you wish, I can show you right now the receipts for everything I pay out of my own pocket. I pay for my house, food, everything. Telephone, light, water--everything you pay for. I pay for the house in which I live, even though it belongs to the Army.

O GLOBO: General, could you say something about the recent assaults, mainly on newsstands, that have not yet been solved?

[Tavares] I vehemently condemn any terrorist act. I think the world is in need of peace and harmony. Brazil's sons must be united. There is terrorism of the left and terrorism of the right. All of them are very reprehensible, because they are the same thing. All of them reveal the existence of a class of people not psychologically capable of living democratically.

FOLHA DE SAO PAULO: The attorney on the Dallari case is asking for release of the pictures of the DOI [Department of Domestic Operations]-CODI [Internal Defense Operations Center] agents. Do you intend to release such pictures?

[Tavares] I'm glad you brought up the Dallari case. I have neither the pleasure nor the displeasure--I don't know which one it would be--of knowing Mr Dallari personally. I recognize the name. When the assault occurred--and you gentlemen should be recording this--my reaction was that it was a regrettable and not very intelligent way of opposing someone. There is an investigation underway which has not ended but which will certainly reach some conclusion. So anything said now would be premature. But there is an interesting aspect to be observed in all this. First of all, from childhood, when we read Sherlock Holmes we learn to ask a question: "Whom does the crime benefit; who gets some advantage from the crime? Who is profiting from the crime? Clearly, gentlemen, it was not the government. It certainly was not the Army. It is the left that is benefiting from this crime. Why are the leftists concerned more about Dallari's arrest and less about the assault of which he was a victim? Could it not be that this is an act of disinformation? Is this reasoning warranted? I'm not saying this is the case; I'm only asking. I am not accusing the left of being the author of this assault; but I am accusing it of being the only beneficiary of the deed. They are already talking about Dalmo Dallari for senator. Couldn't this have been staged?

Regarding the request for pictures of the DOI agents, please refer to it simply as the DOI, because DOI-CODI is an absurdity. It is simply the DOI--Operations and Intelligence Detachment. Beyond being almost an anecdotal case, what kind of fool would give out the pictures of his agents for all the world to see? They might just as well wear a lapel badge reading "secret agent." I am sure that if I sent over pictures of 20 Chinese, 4 would be "recognized." If I sent them the pictures of 20 persons they never saw, 4 would be "recognized," because the purpose is not to solve the Dallari case. The purpose is to attack the security agencies, since what is hindering the activity of the international communist movement in Brazil is the armed forces, particularly through their security agencies.

Radio Capital: General, much has been said recently about joint operations by the military forces of the Southern Cone against elements considered to be leftists. There is even evidence that Argentina participated in the latest coup in Bolivia.

[Tavares] You are making an assertion against which I have no contrary evidence. I have not thought about this. I have thought about neither the possibility nor the statement. The international communist movement, in its very name, is international and acts in alliance. Cuba sent troops to Africa; it sent troops and technical personnel to Nicaragua. Russia sends troops and technical personnel anywhere it wishes. Would it be terribly criminal if the other side behaved the same way? I have no knowledge of any treaty, in particular that Brazil has taken part in any joint action with another country, and I imagine I would know if it had. Maybe the left has a great fear of this happening. And when the left has a fear of something, it begins to publicize it as a consummated fact. The left fears a restriction [of freedom]. So it frightens everyone all the time with [talk about] restriction. A restriction that no one intends to impose in Brazil, because it doesn't enter anyone's mind, except for those lunatics of the right and those who want chaos and disorder.

O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO: What do you think of the QUATRO RODAS scandal?

[Tavares] I am not an economist. I have no real or positive facts at hand. I only wish to remind you that a rumor is one thing, the truth is another. Many things are presented as very serious fact when in reality they are not.

Radio Gazeta: General, do you think the recent assaults could be the development of a nazi movement south of the Equator?

[Tavares] See to what degree, to what power an idea is raised? This is an idea raised to the "nth" power! There is no such thing; nobody has thought of this and no one will. It is impossible to talk about nazism in today's world. Today's world, whether we like it or not, is taking the middle of the road between that greedy capitalism out there and the murderous communism of Stalin.

JOVEM PAN: General, you spoke about "lunatics of the right." Do you also think there should be an effective combat against each and every rightist movement?

[Tavares] Certainly. I believe only in freedom. I believe only in the free man. I believe only in the multiparty system and I think I interpret faithfully what the Army thinks.

DIARIO POPULAR: General, do you believe these assaults could have come from those lunatics of the right?

[Tavares] I will not answer yes or no because I do not have any facts. I never give a yes-or-no answer unless I have a factual basis for answering.

Radio Gazeta: General, a person was arrested during the ceremony today when the medals were being given out. Who is he?

[Tavares] He is an Air Force sergeant, discharged on grounds of insanity, who did not want one of the recipients, Prof Edevaldo Alves da Silva, to be awarded the medal. It isn't Maluf, as you were hoping it would be.

O GLOBO: General, how do you view the communist proposal for a constituent assembly presided over by Joao Figueiredo?

[Tavares] There is something hidden behind every proposal of the communists. What they really want is legalization of the Communist Party. This is the first step. Now, in regard to this legalization, although you have not asked for it, please let me tell you the story of the snake: There was once a very liberal, very democratic, very honest man--a very nice, innocent man who lived in a country where it was snowing. One day he was taking a walk and he came upon a frozen snake. Being very liberal, very democratic, he put the snake in his pocket. As soon as the snake thawed out and came back to life, he bit the man and killed him.

TV Bandeirantes: During the order of the day, the army minister spoke of adverse factors that are blocking the Army's way...

[Tavares] The major factor, if course, is the economic one. We are going through a serious economic and financial period. You all know that inflation is around 100 percent. This makes the Brazilian people discontented because, in practice, it is translated into the cost of living. And a discontented people is subject to dissension and exploitation by subversion and by any demagogue who wants to get elected. Nothing is done today in Brazil without having 1982 in mind. Everyone is out looking for votes. And, therefore, making the most spurious alliances and making big fools of themselves.

Radio Capital: General, you mentioned the economic aspect. I realize you aren't an economist, but do you think Brazil is a long way from having a more equitable income distribution?

[Tavares] My dear young lady, this is Brazil's great problem. When we are able to lower the rate of inflation, when we are able to improve the welfare of the Brazilian people, we will have solved our great problem. Everything results from that. I don't know whether we have a long way to go or a short way, but with OPEC meeting every 3 months and raising oil prices, it would be hard to foresee where we are going. It is hard to plan. Maybe we have to hope that God really is a Brazilian and that the Amazon region will give us the oil we need.

O GLOBO: General, within this political, social and economic context of Brazil, how do you now view the road toward total and full democratization of our country?

[Tavares] I view it with the greatest happiness, hoping strongly that the despairing and those who predict trouble and those who bring trouble with them do not upset things, because Brazil has a permanent national objective, which is to live democratically. Let me repeat that President Figueiredo is firm in the purpose of redemocratization, as he always has been. And all Brazilians of good will are with him. All the media are broadcasting it about that Gen Antonio Bandeira, Gen Coelho Neto and I were the heads of an operation called "Crystal" which intended to overthrow the president and restrict democracy. This came from the mouth of a deputy named, if memory serves me, Genival Tourinho, whom I do not have the displeasure of knowing. I was a classmate of President Figueiredo. I have been a friend of his for over 50 years. I am here in a position of his absolute trust and to turn against him is the last thing I would do. And I know he would not turn against me. This has a purpose.

The international communist movement must give the people the idea that there is discontent within the armed forces; that there is division within the armed forces; and as General Bandeira, Gen Coelho Neto and I had the bad luck of having to cope with serious strikes, which made the error of slipping from the worker's right to strike to chaos and disorder--it cannot be predicted what would have happened if the ABC [refers to industrial sections of Santo Andre, Sao Bernardo do Campo and Sao Caetano do Sul] strike had been successful--as we had this misfortune, we are now cited as the ogres of the right. I was never a rightist. This medal here (pointing to his chest), the first class combat cross, was won on the field of battle in Italy in the struggle against fascism. This medal here is the medal of the blood of Brazil, for being wounded three times during the war. I could never be a fascist or even a rightist. Nor could General Bandeira or Gen Coelho Neto. So I want to vehemently repudiate this accusation. It is not in keeping with my personality, with my way of thinking and with my past, which is an open book to be examined by anyone anywhere, any time. Likewise, a bunch of lunatics of this so-called pygmy press is accusing us of being behind these newsstand fires. I think I've already said enough about that subject. I am a man who tries to be fair, to be Christian and to do his duty. No action should be taken against defenseless news vendors. If the newspaper is immoral, subversive, it is up to higher authority to prevent the paper or magazine from being printed, and never burn the newsstands of defenseless and poor men who live by the sweat of their brow.

I should like to say this to you and I ask you not to distort my words. I ask that you publish this. I do not have the pleasure of knowing either Genival Tourinho, Deputy Marcos Cunha, or Deputy Conceicao Tavares, who were the three authors of these offenses in the Chamber of Deputies. I consider this an offense against my past. I consider this an offense against my army; I consider this an offense against the Brazilian Army. Our patriotic past should be above such slander and false accusations.

The Ceremony

During the Soldier's Day ceremonies dedicated to the Duke of Caxias, Gen Milton Tavares de Souza awarded the Order of Military Merit, with the rank of grand officer, to Governor Paulo Maluf, Mayor Reinaldo de Barros and Gen Jorge Sa Freire Pinho of the 9th Military Region.

When he had finished awarding the insignia authorized by President Joao Figueiredo, 50 minutes after the ceremony began at 1005 hours, the 2d Army commander felt ill and fell over. Supported by Lt Col Armando Moreira, who was narrating the ceremony, and a security guard, General Tavares was placed on the ground about 40 meters from the place where he had lost consciousness. He was also attended by Health Secretary Adib Jatene, one of the guests. Massaged in the area of the heart (the general has already had 2 cardiovascular operations), he recovered in a few minutes. Getting to his feet, he said he insisted upon viewing the parade. Some officers of his general staff tried to dissuade him, but he told them firmly: "Do not argue with me. I want to view the parade." He then went to the reviewing stand and, standing beside Governor Paulo Maluf under a hot sun, he reviewed the parade of massed troops of the Guard Battalion and the Army Police.

The 2d Army commander also awarded prizes to the winners of the Army Week essay contest and the diploma of "Army collaborator emeritus" to 50 persons and entities, among them former Governor Lucas Nogueira Garcez, Delegate Romeu Tuma and physician Harry Shibata. Besides the reading of the order of the day by Army Minister Gen Walter Pires, the Army Hymn was sung, followed by tributes to the patron of the Army, the Duke of Caxias, with a 21-gun salute and a bugle call to the supreme commander.

After the ceremony, General Tavares, accompanied by the governor and other generals, went to his office. Although physician Adib Jatene had at first recommended hospitalization, explaining that the heart massage was only a preventive measure, the 2d Army commander immediately had a blood test.

At 1155 hours Governor Paulo Maluf left the office, followed later by some officers who praised Gen Milton Tavares. When the reporters who were waiting near the office were getting ready to leave the headquarters, they were called by a colonel who told them that General Tavares wanted to give them an interview, warning them, however, that each reporter should ask only one question so as not to tire him.

3834
CSO: 3001

NEW SAUDI ENVOY SAYS HE WILL NOT INTERFERE IN PLO RELATIONS

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 9 Aug 80 p 6

[Report on interview with Abdullah Hababi, Saudi Arabian ambassador to Brazil, in Brasilia: "Saudi Will Not Interfere for PLO"; date and name of interviewer not given]

[Text] Brasilia--The new ambassador of Saudi Arabia in Brasilia, Abdullah Hababi, appreciates Brazil's Middle East policy and guarantees he will not interfere in relations between the Brazilian government and the PLO (Palestine Liberation Organization). The Saudi diplomat's attitude is in contrast to that of his predecessor who, together with the other Arab ambassadors accredited in Brasilia, made diplomatic representations to Itamaraty [Foreign Affairs Ministry] for Brazil to agree to installation of a PLO office. Hababi's statement was made in an exclusive interview with O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO.

The Saudi ambassador said: "Installation of the office is a concern of the PLO as well as of the Brazilian government, but it is the policy of Saudi Arabia to support good relations between the PLO and all friendly countries. I can say that the Saudi attitude is clear: what is good for the Palestinians is good for Saudi Arabia. Moreover, we believe Jerusalem is an Arab city that must be reintegrated with the Arabs. We comply with the resolutions made at the last Islamic conference for severing relations with any country that transfers its embassy to Jerusalem. Our position is clear."

Hababi applauds Brazilian diplomacy: "Thank God, there are no problems between our two countries. Brazil's positive political attitude regarding Middle East issues has created a fitting atmosphere for consolidation of existing relations. I will do my utmost to meet the expectations of both governments in improving economic, cultural and commercial relations between the two countries. From the economic point of view, I will try to obtain more progress in promoting trade between the two countries, taking into consideration all measures that could lead in that direction."

The diplomat denied, however, that the Saudi Arabian government intends to make financial transactions on the pattern of that arranged recently by Kuwait, which bought stock in Volkswagen do Brasil: "Nothing of this sort is contemplated. The Saudi investment system is mainly concentrated in the hands of the private sector, which has great influence in making investments abroad as well as within the kingdom. Generally speaking, the door is open for Brazilians to come and solicit private Saudi capital to participate in its projects of interest and importance for the economies of the two countries. The door is also open for investment of Brazilian capital in Saudi Arabia.

Imports

The ambassador also sees other ways to broaden economic interchange: "Saudi Arabia has only one export item, which is petroleum. It is a natural resource, not a manufactured product. It happens that such a product is greatly sought after by all countries for use as energy. Brazil, on the other hand, is a country with a high degree of development, with great potential to become an industrial country, which explains Brazil's demand for petroleum to fuel its industry. As Saudi Arabia needs many goods, for production as well as for consumption, the entrepreneurs of the Saudi private sector are involved in importing such items from many countries, as the large Saudi market is naturally subject to price competition. In regard to Brazil, however, there is a strong effort to encourage Saudi businessmen to import merchandise suitable to the taste of the Saudi people that will contribute towards improvement of the Brazilian balance of payments."

Abdullah Hababi did not refer directly to President Jcao Figueiredo's statement that he will visit the Middle East, perhaps as early as next year: "What I know is that there is an invitation that was generously made by the Brazilian government to His Royal Highness Crown Prince Fahd ibn Abdul-Aziz, which is expected to be fulfilled in 1981.

"Another invitation, this one to the Saudi foreign affairs minister, His Royal Highness Prince Saud Al Faysal, was made without a fixed date. Hence, it is to be expected that fulfilling these invitations will lead to suggestion of additional visits on the part of Brazil to Saudi Arabia."

Petroleum

The ambassador reaffirms Saudi Arabia's moderate position on petroleum prices: "We feel petroleum is important to the welfare of the international community. Hence it is part of Saudi Arabian policy to contribute toward petroleum reaching consumers at a reasonably moderate price. Beyond this, we feel that the benefit of petroleum should not be restricted to our own generation alone, but must reach future generations and this could be accomplished by means of reduced production. At the same time, we encourage all efforts in the direction of solving the energy crisis through various substitutes. Unfortunately, what we are seeing now is the result of undervaluation of petroleum prices previous to 1973."

8834
CSO: 3001

COMMENTS AT INTER-AMERICAN SYMPOSIUM ON ENERGY; DOCUMENT

'Not Government's Problem Alone'

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 6 Sep 80 p 22

[Excerpts] The president of the republic, Joao Figueiredo, said yesterday, in concluding the symposium on energy sponsored by the Forum of the Americas in Sao Paulo, that "the search for new sources of energy is not a problem for the government alone." For businessmen, he said, availability and price of energy limit the capacity of business to produce, sell, make a profit and expand. But, in one way or another, such limitations, according to Joao Figueiredo, "affect society as a whole, determine market prices, reduce the purchasing power of the public, hinder efforts to create resources and nullify government measures intended to distribute the wealth generated by the work of all."

Vigorously applauded by the 3,000 businessmen who participated in the Inter-American Symposium on Development of Alternative Energy Sources and the "Inter-American Congress for Free Enterprise in Mobilizing Alternative Energy Sources," the president of the republic made a brief analysis of the consequences of the increase in petroleum prices since 1973. "The Third World countries, heavily dependent upon foreign supplies of oil, suffered a de facto reduction in their capacity to provide their populations with satisfactory levels of well-being. The available options--reduction of other imports or forgoing programs essential to development--are equally undesirable or prejudicial and tend to engender situations of economic stagnation, unemployment or social retrogression. Or all of them together."

The speech by the president of the Forum of the Americas, Mario Garnero, surprised those present (according to comments after the session) by the reference he made to nuclear energy and particularly to the Brazilian nuclear agreement and program. Referring to the difference in economic development and political structure in the various American countries, he asserted that they "must not be conducive to the always dangerous temptation to intervene in the internal affairs of the countries of the region." Based upon this reasoning, Garnero brought up the subject of nuclear energy: "The freedom of each nation to decide its own destiny according to its aspirations and interests must be extended to the specific plane of energy, where powerful interests are at stake. In the Brazilian case, for example, the problem of nuclear energy must be viewed without preconceptions or emotionalism, since this is an energy resource that will become necessary and which we cannot give up under any circumstances.

"I should like to believe," he went on to say, "that the great majority of the nation is convinced of this need, supports the Brazil-FRG nuclear agreement and is prepared to ratify the decisions intended to better adapt the agreement to our present economic conditions and to our present energy profile and what it can be expected to be in the future." Power-plant construction, according to Garnero, "could well follow a progressive scale, without programmatic inflexibility and in keeping with what is most appropriate for the nation in regard to the number of units, after the first four already contracted, so as to launch and consolidate a major technical and scientific effort for transfer and absorption of technology, simultaneously expanding participation by Brazilian industry in providing equipment and supplies.

"Significant sectors of the scientific community, of the business world and opinion-forming media endorse a positive position in this respect, joining those who support the decisions Your Excellency has been making," Mario Garnero concluded. (President Figueiredo, however, did not refer to the nuclear-energy question in his speech made later.) The "Charter of Sao Paulo"--a final declaration by the Forum of the Americas--was published yesterday and contains recommendations for American countries about how to proceed toward energy complementarity among nations, in search of medium-term autonomy.

Risks of Economic Stagnation

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 6 Sep 80 p 22

["Full text" of speech by President Joao Figueiredo at Inter-American Symposium on Development of Alternative Energy Sources, sponsored by the Forum of the Americas, at Sao Paulo on 5 September]

[Text] The full text of President Figueiredo's speech follows:

Ladies and gentlemen:

Permit me, before concluding this meeting, to congratulate the Forum of the Americas and the Organization of American States for conducting the events that are drawing to a close today.

I congratulat the illustrious secretary general of the OAS, Ambassador Alejandro Orfilia, and the president of the Forum, Mr Mario Garnero. On its behalf, I express the appreciation of the federal government to each and every participant of the meetings, debates and conferences held here.

I consider the themes of "Inter-American Conference on Free Initiative in Mobilizing Alternative Energy Sources" and "Inter-American Symposium on Development of Alternative Energy Sources" especially suitable to our times. Businessmen of the continent have good reason to express in this way their direct interest in those problems. Beginning in 1973 Third World nations, heavily dependent upon foreign supplies of oil, suffered a de facto reduction in their capacity to provide their populations with satisfactory levels of well-being. The available options--reduction of other imports or forgoing programs essential to development--are likewise undesirable or prejudicial. And they tend to engender situations of economic stagnation, unemployment or social retrogression. Or all of them together.

In these cases, the less privileged families in importing nations suffer first, more deeply and for a longer time. Price increases in the most essential goods and services fall most heavily upon them. Through no fault of their own, they see the already substantial obstacles to their individual progress become aggravated. They see the improvement in the quality of life to which they are entitled fade further and further into the distance.

In any event, reality must be recognized for what it is. That is: the search for new energy sources is not a problem of the government alone. For businessmen, the availability and price of energy limit the capacity of businesses to produce, to sell, to make a profit and to expand.

In one way or another, such restrictions affect society as a whole. They determine market prices. They reduce the public's purchasing power. They hinder the nation's efforts to create resources. They nullify government measures intended to improve the distribution of wealth generated by the work of all.

It was against such conditions that Brazilians resolved to cope with the problem of developing alternative sources. We have some significant practical accomplishments to our credit.

The most visible results--but not the only ones--are in use of sugarcane alcohol as a fuel for automotive vehicles. Here, it is no longer a matter of interesting experiments worthy of curiosity.

Tens of thousands of alcohol-powered vehicles are driven in our cities and on our highways.

Almost 2,000 service stations sell alcohol regularly.

And everything indicates that by the end of the year we will be building 30,000 alcohol-powered vehicles a month.

It is comforting to note how government agencies and private businesses managed to encourage each other reciprocally. Far from rejecting each other or operating in separate compartments, they combined their initiatives and compounded their results.

Thus, within the scope of PROALCOOL [National Alcohol Program] the Ministry of Industry and Commerce approved 298 projects by July of this year. When they are completed our production capacity will reach 6.7 billion liters per crop year, or 2/3 of our goal for 1985. From that point on, we are forecasting 14 billion to 16 billion liters of alcohol per crop year as our objective for 1987.

But the energy problem cannot be solved by partial solutions. Government and business must face the issue in its threefold aspect: conservation; substitution of derivatives of imported petroleum by domestic sources; and, last but not least, significant increase of domestic petroleum production.

In this last aspect, PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] this year will for the first time surpass the mark of 1 million meters drilled. Fields already discovered should be producing in 1985 over two-thirds of the goal set for that year. Continuation of work by PETROBRAS and probable favorable results of exploration through risk contracts indicate the possibility of our obtaining the hoped-for production of 500,000 barrels a day by then.

Substitution of imported energy is being carried out in Brazil today through ambitious and multidisciplinary programs, as in the case of the cement and iron-and-steel industries, thanks to agreements signed with the government.

In the transport sector we are improving urban and metropolitan systems--or building new ones where necessary--to assure rapid and economical transit of large masses of people.

Coal production and its use in various forms will give this industry conditions of maturity and profitability compatible with its current importance in the national economy. As a result, rail transportation and coastal shipping should experience new levels of demand and efficiency.

At the same time, industrial technology for producing alcohol from cassava is already mastered and developed, having overcome the initial pitfalls and difficulties.

Forestation and reforestation projects are finding new opportunities and incentives in planting species suitable for making alcohol or charcoal.

In regard to diesel fuel, there are no longer any technical doubts about its substitution by vegetable oils. The Agriculture Ministry is in the process of defining and implementing a very daring program for production and processing of rapeseed, sunflowers, African oilpalm, coconut and various other sources of vegetable oil of which we have a natural abundance or soil suitable for cultivation.

The combined result of so many initiatives may be seen in the actual reduction of our crude-oil imports in comparison to the limit of 960,000 barrels a day set at the beginning of this year. In August that ceiling was lowered to 850,000 barrels a day. It now is already possible to think of another reduction, to 800,000 barrels a day.

It is facts such as these that encourage us to view the future with optimism and confidence.

Gentlemen: The brief report I have just made shows clearly the multiplier effect of replacing imported petroleum with domestic sources of energy.

From planting to manufacture of fuel, the biomasses form a perfect cycle. Perfect in regard to utilization of factors of production that we do not lack: sun and land. Perfect for utilization of labor and development of the worker. Perfect in generating income at the local level.

Perfect, moreover, in opening to private initiative the possibility of engaging fully in our nation's energy program. Perfect, I should further say, for the opportunity it gives small and medium-sized companies of access to the fascinating field of creating energy.

For its part, the federal government is responding to this challenge by allocating sufficient resources and assigning corresponding priorities.

Thus, while aggregate federal government expenditures will increase about 59 percent in 1981, expenditures for energy and mineral resources will increase 183 percent over the year 1980. Meanwhile, expenditures on agriculture, including those related to alternative energy sources, will increase 158 percent next year.

Having said this, it is with renewed pleasure that I come to share with you the technical and political discussion of the most urgent problem for us all: discovery and development of alternative energy sources. Our future depends upon that. Thank you very much.

Emphasis on Integrated Development

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 6 Sep 80 p 22

["Full text" of "Declaration of Sao Paulo" distributed at the close of the Inter-American Symposium on Developing Alternative Energy Sources at Sao Paulo on 5 September]

> [Text] The following is the full text of the "Declaration of Sao Paulo" document, distributed at the end of the Inter-American Symposium on Development of Alternative Energy Sources:

Meeting in Sao Paulo, at the end of the studies made during the period of 2 through 5 September 1980, the members of the Reporting Commission of the Organization of American States and of the Forum of the Americas, reflecting points of view expressed and discussed by the participants of the Inter-American Symposium on Development of Alternative Energy Sources and of the Congress on "Free Initiative in Mobilizing Alternative Energy Sources,"

DECLARE:

1. Thorough study of any problem must be based upon a central concern for man. Hence, consideration of the fundamental presence of man is indispensable in the proposals for solving the energy crisis that today affects the continent and the world. And, given the preponderant role of man in overcoming energy difficulties, his development must be an indispensable factor in the rational utilization of alternative energy sources.

2. Substantial improvement of the living conditions of the populations of the Americas is the objective that gives the highest meaning to the effort for full utilization of the continent's energy potential. It is under this common inspiration that the peoples of the region and their governments must confront the challenge represented by development of technology suitable to utilization of its energy alternatives.

3. These meetings emphasized that national energy policies should pay particular attention to the impact on production of foodstuffs, employment and the environment. In brief, the emphasis is on integrated development.

4. Dialog and active cooperation between government and business can help each nation find the energy model appropriate to its resources and objectives.

5. In each country, private enterprise must evaluate and assume the risks of active participation in the effort for developing alternative energy sources. The degree of risk varies according to economic, political and social stability. Hence, the states, in return, must clearly define the scope of their own actions and the politico-economic rules by which the private sector is to carry out its task with maximum efficiency.

6. Development of industrial and agricultural production in the less-favored regions of each country must be a fundamental part of action in the energy field. Expansion of economic frontiers through conscious adoption of different technological alternatives and creation of more jobs must give priority to improving the quality of life in the most needy areas.

The demand for energy on a large scale and in concentrated form that industries and urban areas present and, on the other hand, the demand in small quantities and geographically dispersed form that agriculture and rural areas present leads us to reiterate the need to combine different energy solutions.

Governments and business today face the challenge of establishing a new social project whose economic profile is healthy and whose energy profile is sustainable.

7. Agricultural activity in Latin America and the Caribbean, especially in those countries with limited resources, faces the difficult dilemma of concentrating on production of energy or on production of food.

Development policies must harmonize production of food and of agroenergy, using ecological zoning and energy balance as initial programmatic elements.

In the current energy revolution can also be found the bases for agricultural and agrarian change needed so much by many American countries. These countries can and should concentrate on harmonized production with a twofold objective:

I. To increase the supply of food, for human energy;

II. To increase the supply of fuel from diversified sources, for combustible energy.

8. No program for production of foodstuffs or of energy will be viable without vigorous political decisions to support the various stages of its implementation. However, the energy policy models to be formulated by the American countries must consider the economic, agronomic, political and social characteristics of each one, without prejudice to frank international cooperation that would permit, once such policies are defined, creation of a hemispheric energy policy of benefit to all.

9. It is fitting to acknowledge the great pioneering contribution on a world level that alcohol is making toward overcoming the current energy situation. But current efforts for supplementing it with other sources must be continued, as recent history has taught us the dangers of energy models heavily concentrated on only one fuel.

10. Developing countries and especially Latin American countries need, above all, time and an appropriate supply of long-term funds for the proper financing of their deficits in current transactions and also to make the investments indispensable to reducing their energy dependence. It is urgent to find the mechanisms to generate such surpluses with a minimum of commotion in terms of continental inflation, without foreign deficits and other effects as undesirable as they are unbearable.

11. In the effort of American countries to diversify energy sources and reduce foreign dependence, comparison of various national experiences is highly remunerative to all. Example and demonstration will always lead to opportunities for the constant expansion of the range of alternatives on which each country can rely. The initial conditions of each country, due to the changes required in their productive structures, will surely be different one from the other. This fact, however, should induce American countries to value even more highly comparison of experience and international cooperation in developing their alternative energy sources.

12. Within the context of inter-American cooperation, consideration should be given to the eventual effects of environmental deterioration that can be solved only at the regional level. That concern must be present as an indispensable element in energy planning and preservation of the environment.

13. The studies made in this Symposium and in this Congress stress the universal desirability of maintaining:

a) Within the scope of the Organization of American States, a parliament open to permanent political and technical dialog as a catalyzing element of hemispheric effort and cooperation within the context of the North-South dialog through the active presence in the Organization of important exporting countries, now and potentially, as well as importing countries on a large and small scale;

b) The Forum of the Americas is also a parliament open to political, technical and entrepreneurial dialog of ready access to citizens of all countries of the continent;

c) The work of both organizations can result in establishment of the necessary consensus and construction of the proper policies in the vast field of alternative energy sources.

Political Side of Problem

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 6 Sep 80 p 22

[Text] "Evaluation of the repercussions of the world energy crisis has a clear political connotation. And so does identification of its possible solutions," asserted Foreign Affairs Minister Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro in his speech on "International Relations in Light of the World Energy Crisis" at the plenary session of the Forum of the Americas yesterday afternoon. According to Saraiva Guerreiro, "in the context of the crisis, the international position of all countries will be directly or indirectly affected. Some of them will certainly lose ground in the process of readjusting the international structure induced by the energy crisis.

"This should not be the case with Brazil," he said, a country that, according to him, "is essentially viable in terms of energy, despite all the difficulties confronted on a day-to-day basis." Saraiva Guerreiro warned that "it is important to prevent the moment of crisis being used by other (more developed) countries to create new and unjustifiable obstacles to our trade and development."

The minister referred specifically to "protectionism against Brazilian exports of manufactured goods and the difficulties inherent to recycling, through intermediation by third parties, funds generated by the petroleum-exporting countries." The outcome of this process, in his opinion, "depends upon strengthening relations of trust that we have been trying to develop with the producing countries."

Definition of the course that the international economic order will take, Saraiva Guerreiro believes, will depend heavily upon the ways in which the energy question is resolved. "It is necessary to avoid, for the energy question," he said, "repetition of partial solutions of a discretionary and exclusionary nature, that contribute so much to the inefficient structure of international trade and international technology transfer."

Sizable Agricultural Expansion Required

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 p 22

[Text] Sao Paulo--Agriculture Minister Amaury Stabile said yesterday that the goal of producing 10.7 billion liters of alcohol in 1985 will require great effort by Brazilian agriculture, as it will mean an increase in the area planted to sugar cane of 2 million hectares in a period of only 5 years.

Amaury Stabile participated yesterday in the Inter-American Symposium on Development of Alternative Energy Sources sponsored by the Organization of American States (OAS) and the Forum of the Americas. To give an idea of the size of such efforts, he asserted that the total area planted in the 1979-80 crop year was about 45 million hectares, of which 26 million were for production of foodstuffs. The sugarcane area was 2.6 million hectares.

According to the agriculture minister, expansion of the agricultural frontier in recent years has been about 4 percent annually, which represents an increase of 1.5 million hectares a year.

To plant 2 million more hectares to cane we need an increase of about 400,000 hectares annually, which corresponds to 30 percent of the average annual expansion of the agricultural frontier.

Speaking further about alcohol production, Amaury Stabile stressed the need to find substitutes for sugar cane as a form of production zoning and of providing regional solutions. In the case of cassava, the minister said, there are no industrial limitations on distilleries and 5 projects for producing from 60,000 to 120,000 liters a day will be installed within a period of 2 years. In regard to the agricultural aspect, productivity of cassava, which had been quite low, has now reached 25 tons per hectare and in some regions it has been as high as 50 tons per hectare.

In regard to sweet sorghum, Amaury Stabile stressed its importance in complementing sugar cane because it will mean that installed industrial capacity can be used during 2 more months of the year. For this purpose programs are being developed for selecting species, establishing nurseries and creating incentives.

More Challenges

Besides replacing gasoline with alternative energy sources, the agriculture minister cited the need of substitutes for diesel fuel and fuel oil, which will also require a sizable participation by agriculture. To replace diesel fuel by vegetable oils the objective is to produce 2.33 billion liters of vegetable oil (based upon rapeseed and sunflower seed in the short run and African oilpalm and coconuts in the intermediate term) in 1985. This is equivalent to 10 percent of the demand forecast for that year, assuming a constant rate of growth in demand of about 7 percent a year.

The third challenge cited by the agriculture minister is substitution of fuel oil by charcoal and firewood, which will necessitate a policy of forestation for generating energy.

The goal established is to replace in 1985 the equivalent of 14 million tons of fuel oil, which is 53.7 percent of demand forecast for that year.

To meet this objective, according to the agriculture minister, it is intended to plant, beginning in 1981-82, 870,000 hectares which, with a growth rate of 10 percent in the following years, will require investments of about 25 billion cruzeiros by 1985.

Human Side of Crisis

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 4 Sep 80 p 30

[Text] Alcohol, firewood, coal, biogas, biomass, ethanol, methanol were talked about obsessively as alternative sources to petroleum. But yesterday, temporarily digressing from its eminently technical tone, the Inter-American Symposium on Development of Alternative Energy Sources which is being held in Anhembi managed--without forgetting the theme of the conference--to offer an alternative for its participants and even to inject humor. At the morning plenary session the discussion was about education, human resources, public opinion, the university--in brief, about man and the energy crisis. And the audience could have a respite with something much less technical than on the first day.

Boanerges Ribeiro, president of the Mackenzie Institute, cited humorist Art Buchwald to recall that the energy crisis can be blamed on Harvard University: "If the Arab princes, sons of the sheikhs, had gone to study at universities such as Alabama, Oklahoma and Texas, they would now be organizing football teams rather than continuing to tighten the reins on everyone. Before Harvard educated the young princes of petroleum, their fathers were content with a 25 percent interest in production from their wells and were euphoric when given air-conditioned Cadillacs as presents. It was Harvard that introduced the world of business to these petroleum ministers who are demanding total control of the wells, tripled royalties, F-5 aircraft. I assure you it was not on the deserts of Arabia that they learned this."

Ribeiro said that the Western World must cope with the crisis at any price, to avoid having its production so reduced that it could "become immersed in massive unemployment." And he recalled that "many of our societies have not yet accumulated sufficient capital to establish and maintain any unemployment insurance for a long time," as occurs in the United States.

The question of the unemployment that could result from the crisis was strongly emphasized by Benno Sander, representative of the OAS at the conference. He cited Adam Curle, Harvard professor, to recall that "underdevelopment is weakness in adequate utilization of human resources and in the educational system, the principal means of preparing the people to undertake the task of national development."

In a general way, the conferees concluded that alternative energy sources should be presented as feasible and accessible solutions, without rejecting all the wealth already mobilized in industrial societies. And that alcohol, in the words of Wolfgang Sauer, president of Volkswagen do Brasil, has already reached its "point of no return."

'No Electric-Power Crisis'

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 5 Sep 80 p 18

[Text] Sao Paulo--Industry and Commerce Minister Joao Camilo Penna asserted yesterday at the Inter-American Symposium on Development of Alternative Energy Sources sponsored by the Forum of the Americas that the government will not intervene in the cement crisis because "it is not reaching the proportions that are being reported." He charged that output is being stored for speculation on the black market, but acknowledged that there is a lag in the price of cement, the solution to which is being studied in conjunction with the Planning Ministry.

The industry and commerce minister said that the nuclear program will be installed in a gradual way compatible with the Brazilian energy situation in the hydroelectric sector, asserting that "there is not now, nor is there in sight, any structural crisis in electrical energy. We have hydroelectric sources with a capacity for 213 million kilowatts and at present we are using only 30 million.

"Brazil adopted the correct strategy of constructing the nearest sources for generating electrical energy, so that after we have to construct our hydroelectric plants at greater distances, it will be at constantly rising costs."

As a warning to industry, Camilo Penna added:

"Although there will not be a shortage of electrical energy, should the longer distances make costs increase much more rapidly, industry will have to be prepared to reduce its expenditures."

He also recalled that Brazil's entry into the nuclear era is intended to broaden the nation's knowledge in this field, but atomic energy will be essential when the nation's hydroelectric potential is exhausted.

"The nuclear program," he said, "is intended for technological training, for administrative and political experience with the subject. It is not a major program. It is a minor program. So it should go into effect gradually and not rapidly, more for the purpose of technological training and politico-administrative experience."

Cement

In regard to cement, he asserted:

"For some time now we have been warning industry about the problem--shortage of the product in the market--but as the sector is entrusted to private enterprise, the government will not interfere. And the government will definitely not interfere because it would threaten the very existence of free enterprise. But the crisis is not reaching the proportions reported. It is in Rio Grande do Sul, but it is nonexistent in Minas Gerais. In other words, it is not nationwide. And, furthermore, there is plenty of cement available for speculation on the black market."

PETROBRAS Sticks to Petroleum

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 p 26

[Text] Rio de Janeiro--The main priorities of PETROBRAS are petroleum exploration and production, and for this reason the company's management does not intend to commit its resources to programs for alternative sources of energy production, the president of PETROBRAS, Shigeaki Ueki, said yesterday, also denying existence of studies for transforming it into an energy company.

Even so, Ueki admitted that if the government wishes to have PETROBRAS participate directly in the program for production from alternative sources such as alcohol and coal the company will be mobilized for that purpose, "since it has the experience, the organization, a competent technical staff and international prestige."

Ueki's statements refute the point of view expressed by Carlos Sant'Anna, the company's marketing director, who contends it is possible that PETROBRAS may participate as a minority stockholder in projects for producing alcohol and coal as substitutes for petroleum derivatives. But the PETROBRAS president did not care to dispute his marketing director directly, preferring to leave the door open for the company to engage in those sectors "should the government so desire."

Ueki's main argument in rejecting the possibility, for now at least, of transforming PETROBRAS into an energy company is the need to concentrate technical and material efforts on increasing domestic production of petroleum and accelerating the pace of exploration to discover new deposits capable of increasing the present volume of recoverable petroleum reserves, which is a little more than 1.2 billion barrels.

Besides these two priority areas, Ueki mentioned the need to expand the nation's fleet of oil tankers in order to reduce its dependence on chartering foreign ships to transport crude oil.

Ueki also noted that foreign petroleum conpanies such as Shell and Esso are investing in alternative energy sources in search of profits, but the same objective cannot be pursued by PETROBRAS, which also has other responsibilities.

8834
CSO: 3001

NATIONAL CLAIMS IN ANTARCTIC STILL UNDEFINED

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 10 Aug 80 p 12

[Text] Brasilia--Five years after agreeing to the Treaty of Antarctica, Brazil has not yet decided what claims it will make on the so-called "white continent," which is considered one of the most important reserves of marine and mineral resources for the future of humanity.

On [words missing] the Brazilian government had sent a note to the U.S. Department of State officially agreeing to the Treaty of Antarctica signed in Washington on 1 December 1959 and in force since June 1961. After a 16-year delay, Brazil became the 19th country to adhere to this agreement, for which the United States is depositary.

One of the major points of the communique sent to the U.S. government asserts that "because Brazil has the longest coastline in the South Atlantic, a coastline that for the most part is readily accessible from the southern continent, it has direct and substantial interests in Antarctica."

Since then, however, our government has not issued additional documents to implement Brazil's claims to land in Antarctica; nor has Itamaraty [Foreign Affairs Ministry] sought to have studies conducted defining the "direct and substantial interests" mentioned in the Brazilian declaration.

Lack of Interest

While numerous countries have established military bases, scientific missions and weather stations and others have explored the riches of the South Pole extensively, Brazil seems to have forgotten the reasons for its interest in Antarctica.

There are even tourist services that include trips to the southern lands, but there are no reports that the Brazilian government has organized a single expedition to the lands at the extreme south of the planet. In its covenants, agreements and treaties with countries with which it has relations, Itamaraty has never shown any interest in being associated with other countries that traditionally carry on research in the region. When asked about Brazil's aloofness toward the source of most of its weather patterns, Brazilian diplomats allege that there are much more urgent problems requiring Itamaraty's attention.

The scientific community is bolder, in supporting the "facing theory," according to which countries may make a cartographic projection of their territorial boundaries on Antarctica. In such a case, Brazil would be one of the principal beneficiaries, since it has the longest coastline in South America. This theory, however, is not accepted either by the Brazilian government or internationally.

Brazilian scientists--including specialist Rubens Villela--have called attention to the fact that destructive frosts and droughts in Brazil are intimately connected to polar changes in the Antarctic, a region contiguous to Brazilian territory from the meteorological point of view.

At least one Brazilian position is quite clear: Brazil never claimed any territorial portion of Antarctica, even though this was done by Argentina, Great Britain, Chile, France, New Zealand and Norway--countries that claim sovereignty over considerable portions of the continent. The United States and the Soviet Union have made no territorial claims but, next to Argentina, are the most active there.

Argentina has had military bases and facilities for the National Meteorological Service and the Post Office there since 1904. Several Argentine citizens have been born in Antarctica, which helps legitimatize the permanent occupation of such territories.

The United States, in turn, maintains four stations in Antarctica: two on the coast and two inland. About 120 Americans spend the southern winter in the region, although the number of U.S. scientific workers sometimes reaches over 1,000, as part of a research program costing $50 million. Antarctica has already been a strategic point for the United States. During World War II thousands of U.S. soldiers were sent there. The Soviets have not had the same interest, although they send scientific missions there every year.

Petroleum

Although there are prospects for developing the petroleum and natural gas of the Antarctic continent--as well as other mineral riches--the major economic utilization of the South Pole is represented by fishing for krill, a small shellfish similar to shrimp and as rich in protein as is beef. Krill is caught on a large scale by Japan, Poland and the Soviet Union. It is estimated that in 1978 alone 200,000 tons of krill were caught. Voices of ecology movements have already been raised against such "irrational" fishing, since krill also serves as food for whales, seals, fish and birds. Its disappearance would cause an ecological disaster of large proportions.

Over 00 mineral deposits have been reported in Antarctica, including tin, iron, cobalt, uranium, carbon, gold, vanadium, chrome and "plomo" [translation unknown], as well as hydrocarbons.

The possibility of extracting petroleum has aroused the interest of companies such as Gulf Oil, Atlantic, Esso and Shell. Prospects such as these lead Chile, for example, to claim a territory in Antarctica larger than the country itself. The southern continent has 14 million square kilometers, nearly twice the size of Brazil.

Meanwhile, the principal reason for Brazil's aloofness in regard to its "direct and substantial interests" in Antarctica has been the economic crisis that is affecting the whole world. In reality, any activities in regions of a hostile climate such as the glacial areas are very expensive and provide an uncertain return. Except, of course, for those countries that because of their own climatic conditions are already equipped for any kind of exploration in permanently frozen regions.

8834
CSO: 3001

LANGONI SAYS ESTABLISHED STRATEGY WILL NOT CHANGE

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 p 24

[Text] Brasilia--Central Bank President Carlos Geraldo Langoni said yesterday that at the end of this year Brazil will be full of speculative rumors capable of raising the quotation for the dollar to 70 cruzeiros in the over-the-counter market, compared to the official rate of 55.645 cruzeiros to buy and 55.845 to sell. In recalling that the speculations reflect the transitional period until evidence emerges that the rate of inflation is being reversed--"which cannot occur until next year"--Langoni stressed that "the basic fact is that the government is not changing established strategy on the basis of rumors."

Within gradualism in fighting inflation and adjusting the balance of payments, the Central Bank president noted that the government must maintain poise and firmness in this difficult period of waiting for clear results of the policy put into effect. As the effects of the gradualist strategy have not yet shown up in the figures for inflation and the trade balance, he admitted that the field of action for speculators remains ample.

Once again Langoni condemned resorting to expedient solutions and pointed out that in 1964 and 1965 the government resisted pressures arising during the months of lag between establishing instruments to correct the course of the economy and achievement of concrete results, despite all the annoyance.

"What is essential is confidence in the strategy," the Central Bank president insisted. He recalled that the government never expected short-term results and now acknowledges that "all the current effort will not take effect until 1981." Even if the rumors multiply, Langoni explained that the government can only maintain the basic strategy and hope that reversal of expectations will emerge naturally.

Gradualism

Based upon that principle, the Central Bank president asserted that the government has definitely rejected substantial changes in the strategy of pre-set foreign-exchange devaluation and monetary correction or in administration of interest rates. Giving in to pressure for changes would, in Langoni's opinion, amount to accepting an inflation plateau of 100 percent.

According to him, the government cannot even think of condoning triple-digit inflation; nor can the economy itself, since accepting an excessively high rate carries the risk of generating "social and political instability sufficient to compromise the nation's redemocratization process."

Hence, the Central Bank president said, in view of "social restrictions," the only alternative for combating inflation and the deficit in foreign accounts is gradualism. "The strategy adopted is based upon the premise that results will come, but over a period compatible with the domestic and foreign situation. There is thus no point in requiring weekly or even daily results," Langoni commented.

If it were not for the government's extreme caution in avoiding aggravation of social problems, the government would not be choosing structural changes in the Brazilian economy, but would be imposing drastic measures such as recession and widespread import restrictions. But the concern for maintaining the rate of economic growth in order to respond to heavy pressure on employment and restrict inequality in personal and regional income led the government, as explained by Langoni, to make a choice for gradualism.

"The balance-of-payments problem is tied to the dependency on imported petroleum. However, the proposed solution is not to reduce petroleum imports but, rather, to create alternative energy sources. Restricting imports could eliminate the trade deficit, but there would be a reduction in economic activity and shortly thereafter the same problems would return. Hence the choice of gradualism compatible with the nation's social and political objectives," the Central Bank president emphasized.

Minidevaluations

Based upon the firm intention of monetary authorities not to change their strategy, Langoni dismissed any possibility of also speeding up the foreign-exchange minidevaluations as a way of reducing the trade-balance deficit. He explained that, within a certain margin of flexibility in established goals, the pre-set exchange correction has gone from 40 percent to "a little less than 50 percent" this year, which carries more favorable prospects for the exporting sector.

Even so, the Central Bank president acknowledged that exporters could have a reduction in their profit margins due to the lag between devaluation of the cruzeiro and inflation. But he remarked that businessmen should also have confidence in a reduced rate of inflation and thus believe that next year's exchange correction will be sufficient to cover possible differences in the current period.

The director of the foreign area of the Central Bank, Jose Carlos Madeira Serrano, added that minidevaluations of the cruzeiro are already programmed based upon the new ceiling of a little less than 50 percent. According to Serrano, no one can say that the cruzeiro is overvalued. "The only indicator of overvaluation," he asserted, "would be a sharp drop in the level of exports. And exports are maintaining a very rapid growth rate."

8834
CSO: 3001

STUDENT SUPPORT FOR NETTO'S ECONOMIC POLICIES SEEN

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 2 Sep 80 p 30

[Text] Greater participation by society in the government's economic decisions is the only solution for the current Brazilian crisis, according to 7 young people with an average age of 23 who are considered the best students in their specialties by the Gastao Vidigal Foundation for Economic Studies. Winners of the 1979 Gastao Vidigal Prize, the recent graduates are, in principle, all in agreement with the policy adopted by the government and especially with the orthodox economic theories of Planning Minister Delfim Netto.

Based upon the premise that the fight against inflation is being waged with the proper weapons--reduction of government expenditures and control of the money supply--and that the deficit in the balance of payments will be overcome through aid to exports and agriculture, the young people suggest minor adjustments in economic policy.

The general tendency is to include the Brazilian crisis in the broader context of the international capitalist system, as does Maria Cristina de Azevedo Costa of the USP [Sao Paulo University] School of Architecture and Urban Studies (FAU). But, for Paulo de Mesquita Neto of the USP Law School, this argument alone cannot account for the situation.

"Brazil's economic policy is being discussed by a restricted group of persons who now hold power," he asserts. And Maria Lucia Bressan Pinheiro, also an FAU graduate, adds that "the decisions pursue the interests of only one class." For that reason, Sergio Feliciano Crispin of the USP School of Economics and Administration believes "the mechanism of political liberalization is important to increase the participation of society in economic decisions."

Paulo de Mesquito Neto also points out that this partial view leads to measures of expediency that take into account "only technical elements derived from theory, without adapting them to reality." Hence, in his opinion, decisions are changed without allowing a safety margin for businessmen and workers.

Milan Wohland of the Sao Paulo School of Business Administration, Getulio Vargas Foundation, believes, in turn, that the economy must be managed on two levels: the short term, to cope with instability, and the medium and long term, to find national alternatives. And Paolo Alfredini of the USP Polytechnic School recalls that Brazil, just as the world economy, is going through a transitional phase, mainly in substituting energy sources, and that the projects in which the nation is engaged, because they require much investment, will be successful only in the long run.

Sergio Feliciano Crispim, on the other hand, shares Minister Delfim Netto's certainty that inflation will be reversed and also justifies government control of the economy, including prices, even if this should reduce investment and lead to unemployment. The great Brazilian problem, according to Crispim, is in the industrialization model it adopted without simultaneously promoting a "distribution of income among the states, which hinders development strategy and expansion of the market."

According to Jose Roberto de Almeida Amazonas of the Polytechnic School, these difficulties should be countered on two levels: domestic and foreign. To eliminate the balance-of-payments deficit he suggests more vigorous action abroad in order to change the nation's image, "as only in this way will we sell our goods abroad." He compares Brazil today to the 1929 crisis in the United States: "The American crisis was caused by a drop in production, because of excess savings. The Brazilian crisis today is in consumption."

8834
CSO: 3001

BRASPETRO INVESTMENTS TOTAL $400 MILLION IN 8 YEARS

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 29 Aug 80 p 27

[Text] Brasilia--PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] President Shigeaki Ueki announced yesterday that BRASPETRO [PETROBRAS International, Inc], since its creation in 1972, has invested the equivalent of $400 million abroad. Of that total, $180 million were invested in Iraq alone, where the state enterprise will save about $292 million in foreign exchange by the end of this year, just from the extra supply of 160,000 barrels daily stipulated in its contract. He also revealed that, thanks to the subsidiary's work in six countries, Brazil has been guaranteed a daily supply of 456,000 barrels of crude oil daily.

According to Ueki, who did not testify yesterday before the CPI [Congressional Investigating Committee] examining PETROBRAS, due to lack of a quorum, BRASPETRO never lost either petroleum or money in the first contract signed with Iraq for exploring the Majnoon field. Rather, investments made through last December were repaid with interest. Brazil has gained foreign exchange of $135 million, "which is the difference between the value of the crude oil we received as reimbursement ($315 million) and investments by PETROBRAS in Iraq ($180 million)."

Majnoon

As the state enterprise president explained, Iraqi authorities, in meeting with PETROBRAS officials, had expressed the intention of altering "some conditions" of the contract signed in 1972, "due to the significant changes that have occurred in the world petroleum market since 1973." Beginning with the visit of the Iraqi petroleum minister in December 1979--on his way to the OPEC meeting in Caracas--negotiations were held between the two countries resulting in adjustments "that were all of benefit to us." The petroleum of the Majnoon region, according to Shigeaki Ueki, never belonged to BRASPETRO, but rather to the Iraqi state enterprise, INOC [Iraqi National Oil Company].

In his opinion, besides the reimbursement for what was invested through 1979, BRASPETRO had another benefit from the new contract: an advance supply of additional petroleum during the first quarter of this year of about 20,750,000 barrels at official prices. As this purchase was made at prices $8 below the market to which Brazil would have had to resort to replace stocks outside of official contracts, "BRASPETRO can be credited with saving about $166 million in foreign exchange." According to Ueki, another objective of the subsidiary's foreign operations was thus achieved: assurance of supply at market prices.

The additional supply of 160,000 barrels a day will be in effect for 13 years (Brazil normally buys 260,000 barrels from Iraq daily) and, according to the PETROBRAS president, it amounts to getting the supplies that would have been received according to the 1972 contract 3 years in advance, inasmuch as Majnoon production will not begin until the middle of 1983. According to Shigeaki Ueki, if we consider the fact that this petroleum has been sent to Brazil since January without payment of any additional premium --usually $5 a barrel--PETROBRAS activities in Iraq can also be credited with saving the $292 million in foreign exchange mentioned above. He recalled that 17 percent of world crude oil trade currently pays that additional amount.

The PETROBRAS president also disclosed to the press that another renegotiated clause stipulates that INOC will undertake all the investment needed to develop Majnoon. As he pointed out, responsibility for investing $1 billion, which had been Brazil's, thus falls upon the Iraqi petroleum sector, "without our failing to be remunerated for the capital invested in exploration." That amount, he calculates, is about what will be needed for more rapid development of the fields discovered offshore from Rio de Janeiro state, where "deepwater work will require investment of over $3 billion."

Other Services

As the PETROBRAS president also revealed, even after renogiation of the contract BRASPETRO will continue rendering services to INOC and other enterprises of the Iraqi Petroleum Ministry in compliance with a general contract for furnishing technical assistance signed when the new agreement was reached. Among such work, he mentioned technical assistance for geological, production, drilling and engineering services; for studies of the Nahr Umr oil field deposits and updating studies of the Majnoon field itself; for furnishing and operating--through BRASOIL, a BRASPETRO subsidiary--drilling services through two of its own rigs; and for preliminary studies for utilizing gas associated with the oil in the area.

Shigeaki Ueki also reported that furnishing and operating two well-completion rigs through BRASOIL; geological-geophysical regional study of Iraq, with the intention of ascertaining that nation's oil-producing potential; study and development of the Majnoon and Nahr Umr fields, together with the other fields of southern Iraq; study of basic engineering, now underway in Brazil; and preparation of documentation intended for public bidding on the works necessary for production, pumping, transporting and storing heavy oil yet to be produced in Majnoon are all "at the height of negotiation."

All this, in his opinion, "represents foreign exchange for Brazil," although he did not say how much. He announced that the most recent BRASPETRO estimate of Majnoon reserves is 7 billion barrels, while the estimate for Nahr Umr is 1.5 billion barrels.

8834
CSO: 3000

PETROLEUM PRODUCTION IN 1980 TO INCREASE 17 PERCENT OVER 1979

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 27 Aug 80 p 20

[Text] Domestic petroleum production this year should reach 73.5 million barrels, representing an increase of 17 percent over last year, when production was 62.2 million barrels. According to PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] Production Director Jose Marques Neto, the results obtained through July (40.5 million barrels) and entry into operation of new fields assure the accuracy of the forecast.

Jose Marques Neto said that PETROBRAS has been having some success in reevaluating old fields, mainly those of the Sergipe and Bahia onshore basins. By drilling at the edges of the already-known fields, specialists have discovered additional petroleum reserves. Similar results are also obtained by drilling more deeply in fields where reserves were showing significantly less production.

The production director recalled that the PETROBRAS strategy is to attack simultaneously various new areas, drilling exploratory wells. He believes the goal of 500,000 barrels a day by 1985 will be reached easily, provided the rate of success attained in recent years is maintained.

Among the pleasant surprises that have been occurring in production, PETROBRAS technicians cite the Bahia offshore Submarine-37 well near Espirito Santo. This well entered into production this week with a volume of 1,460 barrels a day. A permanent platform is being used and two more wells will be drilled, which will result in production rising to 2,520 barrels a day by the end of this year. Jose Marques Neto said the deposit is not very large but fully justifies the investment.

He later spoke about the Lagoa Parda region, an Espirito Santo onshore basin, where a new petroleum formation was discovered recently. Three derricks are working in the region. It is possible that the production of Bahia Submarine-37 may be joined to Espirito Santo wells through a single drainage system. These wells will be producing more than 10,000 barrels a day in the future.

8834
CSO: 3001

SERRA PELADA PRODUCES 1.1 TONS OF GOLD DURING AUGUST

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 4 Sep 80 p 26

[Text] Brasilia--Government sources told O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO yesterday that during the month of August Serra Pelada production reached 1.1 tons of gold, with a daily average of 30 to 40 kilograms. They also predicted that by the end of this year about 7 tons of gold will be removed from that region alone. Three tons have been obtained since mining began. They revealed that about 10,000 persons have begun to work at the Goiaba mining settlement in the Serra das Andorinhas mountains near Belem, Para.

The same sources also reported that Mines and Energy Minister Cesar Cals yesterday sent the Mines and Energy Ministry bill creating a policy for exploration of precious metals and precious and semi-precious stones to the ministers who make up the Economic Development Council [CDE]. The matter was also one of the subjects discussed during the audience Cals had yesterday with President Figueiredo.

Euphoria

The same official sources in Brasilia said that entry of the Goiaba mine into production made Brazilian authorities "happy." The Serra das Andorinhas area is the center of the highest hopes that Brazil can quickly reach a level of gold production that--even if it doesn't come near that of South Africa or the Soviet Union, for example--can give the government some monetary gold reserves. One ounce now sells for $635 on the international market. From the Serra Pelada alone, which experts consider just "a trickle," the Central Bank has already collected 3 tons. The Mines and Energy Ministry, according to a document delivered to the CDE, reported that the Mineral Resources Prospecting Company [Minerobras] cites eight gold-producing regions in its survey: 1) the Minas Gerais Ferriferous Quadrilateral; 2) a strip of the Territory of Amapa contiguous to the Guianas; 3) the Gurupi-Maracacume region between Para and Maranhao; 4) the Tapajos River; 5) the eastern north-central region of Goias; 6) Upper Paraguay River and the Cuiaba River in Mato Grosso; 7) Serra da Jacobina and environs in Bahia; 8) the Diamantina plateau, also in Bahia.

The Mines and Energy Ministry intends that gold be developed in Brazil--according to the document--through interministerial action and does not contemplate establishing an "OUROBRAS" [Brazilian Gold Corporation].

8834
CSO: 3001

EMBRAER ANNOUNCES PURCHASES OF AIRCRAFT BY FRANCE

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 4 Sep 80 p 28

[Text] EMBRAER [Brazilian Aeronautics Company] announced in Sao Jose dos Campos yesterday that the French regional airline company Brittay Air International signed a letter of intent in London yesterday for purchase of three Brasilia aircraft, the first prototype of which is to be flown in 1982, entering quantity production in 1984.

The Brasilia, which is being developed by EMBRAER, will have capacity for 30 passengers or 3 tons of freight, powered by 2 turbine engines of up to 1,500 horsepower each. The order from Brittay (which already flies Bandeirantes aircraft on its regional lines) is the 54th order EMBRAER has received for its future model. Besides several Brazilian regional airline companies, firms in the United States and Great Britain have ordered the Brasilia.

EMBRAER also announced yesterday that Brazil's participation in the international Fareborough Fair is being very well received, with great interest on the part of visitors (mainly military persons) in the T-27, military training aircraft whose first prototype was flown 19 August, the company's 11th anniversary.

Ministry Purchases 50 Xingu Aircraft

It was announced in Paris yesterday that the French Defense Ministry is finalizing purchase of 50 Xingu-EMB-121 training aircraft produced by EMBRAER. The contract, worth $80 million, is in the final phase of negotiation.

Official sources said the government preferred the Xingu to other models of U.S. manufacture and, in exchange, France expects to sell Brazil Mirage-50 combat aircraft, the European Airbus and possibly a license for manufacturing the French Puma helicopter here.

The Xingu was selected by the French in preference to the American-made C-90 King Air of Beechcraft and the Cessna-425 Corsair. After 1982 it will replace the DC-3 and Dessault-315 used for pilot training.

8834
CSO: 3001

NEW ALCOHOL PROGRAM DESIGNED EXCLUSIVELY FOR EXPORT

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 28 Aug 80 p 29

[Text] Brasilia--The government is preparing a new alcohol program intended exclusively for export. A message to that effect was received 20 August by Mines and Energy Minister Cesar Cals through a "ministerial memorandum" from Planning Minister Delfim Netto.

According to Delfim Netto's explanation, the new alcohol program will be accomplished with foreign capital and alcohol-producing complexes will be established in new agricultural regions so as not to interfere with the existing PROALCOOL [National Alcohol Program] and food production in traditional agricultural regions.

Interest

In his memorandum, the planning minister explained that there are many foreign groups interested in investing in Brazil's alcohol-producing sector but this capital should be accepted subject to certain controls and free of interference in the current PROALCOOL. Minister Delfim's memorandum to Minister Cesar Cals does not mention specific figures, goals or regions, but a Mines and Energy Ministry source said the region chosen for the export alcohol complexes will be the Central-West.

The planning minister argues that an alcohol program parallel to the existing one, exclusively for export, will not bring a saving in petroleum imports but will be a source of hard currency for the nation. He also says the program will be able to retain rural manpower, reducing rural-urban migration, assure growth of the distillery-equipment industry and create markets in foreign countries for alcohol-using vehicles made in Brazil.

Minister Delfim Netto explains that entry of foreign capital in the agricultural sector will not create national security problems, because not only entry of foreign capital in the form of investment but also use of such capital to buy land is already governed by laws to protect national interests. He also says that, although intended for export, the alcohol produced in this second program may, when the government sees fit, be retained to meet domestic needs. The average price of hydrous ethyl alcohol on the international market is now about $60 a barrel of 159 liters (22 cruzeiros per liter).

IBRD Imposes Credit Condition

Brasilia and Sao Paulo--The Ministry of Industry and Commerce is negotiating with the IBRD (World Bank) and the IDB (Inter-American Development Bank) a public international bidding for supplying some of the equipment for PROALCOOL distilleries. This is the latest condition imposed by the World Bank to open a line of credit for PROALCOOL of $200 million--11 billion cruzeiros at present exchange rates--in 1981.

Cement makers will also meet today with the CDI (Industrial Development Council) to discuss purchase of equipment from Czechoslovakia, which in turn will receive iron ore from Brazil. The ABINEE [Brazilian Electro-Electronic Industry Association] and the ABDIB [Brazilian Association for the Development of Basic Industries] received from Minister Camilo Penna, through a telex sent last week, assurances that domestic industry will continue to be protected despite these imports. The minister said that domestic-source equipment in Brazilian projects will continue to be between 75 and 80 percent, even if purchase of hydroelectric equipment is agreed to with East European countries, as is still being negotiated.

Demonstration of Weakness

"Importation of equipment or parts for alcohol distilleries would be a demonstration of the government's weakness," asserted the executive vice president of Zanini, Luis Lacerda Biagi, in Sao Paulo yesterday in commenting on the IDB requirement for providing funds to the National Alcohol Program.

"For the equipment-producing sector, this import liberalization may even be considered an important event. Maybe from then on some value will begin to be given to what is made in Brazil in terms of technology and technical assistance by distillery manufacturers," asserted Mr Biagi, adding that he "could not say much," because he is "an interested party."

ABIMAQ (Brazilian Association of Machine Industries) President Einar Kok said that "IDB should already be familiar with our country's situation in producing equipment for manufacturing alcohol. We have technology and everything, all made here." The most recent legal importation of distillery equipment took place 30 years ago, recalled Luis Lacerda Biagi. Mr Kok added that "there is no need to accept the IDB terms."

An alcohol producer associated with COPERSUCAR [Sao Paulo Cooperative of Sugar and Alcohol Producers], Joao Guilherme Ometto, explained that "importation of equipment is entirely unnecessary. I am proof of that. What I need I buy in the domestic market. Not only from Zanini or from Dedini, but from other manufacturers established here and already experienced," adding that "only in the case of large grinding equipment do we have only three manufacturers: Zanini, Dedini and Five Lille Northeast."

Crop Year 1981 Already Funded

Brasilia--Financing arrangements for the 1980-81 sugar and alcohol crop year were approved yesterday by the National Monetary Council [CMN] providing 32.8 billion cruzeiros for storage and 8.9 billion cruzeiros for buying for export. The percentage for warehouse receipts was raised from 24 percent to 36 percent.

In announcing the measure, Finance Minister Ernane Galveas said the Sugar and Alcohol Institute was authorized to raise the percentages of the first purchase for export from 50 percent to 60 percent in the Central-South and from 75 percent to 90 percent in the North-Northeast, should the necessary funds be available.

The CMN also authorized the Federal Savings Bank to raise from 30 to 50 ORTNs [Indexed National Treasury Bonds]--from 18,000 cruzeiros to 30,000 cruzeiros--the limit on loans to taxi-cab owners for converting motors from gasoline to alcohol. The reason is that in some cases conversion is costing more than 18,000 cruzeiros.

MIC Budget Is Defined

Brasilia--The Planning Ministry has decided upon the budget for the Ministry of Industry and Commerce [MIC] for 1981: PROALCOOL will receive between 55 billion and 60 billion cruzeiros--and not 50 billion as was announced by Industry and Commerce Minister Camilo Penna himself--to establish its goal of 10.7 billion liters for the 1985 crop year. SIDERBRAS [Brazilian Iron and Steel Corporation] capital will be increased from 9 billion cruzeiros to 15 billion cruzeiros, an increase of 70 percent compared to this year, and the BNDE [National Economic Development Bank] will have to be reimbursed 30 billion cruzeiros by the federal Treasury for having made a loan with monetary correction pre-set at 20 percent.

Although there is no overall table of the appropriations for all the MIC agencies, funds will be sufficient to continue the iron-and-steel, energy, tourism, alkali, rubber and technology and industrial standardization programs. The inflation forecast for the next fiscal year, the amount of which was not revealed by Minister Camilo Penna, has already been computed.

Funds for the increase of SIDERBRAS capital will originate from tax revenues of the Treasury, without including the revenues of the government-operated mills themselves. Minister Camilo Penna, however, asserts that the less inflation there is, the more satisfactory the funds will be.

The appropriation for EMBRATUR [Brazilian Tourism Company] and for the National Alkali Company are not from the Treasury alone, but from a number of other sources of funds and are greater than those of this year. Alcanorte will receive 760 million cruzeiros, which will enable it to continue its program in 1982. The National Alkali Company will have some budgetary adjustments to make.

Minister Camilo Penna is negotiating with Minister Delfim Netto about adopting new mechanisms for attracting funds so that the BNDE may continue operating satisfactorily. He would like the BNDE--following the example of what is now the case with the BNH [National Housing Bank]--to be one of the sectors exempted from adhering to the limitation on credit expansion.

8834
CSO: 3001

CEMENT FIRMS TO FORM 'POOL' FOR MINING COAL

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 26 Aug 80 p 26

[Text] The National Cement Industry Association has begun to get in touch with the 15 factories in Brazil that produce clinker (basic raw material for making cement), with the objective of determining the stockholder participation of the company, the only one to be established for developing the Leao II and Ceival coal deposits in Rio Grande do Sul. This work will be finished in 90 days. According to the president of the association, Joao Santos, all companies in the sector, in principle, are to participate in the pool. The investment of each one will be proportional to production capacity and, consequently, to the sonsumption of fuel oil. Consumption of oil by the sector is now 2.5 million tons annually, which, according to the Coal Protocol, must be entirely substituted.

The feasibility study should be finished in 6 months, and development of the mines will take 5 years. The estimated production is 5 million tons per year, intended to supply the cement industry. Joao Santos said it is not yet possible to ascertain the amount of investment necessary.

The project's coordinator, Joao Carlos Linhares, will meet later this week with the president of the Brazilian Electric Power Enterprises Support Company (CAEEB), Ney Webster, to begin setting up the transportation system for distributing production. The businessman explained that, as the cement industry has no background in coal mining, project coordination will seek the needed engineering, transportation and processing assistance in the private sector and CAEEB. He explained that after the company is set up, the cement plants will be responsible only for mining and processing.

8834
CSO: 3001

NEW AGRICULTURAL FRONTIERS SAID TO ENSURE FOOD SUPPLY

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 2 Sep 80 p 18

[Interview with Planning Minister Delfim Netto in Brasilia: "Delfim: New Agricultural Frontiers Assure Food Supply"; date and name of interviewer not given]

[Text] Brasilia--"When I say that a revolution is going on right before our eyes, that a new Brazil is emerging in the hinterland, it is not said just for effect. The Central West, the Extreme West and the Northwest of Brazil are exploding with activity."

That is the declaration of Planning Minister Delfim Netto, in whose view the new agricultural frontiers are beginning to substantiate the government's strategy: to rebuild reserve supplies of food--which have been nonexistent since 1979--and to increase the exportable surplus with the purpose of alleviating the foreign-trade deficit caused primarily by petroleum imports.

In an exclusive interview with O GLOBO, Minister Delfim Netto speaks enthusiastically about what is taking place in the nation's new agricultural areas:

[Question] How can the new frontiers help the government reduce the trade-balance deficit and the rate of inflation?

Delfim [Netto]: What is the significance of the opening of new agricultural frontiers in the fight against inflation and the balance-of-payments deficit? It is very simple:

In the first place, it means a greater output of foodstuffs; second, it reduces the risk of widespread crop failure because, to the extent that you are able to enlarge the agricultural area, you are reducing the overall effects of a drought, of local floods, of frost.

To the extent that this frontier is consolidated, the government must invest in storage facilities and local highways. This gives more stability to food production. With greater stability and increased production, you guarantee a supply of food sufficient for the domestic market, eliminating exaggerated price increases for this item, which has great weight in the calculation of inflation. Moreover, by continuing to give priority to agriculture we are going to generate surpluses, which are useful in two ways: to rebuild the government's reserve stocks, which have been zero since 1979; these stocks enable the government to manage things so as to prevent the most flagrant speculative maneuvers of profiteers. The second effect is the exportable surplus, and when you have that it relieves the foreign-trade deficit caused mainly by petroleum imports. Quite aside from the fact that you no longer have to spend dollars to import foodstuffs, in other than exceptional cases.

City people don't always realize exactly what this priority of the Figueiredo government represents; when I say that a revolution is going on right before our eyes, that a new Brazil is emerging in the hinterland, this is not said just for effect, a rhetorical figure of speech that sounds good. You must go there and see it. The Central West, the Extreme West, the Northwest of Brazil are exploding with activity--which confirms our belief in the enormous vitality of this nation. I have often said to journalists who didn't believe me: go there and see it with your own eyes. And those who go there return with a new vision of our nation. To give a few examples: Simply with the expansion that has occurred in the 1979-80 crop year, the CFP [Production Financing Commission]--the agency of the Agriculture Ministry responsible for guaranteeing purchases at the minimum price--has increased by 300 kilometers, on the average, the distance covered by its purchasing agents. And we haven't even built highways yet! Little villages in Mato Grosso (to the north) and Rondonia, that a few years ago had 3,000 to 4,000 inhabitants, have grown to 30,000 and there are cases of even 90,000 inhabitants, requiring a superhuman effort by regional authorities to instill a little order in the Far West.

And this is why I repeat: go there and see it and then come and tell us whether or not there is a revolution going on...

[Question] What kind of assistance is the government providing for the Central-West region?

Delfim: The government is confident, basically, that development of these new regions will come about through the sum total of thousands of individual initiatives. These are people with a pioneering spirit, people who are no longer willing to work the worn-out soil in some regions of the South; people who have to work; essentially, people with enough initiative not to wait for sophisticated plans from the government.

The government is risking nothing. The government is far too slow-moving a creature to keep ahead of these people. What the government can and must do is, on the one hand, give incentives for planting by financing operating costs; this we are doing in a generous way. Everything that must be planted will be financed. It is already being done, in fact. On the other hand, the government must guarantee purchase of all output should the market not extend to these regions or should it offer ridiculously low prices. In this case also the minimum prices set last year and this year are quite remunerative. Furthermore, we are providing agricultural insurance so that the farmer does not have to quit because of a poor crop. This is so he can stay and try again the next year.

For the central region of Brazil, especially Goias and Mato Grosso, we were able to arrange 10 billion cruzeiros this year to finance agricultural investments, which we were not able to do in the other regions. This is precisely to encourage the pioneers, those who are expanding their planted area. Agriculture Minister Amaury Stabile, who is even more enthusiastic than I am, thought twice that much was needed. This year it wasn't enough. We'll see what happens next year.

As we have a shortage of funds and petroleum is no plaything, we decided to build local highways; we had to choose: no big projects, but rather a number of short stretches of road that help to ship out production more dependably. We are going to back the POLONOROESTE [Program for Development of the Northwest] and some other specific programs for this region to develop its agriculture. But our faith is really in the strength of the man who is going there alone; by the time we get there he has already worked out almost everything.

[Question] Is there any special strategy to attract entrepreneurs to the Central-West region?

Delfim: Look, any self-respecting entrepreneur doesn't have to wait for the government to offer incentives. I know some of them, even big businessmen, who on the weekend leave Sao Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Belo Horizonte, Curitiba and various other comforts to go out into the hinterland and undertake settlement projects. These are also pioneering initiatives and worthy of attention. But, if our most immediate necessity is food, to increase grain production, we really have to put our faith in the small entrepreneurs. The big businessman is very enthusiastic about cattle, which is a good business--and for the nation as well--but I should like to see them devote the same effort to farming. Because what must be understood is that the farmer is a very special person; one doesn't get that way overnight. In any event, I think it is very important for large-scale entrepreneurs to become interested in opening up the new areas, because the small and medium-sized entrepreneurs will follow them.

8834
CSO: 3001

BRIEFS

AUGUST INFLATION 6 PERCENT--Rio de Janeiro--Inflation in August of this year, as computed by the Getulio Vargas Foundation, was much less than in July but greater than that of August last year, so that the latest 12-month increase continues to rise. Unofficial reports indicate that in August prices rose between 6 and 7 percent, while in the same month last year inflation was 5.8 percent. In 1 year's time the increase has thus been about 108 percent. It is also confirmed that for the first time this year the cost of living in Rio de Janeiro rose more than did the General Price Index, as the former may have risen 7.5 percent in August. This reversal, if continued for a few months, would deflate the polemic that has been going on between government personnel and certain academic circles in regard to criteria used by the Getulio Vargas Foundation in computing the Wholesale Price Index and the General Price Index. [Text] [Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 2 Sep 80 p 29] 8834

CSO: 3001

U.S. 'NEOCOLONIALIST' IDEOLOGICAL CRISIS IN LATIN AMERICA NOTED

Havana OCLAE in Spanish Jun 80 pp 18-26

[Text] What does the United States' neocolonialist ideology consist of? How is it currently manifested? What are the new tactics being employed by the American propaganda services? These and other questions will be examined in this article.

The overthrow in July 1979 of the dictatorship that had been established in Nicaragua with the aid of Yankee imperialism is one of the most important events in the political life of Latin America. It is another great victory for the continent's national democratic forces. A great contribution can be attributed to the vigorous worldwide campaign of solidarity with the Nicaraguans, which prevented open intervention on the part of the United States and its satellites to come to the aid of Somoza.

The success of the Nicaraguan revolution has influenced and will influence the whole progress of the anti-imperialist struggles of the peoples of Latin America and also of the entire world to liberate themselves. The downfall of the Somoza regime, supported to the very last by Washington, was not an isolated instance; it was a link in the chain of major failures in the United States' Latin-American policy. Before that, the policy directed toward isolating and blockading Cuba had failed. As a result of the peoples of Latin America's liberation movement, the White House found itself forced to sign new treaties regarding the Panama Canal. The attempts of the American special services, in conjunction with local reactionary elements, to "create unstable" situations in Guyana, Jamaica and other countries were thwarted.

The inability of the United States to resort to armed force today to crush the national liberation movements in the Western Hemisphere — in particular in Nicaragua — as it did in Guatemala and the Dominican Republic, confirms the thesis that "under /no/ [in italics] circumstances is it possible for the imperialist powers to in practice intervene."

The United States' inability to form a bloc of countries within the OAS that would obey it, for the purpose of lending the appearance of "collectivity" to actions engaged in to stifle the struggle for liberation in Nicaragua and other countries, is another link in the chain.

At present, the United States finds itself constantly forced to adapt to positions assumed by the majority of the Latin-American countries in order to avoid being totally isolated on the continent, a situation that bears witness to Washington's Latin-American policy crisis.

This crisis is above all related to the worsening of the general crisis capitalism is now going through and is typical of U.S. relations with the countries of Latin America, but also with other developing nations. The United States' neocolonialist policy has failed.

As a policy and practice of the imperialist countries, with their politico-military alliances and monopolistic capital's economic unions which determine the economic and socipolitical development dependent on these countries, this neocolonialism is aimed at preserving and extending exploitation of those developing nations dependent on it. This policy is carried out by means of a system of economic, political and military relations based on unequal rights as well as through massive ideological persuasion of the peoples of these countries.

The goal of ideologically subjecting the developing countries to imperialism, of preventing the propagation of the Marxist-Leninist ideology in them, of discrediting scientific and constructive socialism is, in our opinion, ideological neocolonialism.

This is achieved by means of ideological expansion, which includes blackmail in terms of the "communist threat," possession and control of the mass communications and propaganda media, ideological persuasion of specific social sectors, propagation of neocolonialist doctrines, theories and views, examples of reactionary bourgeois culture, bribery of top union leaders and the intellectual community, implementation of acts of ideological sabotage and "social espionage," utilization of welfare funds, the Peace Corps and other devices.

All this is particularly characteristic of the United States' ideological neocolonialism in Latin America, the objective of which is to ideologically guarantee achievement of the general programs of its neocolonialist areal policy: to maintain and consolidate the positions held by the transnational monopolies in the countries of the region in question; to preserve the capitalist regime there; to prevent the propagation of revolutionary, progressive and democratic ideas among the large segments of the Latin-American population; to implant anticommunist and reactionary states of mind and points of view; to propagate the American way of life; to prevent the achievement of progressive reforms that could contribute to consolidation of the sovereignty of the Latin-American countries and their economic and political independence; to influence, in a way advantageous to the United States, those general and specific situations that represent dangers for American positions in given countries in the hemisphere and in the area as a whole.

However, the failure of the social reform policy, the inconsistency of bourgeois premises, of U.S. political and ideological doctrines and views, the increase in the area's relations with the socialist world have contributed to the fact that socialist ideas have been spreading more extensively in Latin America and the search for independent ways of achieving socio-economic and political developmena has been stepped up.

Under the circumstances, the Carter administration has attempted to introduce a new revision of the ways, means and methods employed in the ideological offensive against Latin America for the purpose of increasing the effectiveness of the ideological guarantee of the United States' economic strategy and foreign policy.

This revision is being effected within the framework of general "modernizztion" of the neocolonialist strategy, to be carried out by the forces of imperialism during the early 1980's.

The "modernization" of U.S. ideological expansion in Latin America is being carried out by the current administration while taking into account the ever greater importance of the region for the United States, as determined by a number of factors.

In the first place, Latin America is actively participating in the developing countries' struggle to establish a new international economic order (NOEI [New International Economic Order]). The position the Latin-American countries adopt on these issues in international assemblies to a large extent determines the general position adopted by the developing countries with regard to the industrialized capitalist countries.

As was pointed out in the U.S. Congress, "Latin America is not only the 'ideological leader' of the developing countries' movement to establish the NOEI; it is also the initiator of very important practical measures in that direction." It is common knowledge that important UN documents pertaining to the NOEI Action Program, Charter of [Member] States' Economic Rights and Obligations and Code of Behavior for Transnational Firms were approved through the initiative of the Latin-American countries. Hence the United States' desire to assure itself the support of this "ideological leader."

Secondly, during a severe energy crisis, the importance of the Latin-American countries grows, first of all that of Venezuela and Mexico as suppliers of energy resources (oil, gas) as well as of strategic materials for military production.

Thirdly, in addition to being an objective of ideological attack, the U.S. propaganda services see in Latin America a particular kind of practice terrain on which they can polish and perfect the most up-to-date methods of ideological sabotage, methods for exerting psychological influence. American imperialism transfers these perfected and proven methods of ideological subjugation of the peoples of this continent to Asian and African countries.

Bourgeois American researchers prefer not to employ the term "ideological expansion." In their work in this field, the most frequently occuring expression is "cultural relations." For example, the American political scientist, J. Atkins, a professor at the U.S. Naval Academy, analyzes cultural relations among countries as "a means of contributing to the achievement of political goals." He notes that the Western countries, in particular the United States, disguise their "cultural expansion" in Latin America with various kinds of watchwords.

One of these would appear to have some sort of objective basis, the "convergence of the civilizations" of the United States and Latin America.

In the 1970's, we observed a new wave of American ideological offensive against the Latin-American continent, moving in the following directions:

Propaganda emanating from official reports from Washington on important international policy issues, praise of American ideas, views and doctrines regarding politics, the economy, culture and morality.

Establishment of control over the mass communications media: radio and television commercials, film distribution, the publication of books.

"Sociological propaganda," publicity on the "advantages" of the American way of life.

Campaign "in defense of human rights."

At present, the chief role in the U.S. ideological neocolonialist policy in Latin America is played by the International Relations Bureau (DRI), created by President Carter on 1 April 1978 in replacement of the USIA and the Department of State's Training and Cultural Affairs Bureau. With its headquarters in Washington, the DRI has 10 sections in the United States, 189 regional sections — "cultural centers" — and 8,900 officials. Its budget for the fiscal year of 1979 came to over $400 million and for 1980 it rose to $432.5 million.

The Carter administration has stepped up information and propaganda activity in Latin America: It has DRI posts and sections in 23 countries, 69 binational centers, 5 libraries and 10 centers for the distribution of propaganda literature. The DRI has been instructed to prepare in detail materials to be broadcast by Latin-American radio stations which emphasize the "defense of human rights" and the "advantages" of the American way of life as well as to produce documentary films for Latin Americans providing scientific and educational information. At the same time, the administration emphasizes that the DRI is no longer to concern itself with activities of a secret and propagandistic nature, nor is it to manipulate information. But, as the U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT, for example, admits, actually very little has changed.

In light of what has been noted, the current administration is chiefly concentrating on television and radio broadcasts. In March 1977, President Carter sent Congress the "Report on Radio Broadcasting Abroad," in which he stressed the fact that this "is one of the key elements of American foreign policy." The Voice of America's volume of broadcasts for the countries of the area accounted for 7.4 percent of the total time allotted to foreign broadcasts in 1973 and 15.8 percent in 1975. On the occasion of the United States' 200th anniversary, the Voice of America significantly increased the number of its broadcasts to Latin America to 17 percent in 1978.

Then too, the major activity of the Peace Corps is to step up U.S. ideological penetration of Latin America. Created at the same time as the Alliance for Progress and for the purpose of increasing U.S. expansion in Asia, Africa and Latin America in the 1960's, the Peace Corps was deprived of any organizational independence and in 1971 included in the organization Action when the scandal broke and it was unmasked for its subversive activities in Latin America. When the present administration entered the White House, the Senate — after an interval of 6 years — again examined the state of affairs in the Peace Corps, the post of director (to which Carolyn Payton, who in the 1960's was special assistant to the director of the Peace Corps for the Latin-American area, was appointed) was reestablished and a new program was approved which stressed the active incorporation of the work being done by the Peace Corps into the international programs to provide aid to developing countries sponsored by the United Nations. The idea of "dissolving" this American organization, which intensely performed the function of transmitting American ideological influence to the "international community," was particularly useful since it coincided with the administration's vast measures designed to increase the effectiveness of foreign policy propaganda and to see to it that the American bourgeois ideology would penetrate even further into the consciousness of the peoples of the developing countries, especially in Latin America.

A certain reorientation of objectives in terms of ultimate influence was characteristic of American propaganda in Latin America in the 1970's. Propaganda was conveyed in a different way, with the media, ways and methods of implementing it in the countries of the area taking more and more "a specially designated audience" into account.

Soviet scholar Karen Khachaturov defines propaganda directed toward "a specially designated audience" as "selective application of the complex of media to ideologically and psychologically influence people, these media being oriented to achieve an optimal effect on given segments of the population in various countries, taking into account their social class, political points of view and religious convictions, occupations, level of education, nationality and ethnic background, age and sex."

The American propaganda services' new tactic was particularly aimed at the working class of the Latin-American countries. To do this, the unions, which in Latin America constitute the largest mass worker organizations, were actively utilized. Yankee imperialism assigned the reactionary leadership of the AFL-CIO, whose arsenal includes a media system meticulously designed for subtle social demagogy, a special role. During the past few years, due to the growth of the national liberation movement on the continent, the AFL-CIO, the U.S. "Trojan horse" in the Latin-American unions, has done everything it can to change tactics, to adapt itself to the objective conditions of the anti-imperialist struggle, to seek out new ways of influencing people. In particular, it has begun to set up new study centers, subsidized by the monopolies, the CIA and the State Department, for the purpose of training union officials of Latin-American countries who will be called on to apply Yankee union policy in the worker movement of the area. The so-called American Institute for Free Labor Development (AIFLD) has been turned into the chief instrument for performing these tasks. About 1977, over 190,000 Latin Americans "passed" through this institute.

As always, the American propaganda services concentrate on Latin-American youth. Not only because it accounts for the majority of the population in Latin America. Latin-American youth's anti-imperialist position, clearly expressed, is not to the liking of the Washington ideological experts. To isolate the working class from the young fighters, to put a halt to their revolutionary impetus, to prevent unity in their anti-imperialist activities, to disorganize the youth movement from within, to divert their efforts to struggle through secondary reforms — university, organizational and others — to remove the youth of the nation from the influence of the progressive parties, social pessimism and all the defects of "civilized Western society" — these are the strategic objectives imperialism is pursuing. To do this, it is making use of its entire arsenal of ideological media.

The American propaganda services have exhibited their particular interest in Latin-American intellectuals. Thus, since 1974, they have begun to publish the review U.S. HORIZONS in 18 languages, including Spanish and Portuguese. In most Latin-American countries it is published with replaceable pages designed to reflect the "local character." For a more restricted audience of Latin-American readers, the review INTERNATIONAL PROBLEMS, which analyzes a broad field of issues relating to current political events in Latin America, is published. Then too, the review PROBLEMS OF COMMUNISM, in which with the inducement of pseudoscientific arguments Marxist-Leninist theory and practice in the socialist countries are falsified, is aimed more particularly at intellectuals. Propaganda for the American way of life occupies an important position in DRI propaganda for this audience.

The complex and contradictory processes that are evolving on the continent have not neglected the army in some Latin-American countries. The growth of the anti-imperialist struggle has influenced army thinking. The gradual change in the social structure of the active military, the development of new kinds of weapons and the emergence of an intermediate class of intellectual military experts, the negative reaction to Pentagon attempts to subordinate them and impose police functions on them have contributed to the fact that patriotic orientations are on the rise in Latin-American armies. As an inseparable part of the sociopolitical system, the continent's armed forces are themselves experiencing the direct and ever-increasing effects of the structural crisis. Patriotic and democratic tendencies in Latin-American military circles have given rise to obvious concern in American ruling circles.

The American propaganda services have intensified their ideological treatment of the Latin-American military in the American study centers, particularly in Panama Canal Zone schools.

The Carter administration's "new" line in the spreading of neocolonialist ideas is basically the propagation of the hypocritical thesis of "defense of human rights," among others, in the countries of Latin America.

This is the attempt "to ideologically compensate" for the profound crisis the American bourgeois ideology is going through all over the world and in the Western Hemisphere in particular. Speaking at the "trilateral commission" conference on 25 October 1977, presidential aide for national security Z. Brzezinski said that the new administration's number-one task was to "overcome the spiritual crisis," which he described as "a historical crisis of confidence in one's own forces." Washington has launched a campaign in "defense of human rights," which, as Brzezinski emphasized, is largely due "to widespread diffusion over the surface of the earth of anti-Americanism," in order to stop this process, to heighten American actions, "to overcome the public's massive disillusionment and mistrust with regard to American foreign policy" and to demonstrate that "the Western democratic system affords people the best possibility to express themselves." According to Brzezinski, the campaign for the "defense of human rights" is also contributing to the "spiritual rebirth of the West."

In reality, human rights are violated in Latin America, dictatorial regimes carry out a policy of terror against progressive and democratic forces and brutally trample the rights and liberties of individuals underfoot.

Setting the attainment of "moral leadership" in the world as one of the United States' foreign policy tasks, Washington has censured the police repression perpetrated by reactionary and fascist Latin-American regimes. Actually, however, the United States has not absolutely refused to collaborate with frankly unpopular regimes and continues to support them.

Washington's attempt to impose "respect for human rights" as a condition for the granting of military aid to Latin-American countries has produced a negative reaction in the governments of some countries. Argentina, Uruguay, El Salvador, Guatemala and Brazil have rejected all U.S. military aid. Furthermore, Brazil has canceled its agreements with the United States on military collaboration. Washington has found itself forced to revise its policy. For 1979, the U.S. Congress allotted $2,692.5 million "to guarantee security and for military aid." Most of it was distributed to Latin-American countries.

Arms manufactured in the United States are still entering Latin America. Officially, supplies of arms to the countries of the area have been considerably reduced. However, they enter indirectly, especially via Israel. Thus in 1977 $57 million worth of arms were sold to the Chilean junta and in 1978 arms totaling the same amount. In 1976 the volume of American loans to Pinochet came to $520 million, in 1977 $858 million and in 1978 $1 billion. As First National City Bank president W. Spencer cynically noted: "The human rights problem has nothing in common with the credit policy followed by international banking organizations."

At the same time it supplies arms, the United States takes steps to strengthen the machinery of repression in the Latin-American countries to more effectively crush the liberation movement. The Pentagon supports the police organizations in Latin America and in particular trains army officers from the Latin-American countries to perform police functions. In the 5 years from 1974 to 1978, 1,600 officers from Chile, Nicaragua, Brazil and Uruguay received such training. All in all, from 1946 to 1977 the United States trained about 100,000 policemen for the countries of the area.

The strengthening of the machinery of politico-military repression in the Latin-American countries has stirred up a reaction, armed paramilitary bands. Terrorist organizations like the "White Hand" in Guatemala, the Argentine Anticommunist Alliance and other have been literally hunting down progressive elements.

And Washington? In May 1979 the State Department proclaimed "the five main postulates to be used to demonstrate U.S. concern for human rights in its relations with other nations." In accordance with these postulates, "serious considerations bearing on national security" provide justification for "lending military aid to countries that are brutally contemptuous of human rights." This also refers to economic aid to governments friendly to the United States which "have a bad reputation as far as human right are concerned." In short, whether a dictator is good or bad, what counts is that Washington may need him.

We should note that, under the cover of the campaign for human rights, the monopolies are stepping up their expansion in Latin America.

The well-known Mexican analyst, M. Ojeda, points out that American ideological expansion is being called on to achieve the selfish goals of the policy Washington is pursuing in Latin America. The experience of the past shows that American leaders' actions, "from moral positions," very frequently turn themselves into intervention in one's internal affairs as far as Latin-American countries are concerned.

Thus, the United States is pursuing the same neocolonialist policy it always has in Latin America. As Prof R. Folk writes: "The policy continues to move in the same directions as before... The rhetoric has stumbled over practical obstacles and the promises of change in policy have been silently rejected."

American ideological neocolonialism in the 1970's collided with growing resistance in a large number of Latin-American countries.

Until 1973 the Popular Unity government in Chile limited the activity of the American mass communications media in that country.

In November 1970 the Venezuelan Senate debated as to how to restrict reactionary and imperialist manipulation of the mass communications media which "have launched an offensive against the younger generation of Venezuelans, are corrupting it and morally distorting it."

In January 1974 the Venezuelan Government passed a law prohibiting the investment of foreign capital in radio and television companies. American television and publishing companies were forced to sell their shares to Venezuelan citizens.

In February 1973 Panama passed a law nationalizing radio and television propaganda. This measure was primarily directed against American monopolies that were producing intensive propaganda for the Yankee way of life and attacking Panamanian national traditions. In April 1973 the Mexican Government issued a new regulation pertaining to the radio and television law limiting the number of foreign broadcasts, primarily American.

The Latin-American republics have adopted a number of joint measures to protect their national cultural heritages from the noxious influence of American "mass culture." Representatives of the countries of the area regularly hold meetings designed to work out a joint policy on these issues. In 1968 a conference of specialists on literature was held in Costa Rica, in 1970 a meeting of sculptors in Quito and of musicians in Caracas, in 1974 on the topic of "Latin America and Its Culture" in Mexico and in 1976 on stage shows and festivals in the Latin-American countries. In 1975 in San Jose (Costa Rica) the UNESCO conference on mass communications media was held, at which a resolution was adopted on the protection of the independence of information in these countries. At the initiative of UNESCO, in January 1978 an intergovernmental conference on cultural policy issues in the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean Basin was held in Bogota (Colombia) with the participation of 150 delegates from 28 countries of the area, including 16 culture ministers.

The countries of the area participated in the UNESCO conference in Nairobi (Kenya) on information and cultural issues in the developing countries. Several Latin-American countries (Cuba, Mexico, Peru) participated in the first (January 1977) and second (April 1978) conferences held by the Coordinating Committee for Information Agencies from the Nonalined Countries. As we know, the Western countries work against the idea that information services in developing countries should be independent and promise them to transmit "their experience" to them. In defiance of this position, at the second conference 45 developing Asian, African and Latin-American countries signed the agreement on interchange of information.

All these acts attest to the fact that the United States' attempts to recover positions it has lost in this area by means of an ideological offensive have been unsuccessful. The raising of the consciousness of the popular masses in the area and the intensification of the anti-imperialist struggle have made Yankee imperialist attempts to ideologically subjugate Latin America, to ideologically disarm the revolutionary forces of those Latin-American countries purusing a policy of ideological neocolonialism futile.

11,466
CSO: 3010

RISQUET HONORS SAILORS, PORT WORKERS WITH FAR AWARD

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 6 Sep 80 p 2

[Speech by Central Committee Member Jorge Risquet]

[Text] Speech delivered by Jorge Risquet, member, Communist Party of Cuba Central Committee Secretariat, during the ceremony awarding the "20th Anniversary of the FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces]" Commemorative Medal to the seamen and port workers who transported the internationalist troops; the ceremony took place yesterday, Thursday, 5 September 1980 [as published] in Cacahual, in the city of Havana.

Comrade Commander of the Revolution Guillermo Garcia, Political Bureau member; comrades generals of divisions Senen Cases and Sixto Batista and brigade generals Ulises Rosales and Calixto Garcia, Central Committee members;

Dear comrade seamen and port workers:

We are gathered here today at this venerated site--the resting place of the remains of General Antonio.

I recall the first meetings, upon the arrival of each vessel of our Merchant Marine at Luanda, full of fighting men eager to go into action against the hated enemy who was trying to wrest from Angola its independence which it had won after centuries of tenacious resistence to the colonialist invader.

Neither the long crossing, nor the tough living conditions which the fighting men of an entire regiment experienced as they traveled crowded into a space where the analysts in the Pentagon had figured we could squeeze only one battalion, managed to dampen the enthusiasm of our men, their revolutionary ardor, their determination to express on the battlefield the internationalist feeling which filled their hearts as Cubans educated by Marti, Maceo, and Gomez, by Julio Antonio Mella and Pablo de la Torriente Brau, by Che and Fidel.

The grandsons of Gen Atonio Maceo had come to the land that gave birth to the ancestors of Gen Antonio Maceo in order, together with the Angolan people, to fight the final battle for its independence!

This firm determination and the eagerness to go into battle filled not only those--mobilized workers or regular soldiers--who were organized in the military units but also you, the crew members of our ships and the port workers whose mission was no less indispensable, that is, to transport the internationalist troops and to unload logistic material.

There were quite a few cases when seamen and port workers tried to get assigned to some mission on the battle front. Those who managed to obtain this privilege rarely returned to the port at the end of their mission which was limited in terms of time and which had been assigned to them.

We found them in various parts of Angola, quite far from the Port of Luanda.

When we were getting ready to vote for our Socialist Constitution, in Cabinda, in a field polling place set up so that our troops might participate in the referendum which was taking place in Cuba, we ran into a stevedore who had somehow managed to leave the port and who had joined our infantry.

On the highway leading to Quibala we saw that our crew members, our merchant ship officers and captains knew how to be magnificent drivers of trailer-trucks loaded with the implements of war.

In San Antonio de Zaire, when the mercenaries were being wiped out by the impetuous advance of Angolans and Cubans, among the first to arrive on the banks of the Zaire River, raising the victorious banner of the MPLA [Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola] in the northwest corner of Angola, were seamen, old friends, veterans of the internationalist mission in the Congo in 1965.

The vast majority among you, who were forced to remain in the ports, quite reluctantly at that, working on ships or on the piers, strongly insisted on marching to the front line. It was not easy to convince you that your battle station was precisely there, on the ship and on the pier.

We realized that nobody wanted to resign himself to playing the role of constituting the rear guard of our FAR--although that role is as necessary and honorable as that of the fighting men--when the Cuban troops, together with the FAPLA [People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola], stopped the enemy's advance during those difficult days of November and December 1975; when, later on, during the victorious months of February and March 1976, we pushed the haughty South African hosts back, forcing them to the other bank of the Cunene, once and for all destroying the myth of superiority and invincibility of the White racists and mercenaries in Africa.

Only after the defeat of the South African racists did we again see those seamen and port workers who had taken the opportunity to represent their comrades in the fighting lines; now they once again returned to their jobs as crew members or as part of the stevedore gangs.

We all recall those months close to the First Congress of our party, when Angola's independence was seriously threatened.

With emotion we all remember those months close to the First Congress of our party when Angola's independence was seriously threatened as a result of the invasion of the troops of the South African republic and the puppet bands in the service of the CIA, which, upon the request of the MPLA and the unforgettable leader of the Angolan people, Dr Agostinho Neto, Cuba organized a military assistance operation without precedent among the revolutionary countries located in such distant latitudes.

Just 2 years later, with similar sinister intentions, the imperialist adventure was repeated further to the north, in Revolutionary Ethiopia. On that occasion, together with other internationalist peoples, Cuba contributed its share of sacrifices and blood to prevent the chauvinist dreams of "Greater Somalia" from becoming reality, in other words, the annexation of a large part of Ethiopian territory and the strangulation of the revolutionary process launched by the long-suffering and valiant Abyssinian masses, aimed at winning liberty and social justice, wiping out centuries of poverty, hunger, and backwardness into which they had been plunged by the successive monarchic-feudal governments.

The events which reached their high point with those two great victories of the revolutionary movement--with full justification labelled the true African Bays of Pigs for imperialism--are known and we need not go into detail on them here.

However, short though this reference may be, we cannot help note that both events proved the universal validity of proletarian internationalism as a decisive factor in the current fight against imperialism and as an indispensable weapon of proven effectiveness in the hands of the revolutionary peoples so that they may preserve their gains against the armed aggressions of their enemies and so that they may promote collaboration and reciprocal aid in the most varied spheres of the construction of the new society.

The internationalist aid given to Angola and Ethiopia--through the eloquence of the hundreds of thousands of Cubans who volunteered--revealed the degree of awareness attained by the Cuban people from whose midst sprang its valiant and generous sons, ready to fight thousands of kilometers away from their own soil and offer their blood for the just cause of other peoples.

This also demonstrated the efficiency, energy, and initiative which the workers and the technical and management personnel of the various sectors of the economy are able to display, in order to provide backup support for the various logistic operations connected with any military operation of this kind, something which cannot be handled with the resources of the armed forces alone.

Our people loves and yearns for peace in order fully to devote itself to creative work but it knows how to arise as one man, to put on the soldier's garb, and to take up the gun when the fatherland summons it to battle in defense of its own independence or the liberty of other fighting peoples!

Dear Comrades:

We feel profound emotion and intense joy as we meet with you, the seamen and port workers, outstanding fighting men of a seasoned sector of our working class, on this solemn occasion, as the Council of State awards to you the 20th Anniversary of the FAR Commemorative Medal, in recognition of the valiant and self-sacrificing attitude displayed in the accomplishment of the assigned mission. You helped Cuba do its internationalist duty in Angola and Ethiopia at the critical moments when your brother peoples were attacked by forces in the service of imperialism and international reaction.

The award you are getting today therefore is the expression of the recognition and gratitude of the leadership of our fatherland and of our socialist state for the maritime and port workers for the valuable service rendered to the cause of internationalism.

Without the ingenious solutions worked out for numerous problems deriving from the preparation of the ships to carry the troops and the necessary equipment, as well as the rapid loading and unloading of all the equipment indispensable for combat operations by the internationalist units, it is very doubtful that the optimum results, with which we are so satisfied today, would have been achieved.

Overcoming the fatigue of long working days and displaying militant discipline, the maritime workers and dock workers involved in these military operations made it possible for this sector to function with the kind of precision and efficiency demanded in war. Because of that, our ships, crewed by men with hair on their chests, who calmly and with valor defied the risks of an uncertain crossing, sailed the oceans, arriving at their destination by the required deadline, without any indiscretion that might have enabled the enemy to detect our action in support of those brother countries.

Thus our ports and our merchant fleet--like the rest of the country--became the reliable rear guard of the Cuban internationalist fighters and their workers competed in terms of courage and determination with the men who on the various fighting fronts and in close cooperation with the attacked peoples inflicted the most crushing defeats upon the enemy.

It is highly encouraging that such a large number of maritime workers and dock workers earned this high award.

The award of the medal which you have just received is based not only on the understanding attitudes which the masses usually boast of at high points in the revolutionary fight but also on the equally outstanding conduct you displayed in the daily battle, the no less heroic struggle to achieve efficiency in your respective work sectors and thus to accomplish the goals which the party and the revolutionary government are establishing for each phase.

In accordance with these criteria, the medal you are getting today is even more significant since it represents not only recompense for the heroic and self-sacrificing effort which you made a certain historical moment but also --and this is even more difficult and more meritorious--recognition of the anonymous work done each day over several years of hard work throughout which you struggled without interruption in order to implement, in the ports and in our fleet, the guidelines and directives issued by our party so as to turn this sector into a bulwark of the country's economic growth.

It is highly encouraging that such a large number of maritime workers and dock workers earned this high award because this means that the country has a prestigious and seasoned vanguard among the workers of this sector, capable of influencing, through their example and their prestige, the rest of their comrades toward the solution of the problems and difficulties which we still face on this front of the economy and which are having repercussions on the rest of the country.

This event is taking place at a moment when our entire nation with growing interest and jubilant amazement follows the work achievements of the port workers.

Summoned to the production battle by their union, the union of Atacelio Iglesias, and by their Communist Party, the dock workers have done a tremendous job which was necessary, in the past three months handling 2.2 million metric tons of imported commodities which had to be unloaded from the ships and which then had to be loaded on land transportation equipment.

This formidable production record is the common work of the dock workers, the automotive and railroad freight transport workers as well as the workers in the warehouses connected with the domestic economy, that is to say, scores upon scores of thousands of proletarians who work in the chain running from the ports to the transportation industry and to the domestic economy, a chain through which flows the circulating torrent of raw materials, materials, equipment, complete plants, and popular consumption articles which the country acquires abroad.

By achieving this tremendous advance, the dock workers placed themselves at the head of the production effort of our working class, stimulated by the recent example of the massive worker and popular mobilization to clear the land, as well as to plant and harvest cane.

We are now witnessing a high point in the mobilization of the masses, a moment of major increase in the production effort, a moment where we strengthen labor discipline, a moment of increased labor productivity, of higher aggressiveness and of the revolutionary awareness of the people.

Free from a good portion of the pollution of the environment, we now breathe the clean and reviving air of our revolution.

We detect this environment of work and effort in our ports. The broad chests of the proletarians, on whom we today pin the 20th Anniversary of the Revolutionary Armed Forces Commemorative Medal, are full of the pure air of the revolution.

Yesterday, the missions assigned, full of risks, sacrifices, and hardships, were accomplished with firmness, without hesitation, in a manner befitting the sons of our valiant people and as demanded by the glorious traditions of our working class.

Today, with that same spirit and with the enthusiasm of the men of the Moncada [Barracks], of Granma, of the Rebel Army, of the Bay of Pigs and of the internationalist fighting men, we must face and win the battle of the economy which is the definitive battle for the country's development.

Allow me, comrades, to congratulate you in the name of the Party's Central Committee, the government, the FAR minister and the commander-in-chief for the services rendered to the fatherland which are symbolically summarized in the medal which you have been awarded and which hereafter you will be able to display on your chests with legitimate revolutionary pride.

We urge you to redouble your efforts in the important and responsible tasks in which you are involved now and those which you will have to face in the near future.

We are sure that the dock workers will maintain and increase their magnificent contribution to our economic development and we are sure that the seamen, the standard bearers of the revolution on the high seas of the world, will not fall behind.

Always wear the 20th Anniverary of the FAR Medal with honor!

Long live our glorious Revolutionary Armed Forces!

Long live our Communist Party!

Long live proletarian internationalism!

Long live Fidel!

Fatherland or death--we shall win!

5058
CSO:3010

WORKERS PLEDGE EFFORTS TO HONOR SECOND PCC CONGRESS

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 15 Aug 80 pp 16-23

[Article by Gloria Marsan Sanchez: "41 Industrial Projects"]

> [Text] "There is not a single industry, no matter how large or complex, that we cannot build. I think that must be a cause for satisfaction for all our people, especially our construction workers." Fidel

Many new factories of different types and factory expansions have gone into operation throughout the country during this 5-year period: textile factories, powerplants, steel plants, yeast processing factories, fertilizer plants, etc.

Problems

Although the situation is improving now in response to Fidel's call, MICONS [Ministry of Construction] last year planned to finish 147 industrial projects but only finished 70. This affected the total plan which reached 280 million pesos. The cause for these problems was basically lack of supplies for complete factories and other nationally produced supplies.

Nevertheless, in addition to these factors, there are other known problems like shortage of manpower and low productivity, underutilization of equipment, organizational problems--especially in construction processes--and inadequate technical documentation by the investor organizations.

The priority of the industrial projects and the significant resources that the government allocates for the construction of these projects which are essential for national development must meet a good response in the organization and use of the work force, equipment and materials.

In response to Commander in Chief Fidel Castro's speech last 1 May, the Cuban workers are converting revolutionary energy into productive strength.

The industrial projects construction workers remain in front, building projects that will guarantee fulfillment of the 5-year plan.

In assemblies held at each one of the 41 industrial projects, 30 of which should be finished or have new capacity in 1980, the workers made concrete commitments to fulfill or overfulfill the technical-economic plan and lower the absenteeism rate to less than 3.3 percent. In this way, they will meet the important goals they set throughout the country as a salute to the Second PCC [Communist Party of Cuba] Congress.

Investor: MICONS

Karl Marx Cement Plant

A cement plant is being constructed in the Guabairo zone of Cienfuegos Province with technology and advice from GDR technicians. Costing more than 150 million pesos, it will produce 1.65 million tons per year, twice the installed capacity in Cuba in 1958.

This work is being done by Brigade 5 of Industrial Projects Construction Enterprise [IPCE] No. 6 of Cienfuegos which includes 15 brigades of Young Soldiers Ready for Production. This labor force recently put the first line of that plant into operation and tests of the second line are already being done.

The 3,400 builders of the largest cement plant in the country redouble their efforts to finish the second and third lines of production as a salute to the Second Party Congress. It was planned that both would start tests between July and November of this year.

Rene Arcay Plant

Brigade 31 of the IPCE of Havana is building the new Rene Arcay Plant that will process 1.4 million tons of cement per year. This construction is basically an expansion of the oldest plant in the country, the adjacent Rene Arcay Plant which has an annual production of about 380,000 tons.

Although there will not be high exploitation of its production capacity in the initial months, this unit will mean a powerful contribution in the production of 3 million tons proposed by this branch nationally for the end of 1980. Therefore, its builders are trying to fulfill the goal of finishing it as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Rock Crushers

Also in the construction materials sector, there is the El Cacao Rock-Crushing Plant located near the town of Santa Rita in Granma. The workers of IPCE No. 10 of this province propose to finish it as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

The workers of IPCE No. 4 are building the Alacranes plant in Matanzas Province. They propose to salute the Second Party Congress by creating new capacity before the end of 1980.

The total production of these plants which use Spanish technology will be 1.22 million cubic meters per year of crushed rock, processed sand, granite and aggregate when they reach full capacity. The automation in this industry demands a highly skilled labor force: electrical engineers, industrial mechanics, etc.

Feldspar Plant

The sodium feldspar plant in Holguin was begun in 1976 by the workers of Brigade 14-B of IPCE No. 9 who propose to finish it in September 1980 as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

The total value of this plant which uses Bulgarian technology will reach 2,561,000 pesos. When finished, it will employ 56 workers and 2 technicians who will guarantee the 20,000 tons of sodium feldspar that it will produce annually.

All the production will ba basic raw material for the glass packaging factory in Las Tunas and the sanitary fixtures factory in Holguin.

Investor: Ministry of Light Industry

Textile Factory in Santiago de Cuba

The workers of Brigade 32 of IPCE No. 11 of Santiago de Cuba who are building the textile complex in that province committed themselves in a production assembly to advance termination of this project by 6 months. They propose to finish it by 26 July 1983.

This commitment puts demands on all the productive forces of the labor group which, as a salute to the Second Party Congress, proposes to fulfill a plan of 12.1 million pesos. The total value of the project is more than 200 million pesos; at full capacity, it will produce 80 million square meters of fabric and will employ 7,000 workers.

This will be the largest textile complex in the country. It was planned by EPI Institute No. 3 of Leningrad and the project receives technical assistance from specialists of the Soviet Ministry of Light Industry.

Spinning Mill

A spinning mill is being built in the Wajay zone near Havana. It is planned by the Soviets who are providing technical advice through some 40 specialists. The investment in this modern plant totals more than 120 million pesos. Brigades 33 and 34 of IPCE No. 3 of Havana are building it.

When the plant reaches full capacity, it will produce 15,000 metric tons of yarn per year to supply the textile factories in the western part of the country. This can increase national production to 90 million square meters of fabric.

Completion of this project is planned for 1982; as a salute to the Second Party Congress, the builders propose to complete important project objectives. They have also committed themselves to finish the roofs by 1 October using special assembly equipment. This will make it possible to transfer that equipment, being used for the first time in Cuba, to the textile factory being constructed in Santiago de Cuba.

Bellotex

The workers of the Matanzas brigade of IPCE No. 4 are involved in building a textile factory in that province. They propose to complete it this year as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

This factory which uses Soviet technology will have a total capacity of 19 million cotton sacks. The cost of the plant is estimated at 18 million pesos. They are working hard in the production areas and others in order to meet the proposed goal.

Ariguanabo

Workers of Brigade 36 of IPCE No. 2 of Havana Province are working on the expansion and modernization of the Ariguanabo Textile Factory. They propose to work hard on this project as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

This investment based on Soviet technology will be worth about 52 million pesos. When its production becomes stable, it will expand the industry's annual raw textile capacity. The project timetable is now 22 percent complete.

Investor: Ministry of the Sugar Industry

Bagasse Boards

Next to the Primero de Enero Sugar Mill in Ciego de Avila Province, a factory of bagasse boards made of pressed cane is being built. The factory will cost more than 13 million pesos; total capacity will be 120 tons of boards from 19 to 25 millimeters thick per day. These can be used for finished panels covered with plastic, special paper, natural wood veneer or varnish.

When comrade Fidel Castro visited this project in April 1978, the project timetable showed completion by the end of 1979. At that time, fulfillment was considered possible. Subsequent problems delayed its completion.

The total production of this factory will be used for the construction of furniture and as raw materials for construction, replacing imported products. For this reason, the industrial projects builders of Integral Enterprise No. 1 of Ciego de Avila fight to overcome the delays and plan to finish it as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Investor: Ministry of Public Health

Semisynthetic Antibiotics

Near the intersection of Via Monumental and Carretera Central, the workers of Brigade 3 of IPCE No. 3 of Havana are building a plant for the production of semisynthetic antibiotics. It is the first stage of a pharmaceutical complex which will include five other installations.

At a cost of more than 5 million pesos, this industry using modern Italian technology will produce 40 tons annually of different types of penicillin, basically to satisfy domestic demand. It will also help create exportable stock.

Due to problems with earth movement equipment, this project was begun late. There were also problems with the production of some atypical parts by the prefabrication plant. The builders are making extraordinary efforts to overcome the delay and finish in 1980 as planned, as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Investor: Ministry of the Food Industry

Citrus Complex in Jaguey Grande

This project will have Polish and Spanish parts and, at full capacity, will be able to process 136 tons of citrus--grapefruit, oranges, mandarin oranges and lemons--per hour for juice, jam and essential oils. The total cost of the plant under construction is more than 4 million pesos.

The most important objective is the refrigeration plant since it will guarantee storage capacity; its machine room will also supply refrigeration to the evaporators in the production building. The workers of IPCE No. 4 of Matanzas are building it; they propose to salute the Second Party Congress by working to finish some of its capacity.

M. H. Toscano Meatpacking Plant

The M. H. Toscano Meatpacking Plant is also being constructed for the Ministry of the Food Industry, but this time by workers of IPCE No. 8 of Camaguey. It is an expansion with a technical-economic plan of about 800,000 pesos.

Its builders hope to finish it this year as a salute to the Second Party Congress but physical progress is very slow. This delay is not due to the builders but to problems in the delivery of plans and other supplies from the investor.

Glucose Factory

The workers of IPCE No. 6 of Cienfuegos are building this factory using Swedish technology. Its total capacity will be 90 tons of gluten, edible starch, etc., every 24 hours. The factory will have three shifts and will generate employment for 143 workers and 16 technicians.

The total cost of the factory is about 16 million pesos. It has 32 construction objectives. Of these, 7 are finished, 22 are under construction and 3 remain to be started. The builders of the beautiful Ciudad del Mar work hard for its completion and tests since they propose to finish this project before the end of the year as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Candy Factory

The candy factory in Pinar del Rio is being built by the workers of IPCE No. 1 of that province. Based on Spanish technology, this factory has an investment of more than 4 million pesos. When it is in full operation, it will be able to produce 16 tons of soft caramels every 16 hours. It will have a total of 134 workers--which includes 9 technicians--in two shifts.

The floors and walls of the production buildings are being laid now and the prefabricated sections of the energy plant are being assembled. The builders propose to finish it by the end of this year as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Investor: Ministry of Communications

Semiconductors Plant

The total value of the semiconductors plant in Pinar del Rio is more than 17 million pesos. It uses Spanish technology but some of the plans are Cuban. At full capacity, it will produce some 37,000 transistors, integrated circuits, etc.

There are some problems with the transfer from Havana of the slabs and the supply of some plans. Nevertheless, as a salute to the Second Party Congress, the workers of IPCE No. 1 propose to make up for the time lost and be on schedule by the end of 1980 so that it can enter into production by 1983 as planned.

Investor: Ministry of Domestic Trade

Agricultural Meatpacking Plants

MICONS is building seven agricultural meatpacking plants for domestic trade. In five of them, the builders have made commitments to salute the Second Party Congress. Those in Pinar del Rio, Havana (Habana del Este) and Matanzas propose to complete them this year while those in Camaguey and Havana (La Lisa) will only provide partial capacity. This last is based on Cuban technology and plans.

The meatpacking plants in Matanzas, Habana del Este, Pinar del Rio and Camaguey use Bulgarian technology. Each has a total storage capacity of 25,000 cubic meters, except the one in Pinar del Rio which will only have 12,500 cubic meters. An average of 180 industrial projects construction workers work on each one of these buildings. The value of each building is more than 6 million pesos. They will employ three shifts with an average of 127 workers for each plant.

Investor: Ministry of Agriculture

Citrus Packing

The industrial projects construction workers will build six citrus packing plants in the country before the end of next year; as a salute to the Second Party Congress, they propose to complete the Agramonte plant in Matanzas Province. The Havana and Contramaestre plants are now at the earth movement stage while the Jaguey Grande, Cienfuegos and Ciego de Avila plants are still in the planning stage.

The Agramonte packing plant is being assembled with national equipment although some components are imported. It has two lines of production capable of processing a total of 40 tons of citrus per hour. The double packing plants of Ceiba II in Havana and Contramaestre II in Santiago de Cuba will have similar technology and capacity.

Two packing plants with the same technology as above but with a single line of 20 tons per hour are being built in Cumanayagua, Cienfuegos Province, and Moron, Ciego de Avila Province. The Jaguey Grande packing plant uses Spanish technology and has a single line capable of processing 40 tons of citrus per hour. These five packing plants must provide the capacity for the 1981 citrus harvest. Cuban construction is used for all these projects. When they begin production, they will employ an average of 100 workers each, distributed in three shifts.

Feed Factory

As a salute to the Second Party Congress, the workers of IPCE No. 6 of Cienfuegos propose to accelerate construction of the feed factory in that province which will be part of the industrial complex in the port area.

Located next to the wheat mill which is already in production, the feed factory uses Spanish technology. It will have a total investment of 10 million pesos, of which 3.3 million correspond to foreign supplies. When it reaches total production, it will be able to process 50 tons of feed per hour.

Investor: Ministry of Basic Industries

Electrical Energy Development

The investment process in this sector remains uninterrupted. It must advance ahead of the rest of economic development. Therefore, other units will continue to be incorporated to existing units in the coming years. This includes a new powerplant northeast of Havana and the Cienfuegos nuclear powerplant which, at the end of the next 5-year period, should put two blocks into operation that will generate 440 megawatts each. Plans for these are being worked on now.

Maximo Gomez Powerplant

The total expansion of the Maximo Gomez Powerplant in Mariel will mean an increase in national generation capacity of about 75 percent more than in 1958. Soviet technology and advice are used for the units assembled there; the work is being done by Brigade 10 of IPCE No. 2 of Havana.

These projects began in 1963 with the first unit assembled in 1966. There are now four units of 50 megawatts each assembled and No. 8, now under construction, is in a critical situation concerning supplies. This makes its completion this year impossible.

10 de Octubre Powerplant

The 10 de Octubre Powerplant in Nuevitas, Camaguey, uses Czechoslovak technology and advice for industrial assembly is received from that fraternal country. The industrial expansion started in 1975 and industrial assembly in 1976.

One after another, the new units were synchronized. This year the builders, as always animated by an iron will to continue their progress, propose strong acceleration for the units now under construction as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Antonio Maceo Powerplant

The Antonio Maceo Powerplant in Santiago de Cuba is being expanded by Brigade 30 of IPCE No. 11. Units 3 and 4 of 100 megawatts each are already finished.

The Santiago builders are now involved in work on Unit No. 5; the power will increase again with its synchronization. Using Soviet technology and advice, the workers propose to accelerate this project as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Nickel Plant

The nickel plant under construction in Punta Gorda, 5 kilometers from Moa, also belongs to the Ministry of Basic Industries. This is a Soviet plan constructed with Soviet advice and technical aid. It includes the construction of several industrial projects.

The Punta Gorda installation has nine departments that include some 120 work objectives. One of those departments is in the port and answers to the petroleum and ammonia base. The remaining eight are located on the industrial platform. They are: ore preparation plant; reduction furnace; lixiviation; ore washing and recuperation; energy complex; finished product unit; social, administrative and auxiliary installations; and the mining compound.

The first line of production should be installed in the third quarter of 1983 and the rest in the fourth quarter of 1984. For this reason, its builders want to give special acceleration to the project as a salute to the Second Party Congress with the objective of fulfilling the outlined goals.

Mechanical Complex

The mechanical complex in the town of Moa will be the largest installation of its type in the country. Its objective will be the repair and maintenance of technological equipment, machines and transportation equipment, not only for the nickel plant but also the entire mining-metallurgical complex.

The complex will also have general repair shops, foundry mechanics and an acetylene producing station. Problems have arisen in the project, basically in the construction sequence because of untimely delivery of structures and other elements for assembly completion.

This industrial complex should be partially finished in 1981 and completed in the following year. The builders, as a salute to the Second Party Congress, will accelerate construction with the objective of making up for the delay in order to be able to finish it within the proposed timetable.

Glass Packaging Plant

The largest glass packaging plant in the country is being built in Las Tunas Province. Using Belgian technology, it will be completely automated and will produce 300 million glass containers per year in an assortment of more than 20 lines. This will satisfy the total demand of the development of the food industry as well as provide some lines for the pharmaceutical and perfume industries. Half of its production will use recycled glass.

It was visited by Commander in Chief Fidel Castro in April 1978. He expressed the need to advance the timetable for completion from 1981 to 1980. He explained that the equipment was in Cuba and, given the importance of the project in the replacement of imports, this equipment must not remain idle for almost 3 years.

The builders recently confirmed in a general assembly that they will fulfill the commitment to the top leader of the revolution and finish this important project 1 year in advance as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Lubricant Mixture Plant

The workers of IPCE No. 11 of Santiago de Cuba are building a modern lubricant mixture plant. This industry which is part of a chemical complex will help replace imports in this important sector.

The builders work enthusiastically and propose to finish the project as a salute to the Second Party Congress if there are no problems with resources that are expected to arrive on time.

Toilet Paper Factory

The workers of IPCE No. 4 of Matanzas are building a toilet paper factory in the town of Cardenas. The builders, as a salute to the Second Party Congress, are making extraordinary efforts to overcome the problems that the project has suffered. However, due to the lack of indispensable supplies for its completion, it cannot be finished this year.

Paper Complex

"This project cannot be delayed" is the motto of the builders of Sancti Spiritus, Villa Clara and Cienfuegos who are working on it. The commitment is that it will start production at the beginning of 1982 since the agreement with the French stipulates that the $86 million for importing its parts will be paid for with factory production.

The chemical complex will produce 60,000 tons of paper and 18,000 tons of bleached paper pulp per year. This will save the country 25 million pesos annually and will also create exportable stock for the freely convertible area.

The total cost of the project will be more than 130 million pesos. This includes the two factories in the complex: one will process the bagasse from the Uruguay sugar mill to obtain bagasse pulp, the raw material that the other will use to produce high-quality paper.

However, the labor force alone cannot win this race against time. It is necessary to overcome problems not connected with the workers like the delay in the delivery of plans and some parts and the arrival on time and in the correct form of the French structures and equipment. If these aspects work out, we are sure that the builders, using different strategies for the spring which has already arrived, will make up for lost time in the schedule and fulfill their commitment as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Acetylene Plant

An acetylene plant is being built by Brigade 19 of Miscellaneous Projects at kilometer 3.5 of the highway to Manicaragua in the town of Santa Clara. It belongs to the Enterprise for Construction and Maintenance of Basic Industries.

Using Cuban technology, this project has an estimated value of 1 million pesos. When it reaches full capacity, it will produce 322,560 cubic meters of acetylene per year. The builders, as a salute to the Second Party Congress, propose to accelerate some objectives in order to be able to finish it at the beginning of the next 5-year period.

Investor: Ministry of the Steelworking Industry

A Factory of Factories

The metallic structures factory that is being built in Las Tunas uses Soviet technology and will cost 15 million pesos. When it is operating at full capacity, it will produce 20,000 tons of structures annually for the construction of different types of factories.

According to the construction timetable, this project was to begin operations at the end of 1980. When Commander in Chief Fidel Castro visited it the first time, the builders agreed to advance its completion by 1 year. As proof of their great effort, after this commitment they won the Ho Chi Minh red banner, top award of the National Construction Workers Union, in the Special Industrial Projects Emulation.

When comrade Fidel Castro visited again in April 1978, he was surprised at the progress of the project since his first visit. Nevertheless, that rate could not be maintained; problems with the climate and supplies hindered it. However, the workers did not lose their enthusiasm in spite of this setback. At a recent assembly, they made a new commitment and propose to complete it in the third quarter of the present year as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Gray Iron Foundry

The first gray iron and malleable cast iron foundry in Cuba is being constructed in the city of Guantanamo. It is the most important industrial project in the province. Using Polish technology, it is a classic plant for foundries of this type.

The construction and the assembly are under the workers of the Gray Iron and Malleable Cast Iron Brigade of the industrial projects office of Architectural Projects Construction Enterprise No. 23.

The total cost of the project is about 12 million pesos. It will produce machined elements, connections for aqueducts, sewer grates and other parts. These parts which Cuba consumes in great quantities are imported from markets in the dollar area. Thus, the foundry will mean a great savings in foreign currency and will guarantee the supply of parts. For this reason, the builders propose to finish it as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

Antillana de Acero

Thousands of men of the 1-H Brigade of the IPCE of Havana are working on the second stage of the expansion of the Jose Marti Steel Complex. They propose to finish it as a salute to the Second Party Congress.

This project basically includes the installation of a new laminator, an iron foundry, an oxygen plant, etc. Using Soviet technology, this investment totals more than 20 million pesos and its annual production will be 60,000 tons of different types of steel.

Agricultural Implements Factory

Brigades F-14, 14-A and 14-B of IPCE No. 9 of Holguin propose to finish the agricultural implements factory in that province as a salute to the Second Party Congress. It is valued at more than 23 million pesos.

Using Bulgarian technology, this modern factory will supply important agricultural implements for land preparation and cultivation as well as parts and accessories for the different equipment that it will produce: plows, harrows, sowers, fumigators, mowers, rakes, etc.

To Produce Sugar Complexes

When the workers of Brigade 19-A of IPCE No. 5 of Villa Clara finish expansion of the Fabric Aguilar Noriega Mechanical Production Enterprise, the country will have a steelworking complex capable of manufacturing almost all the equipment for the Cuban sugar industry.

This is one of the industrial plants that will be finished in the next 5-year period but its builders, aware of its importance for the development of the national economy and as a salute to the Second Party Congress, will try to accelerate work on the area where the /tandem/ [in boldface], one of the most important processes in the expansion, will be produced.

This complex which uses Soviet technology receives advice from about 15 Soviet specialists. It will cost 120 million pesos and can bring in more than 60 million pesos per year. Completion is planned for the third quarter of 1984.

The goal of the workers is not easy to fulfill. There are serious problems like lack of supplies which has already produced a standstill in the assembly of some structures, plans that are received late and the unpredictable rains of our climate. However, they are used to winning as demonstrated by the construction of the Desembarco del Granma Textile Complex 1 year in advance. They are confident of meeting the goal they have set.

The Cuban builders work hard on all the projects in Cuba but the workers, technicians and professionals who work on the industrial projects redouble their efforts because they know the vital importance these have for the economic development of the country.

The revolutionary government invests hundreds of millions of pesos in the industrial projects. Many of them mean the elimination of imports, others decrease imports greatly and many even create exportable stocks. As a whole, they directly or indirectly produce goods for the people.

Thus, the industrial projects construction workers double their revolutionary energy facing each new aggression, converting it into productive strength. As a salute to the Second Party Congress, they have committed themselves to finish 23 projects, create new capacity in another 7 projects and strongly accelerate 11 others that will be finished in the next 5-year period. They are aware that each finished industrial project is a front-line trench against the aggressive blockade that Yankee imperialism has imposed on us.

7717
CSO: 3010

WAGE REFORM BEING IMPLEMENTED SLOWLY

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 19 Aug 80 p 1

[Article by Renato Recio]

[Text] The process of introducing the general wage reform in major production sector working districts is progressing at a visibly slow pace and does not correspond to objective possibilities.

The above assertion by the Economics Department of the National CTC [Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions] is the result of a comparison of high-level involvement relations and a revision of regulations which has been going on with the small number of workers who have benefited from the wage reform up to now, excluding from this comparison of activity in the fields of education, legislation and health.

With about 15,000 workers benefiting from the new wage scales, only Camaguey Province shows a satisfactory relationship between the number of workers involved and the volume of reform that has been introduced.

At the opposite end of the scale, we find the provinces of Holguin, Matanzas, Sancti Spiritus and Santiago de Cuba, which have not managed to apply even 1 percent of the reform relative to the number of workers involved.

Up to now, the total number of workers benefiting from the general wage reform throughout the country is approximately 55,000, while the total number involved is over 800,000, which indicates a ratio of 6 percent, really very low since the number involved may be considered to be the most important potential indicator.

According to what Lazaro Dominguez, the head of the CTC's Economics Department, told us, that labor organization has reiterated its concern and warns us against the tendency to present the provincial commissions with studies for introducing reform exclusively directed toward full enterprises, which has substantially limited its introduction in establishments that meet all the requirements and comprise large numbers of workers.

11,466
CSO: 3010

COUNTRY JOINS MULTIFERT MULTINATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 27 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] Panama City (PL), 27 Aug—Panamanian Minister of Foreign Relations Carlos Ozores has received the documents confirming the corporate agreement for the constitution of MULTIFERT (Multinational Fertilizer Enterprise), which incorporates Cuba as a member of that multinational enterprise.

The ceremony was presided over by Minister of Foreign Relations Ozores and Cuban ambassador to Panama Miguel Brugueras, who deposited the documents at the Ministry of Foreign Relations in the name of his government.

Brugueras stressed the fact that, in delivering the documents confirming the constitution of MULTIFERT, Cuba has reiterated its conviction that it is engaging in an economic activity that could not successfully be achieved as an individual nation by any underdeveloped country and which involves a break with dependence on the big transnational companies.

Minister of Foreign Relations Ozores emphasized the fact that Cuba was one of the first countries to be incorporated into MULTIFERT and that its attitude and that of the country in which its headquarters is located, Panama, demonstrate that the will of these governments must prevail over the interests of foreign enterprises.

During the ceremony, held in the Ministry of Foreign Relations, the Cuban ambassador signed a 3-year renewal of the agreement, in the name of his government, which will make it possible to go on favoring the development of air transport between Cuba and Panama.

Also attending the ceremony were Agustin Chape, interim director of MULTIFERT, and Leonardo Kam, director of the Panamanian Ministry of Foreign Relations' international organizations, as well as other officials of that department, top civil aeronautics leaders and members of the Cuban diplomatic mission.

11,466
CSO: 3010

HAVANA CONSTRUCTION ENTERPRISES FAIL TO FULFILL THEIR PLANS

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p 3

[Article by Jose Gabriel Guma]

[Text] Five Havana Ministry of Construction enterprises have failed to carry out their construction plans and, furthermore, their average wage was more than what had been planned, reflecting a drop in this important index used to measure economic efficiency.

During the period under analysis, the Architectural Projects Construction Enterprises (ECOA) behaved in the following way: Number 26, 74 percent; Number 24, 82 percent; Number 27, 97 percent; and Number 9, 98 percent. Moreover, Equipment and Accessories Repair Enterprise (ERRA) Number 2 recorded a rate of productivity of 80 percent.

The above was made public at the Third Provincial Meeting of the MICONS [Ministry of Construction] Labor and Wage Organization, whose chief report was made by Manuel Cuesta, head of the Labor Organization of the national delegation of this organization in Havana.

In the document itself, it was noted that 1,266 gangs composed of 11,180 workers had been organized, representing 56 percent of the labor force directly involved in construction. On this point, the report indicated that the labor force is basically organized in gangs since only 357 workers are needed to set up a group in this way due to the fact that the irregular labor force amounts to 8,362 construction workers.

It was also disclosed that, by agreement, the wage scale allows for 867 gangs composed of 7,659 workers, representing 69 percent of those organized into gangs and 38 percent of the total labor force. In this effort, ECOA 6 and 7 have positively distinguished themselves, while the rest of the enterprises are considerably behind.

Mario R. Fumero of the administration of the MICONS Labor Organization gave a special talk at the plenary session, which was presided over by Jose A. Roque, secretary general of the Havana Construction Workers Union, and the closing words were delivered by Hector Jimenez, a member of the National Construction Workers Union Secretariat.

11,466
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

CIEGO DE AVILA CALCULATING CENTERS--On January 28, five calculating centers were opened in the province of Ciego de Avila. The centers are equipped with modern computer equipment and will help better economic controls in the area. The centers belong to various sectors: agriculture, the State Committee for Statistics, the Institute for Automated Systems and Computer Technology, the Ministry of Sugar and the Higher Agricultural Institute. The equipment includes CID-201-B minicomputers, designed and made in Cuba, tape printing and perforating equipment, and the punch cards for reading. These minicomputers can carry out 100 000 operations a second and have 32 000 positions memory. [Text] [Havana CUBA-ECONOMIC NEWS in English 1980 No 103 p 8]

TUNA CATCH FOR 1979--A total catch of 7 500 tons for the year 1979 meant that Cuba's tuna fleet had surpassed its plan by 14 percent. Over the twelve months of the year, fishermen of the fleet made 487 outstanding catches double the norm set per boat/day, and of those 110 were national records. Programmed to fish over a period of 100 days in all, the twenty boats of the fleet fished on 105 days, and were proclaimed Best Ocean Going Fleet in the "Al Rojo Vivo" emulation campaign sponsored by the National Trade Union of Merchant Marine, Ports and Fishing Workers. [Text] [Havana CUBA-ECONOMIC NEWS in English 1980 No 103 p 14]

NEW HAVANA FLOATING DOCK--A new Soviet floating dock belonging to the Maritime Repairs Enterprise (ETAMAR) went into operations as the Emiliano Diaz gas transporter of the Caribbean Shipping Line docked there. This was on January 7, when its full haulage capacity of 4 500 tons was being used. The dock is 100 meters long by 31 wide. Self-propelled, it has four generators, plus a kitchen, dining room, cabins and auxiliary equipment. The dock is to be used not only by Cuban boats but also by any foreign boats that require servicing in some form or other. [Text] [Havana CUBA-ECONOMIC NEWS in English No 103, 1980 p 14]

ISLE OF YOUTH INFANT MORTALITY RATE--Health workers on the Isle of Youth scored a notable success during the year 1979 by lowering the infant mortality rate to 14,8 per 1 000 live births by the end of the year. The figure is an specially significant one bearing in mind that the figure for the previous year was 30,6 per 1 000 live births. It occasioned a letter of congratulations to the Health Office on the island from Armando Mestre, first Party secretary in that special municipality. In the letter, Mestre praised the effort on the part of health workers and the backing of the mass organizations and the Young Communist League. [Text] [Havana CUBA-ECONOMIC NEWS in English No 103, 1980 p 15]

CUBA'S PORTS HANDLE OVER 8 MILLION TONS--During the year 1979 Cuba's ports handled a total cargo of 8 299 400 tons of merchandise, but this meant that the plan for the year was only 93,6 percent met. That the plan was not met fully is due to several reasons: a drop in imports, boats planned for the period not arriving, international market problems and internal organizational problems of the general import and export cargo transportation system. With regard to demurrage payments, these dropped by some 91 000 pesos in absolute terms, but increased slightly in relative terms. [Text] [Havana CUBA ECONOMIC NEWS in English No 103, 1980 p 15]

COMPUTER SYSTEMS PASS TESTS--In December three computer systems were submitted by Cuba for the 9th international trials for the unified minicomputer system established by the International Computer Commission of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA). The three are: COBOL programming for FOBOS system (GES-300), the applied teaching system (SEBASIC) and the specialized decimal data processer CID-2201, which in international coding is now SM-0502. The first is a programming system for computer solutions to economic problems. The applied teaching system is for students to "dialogue" with the computer, with the aid of a display unit. The third system speeds up the process of calculation and affords greater precision in computers when working with decimal figures. The three systems presented in Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, were put together by experts in the Main Institute for Digital Research (ICID), of the National Institute for Automated Systems and Computer Techniques. [Text] [Havana CUBA-ECONOMIC NEWS in English No 102, 1980 p 10]

CSO: 3020

DESPITE MURDER ATTEMPTS, DIJOUD SAYS SITUATION CALM

Paris LE MONDE in French 20 Sep 80 p 11

[Article: "Dijoud Says Situation in Guadeloupe Is Perfectly Calm"]

[Text] In an interview broadcast over radio station Europe 1 on Thursday 18 September, Paul Dijoud, secretary of state for overseas departments and territories, said the situation in Guadeloupe "is perfectly calm" despite the various acts of terrorism committed in the island since March. Dijoud explained: "There are in Guadeloupe, like everywhere else, small groups of terrorists. This is, unfortunately, one of the problems of our times, and the French Government is taking action to cope with this kind of flare-up which is still of limited scope. We have no tangible evidence of foreign interventions in our overseas departments, but we are convinced that these small isolated groups may have been formed or trained elsewhere and are acting in collusion with certain other parties."

As he announced several days ago, Dijoud will visit Martinique on Monday 22 September and Guadeloupe on Wednesday 24 September to review with local elected officials and business leaders what is being done to implement measures approved for the repair of damage caused by the recent hurricane Allen.

Lucien Bernier (left-of-center), president of the Guadeloupe general council, said he personally believed the acts of terrorism for which the Armed Liberation Group (GLA) claimed responsibility, "are isolated actions that can in no way alter the policy line followed by Guadeloupe which is part of a democratic system within which the people are regularly entitled to express themselves." On the other hand, the Guadeloupe Communist Party views these acts of terrorism as "provocations instigated by the French authorities for the purpose of justifying repressive measures."

8041
CSO: 3100

CRIMES ACT BRINGS SECURITY FORCES UNDER PRESSURE

Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 12 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] KINGSTON, Jamaica, Thursday (CANA) —

Jamaica's Security Forces, battling to overcome increased violence this year, have become the latest political football in the run-up to general elections expected to be held here next month.

The controversy has its base in the Suppression of the Crimes Act used at the height of violence and to give the police and army special powers of search and arrest in anti-crime operations.

Parliament this week agreed to extend the life of the Act until monthend amidst verbal clashes involving the Government, Opposition and public over alleged partisanship in the performance of the forces.

The rumpus reached a head towards the end of last month when the ruling People's National Party (PNP), alleging harassment of its supporters, took to the streets shouting "we can't tek no more beatings from the security forces."

The march, which itself claimed one life, an Opposition supporter who was stabbed — came after a spate of violence that left more than 400 people dead this year.

PNP supporters have been peeved ever since Police Federation chairman, Inspector J.D. McBeth some months ago spoke out against alleged political interference in the force. He even called for the removal from office of National Security Minister, Dudley Thompson.

Then three soldiers were charged two months ago with complicity in an alleged plot to overthrow the Michael Manley regime.

Now the latest allegations against the security forces include that soldiers forced young men to kiss each other, and detainees to eat faeces.

Citing specific examples of alleged partisan behaviour, Finance Minister, Hugh Small spoke of the raiding of homes and offices of government MPs in what he referred to as the way one would rescue the American hostages in Teheran.

One MP, Carmen McGregor told Parliament that youths in her constituency were stripped to their underpants and forced to "stopp" walk for distances of up to four miles on hot concrete.

PNP officials have been careful to make it clear that they recognise the drop in the crime rate since the army and police took special measures to deal with the situation and that they are not against arrest when "there is a cause."

The party said that the PNP does not want to go into elections with the Suppression of Crime Act in place and preferred to see it withdrawn "to leave the way clear for four weeks of violence before the elections."

For its part, the Jamaica Defence Force says that only a small minority of men were abusing their powers under the Act.

Brigadier Robert Neish, defence force chief of staff said that anyone found guilty of malpractices would be firmly dealt with.

Mr Neish giving figures to show the success said that in stepped up anti-crime fight by the security forces said that in five weeks gun killings had been reduced from 43 a week to four per week.

The JDF chief stressed that it was necessary for his men to maintain the confidence and respect of the public and said that the military was determined to fight the crime wave and hopefully win the battle.

The intense debate here has brought comment from virtually all the major organisations in the country.

The Jamaica Manufacturers Association (JMA) said it favoured the extension of the Act until after general elections.

Said the JMA, "there can be no doubt that as election day draws nearer and the election campaign intensifies, the level of violence will escalate. It is therefore imperative that the powers now vested in the security forces under the Act remains in effect pending the outcome of the general elections."

The JMA view could probably be traced to the events preceding the last general elections in 1976 and the fact that when Mr. Manley announced that he will call an early poll this year in January that the shooting began forcing the declaration of a state of emergency.

The opposition Jamaica Labour Party (JLP) has attacked the PNP position and call on "all patriotic Jamaicans" to help the security forces in "their heroic struggle which they are waging to stamp out violence and terrorism."

On the PNP demonstration, the JLP said such an Act at this time could only serve to hamper the work of army and police and destroy morale.

JLP chairman, Dr. Donald Irvine said, "to stage an illegal march in the streets can only lead to anarchy and breakdown of the rule of law. The JLP will not condone any action that is not conducive to law and order."

The Dental Association of Jamaica said that because of the crime situation it had already lost many members "who would like to practice in a safer environment."

In supporting an extension the association said "we would like to indicate that we cannot afford to employ security guards as they are given to ministers of government freely."

Opposing views came from the Press Association of Jamaica (PAJ) which at its annual general meeting passed a resolution urging government to recall into military barracks, members of the police force now deployed under the Act.

The PAJ said that the soldiers and police should only use what it called constitutional means to deal with the problem of crime.

The Jamaica Council of Human Rights went a step further, suggesting several ways in which government could monitor any abuses of democratic rights by citizens.

The council also recommended imprisonment of those found guilty of malpractices, that detainees should have a right to legal and medical aid, and citizens should have a right to be present when houses are searched and, when arrested, should be told of the reason for the arrest.

In last Tuesday's Parliamentary debate on the Act, both government and opposition MPs backed its retention, though opposition spokesman Hugh Shearer said the extension should have been for 90 days, to cover the election period.

Acting National Security Minister Carlyle Dunkley told Parliament that so far disciplinary proceedings were being brought against five soldiers identified as among those abusing their powers.

Dunkley, in defending the retention of the provisions of the Act, said there had been a marked decrease in terrorist activity since the act was enforced in July. Schools that had to be closed because of the violence were once again open because of the high visibility of the security forces.

Government, he said, would shortly be mounting a publicity campaign to make people aware of their rights under the law, as well as the authority vested in the security forces under this legislation.

Also under consideration is a special bureau, which would investigate citizens' complaints about security abuses and make recommendations to the appropriate action where necessary.

CSO: 3020

TEXT OF JLP'S FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT TO THE NATION

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 2 Sep 80 Supplement No 73, pp 2-24

[President Jose Lopez-Portillo's fourth annual report to the nation delivered to the Mexican Congress on 1 September 1980]

[Text] Honorable Congress of the Union:

This is the fourth time that I have come before this sovereign body to report on the state of the nation.

As I have done, I am presenting, in writing and in seven annexes, wide-ranging and detailed facts and figures, as well as program gains, for each sector, comparing them with government spending data for 1979.

Three new political parties, the Mexican Democratic, the Mexican Communist and the Socialist Workers parties, are now legally registered and are enriching the representation of our people here. Congratulations.

The instructive and important first session of the legislature is now history. We all participated and learned. In a world of disorder and regression, Mexico is succeeding in coordinating and complementing a thriving democratic reform. New voices, which previously lacked a nationwide forum, are now being heard. Initiatives, urgings, questionings, criticisms, demands, disagreements have found avenues for effective institutional action. Our society has strengthened its capacity for self-criticism and definition. An enriched pluralism fosters a responsible exercise of freedom.

Therefore, the amnesty laws are still being applied, in order to offer participatory options along the road of harmony.

In compliance with the law, municipal elections were held in eight states, as well as one special municipal election. Local congresses were chosen in five states, and governors in six.

The National Voter Registry has begun revising and updating the list of voters, the shortcomings of which have impeded citizen participation and contributed to invalidations and abstention.

A complementary measure is the scheduled issuance of a new voter credential with improved authenticity and control features.

Taking advantage of recent electoral experience and in order to further refine the instruments helping to make the political reform more effective, because it is conceived as an ongoing process, the Executive Branch will submit to this Honorable Congress a number of proposed reforms to the Constitution and the Federal Law on Political Organizations and Electoral Processes. The reform would be cut short if we did not expand the scope of democracy in our states, if each government and its people did not decide to banish feudalism and bossism, political intolerance and social disenfranchisement.

Last year, exercising their right of assembly, citizens staged more than 300 demonstrations in the Federal District to express their concerns, proposals and dissent. I would not be honest, however, if I failed to mention that such actions hamper the already inherently difficult routine of the residents of this city. I exhort all factions and all sectors to cooperate in finding alternative courses of action that can reconcile interests and preserve the rights of all, without detracting from the right of citizens to assemble peacefully for any legal purpose. Society will thank you.

Pursuant to the administrative reform, we decided to establish the agency that will implement the National Population Registry System, which will lead to the issuance of citizen identification cards.

As part of the political reform we incorporated the right to information in the Constitution.

Conceived as a social right, it is regarded as a complement to the individual guarantee of a free expression of ideas. This brought up the important issue of whether the Press Law, the Radio and Television Law and a number of others adequately regulate the content and form of this right.

At the open public hearings to find the best way to guarantee this right, there were those who maintained that the democratization of the mass media inevitably entails their nationalization, which they came out in favor of, while others argued that democratizing the media is an assault on freedom of the press.

The extremes and the intermediate positions have been established. I therefore consider it timely to pose a number of formal questions to this sovereign body.

Must we spell out what the right to information consists of? Does it consist of the right to receive it? To disseminate it? Both? And in any case, which person or persons are the holders of and who is bound by this right, and how can it be exercised and guaranteed?

If the holder of the right is society, through what bodies or means will it exercise it? If it is the individual, how will he make use of it?

Do legitimacy requirements have to be fulfilled in order to exercise it, whether by individual action or through agents? Does the right to receive and transmit information entail an obligation? Who is bound by the right to information? If there is an individual guarantee of free expression vis-a-vis state abuses, does the right to information bind exclusively the state or are others bound?

And assuming the state's obligation to inform, who ought to perform the task in order to legitimize the representation as the party under obligation?

Do those obliged to provide information have the right to choose when to provide it? Can some matters, documents or files be confidential or reserved? If so, for how long? And can they be consulted as historical documents?

Must those who exercise the right abide by a code of conduct regarding those who give or receive information?

We have already mentioned that in society the relationship between the state, those interested in information and the mass media could constitute anarchy in an interplay of freedoms devoid of responsibilities; the control of a totalitarian state that determines what is to be communicated, or a relationship in which freedoms are reconciled with responsibilities.

The first road leads to a dissolution of societies; the second is the road of dictatorships.

I am certain that I am expressing the political will of Mexicans when I assert that Mexico is neither dissolving nor becoming totalitarian, that its road is the road of freedom and democracy and that information is a means of nourishing and strengthening them. I am confident that this sovereign body will find answers to all of these questions.

With the confidence of the people and the participation of citizens, the administration of justice is a valid instrument for defending the fundamental rights that are the underpinning of human dignity.

The Public Ministry must not implacably pursue or systematically accuse. Therefore, it has ordered abandonment of legal action against peasant farmers who out of ignorance or poverty have committed crimes by planting or growing narcotics. I should also point out that none of them has committed a second offense.

The same attitude prompted an order for the release of more than 4,000 individuals, whose average age is 23, who were caught with small amounts of narcotics or mind-altering substances in their possession.

Complying with our pledge of a year ago, we reformed the law of responsibilities of officials and employees of the Federation, the Federal District and of high-level state officials.

Constitutional privilege is no longer a prerogative for impunity; it is a requirement for legal action. Previously scattered provisions were codified, and the section concerning the unexplainable enrichment of public officials and civil servants was preserved.

By guaranteeing domestic security and defending the nation's integrity, independence and sovereignty, the Mexican Armed Forces contribute as an institution to the attainment of planned development. They also perform social tasks on an ongoing basis. Civic campaigns, educational campaigns, the battle against natural disasters and againt drug trafficking, reforestation, the distribution of water, and every kind of support demanded of our soldiers and sailors have become habits that the people are thankful for.

The foreign defense of our country and the protection and preservation of our maritime resources have entailed dramatic but just action to command respect for a right and a principle of justice.

The distinguished services award was established last December as a well-deserved recognition for the Mexican Army.

Never before has the army administration been as efficient, imaginative and honest. It is an example to be followed.

I have had the pleasure of frequently conversing with representatives of our army and navy. I admire their preparedness and the way in which they utilize the opportunities and the modest resources that the people of Mexico provide them.

I would like to draw special attention to the role of the navy in the tuna incident.

In these times of treachery and defection, we are pleased and proud once more, as every year, to state that the nation trusts in, identifies with, admires and thanks its Armed Forces. Their perennial devotion and loyalty as military men and their solidarity as Mexicans serving their homeland enable us to say with pride that they are the people's representatives in the Armed Services.

Tenth National Census

The 10th Census indicates that we Mexicans number almost 68 million, and it is we who are now coming to grips with the issues of our political coexistence: to preserve, perpetuate and improve ourselves.

There are fivefold as many of us as when we undertook the revolution. Since then and on account of the revolution, mortality rates have declined considerably, and our life expectancy has risen from 30 to more than 70 years. There are many more of us in the same territory.

Our population has increased so fast quantitatively and changed so much qualitatively over the five decades of our institutional experience as a developing society in a world of disorder, exploitation or indifference that we have accumulated a complex series of critical problems as never before in our history and unquestionably as we will never see again. We are riding the crest of the wave.

We ought to look into ourselves and realistically determine where we have excelled and where we have failed. We must understand ourselves to resolve our problems.

Until a few years ago we were growing at a rate of 3.6 percent, one of the highest in the world. This rate of population increase, which comes on top of our accumulated shortcomings, is too much of a challenge to economic and social development in any country. This year, thanks to family planning efforts, we have reduced this growth to less than 2.9 percent, thus approaching the goal of 2.5 percent that we set for 1982.

If excessive growth is a factor of social imbalance, the makeup of our population, stemming from its rapid growth rate, is another: 65 percent of our people are under age 24, and 43 percent are less than 14 years old. They include a high percentage of Mexicans who are, of course, unproductive, and combined with those who cannot, do not know how to or do not want to work, we arrive at a figure of more than 48 million. In other words, the total population of Mexico just 10 years ago is now being supported by 19 million people. Everyone, however, demands food and services.

Fifty years ago, one-third of the population lived in cities and two-thirds in the countryside. That proportion has now been reversed. This has meant a sudden and concentrated demand for urban jobs and services by tightly packed population groups that can readily organize into pressure groups. These are our urban poor, who have come to the city in search of the good life and who are still living in precarious conditions that they deserve to overcome.

At the same time that we are seeing this urban concentration, we still have a widely scattered rural population--more than 95,000 towns have fewer than 2,500 inhabitants. This makes it difficult to provide basic services and burdensome to set up, operate and maintain installations.

This rural disenfranchisement creates problems of social injustice as well as differences in cultural patterns.

Other countries have had centuries to provide services at a pace in keeping with demand. Those of us living in Mexico today have had to create and serve in five decades five Mexicos of the year 1920.

Many of our large cities have had a million or more inhabitants since 1940 and all of them have since 1960. We must now also incorporate on a just basis our underprivileged rural zones, whose populations have also multiplied.

Do not regard these census figures as a tiresome catalog of contemporary sociology. I am pointing them out so that we can gage what our generation has had to and has to accomplish.

The pessimists, stubborn critics and irresponsible ideologues notwithstanding, we should be proud of the feat that we have accomplished: in 1960, which is as far from us as the year 2000, 17.4 million of our 35 million people knew how to read. Now, in 1980, 45 million of us 68 million Mexicans know how to read. In both cases children under age six are included among those who do not know how to read.

In 1960, 5.5 million people were registered in the entire National Educational System, 4.8 million in primary school. Now 21.7 million are registered, and 15 million in primary school alone.

In 1960, 11.3 million inhabitants had drinking water; now, in 1980, 44 million do.

In 1960 we had 2.3 million kilowatts of power; now we have 14 million.

In 1960, the various social security systems protected 4½ million beneficiaries; now, in 1980, 42.6 million are covered.

In 1960, health care and social security systems had 8,187 hospital beds; now there are more than 58,000.

In 1960, our highway network spanned 45,000 kilometers; now, in 1980, it extends for 212,000 kilometers.

There were 2 million hectares of land under irrigation in 1960; there are now 5 million.

In 1960, there were 11 million people with jobs; now there are 19 million. Few countries in the world could give a rundown like this. We are willing to strengthen our determination to continue with our efforts. But far from celebrating our half-filled glass, we must also acknowledge that the quality of life for many Mexicans is not at all satisfactory or even decent. Someone could no doubt give a rundown of our shortcomings, and he would also be correct.

No one has planned these inconsistencies. Perhaps many tolerate them, while others of us have been unable to correct them. But this is where we are now in our history; these are the actual conditions today, the conditions that we must continue to change.

We have never ignored the truth. I invite you to delve more deeply into it, not to overwhelm our understanding, scandalize our morals or inhibit our determination, but to adapt the efforts that we have to exert by law, because now injustice is illegal, not just something to be complained about. Let us turn complaints into steps towards improvement. Let us not point the fiery finger of condemnation to garner widespread prestige while refusing to lend our solidarity. Critical assessments, yes; but solutions and aid too.

By the year 2000, if we achieve the goal of just 104 million inhabitants and if we wish to accomplish the goals of the Comprehensive Plan, we will be forced to build at least another Mexico on top of the current one. That is the extent of our responsibility. Let us not bark at the caravan; let us join it.

There are only two options: either we continue to move forward with our democratic ambitions, which are to grow, to provide jobs, to moderate demographic growth, to generate and distribute wealth, to maintain political stability and, most of all, justice, freedom and security, or we will have a regime like the ones that still exist and are even spreading in our hemisphere, regimes that are high-handed and repressive, that provide for the welfare of the few, that favor the unjust, that offer the freedom of forcible slavery, that use power to suppress and that despicably, irresponsibly and inhumanly manipulate.

Our option is to persevere in the valiant transformation of our conditions. To this end, I proposed to the nation at the beginning of my administration a comprehensive effort that is now reflected in an overall development plan, whose objectives are:

To reaffirm and strengthen the independence of Mexico as a democratic, just and free nation politically, economically and culturally.

To provide our people jobs and a minimum of welfare, with priority on food, education, health care and housing needs.

To promote high, sustained and efficient economic growth.

To improve the distribution of income among individuals, the factors of production and geographic regions.

Based on the administrative reform, the Comprehensive Plan was the result of combining and coordinating the plans and programs of each sector, as shaped by the strategies stemming from the Mexican Food Supply System, the commodities system, the jobs program, the training program and the productivity program, programs that focus particular attention on our underprivileged zones and programs entailed in financial, fiscal and subsidies policies, so that once and for all we can established a sound relationship between prices, wages, profits and the Treasury.

Certain sectors are understandably stunned by so many programs and regard them as belated efforts.

A country must take a long-term view of itself. We have to rationalize and marshal our actions, go beyond improvisation. Therefore, we would rather face up to the criticism that we are too late than to take no action because of criticism. From the outset of my administration, starting with my inaugural speech, we began a consistent government program, with planning based on an administrative reform that would make it possible. We are on schedule, convinced that the rationalization of the country is now an irreversible trend. The plan was not the end of a process; it was the beginning of a series of commitments and tasks that had to be carried out.

Therefore, we drew up plans sector by sector, not as an intellectual exercise to ease consciences, to deceive fools or to give jobs to idle technicians, but to give rein to the nation's energies and to provide input and an approach for our decisions. We are certain that things get done in any case, but doing them poorly, helter-skelter, jeopardizes the country that we want to and can make better. Planning is necessary and feasible, and we are aware of this. I honestly believe that there is no other way. I am certain that it is irreversible, that this is the road to excellence in today's jungle of disorder.

The Economy

The current crisis is worldwide. Economic disorder, the energy problem, the lack of political will to reconcile relations between rich and poor nations, bipolar tensions, are the cause and effect of a widespread recession plus inflation. Few countries, including the industrialized nations, are expanding their economies at rates faster than their population increases. And they are all suffering from inflation, which, moreover, is transmitted from the strong to the weak.

In contrast, Mexico, due to a set of favorable circumstances, has not only overcome the recession, but it has grown as never before in its history. As the Comprehensive Plan called for, we achieved eight percent growth for the second year in a row. This is unprecedented. It has been the result of the country's vitality and the efforts of all. On the other hand, we must point out that inflation has outstripped our forecasts. We have to analyze these two phenomena, growth and inflation, to understand our current situation. We must not add unnecessary burdens; we must make constructive decisions. We must compare ourselves to assess ourselves.

Inflation is unquestionably our number one social problem in our stage of consolidation. We are growing rapidly and we are now suffering the problems of quick development. No longer do we have to face the problems of stagnation, much less those of decline.

Our recovery and inflation have coincided, but this does not mean that there is an exclusive cause and effect relationship. We should recall that during the previous decade the heaviest pressures on prices occurred precisely during the years that the economy grew the least.

Inflation has filtered through to us from around the world via imports and exports, international financing, higher interest rates, capital costs and flows and economic disorder. The United States has recorded rates of 18 percent; Great Britain, Italy and Spain 20 percent; Brazil, more than 70 percent, and Argentina, over 100 percent. Furthermore, many of them are in the midst of recessions. If we add that more than 80 percent of our foreign trade is with these countries, we will understand that we are unavoidably importing inflation and that it is a question of choosing between two evils. We want the lesser of the evils, in other words, enough of a difference between our inflation and outside inflation so that our exports will be promoted and our imports discouraged.

In addition, there are internal factors that enter the picture through supply and demand, and many of them are related to specific problems.

Prices have been pushed higher by irresponsible boosts that created inflationary expectations and spurred consumption; by bottlenecks; by heavy public and private expenditures; by weather conditions that affected the supply of commodities; by lead times of investment projects; by changes in public sector prices and rates to rationalize subsidies; by additional input costs for production and financing capital; by the introduction of the VAT [value added tax], as well as by higher incomes stemming from more jobs and higher public and private consumption and investment expenditures.

Public expenditures are a basic factor in how the economy behaves and in explaining the two aforementioned phenomena. They stimulate and orient the country's economic and social growth, which is largely determined by their magnitude, makeup, financing and, mainly, allocation. If expenditures are oversized or poorly channeled, they also fuel inflation. Therefore, we have been careful in planning and implementing.

The expanded 1979 budget totaled 1.267 trillion pesos. The investment program amounted to 256 billion.

The main reasons for the budget expansion are explained in detail in the government balance sheet that was duly submitted to this sovereign body and that contains accurate information as well as, for the first time, program details.

In light of the positive and negative effects of accelerated growth, the public expenditures authorized by this sovereign body for 1980, totaling 1.6835 trillion pesos (33 percent higher than in 1979), are intended to avoid excessive pressure on the production apparatus and to have a diminished impact on prices and imports.

That is why we have boosted allocations for transportation, storage and ports, the agricultural and livestock sector and social welfare.

Investment outlays are the engine of growth. We have tailored them to our priorities, and they total 355 billion pesos, up 35.5 percent from the 1979 fiscal year.

Priority sectors are up 32 percent, while administrative sectors are down 6 percent, which reflects the efforts at streamlining current expenditures.

In 1980, investments in the countryside have been up almost 100 percent and are half as much as in industry. Just last year they represented one-fourth. This development, plus our support for commerce, which is up more than 200 percent, demonstrates our consistent response to the need to insure basic nutrition for our entire population.

We must realize that budgets cannot be rigid. They have to adapt to changing circumstances within certain parameters of control and balance.

So far this year, we have authorized 206 billion pesos in extra outlays, most of them earmarked for PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum] to defray the operating costs of the new oil rigs. This also reflects that higher taxes it has paid, due to higher export earnings.

Debt servicing is at the same absolute level as in 1979.

Other details are contained in the annexes.

Public expenditures are covered with Treasury funds, the money collected by public agencies from the prices and rates they charge, and credit. In the case of the government, this latter item is curtomarily given the frightful name of deficit, which smacks of embezzlement and bankruptcy. It is just credit. Pardon the naivete.

As far as we can tell, budget revenue will total 1.217 trillion pesos, up 40 percent from 1979, a rate of increase higher than that of expenditures. Hence, the budget deficit is becoming increasingly smaller. This year it will be just 182 billion pesos, just 13 percent of actual outlays. More than two-thirds of the deficit will be financed with internal credit, and the rest with foreign loans. Thus, 87 percent of this budget is being financed with our own reserves, which mitigates the trend toward a higher public debt. Let that be noted.

Administrative Reform and Programming

The Comprehensive Plan's financial policy is designed to reconcile available credit with financial and Treasury resources, to insure that we have the funds needed to finance our development goals.

Financial policy has been drafted to stimulate savings and to channel them into the priority production sectors of the economy, to which preferential interest rates have been assigned.

The unusual boom in economic activity and inflation itself have necessitated an expanded money supply. Nevertheless, its rate of growth (32.6 percent) shows clear signs of slowing down (down 15 percent from 1979), as the money supply is tailored to real resource needs.

Private and state-private banks boosted their intake of monetary and nonmonetary resources by more than 40.2 percent over the first 6 months of 1980.

In view of the instability of international money markets, we adopted a competitive policy of flexible interest rates to prevent the outflow of capital and to guarantee that savings are available for loans.

We gradually adjusted the level of legal reserve requirements until it reached 40.9 percent.

We are still issuing government bonds, petrobonds, Treasury bills and unsecured liabilities. Convertible liabilities, commercial paper and other longer-term instruments will soon appear.

The financing awarded by the banking system in 1979 showed an absolute increase of some 300 billion pesos, up 50 percent from 1978.

The Executive Branch has been reporting on a quarterly basis to the Honorable Congress of the Union on the amount and makeup of our external debt. Its net increase has been, on the average, about $3 billion over the last 3 years. As we enhance our capacity to pay, we are enhancing our bargaining power and, therefore, foreign debt terms. The debt of less than a year's term did not exceed five percent of the total; it accounted for four times as much in relative terms 5 years ago. As a proportion of the gross domestic product (GDP) it dropped from 2.94 to 2.3 (more than 20 percent. For 1980, more than 40 percent of the loans we took out carry terms exceeding 9 years.

As of 30 June, the nation's foreign indebtedness totaled $32 billion.

Our balance of payments status and the results of foreign loans have boosted the Bank of Mexico's gross international reserves, which as of 31 August stood at $6.2683 billion, $3.603 billion in primary reserves and $2.6653 billion in secondary reserves.

We have bolstered trust funds for promoting priority activities. By the end of 1980 they will be managing 90 billion pesos, which will be primarily channeled into production investments throughout the country.

We have established the National Fishing and Ports Bank and the Fund for the Development of Cooperatives. The Mexico Fund will soon begin operations; it will float shares overseas, bring additional funds into the country and invest in securities sold in the stock market to spur economic development.

Our new fiscal policy will be based on three fundamental reforms: tax reform, administrative reform and a reform in coordination with the states of the union.

The tax reforms have substantially modified the approach to direct taxes and to the income tax on physical persons, in order to boost receipts and expand the base, by introducing the notion of total income and by assuming taxable income on the basis of the verifiable expenditures of taxpayers, without resorting to the facile expedient of increasing rates.

In order to stave off the harmful effects of the progressive tax structure, we completely exempted from the income tax the stratum immediately above the minimum wage (those earning between 52,000 and 64,000 pesos a year in round numbers); those earning 69,700 from 77 percent of it; those earning up to 93,000 from 56 percent; those earning double the minimum from 36 percent, and so forth up to a 4 percent cut for the highest earners. We helped the family budget through a tax cut of 10.65 billion pesos to offset the impact of inflation on lower-income earners.

From 1978 to 1979 tax receipts from business rose by 47.7 percent; from capital gains by 54.5 percent, and from wage earners by just 6.1 percent. This new structure contrasts with the trend in previous years. It is a fundamental part of the fiscal reform.

The implementation of the value added tax as of 1 January of this year has simplified collection and monitoring procedures and extended the tax on consumption. We have thus resolved the problems of double taxation and of dwindling revenue in states and municipalities.

I should point out that as a result of these reforms, from January to June of this year revenue sharing to the states increased by almost 60 percent over the same period last year. Only thus can we strengthen federalism.

The new tax has worked fine, in keeping with the forecasts for the transition period; initial snags have been overcome.

Indirect tax receipts from January to June were up 33.8 percent over the same period in 1979, basically as a result of the effectiveness of the VAT in combatting evasion.

As far as special taxes are concerned, specific levies were replaced by ad valorem taxes, and a new Mining Tax and Promotion Law and a new Customs Appraisal Law went into effect, which have quickly streamlined the entry of merchandise into the country and facilitated expeditious customhouse clearance.

This mechanism guarantees equity in appraisals, with benefits for both taxpayers and the Treasury. It makes tariffs the main protectionist tool and combats smuggling and tax evasion.

We can now speak of a fiscal reform that is fully under way, as reflected in the tax structure, the distribution of income, the rise in receipts, the financing of the Federal Public Sector and the bolstering of state and municipal finances.

Labor

The planned promotion of high-level and sustained economic growth is effective and justified to the extent that it generates jobs, the only way that the people can afford decent food, education, health care, housing and recreation.

It is difficult to cite illustrative statistics with regard to this important matter, because of the information that we have available and because of the persistence of underemployment. With this in mind, we can assert:

Between 1977 and 1979, 1.8 million jobs were created, almost 700,000 in 1979 alone.

Permanently insured workers in industry, an indirect indicator of employment, increased by 10.2 percent in 1979 and by 9.6 percent so far this year.

All of this means not only that we have halted the unemployment trend of the last few years but also that economic growth has reversed it, from 8 percent in 1977 to 5.8 percent in 1979, and for the first time on a steady basis the supply of jobs is outpacing the growth of the population. Daily experience at various points around the republic confirms this to us. Although we do not, of course, have full employment, I can categorically assert that we now have many more job sources than 5 years ago. We are successfully providing for the right to work.

I want to emphasize this to counter the stereotypical assertion made by those who invent catastrophes with imaginative or nonexistent statistics and who say that unemployment is on the rise.

Economic growth in a country like ours is tied to social development; the structures of social justice stemming from the right to work cannot become realities if there are no jobs. And there will be no jobs unless we grow. If there is growth, employment coincides with the institutional struggle for wages and benefits. To grow without distributing is to move backward. To distribute without growing means poverty. To grow and to distribute means progress.

On account of understandable ideological paradoxes or intellectual distortions, there are those who question and find fault with the economic growth we have achieved, as if it were a crime. Let us allow them to seethe in their affliction.

The National Employment Plan, which is now under way, seeks to provide jobs to more than 2.2 million persons between 1980 and 1982, an annual rate of increase of 4.2 percent to cut the jobless rate to 5.5 percent.

Under the plan, 185,000 specific programs were organized with a budget allocation of more than 1.3 billion pesos this year.

From January to June the wage bill recorded an enormous nominal rise of 39 percent, due to more jobs and higher wages, disregarding inflation. The average real rise in wages over these 6 months, even for unskilled workers, was between two and four percent. Even though the minimum wage, which is conceived as a floor, not a ceiling, has been declining in real terms, average income is above that level. We will adjust the minimum wage to make up for losses and insure buying power, in coordination with other steps that we are taking.

We often become frustrated because gains are deceptively made to look like losses and because we deny the results of our own efforts.

As of today, the Executive Branch has decided to raise the earnings of workers in the three branches of the union and in the Department of the Federal District, as well as the salaries of the members of the Armed Forces, by the following amounts:

A salary of 4,890 a month will rise to 7,000 (27 percent)
A salary of 7,001 a month will rise to 9,500 (25 percent)
Pay of 9,501 a month will rise to 15,000 (22 percent)
Pay of more than 15,001 a month will rise by 3,300.

Teaching personnel had their pay boosted on 16 August of this year, and thus their salaries should be put in line with the ranges and percentages cited above. Rural teachers in lesser developed zones, which will be defined later, are granted an additional 500 pesos a month as of today to what they have already been awarded, making 1,000 pesos.

I have also ordered the same increase in retirement pay and military, civilian and complimentary pensions charged to the Federal Treasury.

I previously ordered, retroactive to 1 August, an increase in the retirement pension of military veterans of the revolution so that they receive as much as active servicemen as of 31 July. I also ordered a one-time grant of 12,000 pesos to each veteran of the revolution recognized by the Secretariat of National Defense, as long as he does not receive any benefit charged to the ISSSTE [Institute of Social Security and Services for Government Workers] or to the Federal Treasury.

We must keep in mind that wages, benefits and what we might call government-provided fringe benefits are closely tied to the wealth that the country generates.

We have to acknowledge the limitations in our efficiency as a country, which harms us all and makes us uncompetitive. This is a severe limiting factor in fulfilling the imperative of the modern era, which we must enter if we wish to resolve our problems, our social problems in particular. On account of our development needs, we are forced to enter the international struggle, which is ruthless. We cannot continue to live in the greenhouse of an inefficient, complacent and lazy protectionism. It is expensive here at home and fruitless overseas.

We therefore assert that the productivity that we have to attain is in no sense a means of exploitation. It is not unjust unearned income; it is national efficiency, the capacity to secure more and better results, which benefit all and which translate into new and better job sources, a reduction of underemployment, higher wages and benefits for workers and their families, and savings for businessmen and consumers. We view increased productivity as a means of generating and better distributing national wealth and readying the country for the future, which will be quite different if we prepare ourselves for competition from what it would be if we as a nation remain inefficient.

Last 11 April we inaugurated the National Productivity Commission, which is made up of representatives of labor, business and the public sector.

To a large extent, producing more of what we need and doing it better and less expensively will be just wishful thinking unless we train our work force.

The Constitutional Amendment of 10 January 1978, which established the right of workers to receive training from their employers, and the Legislative Reform of 1 May 1978, which created the means to achieve this, have begun to bear fruit.

The exercise of the right to strike, which is scrupulously respected in Mexico, shows the efforts that workers and employers have made to reconcile their interests for the benefit of the nation. Over the period that this report is concerned with, less than 3 percent of the strikes that were called were staged: just 86 strikes out of 2,976 that were called. We must acknowledge, however, that one of the upshots of inflation in a free, unrepressive system like ours is the heightening of labor conflicts due to the shattered balance among the factors of production, conflicts that can also trigger struggles for prestige, position and power. Political interests might legitimately get mixed up in labor problems, but then political solutions would also be valid for labor matters. In any event, we must see to it that the workers are not harmed by strategies that have not been clear to or that have not been evaluated by the workers, because in the long run they will harm everyone and weaken the country. On the other hand, we ought to give special consideration to the case of certain workers who have ties with public interests and even with political interests and who do not fit into the simplistic relationship between capital and labor as factors of production. I invite this Congress to maturely study this issue. Its pluralistic makeup guarantees a comprehensive and responsible analysis.

Commerce

Wages mean little if they are not in keeping with prices. This is one of the most severe problems that inflation causes. The unfettered interplay of factors tends to produce an endless inflationary spiral.

Hence, while efforts at productivity bear fruit, we must also pursue a price policy and take complementary steps to curb inflation, which is an evil in itself, and to prevent its impact from further impoverishing our neediest citizens. No country in any political camp has been able to fully resolve this problem. There are injustices in this regard in the capitalist world, and the socialist world has rationing, black markets and long lines; both have shortages.

I have on a previous occasion described the complexity of our system of prices, which has resulted from successive moves to control them and to stimulate output. We have official prices, guaranteed prices, controlled prices, cost-price prices, uncontrolled prices, compromise prices and subsidized prices.

We know now that a policy of inelastic prices discourages production and that a policy of unrestricted support for producers causes prices to soar.

This is a tradeoff that we have often tried to balance, always unsuccessfully.

The reason is that in society every person seeks to satisfy his interests, and these interests often collide or are contradictory. The difference between the rural and the urban economies is the most dramatic example, though not the only one, and I will refer to it to illustrate my point. What the peasant farmer regards as a fair price for his product (his wage, in other words) is too high for the city dweller.

Therefore, we have resorted to subsidies: the state utilizes public funds to reward or aid producers, or to keep prices low to benefit consumers, the feeling being that society as a whole ought to compensate for the imbalances at the two ends. The procedure works for a time, but sooner or later the subsidy becomes distorted.. Unproductive public outlays increase; the deficit swells, and thus inflation is fueled as well. A confused and inefficient tangle is also created, because the subsidy never completely gets to the person who deserves or needs it; a large proportion of it also goes to those who do not need it, and what is worse, subsidies help to create a caste of very skillful parasites who take advantage of society's efforts to be just and grow rich through deals, exports, speculation and abuses. Sugar is a clear-cut example, or soft drinks, which cost 15 pesos a liter, c ared to 8 or 10 pesos for milk and 2.80 for gasoline.

Subsidies thus become a systematized deception that we have called dream world economics. Between 1970 and 1980 their average annual increase was 39 percent, rising from 16.1 billion pesos in the former year to 428.4 billion this year.

In 1980, transfers and subsidies awarded on the expenditures side represented 51.7 percent of the total amount. Transfers and subsidies channeled through prices and rates accounted for 41.2 percent, and income or financial transfers made up 7.1 percent.

Of the total, 306 billion (in other words, 71.5 percent) are not channeled into justifiable transfers for social security, socially necessary current subsidies, investments or liabilities payments. They therefore offer a wide range of possibilities for developing a strategy of action with sizable impact on the economy.

We are condemning the distortion of subsidies, not the subsidies themselves. When properly directed, they promote action or redistribute income.

Our intent is not so much to reduce them as it is to assure that they accomplish their individual goal and function. Since September 1979 we have made major changes in our subsidies policy, especially through higher prices and rates for oil and petrochemical products, sugar, electrical energy, railways, etc, which have brought in an additional 40 billion pesos in revenue. Nevertheless, in general subsidies still foster a deceptive, wasteful economy that has perverted the state's enormous sacrifices in its determination to be fair.

We cannot and must not continue to walk the treadmill. We have to strive to coordinate our pricing and subsidies policy with wage and fiscal policy. We must proceed resolutely, not abruptly, working with spreads and increments.

We authorized 35 billion in subsidies to preclude adverse effects on the basic basket of mass consumption items. Subsidies granted to industry through CONASUPO [Government Basic Commodities Corporation] alone totaled 12.317 pesos; particularly important were the 6.9 billion pesos awarded to the tortilla-corn, tortilla, balanced foodstuffs and poultry industries. Today, the Federal Government's industrial facilities produce 90,000 tons a month of subsidized mass consumption items.

We reviewed the prices of fertilizers, primary petrochemicals, iron and steel and sulfur produced by public enterprises and agencies, and we also took another look at ANDSA rates. Our decisions enhanced the operations of these government-controlled bodies.

We also had to authorize a number of increases, to prevent shortages owing to financial impracticalities and to guarantee supplies. I would emphasize that there is nothing more expensive than that which does not exist.

If there is no basic production or if it is insufficient, the country's very survival demands that the state directly or indirectly furnish it, regardless of the output and productivity efforts that are being undertaken.

Meanwhile, we have to act. We cannot leave domestic market supplies up to the discretion of personal interest at a time when primary and secondary production are not meeting demand and food requirements. We therefore determined and drew up a timetable for how many additional tons we would need to guarantee nationwide supplies. Imports totaled 8.7 million tons, and whenever possible they were secured through government-to-government transactions in audited public biddings.

Thus, in spite of all the 1979 farm cycle and transportation problems, we have succeeded in maintaining and boosting official buffer reserves (as of 30 August they totaled 3.267 million tons) and in supplying industry with tortilla-corn, corn meal and tortillas.

The government has sought, implemented and regulated work systems that combine and coordinate its responsibilities with the efforts of production sectors.

Last year we successfully organized partnerships in farm, industrial and commercial marketing. Thanks to the related systems and to the proper handling of official prices and supply policies, last year producers of basic grains and seeds received more than guaranteed prices for their work, between 10 and 20 percent higher in the cases of corn and sorghum, 33 percent higher for beans, and between 15 and 25 percent higher for oilseeds. The government provided special support services (containers, local transportation and husking) to the poorest ejido farmers and small plot owners.

We have set up a wholesaling system whose primary function is to supply small- and medium-size stores.

In addition, the retail marketing system has established three branches: the workers branch, the working class urban branch and the branch consisting of the COPLAMAR-CONASUPO program.

In order to insure food supplies to underprivileged groups, 200 regional COPLAMAR-CONASUPO warehouses have been built and will begin operating next month in impoverished areas. They will be run and supervised by the communities and will supply with their own means of transportation more than 6,000 community distribution centers, which will sell basic items at non-speculative prices to 14 million peasant farmers in our most isolated regions. This is part of a comprehensive effort towards social justice.

During the administrative period that I am covering in this address, FONACOT has awarded 312,247 loans totaling 3.909 billion pesos to workers to purchase consumer durables. Purchases through FONACOT saved member workers 2.15 billion pesos. Because of this scale we can organize rational production and provide for sufficient mass consumption of consumer durables.

For its part, CONAMPROS [Joint National Committee for the Protection of Wages] now has 42 centers selling basic items.

We will continually inspect and monitor industries and businesses that produce, distribute and market items subject to official control. We have taken action many times and we will take action as often as necessary. The 280,000 inspections, 111,000 notices, 2,000 businesses closed down and the 200 million pesos in fines collected from violators illustrate the government's determination to prevent undesirable commercial practices from harming society. But closing down businesses is not a pleasant task, and we do not like to put people in jail. Therefore, we resort not only to bans, conditions or democratically legal sanctions but to the legal category of associations [alianzas] as well. The results can be seen in the annexes.

Our country's foreign trade reflects the promising period that it is in. Our foreign trade deficit has declined considerably since 1979.

In spite of grain imports and sharp increases in industrial imports, a short-term phenomenon associated with the recovery and with the fact that a number of investment have not yet yielded results, our trade deficit from January to June of this year totaled $887 million, down 25 percent from the same period last year.

In a world experiencing its worst crisis of the post-war period, there is strong outside pressure on Mexico, because of its unique status as a large country undergoing rapid expansion, to import what others are unable to. This largely explains the slow growth of a number of our industrial exports. Dumping and unfair trade practices are the order of the day everywhere. The powerful are the first to break the ground rules of international trade, to not spell out codes of conduct or to alter them at their convenience. Because of this and in support of our industrial development policy, which demands consistency in our overseas dealings, we decided to postpone our prospective membership in GATT. We must not allow what we do in one facet of our development to become undone in another.

Agriculture

Last year was a bad year for agriculture, and it interrupted an unprecedented string of successes attained through the Alliance for Production.

Severe droughts, followed by early frosts, pitilessly battered the country's agricultural heartland. There was a great deal of spoilage because planting was heavy and large harvests were anticipated. The peasant farmers were the direct losers; so far they have run the risks of agriculture alone, except for the minor consolation of insurance. The country was, of course, able to afford the necessary imports and to prevent shortages. We bought everything at high prices overseas and sold it here at low prices. Everyone thought things were normal, though they might have complained that the corn was yellow or found fault with the transportation system. But all of this had an impact on the economy in various ways: the outflow of foreign exchange, the extent of subsidies, the congested transportation, the need to provide work to the hard-hit peasant farmers, who asked only for an opportunity to earn a wage and feed their families. All of this was reflected in our inflation rate, and it kept us far from our priority goal of self-sufficiency in foodstuffs. Nevertheless, our farmers are once again working their fields, and as I will explain later, the state is beginning to share the risks with them.

We are not discouraged by the criticisms of those who, as if by magic, divorced the obvious weather conditions from their result: grain imports. Leaning against their fences and looking on, these people ultimately attributed the failure to the system and the peasant farmers. They forgot about the weather and are joyfully reaping their harvest. It was a good year for them.

Their view is improper, however, if we consider the following. In 1960, farmers produced 8.8 million tons of the 10 main crops, which at that time met the demand of the 36 million Mexicans inhabiting the republic and whose consumption was barely 233 kilograms per person. Those were the days when we could boast of being an exporting country.

Things are different now; there are 68 million Mexicans to feed. That is why we view with greater concern the problems now besetting us. In 1978, the last year with normal weather, our peasant farmers produced 21 million tons of various crops and made possible a consumption of 364 kilograms per person.

In other words, tilling practically the same surface area, our farmers performed the feat of boosting food supplies by 141 percent since 1960.

I do not deny that some Mexicans are undernourished. On the contrary, we objectively drew up and made public these statistics and we are pursuing the strategy of the Mexican food system to rectify this major injustice.

What we regard as improper are the low blows dealt from all sides to our farmers, who have had to put up with droughts, frosts, lack of understanding and slander.

This is not right. Feeding the people of Mexico is the responsibility of all, not just our rural growers. Let us take up our responsibilities, each and every one of us. Let us esteem the prestige of work, not the work of lowering prestige.

Despite the disasters, the sector's trade balance during this period showed a surplus of 18 billion pesos. Thus, it is not true that we exported oil to import grains. I emphasize that we must look at each individual account.

Rice, bean, corn, wheat, barley and sorghum production totaled 16 million tons, down 18 percent from 1978. We should also point out that crop area was up by almost a million hectares. We worked more and lost more.

In contrast, our oilseed (sesame seeds, safflower, cotton seeds and soybeans) harvest was the largest ever, hitting 2.09 million tons, up 34 percent from the year before.

The wheat harvest was up 414,000 tons from the previous year's output, with total production of 2.6 million tons. We extend our gratitude to the nation's wheat growers for the efforts that they exerted in this trying period.

Productivity contests prompted wheat yields far higher than domestic and world averages. A single ejido farmer in Guanajuato garnered a yield of 10,810 kilograms per hectare, and another ejido farmer in Sonora got 9,529 kilos. These are our ejido growers, and there can be more of them, the merciless criticism from our cities notwithstanding.

I reiterate that our concern with producing all of the food that our nation's people demand should not cause us to overlook export markets.

The items that we sell overseas come from just 351,000 hectares, including cotton, chickpea, fruit and vegetable growing areas. If, as some people are recommending, the state ordered this area earmarked for different crops, it would be sacrificing foreign exchange, cutting down on jobs and, most seriously, curbing freedom of action and the right to work. People are generally unfamiliar with this information. We would not be helping things much by earmarking these relatively few thousands of hectares for grain, but we would be doing a great deal of harm.

During this administration, in addition to gains in agricultural modernization and productivity, we have opened up 600,000 hectares for rainy season farming, an additional 504,000 hectares of irrigated land and 474,000 hectares of reclaimed land.

Over the next 2 years we will redouble our efforts on these lands to incorporate a total of 2.1 million hectares with rainy season infrastructure, 1.2 million hectares with irrigation infrastructure and 1.4 million hectares of reclaimed irrigated land. So far, work is 29, 42 and 34 percent completed, respectively.

These delays are due to the lack of specific projects, a shortage of resources and a lack of flexibility in spending funds. This year we have allocated unprecedented amounts of money, seeing to it that it is spend in timely and effective fashion.

Three major irrigation dams have been completed, as well as six for small water projects for rural development; another 51 are under construction. Water projects refurbishing programs continue to move ahead to boost the productivity of existing irrigation districts. It is these lands that they we will benefit the soonest from. The details of these projects and other activities that we have undertaken can be found in the annexes.

In the case of isolated zones, we ordered the 200 regional CONASUPO-COPLAMAR warehouses to incorporate all farm support activities; moreover, branches of the Banrural will be opened so that growers will not have to make unnecessary trips and to free them from usury and speculation.

There is an enormous disproportion between the lands earmarked for livestock and the lands that we use to grow food and produce raw materials. For each hectare devoted to farming, livestock breeding has 10; each head of cattle has 2.5 hectares, whereas less than a quarter of a hectare is farmed to feed each Mexican. The ratio is other countries is 3 or 4 hectares per inhabitant.

Therefore, it is essential to convert land devoted to inefficient extensive livestock raising to agricultural use whenever an advantage is to be gained. This was how the agricultural wealth of Tamaulipas and Sonora was born.

In keeping with the nationwide need to boost food production to meet the demands of a population that is growing by two million a year, my administration has expropriated land in a number of regions, mainly 505,000 hectares in San Fernando, Tamaulipas, which will be devoted to rainy season farming, and 313,000 hectares to set up irrigation districts, among which the Pujal-Coy Project stands out.

But we did not merely expropriate them. We provided infrastructure to make them farm lands and then parceled them out.

The government of the republic is not an uncompromising expropriator. Its aim is to guarantee security in land ownership but at the same time to see to it that the people's food needs are met, abiding by the law in all respects. We will do nothing illegal or above the law. But we will make use of the law to boost efficiency.

In our humid tropical region 6 projects are now under way that cover 50,000 hectares with an area of influence of 500,000. Cattle raising will be more intensive, and almost 50 percent of the land will be earmarked for grain growing.

There have been major gains from 1972 to 1979 in the consumption of livestock foods, especially pork, poultry and dairy products, which in general are beginning to change and enhance the Mexican diet.

We acknowledge, however, that we have not yet efficiently resolved the problem of meat supplies, especially with regard to entrenched middlemen who are experienced in speculative ploys.

Among other steps to resolve this, we are providing major credit support for ranchers so that instead of exporting calves they can fatten them here at home, avoid having to transport cattle on the hoof and distribute the graded meat.

The studies to determine summer-pasture coefficients, which will largely resolve the serious problems of inefficiency and insecurity in cattle breeding, have been concluded in 31 states and are now being implemented in almost 80 percent of them. We are thus freeing land for farming.

The growth in poultry and hog raising has prompted a higher demand for sorghum, which will total 6½ million tons this year, compared to just 50,000 tons 20 years ago. Sorghum is competing with and displacing corn, thus making it less available as a food for the masses, while the sorghum, which is converted into animal protein, is consumed only by the upper-income classes. This is one of the unexpected demand developments that have thrown our agriculture out of balance. We are counteracting its effects.

The increase in our population calls for new approaches to our agricultural and livestock problems. It is an incontrovertible fact that if we continue to produce exclusively in accordance with individual interests, we will nullify the finest efforts of society as a whole and the best intentions of both producers and the authorities.

Hence, we will soon send the Congress of the Union an agricultural planning and promotion bill. It provides for the two most urgent steps that the country must take: programming output goals in accordance with national needs, and deciding how to best use our soil, water and producer organizations.

Rumormongers and the purveyors of disinformation are speculating about a bill that they are not familiar with. It will be sent in due time to this sovereign body. Then will be the time to speak up. Setting up straw men and then burning them is a curious exercise in self-satisfaction by iconoclasts.

We have completed work on a new forestry bill that will benefit those who are involved in the activity by more equitably distributing the profits that it yields. The statistics on logging production, reforestation and forest surveillance and protection can be seen in the annexes.

When our revolution was victorious, it called for the immediate distribution of land, either by giving it back to people who had been robbed of it or by assigning it to those who had none at the time, thus satisfying their thirst for justice. No wait was necessary, and it mattered little, with a sparse population and a traditional agriculture that lacked infrastructure or did not utilize what it had; neither was there assistance for production. Distribution was the revolution's first step. The old structure was thus shattered, and the new era was ushered in.

From 1915 to date, 97 million hectares have been parceled out among 25,700 ejidos, a process that has taken too long. Because of misrepresentations, border and succession conflicts, later claims, corruption and a shortage of resources to clear new land and create new population centers to colonize the farm frontier, land distribution is still a basic political activity that people expect of the revolution. On account of the legal uncertainties as to ownership, this delays our efforts at justice, which being constant and unending, do not stop at a distribution inescapably limited by actual available resources.

There are other fully revolutionary expectations that it is time to promote vigorously, such as production, productivity and peasant farmer income on the one hand and suitable, equitable distribution, marketing and consumption on the other. Only in this way can we reconcile the social interest of food self-sufficiency with the values of the Agrarian Reform.

In systematically programming our activities, it was essential for us to have accurate knowledge about our current actual agricultural conditions. I declare that it is in the public interest to draw up a national registry of ejido farmers, commune farmers, land claimants, small landowners, settlers, peasant farmers with unimpaired rights and owners of domestic plots who farm the land individually or in groups. During the period covered by this report, the first stage of this registry was begun in 14 states and in the Federal District, and 1.3 million agricultural workers were interviewed.

We are determined to complete the distribution stage so that that hope becomes a reality and an opportunity for socially useful and just work and so that the energies of demand are not exhausted in anticipation but are instead devoted fully to doing.

With this in mind, under the administrative reform and in keeping with program commitments, initial pending legal actions to take care of the agrarian backlog have concluded in 20 states and are moving forward on schedule in the remaining ones. First appeal backlogs have concluded in 15 states.

During the period that this report is concerned with, 1,146 miscellaneous decisions were handed down, involving 2.3 million hectares for the benefit of 74,677 peasant farmers.

Nevertheless, there is still a gap between decisions that have been published and decisions that have been carried out. The details can be consulted in the annexes.

The large landed estates that still exist through misrepresentation are poisoning and jeopardizing our agricultural climate. We reaffirm our renewed determination, which is backed by facts, to do away with them.

For example, we expropriated 32,500 hectares of the Cuchuta farm, which had been illegally subdivided, in the municipality of Fronteras, Sonora State, for the benefit of 500 ejido families. This was done at a daytime public ceremony, thus reflecting the trust that the district judge mentioned in this regard. We are thus resolving and we will resolve any apparent contradiction between our fundamental institutions, without destroying any of them.

As far as the settlements system is concerned, property rights over 2.1 million hectares have been legalized; 190,000 certificates have been issued to small landowners stipulating that their farm or livestock lands cannot be encumbered. As far as domestic plots are concerned, possession and usufruct have yet to be regulated on half of them.

I would suggest referring to the annexes for other documents certifying agrarian rights.

The Commission for Landownership Regularization has spelled out the legal procedures for improper homesteads over 794 hectares in urban areas.

In order to overcome the problems of economic scale inherent in small farm plots, we have pursued a strategy of organizing growers to secure inputs and services and to streamline marketing. During the period covered by this report, 1,821 joint organizations and 167 agricultural cooperatives have been set up. Technical assistance has been given to 2.3 million peasant farmers tilling almost 7 million hectares, and 390 ongoing training courses will begin tomorrow on Mexican rural television, the basic aim of which is to expand the production of essential foodstuffs.

Agrarian justice today means the comprehensive efficiency of society, efficiency from the grass roots up. Inefficiency and injustice have created the crucial problem of food shortages. Let us resolve without reservations, without pettiness to return to the countryside the elements that we have deprived it of. Today as never before, the legitimate interests of peasant farmers coincide with the essential interests of society and the nation.

The counterrevolutionaries can harbor all the illusions they like, but the lands are not going to return to either old or new estate owners. The unfair system of land concentration in a few hands, which the 1910 movement abolished with weapons, violence and bloodshed, will remain abolished forevermore.

The Agrarian Reform continues; it has currency and is not misguided; it is moving forward and, most important, we know where it is headed. I am accountable for the philosophy of the regime that I head. The Quijotes of straw ought not waste their time jousting with windmills. I have neither mouthpieces nor front men.

The pessimism of a few out-of-step individuals, shouting like trained dwarfs, must not cause us to undertake utopian or reactionary counter-reforms. Let us trust in our capabilities and foster fresh solutions based on democracy, social justice and freedom. Only a defeated people lose their ability to create and progress, and Mexico has not been defeated. Its greatest triumphs lie ahead of it.

Fishing

At the outset of this administration, fishing held out great promise. Now, Mexico is the world's fastest growing fishing nation. Averaging 25 percent growth from 1978 to date, we now catch more than a million tons a year.

We must continue to diversify and spur the development of fishing and fish farming in order to achieve the Mexican Food Supply System's output and consumption goals (9.1 kilograms of fish products per person). Fishing development is based essentially on the establishment of a fleet that can take advantage of the country's resources and on a suitable ports infrastructure, both of which are under way. The details can be found in the annexes.

In addition, the newly created National Fishing and Ports Bank is financing the public, social and private sectors, from the construction of ports to marketing, including fishing-related industries.

As far as fish farming development is concerned, the activities undertaken so far have been geared toward producing food and creating jobs, with particular importance attached to rural and Indian regions.

Efforts are being made to diversify export markets and replace imports, so as to maintain the sector's net contribution at 11 billion pesos, the level at which it has been over the last 3 years. We expect to accomplish this, despite the recent problems with tuna.

In order to achieve greater efficiency in fishing cooperatives, the first fishing cooperatives survey was taken, and it will furnish information on more than 600 of these cooperatives. An additional 300 cooperatives with a total of 26,000 members have been reorganized.

A 4 billion peso investment program has been worked out for the comprehensive development of fishing through the country's southeast region.

We are moving forward with intensive training and research efforts, which are indispensable for achieving our scheduled goals.

Under the provisions of agreements for fishing by Cuban and U.S. vessels in Mexican waters and in keeping with the growth of the Mexican Shrimp Fleet and the program to bring in new ships, our commitment to assign shrimp quotas to both countries ran out last 31 December.

As far as fishing by Mexican vessels in U.S. waters is concerned, I should underscore that 13 joint investment companies operating 23 ships were affected by the cutback in U.S. quotas and by the curbs on their activities. Thirteen other companies employ 34 vessels to fish regularly in domestic waters. Together with tuna-related issues, these are matters to be negotiated with the United States. We hope that law, good sense and the reciprocal interests of neighbors prevail in the search for solutions.

Industry

Pursuant to our Industrial Plan we decided to go beyond the simple import substitution model that the country adopted as of 1940. Although it was understandable in its time, it cannot meet today's production and employment needs and Mexico's future requirements.

We have therefore focused our resources and capital goods on our most dynamic and productive activities, such as petroleum, steel, chemicals, petrochemicals, fertilizers and electricity. The petroleum, electricity and iron and steel units that we are now installing are among the largest in the world.

Only in this way will we be able to provide job security and the expectation of a higher living standard to the entire generation at the turn of the century.

It is not that we are exalting the present moment to make ourselves look important and to distract attention from current problems. It is to our advantage to properly channel activities and enhance them today, and it will be useful in the future. We cannot make mistakes today. We will not have another chance like this one.

Under the National Industrial Development Plan, industry recorded 9.9 percent growth in 1979, and this includes oil and the construction industry. We expect to surpass that rate in 1980.

The dimensions of our economy now enable us to intensify and expand the import substitution process and to penetrate outside markets. The condition is that we bring about, through determination and organization, greater efficiency, integration and new industrial processes, as well as take advantage of our relative advantages, raw materials, manpower and expanding markets.

Under the Industrial Plan a system of incentives is now fully in effect to develop selected areas and priority regions by channeling new companies, jobs and basic goods production there.

Parallel to this, we have reached production agreements with domestic industry in the branches of fuels, basic and secondary petrochemicals, inbond assembly, the terminal automotive and auto parts industry, cement, capital goods and mining-metalworking, all in the spirit of the Alliance for Production and in order to meet the demand for strategic goods and services for industry.

The patterns of industrial production for the domestic market, which under the plan aim at satisfying previously unmet demands by the people, are tied to the Commodities Program and to the Mexican Food Supply System (SAM), as strategies involved in the battle against inflation.

Thus, the Industrial Promotion Commission worked out various development programs last year, including linens and small appliances, cement, farm tractors and the pharmaceutical industry, and others are in preparation. Work is also going on, in coordination with the Mexican Food Supply System, to promote the creation of agroindustries.

We cannot develop a capital goods industry or other metalworking industries without a sound iron and steel sector. Although through expansions and a better utilization of our industrial complex we have achieved spectacular gains in capacity use indices and in the coefficients of transforming iron into steel products, we require massive efforts and greater efficiency to meet demand, which will be almost three times greater in 1990 than now. Output for the first half of this year totaled 3.476 million tons, 55 percent of which came from the government-controlled sector, in spite of the repeated labor conflicts that it had, 30 percent from private firms and the rest from non-integrated companies. The second stage of SICARTSA, which is now under way, will cover 31 percent of domestic demand, mainly the construction and automotive industries.

Nevertheless, projected demand is so high that we would have to build a complex like SICARTSA every year to boost capacity to meet it. That is why we are seeking novel, efficient and independent methods of financing government-controlled industry. The choice is simple: either we produce, or we import and fail to grow.

The challenge over the next 10 years is to boost the operating capacity of the entire industry by 170 percent.

Before 1982 we will begin another major project.

As far as fertilizers aer concerned, demand has not increased as much as for electricity, petroleum and iron and steel.

The domestic market has so far been covered with sales of 2.7 million tons, an increase of 18 percent over the same period last year. We now import practically no fertilizers.

The challenge is formidable, however: to fertilize two-thirds of our corn and bean acreage and to have a surplus for export.

The cement industry has achieved an output of 5.2 million tons, which is 64 percent above its goal. In order to prevent speculation whenever possible, we also decided to boost the factory price so as to widen the profit margin and control the price to the public, which has been kept at about 3,000 pesos a ton, depending on the cities or regions involved. Based on this and the agreements we have signed, we hope to achieve self-sufficiency in cement and then decontrol the price to the public. Concealment and speculation maneuvers have reappeared in recent days; they are unjustified, and we will combat them vigorously. We have authorized imports as a complementary move.

The capital goods industry has not developed sufficiently to meet the demands of the expanding industrial sector, mainly the oil industry. The oil industry and our capital goods producers must coordinate their efforts.

About 17 billion pesos in investments have been channeled into the development of metal goods, metalworking and electrical machinery.

Their development is a priority in order to forge our own technology, reduce our foreign trade deficit and support our industry.

Government-controlled enterprises have been one of the underpinnings of the industrialization process by supporting, via prices and rates, the development of a wide range of production activities at the expense of their own profit margins, which has distorted their financial structure, thus delaying their expansion plans and robbing their managers of flexibility.

The net receipts (before taxes and financial outlays) of the main government-controlled industrial enterprises, excluding PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum], almost doubled from 1978 to 1979, rising from 13 billion to 23 billion pesos. If we include PEMEX, receipts tripled. These results were in spite of our policy of keeping prices low; in fact, they are 30 percent below what they would be if they had kept pace with the general inflationary trend of the last 10 years.

We want to make public enterprises more efficient and more independent and at the same time to guarentee more efficient control. The reconciliation of these aims should be an issue of the Administrative Reform, so as to prevent the feudalization of agencies or excessive bureaucracy at the federal level.

Public enterprise and private enterprise are not antithetical terms. One cannot replace the other; they are complementary and should be coordinated. This is the essence and reasoning of our mixed economy. Our large and small public enterprises have programs and budgets, which are guidelines to which they must adhere, showing flexibility but discipline as well. Our private enterprises can coordinate activities within the Alliance for Production. Both of these forces are needed to coordinate comprehensive and sector programs and to guide them along a common road.

The electricity generating problems that arose 2 months ago are a manifestation of the crisis of growth that we are facing. They showed us the precarious balance at our installations, which are overburdened by mounting and unanticipated demand, in spite of the enormous efforts that we have put forth. We have installed an average of 11 percent extra generating capacity a year. We have had to double it every 6 years, but even in so doing we have been operating with narrower margins and with insufficient output to cope successfully with unexpected increases or emergency situations. In June, many minor and unlikely developments coincided. For example, because of errors in design we were unable to bring on line at full capacity equipment bought a number of years ago. Problems in providing preventive maintenance prompted accidents, and a prolonged dry season had a dramatic impact on the country's hydroelectric basins. One problem led to another, and all of them together triggered the crisis.

Cutbacks were completely abolished by mid-August, first those on industrial consumption and then those on household use.

We are taking steps to see to it, to the extent humanly and technically possible, that these power cuts do not recur.

In any event, we should give some thought to how very dependent on energy we are: when just one percent of kilowatt/hour needs over a 1-month period (eight percent) went unmet, the entire economy and all of us suffered.

This brings up a point that I would like to stress: How much does it cost us to do things, consequences and all, and how much does it cost us not to do them? This is one of the classic problems with curbing public expenditures, because important things are often urgent. To attend to them is inflationary, and not to is catastrophic. On occasions that is the choice: either inflation or catastrophe. The decision is not an easy one.

We are earmarking 50.6 billion pesos this year for our program of projects.

Over this period we have boosted operating capacity by 634,000 kilowatts: 300,000 at Chicoasen, 150,000 at the Guaymas steam-electric powerplant, 37,000 at the Punta Prieta steam-electric powerplant and the remainder at gas turbines, mainly in the northern part of the country.

Work is moving forward on the 1,308 megawatt Laguna Verde, Veracruz nuclear powerplant, which will give us access to nuclear technology.

At present, the National Electricity System has an operating capacity of 14 million kilowatts, distributed to 9.5 million customers in 22,000 population centers, thus meeting the needs of 73.3 percent of the country. We are also looking at a program to expand generating capacity by 700,000 kilowatts and insure that there are no more power cuts.

Our electricity sector has to cope with mounting demand, which is rising as rapidly as the industrial plan had anticipated, 14 percent a year, while at the same time making an extraordinary effort to diversify its energy sources. Geothermal energy, coal and nuclear power will gradually replace hydrocarbons, a nonrenewable resource that has more productive alternative uses.

Fuels

For many years to come, petroleum will be Mexico's and mankind's major source of energy, as well as a basic industrial input.

We have this petroleum. As of this date, our reserves are as follows:

Proven, 60.126 billion barrels
Probable, 38.042 billion barrels
Potential, 250 billion barrels

In December 1976 we were the world's 15th largest producer. Today we are in fifth place. With our previously proven petroleum reserves we were in 18th place; today we are number 6 and number 4 in the recovery of liquid gas hydrocarbons.

The efforts exerted by the oil industry will enable us to reach this year the production ceiling originally scheduled for 1982. At this date we are producing somewhat more than 2.3 million barrels a day.

The ceiling set on 18 March of this year is around 2.7 million barrels a day. We will reach this level next year..It should be regarded as a backing for both our domestic and our foreign economic policy. Here at home, as long as current conditions prevail, it will satisfy demand and any increases in it; it will give us financial self-determination and set the extent and the pace of the efforts that the economy's non-petroleum sectors have to exert. Overseas, it will enable us to meet our export commitments, which are tied in with our policy of cooperation, and it sets the limits to which we are willing to go if the conditions of the current international economic order and its corresponding energy disorder continue to prevail. We are meeting our overseas commitments without engaging in speculation or distorting international prices.

Based on our reserves and the ratio of output to the country's development needs, we have a margin of safety of more than 60 years; the world average is around 30 years, and it is much narrower in the industrialized countries. We must maintain sufficient operating capacity to respond flexibly to any contingency.

Ixtoc I (which, curiously enough, means rock fire in Mayan) has been plugged and closed down.

A year ago, this serious accident was gnawing away at us and had us divided. We could not contain our emotions.

Today, it is just a memory that we can learn from, a source of satisfaction for those of us who tackled and resolved the problem, though perhaps a source of bewilderment and even bitterness for those who cleared away the black slick. But it made all of us aware that we were turning over a new page in our history: the grand opportunity of our potential, with all of its risks, call them accidents, spills or shortcomings of the will.

Other accidents have occurred and will occur in an industry like petroleum. We ought not to be frightened. They happen everywhere, to such an extent that a thriving international industry to deal with them has developed.

From the outside, with gestures and ambitions of Zarathustras and bereft of self-criticism, people began talking of the haughty profit-making motive, which has always been present in our relations with powerful nations, and at the Grand Commercial Congress of Philadelphia in 1900 the following cynical assertion was heard: "If the natives and their governments neglect to utilize their resources, they are useless servants, and therefore these resources ought to be taken away from these useless servants and handed over to those who know how to use them."

Mexico's petroleum is ours, for our development, ever since the nation salvaged it from the wasteful, profit-making control of the leaseholders.

Now that the problem has been overcome, I come before the nation to render my tribute of admiration and thanks to the workers and technicians who without yielding to adversity waged their battle and won it, the battle of our emergence and the battle of objectives. The bad times are forgotten. Let us guard against the ambition and envy of the Zarathustras. Mexico was victorious; we were all victorious.

Nevertheless, there are still some spiteful skeptics who refuse to acknowledge the all-important petroleum developments in our country today. These are the people who want to charge all of the import accounts to oil and, at the same time, exclude it from the export accounts, in other words, to deny us our great expectations. This is an odd complex.

We accidentally discovered fields with immense potential and unprecedented conditions and we have learned to control them. These are the fields that have enabled us to hit our oil output ceiling ahead of schedule. Two years ago Campeche Sound was just water; today, it is a dazzling spectacle of work and efficiency.

The multiplier effect on the nation's economy, stemming from the timely and unlimited supply of fuels, has been obvious, although it has had a serious impact by causing aggregate demand and consumption to rise beyond any statistical forecast. Gasoline consumption from 1977 to 1979 increased by 4, 9 and 15 percent, respectively, and it is also up 15 percent for the first half of 1980. We can clearly see the upward trend. The consumption of kerosine is also up 26 percent over the last 6 months. These rates of increase are higher than the traditional ones, which were around seven percent in the early 1970's. They have skyrocketed since 1979, particularly in the northern border area, where due to the low prices of domestic fuels, foreign users buy, export and store them. The consumption of Nova gasoline rose 30 percent; extra, 44 percent, and diesel, 13 percent. Not only are these increases out of proportion with traditional ones but they have shattered our consumption patterns as well. This forces us to think about carefully rationalizing fuel and using it more responsibly. Mexico today produces and consumes more gasoline than Italy, and we will soon equal France and England. We must give thought to how and for whom we are using it. We are being inefficient and wasteful and we must stop this.

As world prices have risen, our subsidies of gasoline and diesel consumption have increased greatly.

There is a stunning difference between what consumers pay for fuels here and what they pay elsewhere. This information is contained in the followup report.

I will cite just one example: natural gas is priced 10 times lower here in Mexico than what we sell it for overseas. Here we process it into fertilizers and nutrients for our fields; it is also used to produce steel and to create industries that in turn produce for other industries. Subsidies ought to be an incentive for competition, not an excuse for laziness.

Our ever-growing network of gas pipelines now covers half of the country, and because of it natural gas is now the nation's most utilized fuel, surpassing gasoline and fuel oil. We must consume still more of it, to rationalize the excessive use of liquified gas. The major pipeline that was built to link the southern network with the northern system (Cactus, Chiapas to Monterrey, Nuevo Leon) is now operating at capacity, and we are installing compressors on it to boost its utilization.

As petroleum substitutes enter the picture, we will earmark oil for nobler purposes, such as petrochemicals processing. At present, 10 percent of our output is used for this purpose.

Construction is winding down on the La Cangrejera petrochemicals complex, the largest, as a unit, that any country has ever built. The liquids reclaimer plant, which is also the largest in the world, is located at Cactus, in the state of Chiapas, and its gross output is comparable to Mexico's total oil production before the 1938 expropriation.

Petroleum is not the ultimate objective of this administration's efforts. It offers a historic opportunity for Mexico, the opportunity to abandon once and for all the status of a country that has had a colonial past.

Petroleum paves the way for genuine balanced development with financial self-sufficiency, but we must realize that it will not last forever. We find ourselves today at a propitious juncture that we must take advantage of.

In exercising its sovereignty, which is an absolute right that has no degrees (because a nation is or is not sovereign), a country must have conditions that lend solidity to that sovereignty vis-a-vis other peoples. In this regard, our oil represents security for Mexico because it contributes to our economic independence and to a more just world order.

Tourism

Despite overseas recession and inflation, the results during the period covered by this report are positive and encouraging. More tourists than ever have visited our country, 4.2 million. This is a four percent increase over the previous period.

Foreign exchange earnings from tourism totaled 39.1 billion pesos, which combined with earnings from the consumption of goods and services by border tourism (62 million crossings), gives a total of 121.9 billion pesos, up 31 percent from the previous period.

Early this year we enacted the new Federal Tourism Law, which sets forth the basic policy principles for rationalizing tourist activity, as well as the national plan for this sector.

In order to guarantee the necessary facilities, as prescribed in the goals of the National Tourism Plan, a total of 6 billion pesos in public and private investment was injected to develop the infrastructure to build, for the medium and long term, 61,700 tourist dwellings, which will of course also provide that many more jobs.

Over the period of this report, Mexicans took 40 million trips inside the country, spending a total of 50 billion pesos, which was a major contribution to the geographic and social redistribution of national income. Our labor unions and organizations did an outstanding job in developing the programs that enable the masses to also exercise their right to relax and to enjoy the benefits of our culture and history.

To this end, the Worker Tourism Trust (FIDETO) began its operations.

We have substantially intensified our efforts to train people for the tourist trade, which offers wideranging possibilities for employment.

Transportation and Communication

By virtue of effective cooperation among authorities, those providing services and users, coordination manifested in programs and commitments, motor vehicle transportation, railways and the ports system have joined efforts to meet the mounting demand prompted by our economic expansion. At the same time, we have had to import grains over a brief period of time, which congested the traditional system and pressured it to unprecedented extremes. Railway convoys and specialized fleets of motor vehicle transport were employed to cope with the problem.

During 1979, land cargo traffic increased 8.7 percent, reaching a total of 348 million tons. Eighty percent was carried on federal motor vehicle transportation, and 20 percent by railway, to which end we had to add 178 locomotives and 3,000 cars.

Cargo traffic will hit 380 million tons in 1980, an annual rise of 9 percent.

CONASUPO's imports alone entailed transporting 5,070,409 tons between January and June of this year, up 17 percent from 1979 and up 27 percent from 1978.

The transportation of fertilizers, steel and oil industry products, equipment and piping has been taken care of in accordance with its import and supply programs. Because of the temporary inadequacy of the railways, the heavy use of motor transport has understandably caused delays and at times higher costs, but we were able to resolve the basic problem of supplies during moments of distress.

The cooperation of the public and private sectors has enabled us to retain participatory work as a way of resolving our problems by ranking demands and giving priority to our most urgent needs, principally in the areas of foodstuffs, fertilizers, iron and steel and fuels.

In all, we have attained a level of services that has surpassed our forecasts. My thanks go to those who have made this possible. It has been a useful experience.

As far as railway infrastructure is concerned, I should underscore that the 200-kilometer stretch from Corondiro to Lazaro Cardenas has entered service to support the industrial pole at that port. Work is also moving forward on the double track to Queretaro and on smoothing out the curves and gradients to update our rail system. This is of fundamental importance so that our railways can meet the needs of accelerated development, which would otherwise be hamstrung. These and all other unfinished projects are being given priority attention.

We have continued our policy of developing the merchant marine and we have expanded our ports infrastructure with new docks, yards, warehouses, piers, dredging and port equipment.

The Intermodal Transisthmus Service, a decentralized agency, was set up and the first intermodal transportation enterprise was formed to support combined land-maritime transport. This will insure that we Mexicans can handle container transportation within our borders.

With regard to telecommunications, I would emphasize the startup of the Tulancingo II and II earth stations. The former enables our country to communicate via satellite with Europe, Africa and South America; it has 520 telephone channels and 4 channels of television signals. The latter transmits television signals via satellite from Mexico to the United States.

There are 446,000 more telephones in service in our cities, making a total of 4.8 million. We decided to bring in the new digital technology.

We have begun the rural telephone program, which sets priorities for bringing telephone service to 13,500 towns with between 500 and 2,500 inhabitants each over a period of 9 years. When it is completed, 85 percent of the people in this country will be linked via telephone.

Our experiences have been trying but useful. We have confirmed that the modern world depends on transportation. Those who argued at one point that ought to skimp on investments in this sector were wrong. We are paying dearly now for what was proposed as savings or as easing the pressures on public outlays. It must not happen again. Once more it is a choice between inflation and catastrophe.

Human Settlements

One of the demographic goals of the Comprehensive Plan, in addition to family planning, is to reverse the trend towards the concentration of population on the plateau and in our crowded cities, to move people towards industrial ports and, moreover, to distribute them in areas with the greatest potential. This is why we are offering incentives in this regard as part of the Industrialization Plan, while respecting the right of people to travel and settle where they wish.

Through agreements with the sovereign states that respect their freedom of action, we have gone to the municipal level to foster integrated and balanced urban development, taking into account land, housing, services, infrastructure, equipment and urban ecology needs.

Only by bringing plans down to these levels, by organizing production sectors and social groups and by promoting the development of medium-size cities along the gulf and border that can attract tourism, will we prevent our cities from growing abnormally large and sprawling.

Public works thus become a key element in regulating the population and extending the benefits of development.

In guiding and controlling these trends we have had to take care of emergency situations stemming from population pressures and the inertia of undesirable settlements, but our actions can be based only on anticipated developments.

In addition to altering the country's highway traffic and promoting the development of our main regions, the Link-up Systems Program has brought national economic development to border zones.

Through coordinated efforts by the state governments and the Federal Government, 23 new federal highways are being built and 27 were rebuilt or modernized.

As part of our strategy to take care of isolated communities, we decided, in a minimal effort at social justice, to establish road links with 90 percent of them 18 years ahead of schedule. The first 4,700 kilometers, benefiting 1,500 towns, will be completed this year. Abandonment, abuses, bossism, everything that an isolated, underprivileged status involves, will be eliminated through this effort at communication. This is something else that we owe to our underprivileged citizens.

With the same goal in mind, we have pledged to make extraordinary efforts to bring water and sewage systems to 15 million peasant farmers who lack them. This year, we will spend 3.697 billion pesos on 741 projects to provide these services to 2 million Mexicans, which is as many Mexicans as have received these services in these zones throughout our history. We will reach our goal in 1982. Water is nourishment and health, an elementary right that cannot be deferred any longer.

In cooperation with the state of Nuevo Leon, the Federal Government is exerting an unprecedented effort to resolve the tragic problem of the drinking water shortage in Monterrey.

In Mexico City we have expanded the secondary water system by 789.8 kilometers at a cost of 657 million pesos, which mainly benefited 1.334 million residents who are also underprivileged. The primary system was expanded by 17.2 kilometers at a cost of about 270.8 million pesos.

We are bringing in water from the far-off Cutzamala Basin, no longer just from nearby basins. Work is continuing on the deep drainage system.

We realize that existing problems are caused by the gigantic, overcrowded center that our capital has become and that only with the active, conscious, patient and coordinated participation of all will we be able to resolve them.

Hence, we are encouraging people to participate through neighborhood representatives. Grass roots representatives have been chosen and grouped together on the basis of the smallest urban and zone unit: the block. So far, 30,654 committees have been set up.

The Federal District's 18 million daily commutes are handled 19 percent by private transportation and 81 percent by the various modes of mass transport.

We must therefore urgently resolve our roadway problems in order to streamline transportation. There are currently 2.2 million vehicles in the Federal District; and if the current motor vehicle growth rate, 10.2 percent a year, is maintained, there will 2.67 million by 1982.

In January of this year we began the second stage of the urban expressways, stretching 91.3 kilometers, at a cost of 624.3 million pesos. Also, the mass transportation system (the subway) was expanded to a current length of 53.8 kilometers, with 57 stations.

Various other major projects were also begun to streamline Mexico City traffic and make it safer. Among them I should stress the remodeling of the Peripheral Highway, which will consist of rebuilding 10 lanes over an 8.5 kilometer stretch and overhauling another 34 kilometers; in addition, the mercury lamp lighting system is being replaced with sodium vapor lamps, which save energy, last longer and provide five times more light.

We appreciate the understanding and patience of the residents of our city.

We have continued the forestation and reforestation program in the Valley of Mexico to counteract the deterioration of the environment.

Several urban renewal and housing improvement projects have been started up in the Federal District.

Efforts are continuing at codifying landownership. At the start of my term of office, almost half of the real estate in the Federal District was unregistered. We expect to have them all registered by 1982. The program is ahead of schedule. This was one of the most persistent demands during the campaign. Legal certainty will revitalize urban life.

Health Care and Social Security

With general health care conditions reflected in our population increases and in the pertinent indicators, we have endeavored to distribute health care services among underprivileged groups and we have succeeded in overcoming the inertia that created insecurity for these groups because we lacked the capacity or because they did not have access to the services that the country owes them simply because they are Mexicans.

This year 1,215 new IMSS [Mexican Social Security Institute]-COPLAMAR Rural Medical Units and 41 Rural Hospital Clinics have been built to provide health care services to 14 million peasant farmers in 20,000 towns who previously had no medical care.

Thus, 42 million Mexicans, well over half our population, are covered by the various social security and solidarity systems.

Almost half of our population consists of children under the age of 14. We are gathering data to come up with a profile of them and thus to focus the finest efforts of our health care institutions throughout the country.

The System for Complete Family Development (DIF) has adopted the model of minimal social welfare to also give priority attention to the children of our underprivileged citizens, by organizing communities so that they themselves can seek solutions to their problems.

This organization has been educating the people with regard to their dietary habits and has been giving them dietary supplements.

The school food program has expanded substantially, as 350,000 breakfasts are provided every day. The Mexican Food Supply System is backed up by more than 70 million LACTODIF rations and powdered milk rations for unweaned infants and pregnant mothers, rations that are distributed within the communities.

The merit of our development model and of DIF input has become known internationally as countries with social problems similar to ours have become interested in it and have asked for our cooperation and technical assistance.

One of the gains achieved as a result of the International Year of the Child has been the incorporation of children's rights into the constitution.

Health care education has been successfully intensified, especially in terms of the goals of the Mexican Food Supply System.

Since its outset, the Family Planning Program has encompassed almost 2.2 million women. The results were reflected in the census.

Preventive and curative medicine services continue to be developed and improved. Consult the annexes for the statistics in this regard and for the data on the construction of hospitals and medical units, ISSSTE housing and auxiliary services. The figures are impressive.

I will only point out here that 1 year after the National Immunization Card was introduced, the number of immunizations administered averages 2.2 per each card issued, in other words, 5 million immunizations.

To shore up, albeit to a very small extent, the eroding income of those who no longer participate directly in the job market, I will send this Honorable Congress a bill to reform the Social Security Law calling for a 37.5 percent increase in the minimum retirement pay. This measure, which will benefit all retired persons, entails an additional cost of almost 3 billion pesos.

Sixteen new rehabilitation and special education centers will be built in the states lacking these services to care for an estimated 4.8 million disabled persons (7.1 percent of the total population), who live mainly in the provinces.

Environmental pollution is a serious social problem. Its prevention and the preservation and enhancement of the environment are a task and a responsibility that all citizens (people and government) ought to share as a true expression of solidarity in facing our destiny with dignity and in handing over the Mexico of the future to our new generations.

Education, Science and Technology

Mexico will be whatever we Mexicans are capable of being and doing. Hence, education is an enormously important task.

It is with great satisfaction that I can report to the country that during the upcoming school year we will be able to assure complete primary school education for all Mexican children for the first time in our history, even underprivileged children, who are making use of schools in homes.

This breakthrough is the result of the ongoing educational efforts of the governments of the revolution, and not just in recent years. It was established as a goal 63 years ago, when just a handful of urban children had access to schools, and today we have attained it, in spite of the enormous population increase that the country has recorded in the meantime.

Primary school for all our children is the fruit of persistent, patriotic, loving work by hundreds of thousands of Mexican teachers who have served in the schools set up by the revolution. I render homage and extend recognition to those teachers for a job well done.

It is now up to heads of family to take advantage of this new situation to afford their children the chance to get an education.

We are aware of the economic difficulties of many Mexican families, whose children help out by working from a young age. We ought to remember, however, that parents have an obligation to send their children to elementary school. Education means human accomplishment and a greater capacity for social and political participation. It is the finest inheritance that we can leave our children. By influencing our children to study, we are fulfilling our highest duties: as parents and as citizens.

Educational services have expanded extraordinarily. As of the upcoming school year, just about one of every three Mexicans will be attending school or enrolled in an open education course. This is a nation that is making a full-fledged educational effort. But we have to upgrade the quality of teaching and learning. We have to open up opportunities that are more in keeping with the needs of our production system at the intermediate and higher educational levels and we must give the 20 million of our fellow countrymen who have not completed primary school the same opportunity that our children now have.

Primary and secondary school books for adults are available at 7,000 CONASUPO stores throughout the country, which also now has the means to accredit the studies of individuals opting for the open systems. Self-education is an effort that our citizens have a duty to undertake.

Those attending schools should realize that while they are opening up new personal horizons, they are building a new Mexico that can make full use of its people.

The first demand that Mexican teachers posed to me during my campaign for president of the republic was the National Teacher Training University. This university is now the foundation on which we will mount our major efforts to enhance the quality of the education that we provide. Established with the utmost academic care to serve teachers, it accomodates more than 50,000 active instructors at 62 units throughout the republic through a system of outreach education. It will soon open its new headquarters in Mexico City, at which close to 3,000 teachers will enroll for their fourth semester of undergraduate study, as well as several hundred in postgraduate courses.

The most significant mission of university communities is to delve into our serious national problems and the shortcomings that have been with us throughout our development as a nation so that they can be grasped and resolved, and to insure a unity of information and a plurality of approaches. This should not be a fruitless confrontation with realities that cannot be changed, but rather a freely undertaken activity in keeping with the need to serve the people. Universities represent one of our best chances to transform the country.

Higher education centers have been free to select their roads and choose their objectives. Their autonomy has been respected, because it entails their highest responsibility. And to reaffirm this autonomy, last October the Executive Branch sent this Honorable Congress a bill with additions to Article 3 of the Constitution, which was passed after wideranging debate.

Universities must be critical but not Manichean. The state and society need their understanding in a planning system that is convincing to all and that benefits society. It is essential to keep lines of communication open and to aspire to mutual trust.

In the years to come we must tailor the training of our professionals to regional and local needs, broaden and extend research and guarantee the rational use of resources allotted to higher education. It does no good to hold a degree and not be able to practice due to a lack of solid background knowledge and real-world skills.

Along with professionals, intermediate technicians are a pillar of a modern and efficient economy. Two years ago enrolment in technical courses of study stood at 35,000; today, it is more than 50,000.

This gives us an idea of the progress we have made in training manpower to support the development of industrial districts, our expanding oil industry and the Mexican Food Supply System.

Over the next 2 years we hope to train 600,000 peasant farmers so that their well-being and the country's food independence can be insured.

Through the National Council for Science and Technology we are fostering technological self-determination and through FONAPAS we have sponsored 8,000 events to advance culture, education and artistic creativity.

Education and training, the state's number one obligation, are thus becoming a guarantee of national development through the social justice that we are administering. This is a debt that we must pay off, while making use of the interest on it.

Foreign Relations

Mexico has diplomatic relations with 137 countries, having recently established ties with the Democratic Saharan Arab Republic.

We all live in a world threatened by grave forebodings that are becoming more complex every day. Two-thirds of mankind has been bypassed by progress, and in order to preserve the progress that they have achieved, the great powers are reviving the specter of a new cold war and are creating conflicts all over the planet. They are engaged in imaginary crusades, and their political logic has become a historical contradiction.

Mexico's independent voice has rung out in various settings and forums to underscore the need to dismantle the formidable war arsenals that the major powers have built up in different regions and to forge an order that is more just and more respectful of nations and their sovereignty.

This is our choice: either we transform international disorder through coordinated, consistent and just actions, or violence and poverty will lead us back to the dark ages.

On 27 September 1979 Mexico proposed that the United Nations draw up and implement a World Energy Plan to effectively help resolve the energy problems that most of the world's countries are facing and that are prompting increasing imbalances and difficulties in the global economy.

The Mexican proposal is based on the assumption that energy is the shared responsibility of the international community, to assure an orderly, steady, comprehensive and fair transition from one era of mankind to another, from one world energy structure to another: the present structure, based on the often excessive, wasteful and unbalanced use of rapidly depletable fossile fuels, oil in particular, and the future structure, based on the rational, orderly and increasing utilization of alternate, renewable sources of energy that all mankind can enjoy in a more just and more equitable international economic order. The proposal is regarded as part of the new international strategy that governs and channels worldwide negotiations and cooperative efforts in the fields of raw materials, energy, trade, development, currency and finance.

In addition, as a partial and temporary illustration of the World Energy Plan, Mexico and Venezuela have worked out a cooperation agreement with Central American and Caribbean countries whereby they are being guaranteed enough oil to meet their needs and are authorized to receive loans to cover 30 percent of the going market price. When appropriate, these loans would be placed into funds that could be utilized at just four percent interest and over long terms for development purposes. Energy projects would enjoy interest rates of just 2 percent and terms of up to 20 years.

Two developing countries are thus turning their words into actions. We are respecting the decisions that OPEC has made regarding a reassessment of raw materials and we are establishing a system to support developing countries that import oil.

We feel that this fitting effort should encourage other states to undertake similar ones, not just in the field of petroleum but in all of the fields of development, mutual respect and international social justice.

After 34 years Mexico was finally elected a non-permanent member of the UN Security Council in 1980. We have accepted, aware of the risks that membership entails. Gone are the days when isolationism was a valid means of defending oneself. Remaining in our shell did not protect us; it made us more vulnerable. Mexico has the standing to participate as an independent in all forums. Faithfully abiding by the principles of our foreign policy, we have taken part in examining the cases of Iran, Afghanistan, Palestine, Lebanon and Zimbabwe. And we reiterate our condemnation of the ignominious policy of racial discrimination in South Africa.

Mexico's foreign presence was bolstered by the 10 state visits and the 1 working visit that I made during the period covered by this report and by the five trips to Mexico that various foreign leaders made.

Almost 1 year after my meeting with the American president, the daily, complex and wideranging relations between Mexico and the United States have gained in clarity. These mutually useful, flexible and cordial relations are in keeping with our position as neighbors. There is nothing that we cannot resolve through mutual respect for ourselves and our rights and with a firm and independent political will. We want a dignified and upright place in the world, not a seat in an area of influence.

Seven U.S. tuna boats were recently seized by the Mexican Navy for violating our laws, and this prompted the U.S. Government to order tuna purchases from Mexico suspended.

We are confident that reason and law will prevail and we continue to seek a mechanism to guarantee the just rights of each country in the area (North, Central and South America) to these valuable resources that we must preserve. Disorder will lead to their extermination. In the face of threats, embargoes and abuses, Mexico will maintain its principles unchanged, because whereas tuna is a matter of economic interests to others, to Mexico it is also a problem of sovereignty. And neither now nor ever will we be willing to negotiate our sovereignty.

We are pleased that the Panama Canal treaties have gone into effect. By removing this enclave they have begun the process of giving Panama back its land under the best omens and in keeping with the desires of the Panamanian people themselves. When a nation is forced to share its territory, the exercise of its sovereignty becomes sheer fiction. We applaud the American executive's decision, which does honor to the nation's strength by respecting the rights of others.

In Nicaragua we witnessed the birth of a society that is determined to respect its plurality and that seeks to combine freedom and justice. Looking at the faceless crown gathered in Managua, I saw youths who became adults by flirting with death. With their sacrifices they remind us of our responsibility to future generations. We reaffirm our support for the creation of an inter-American agency to help rebuild Nicaragua, to which we have given, without strings attached, all possible support commensurate with our economic status.

We have aided, strengthened or spurred all efforts at Latin American integration and denounced episodes that have extended the black stain of repression, high-handedness and dictatorships. Without sensationalist haste we seek to be useful as we monitor the course of events.

At the Sixth Council of the Latin American Economic System (SELA) Mexico formulated major proposals to achieve quick results. We also took part in the revamping of the Latin American Free Trade Association (LAFTA), which is now the Latin American Integration Association (ALADI).

We are confident that we can hammer out a common stance to facilitate solutions for the economic problems of our region.

We have worked out comprehensive bilateral economic cooperation arrangements with Japan, Spain, France, Sweden, Canada and Brazil that provide for an integrated and increasingly complex and diversified approach to our economic relations, including trade, finance and industrial and technological coordination.

This comprehensive, package approach goes beyond isolated trade relations and adds a new dimension to our bilateral economic ties. Petroleum and other resources, products and services will be exchanged for cooperation in Mexico's economic development.

Furthermore, as we saw with the FRG, we had essential common ground in all instances, especially regarding the need to come up with peaceful solutions to world conflicts.

In this same spirit I have just made a swing through Costa Rica, Panama, Brazil, Venezuela, Nicaragua and Cuba. We hammered out momentous agreements, and my conversations with the leaders of these countries transpired in an atmosphere of understanding that will unquestionably foster intensive and frequent consultation within our region. I feel that Mexico's independent stance could be a unifying element among Latin American nations, which, sad to say, have taken separate stands that seem increasingly incompatible.

Mexico has lent its support to the organization of a top-level meeting at which a limited number of representatives of developing and advanced countries would strive to overcome the main obstacles to international economic negotiations.

We are opening our doors to the world to understand it better and to understand ourselves better. We seek neither to subdue nor to teach anyone, nor do we surrender in the face of foreign powers and prestige. Mexico has its ideas and its honor; they enhance our desire to cooperate and the friendship that we receive.

Global society is the result of history, not reason. Countries are what they have been able to make of themselves, not what they would like to have been. It is a poor approach to judge Mexico's relations as a function of personal preferences or antipathies. The pluralism that we practice domestically is also our norm of conduct abroad. Fellow countrymen owe each other respect, even if we are not always in agreement, and this also applies to countries. This is the best guarantee of peace.

Honorable Congress of the Union:

It will soon be 4 years since I took up the nation's weightiest political responsibility. I am now beginning to feel the anguish of my longing to serve and to fear that I am not fulfilling the hope that I might have represented, in accordance with the time and the trust that were accorded me. I am aware that we judge ourselves by our intentions but that it is fair for others to judge us by our accomplishments. Time, which was the setting for our intentions, is now beginning to curtail our opportunities.

I am today reporting on the 4th of my 6-year presidential term, which from its outset was conceived as a planned sequence of three 2-year periods: recovery, consolidation and accelerated growth.

The most important thing initially was to salvage our production structure without classifying it. It was the only one we had. Our employment arrangements and social justice institutions were tied in with it.

The first 2-year period, the economic recovery, was satisfactorily accomplished, and we also achieved one of the two priorities of our original plan, energy development. This was possible because we all wanted it and we thus regained confidence in ourselves. If this had not come about, I do not even want to think about the deep hole we would be in. Just imagine if Mexico had to import oil. I would have to resort to apocalyptic terms to describe such a situation, which I do not care to do.

We thus emerged from extreme crisis, which I have previously defined as recession with inflation. The recession is over, and although inflation is still an erosive force, we no longer have the wage-price spiral. We are experiencing the problems of growth and global disorders.

I knew that it would be easier to restore the economy than to consolidate gains in it, and I said as much. It took only 2 years at 8 percent growth for us to outgrow everything and for the restraining and congestive consequences of the depression a few years ago to appear. Our most enterprising sectors and regions have been responsive to the new opportunities, but other sectors and regions have not yet managed to overcome their obstacles. We can see vitality, but not balance in our country today. There have been gains and there have been shortcomings; we have accomplished much but much still remains to be done.

Inflation has been the result, a complex combination of subjective and objective, internal and external factors that have already been explained all too much. The important thing today is to control it, not to keep on explaining it.

There is little we can do about its external causes, but we have done what we could, unlike everyone else, it is fair to say.

Mexico has proposed a new economic order and a world energy plan to combat the causes of inflation: disorder, recession, exploitation and abuse. We have also given our example, modest though it may be: the agreement with Venezuela to provide oil to Central America and the Caribbean.

It is the internal causes of inflation that we must attack with a determination to make decisions and to take action.

With 2 years left in my term of office, I would like to summarize for this sovereign body my convictions and my plan of action:

We are hastening the Comprehensive Plan to coordinate our political philosophy, the country model that we want and the objectives that we have set to this end.

We can do things well if we realize that our nation is the basis of our society and state and that its strength is the gage of our true solidarity. If we forget this elementary truth, nothing will work.

We are politically and legally united, because we are Mexicans and as Mexicans we will tackle contingencies together, but we will also enjoy the fruits of a safer and freer life as long as we are fair with and among ourselves and with others. If our selfishness or group divisions are carried to extremes, we will be taking advantage of the system by exploiting and robbing from each other or we will be neglecting the needs of others and destroying the basis of Mexicanism and its values. Neither classes nor trade unions can replace it. Medieval times would ensue, everyone against everyone else, vassalage and fanaticism, terror and disorder.

The great worth of our system is the freedom it offers, with all of the risks that freedom implies. It allows individual initiative and individual rights, but if this initiative does not square with social needs, it leads to injustice and privileges. That is what has happened throughout our history, and it is made worse by inflation, which threatens our security. We must not forget that freedom, justice and security operate as one harmonious whole. If one is out of balance, the harmony is lost, and disharmony ensues.

We must not lose our freedom by putting up with the excesses of the wealthy or by opposing the grievances of the poor.

Political systems decline when they become incapable of resolving their internal contradictions. We have to reconcile freedom with necessity, power with duty. This is, of course, the state's duty as the helmsman of the economy and the great legal rectifier of distortions. But it is not always enough. We have therefore turned to an alliance with the sectors, which find fault with those who offer dictatorial solutions and do not approve of those who abuse freedom. We have chosen to persuade, to recommend and to point out the results of the dialog and of reason rather than to engage in coercion and scare tactics or to abolish freedoms, a road whose beginning we know but whose end we can never ascertain. We must proceed along paths of respect, seeking out not the guilty but the responsible. Free, not coerced; alliances, not mutual destruction.

We are constantly expanding the programs to benefit our under-privileged citizens through the COPLAMAR coordination system, which this year succeeded in channeling more than 22 billion pesos from various sectors towards the goals that I mentioned in the body of this report. There will be a substantial increase next year. This reflects our determination to achieve irreversible social justice, the ultimate goal of the revolution.

We will move forward with the political reform. Through effective and broader pluralism, we seek a more responsible exercise of freedom, the respectability of the state, not just the dignity of the individual.

The objective of the reforms is to make our elections more open and competitive. Unnecessary academic dissertations notwithstanding, there is no reason to confuse the internal process that each party observes to select its candidates with the election process provided for in our laws; nor should we absurdly assume that democracy is nothing more than elections. It is a whole lifestyle in itself.

We will not take a single step backwards in the agrarian reform. On the contrary, we will put forth all of our finest and most consistent efforts to spur it on.

It has shortcomings; let us correct them. It is overwhelmed by defects; let us get rid of them. Let us learn from experience so that we do not repeat our mistakes or perpetuate injustices. But let us not deny the roots and the motivation of our social movement. Let us not allow it to become a nightmare of bad consciences, caused by those who misrepresent their status and fear the law or by the skeptics who fail to analyze our history and our current conditions.

We reject the biased notion that agricultural efficiency requires that the demands for justice be repressed. Our agrarian reform is not beginning today. It is a lengthy process that begins with the parceling out of lands--an obligation of justice--and continues with the organization of production--a requirement of efficiency--without which justice slips from our grasp.

Through efficiency, the distribution of lands must become a distribution of jobs, productivity, output and income. Our agricultural system rejects opportunists and does not need timeservers. The ejido cannot die because the Mexican Revolution is alive, at work and renewed.

Conceived as an ongoing process, the administrative reform will continue to be an instrument for enhancing national development. We reject the artificial dichotomy between politicians and technicians. Substantive and subordinate elements are not mutually exclusive; they are complementary. Technique is the proper means of accomplishing things; politics, the science of values and decision-making, determines what things and when. Since Plato we have condemned technocrats, not because they are knowledgeable but because we cannot accept dictatorships of men, regardless of how wise they are. On the contrary, we want governments of laws, which constitute the setting for democracy. We will not fail to take advantage of people who know how to do things properly, as long as the things that they know how to do are in keeping with the political goals we wish to achieve.

The current situation forces us to take vigorous action towards very specific goals: asserting more strongly the right to a job, bolstering wages and producing more and better so that we do not once again try to combat inflation by slowing down the economy and basic demand, which has been the nightmare of countries with low living standards and the cause of major social imbalances. I refuse to accept such prospects for Mexico. Let us show the world that there are other solutions. We will put them into practice.

Thus, within the structural goals of the Comprehensive Plan, we will tailor the fiscal reform and the people's democratic alliance for production to the strategies of the Mexican Food Supply System, the Basic Production Program and the Productivity and Training Program. We view them as strategies in that they will coordinate all of the necessary incentives, supports, agreements and other activities on the part of the public, private and social sectors to attain the objectives of each system or program within the plan.

The basic products plan has identified 91 items, food, clothing, school supplies, durable goods, etc that make up the basic items of mass consumption. They are financed, produced, distributed and marketed so that they are available and affordable, as I will spell out later on.

Because food items are so obviously important, we selected the ones that would make up a recommended basic diet. In this way, depending on regional, urban or rural conditions, we could make the SAM a comprehensive effort, from output tied to the earnings of better organized peasant farmers to the distribution and marketing of food items consumed by the masses. The state will share not only the risks of disasters but also the cost of production incentives if they do not yield results; it will guarantee peasant farmers their normal earnings in the event of failure and their profits if they are successful.

I do not have to repeat what our productivity and training programs are about. I would only stress the urgent need to create more and better distributed wealth, to enhance the country's competitiveness and, hence, to overcome the limiting factor of inadequate training.

Therefore, in order to curb inflation and alleviate its impact on the masses while continuing to pursue the accelerated growth of the past 2 years, the following series of decisions have been made, which coordinate the effects of public spending, subsidies and transfers, tax measures and credit as follows:

We will see to it that the size, orientation and pace of spending do not make the economy unproductive. We will prevent the money supply from exploding through legal reserve requirements and monetary measures.

Subsidies and transfers will be based on criteria of selectivity, effectiveness, efficiency, timeliness and terms and will be earmarked for new investments and programs in keeping with the Comprehensive Plan and especially the basic products and SAM strategy. Increasing amounts of credit will also be allocated for the same goal.

As a complementary step, we will boost the prices of articles and the rates of services that mostly our highest-income groups utilize. Although in the short run this could trigger price rises, its long-term effects are anti-inflationary, in particular because we will be able to put public finances on a sound footing.

I emphasize that we will proceed prudently, taking only the action that is feasible and attending mainly to the cases that are most at odds with the goals of this new policy.

As I explained in detail previously, we will institute a major income tax exemption for physical persons to protect the real income of low wage earners. This represents a tax cut this year of 10.65 billion pesos.

We will exempt from the VAT almost all of the 91 items on the list of basic goods and when this is not possible for technical reasons, we will issue tax promotion certificates to manufacturers. This will be a loss of 9 billion pesos to the Treasury. We will boost taxes on luxury items.

Similar measures will be encouraged in states and municipalities, and their costs will be offset by federal transfers under the Fiscal Coordination Law.

Some 175 billion pesos are being channeled through government banks and economic development funds to insure that our full operating capacity is earmarked for priority programs. Next year we will budget 225 billion.

As far as credit is concerned, aside from discouraging loans for luxury purchases, we will allocate them to further the aforementioned strategies.

With an 11 percent increase over the next 4 months, we will earmark 90 billion pesos this year for farm credit to aid 1.9 million growers. Next year we will provide 118 billion pesos to 2.4 million growers.

We will boost from 2 to 4 billion the loans that FOGAIN awards to 3,400 companies for the production of basic industrial items. Next year we are providing 5.5 billion to double our support for small- and medium-scale companies.

This year FONACOT will obtain 4.3 billion in additional funds, as well as 12.5 billion next year, to establish the catalog request program that through assured demand will help to plan production, cut costs and optimize operations. Blue-collar wages will thus be protected and boosted.

Through their respective funds, credit unions and cooperatives will receive 1.76 billion in extra money this year and 3 billion next year to update their methods of producing, distributing and marketing basic items. In addition, the debts that fishing cooperatives incurred for the purchase of boats will be renegotiated for 9-year terms at 12 percent interest. Interest for delayed payments and the effects of exchange rate adjustments will be canceled for them. We are looking forward to their contribution to the SAM and expect that they will fulfill their financial and social commitments.

The Fund for Commercial Development will be expanded by 2.25 billion this year and by 3.75 billion in 1981 to update the marketing of mass consumption items.

An 11 billion peso commodities support fund is being established within the system of obligatory investments for private and mixed banks.

Up to 5 billion pesos in fiscal promotion certificates will be issued to spur the construction of low-rent housing, which will also be financed with 38 billion to be earmarked next year for this purpose.

All of these measures, plus traditional and complementary steps, are the specific pledges that I am announcing to this sovereign body. But they will not be enough unless society develops a definite awareness of inflation and a determination to combat it.

In point of fact, much of inflation is subjective. It stems from expectations, which are psychological factors, and there are two basic ones: fear of insecurity and ambition.

When faced with insecurity, a person tries to obtain more today so that he enjoy security tomorrow. Ambition is related to this and makes its contribution too. People not only want to close the gap; they want to take advantage of the opportunity to boost profits. All you have to do is change the price tag.

These subjective factors can be overcome only by conviction, calmness and reflection. Only the mind can convince the mind.

Those who fuel inflation with their fear or ambition should remember that they cannot free themselves from fear and insecurity in an ailing society that they are making worse with their fears, which trigger further fears. The ambitious ought to reflect that their temporary profits are the smoke of their own fire and that they will not be able to enjoy anything in an unbalanced society; on the contrary, they have everything to lose--everything, I stress--if its structure explodes or falls apart.

If we want to feel secure and enjoy our possessions, we are going to have to establish balance and calm. We are poisoning the atmosphere more and more, and we all have to breathe. Let us put forth an effort at mental health.

We are experiencing a strange paradox. It is universally admitted that the country's destiny is assured. Like few other countries, it has the resources, the vigor and the tradition to cope with the crisis. Our country is acknowledged to have mounting authority internationally, and its voice is increasingly listened to. Out standing is high and we are trusted.

It is here at home that we are absurdly clouding our prospects.

It would be a serious burden on Mexico's historical conscience if this generation, which has the duty-bound privilege of seizing this great opportunity, dissipated Mexico's potential through annihilating confrontation, disorder, inefficiency, mistrust, lack of understanding, selfishness or corruption. We have a country, we have standards established by the revolution, we have resources, we have the profile of a great nation. Let us have the grand determination.

We are going to marshal our desire to transform and expand the frontiers of what we can do for Mexico. Let us make today's expectations tomorrow's solutions.

Our national destiny is not conceivable without greatness, and greatness is not attainable without independence. To affirm it we must show ourselves and the world that we can respond to the challenge. We are the fruit of proud civilations and of Mexican martyrs and heroes who gave us a homeland, faith and a flag. We are the frontier between the world of poverty and the world of wealth and power and between the predominant cultures on this continent. We are a landmark and a watchtower. Let us be accomplishment and progress.

Mexico must realize that it is setting an example. It cannot now collapse into inefficiency by losing its bearings and trampling on its principles or by accepting subservience or even imitation. It would be betraying its reason for being and would even cause incalculable imbalances in international society. Mexico's battle for progress and independence is the battle that the developing world is waging. We cannot lose it. It would be proving the Zarathustras right. Our friends in the world wish almost as much as we do that we can be efficient and hope that we can continue to be free.

Neither the winds of inflation nor the darkness of our internal demons will be able to defeat us. Let us all struggle against these phantoms.

Let us overcome them here and now, with our strength and determination, for ourselves and for our children.

Growth with justice, by Mexico, for Mexico.

Long live Mexico!

[Response by Deputy Cuautemoc de Anda Gutierrez to the Fourth Government Report]

Mr President of the Republic:

We have listened attentively to the report that you have just presented to this sovereign national body and that includes seven statistical annexes clearly reflecting the state of the public administration in our country.

In subsequent sessions, the houses of Congress and their specialized committees will meet to gain a more in-depth knowledge of the entire series of documents.

The founders of our republic decided on a division of branches, and the nation's political wisdom has been strengthening this system ever since.

Guadalupe Victoria said the following to Congress in 1824:

"Nations have learned from painful and ongoing experience that the concentration of powers in a single hand is little or not at all removed from high-handedness and that their freedoms will be precarious until institutions based on national sovereignty focus their attention, point out their limits and determine their respective nature."

In its lengthy struggle for democracy, the consolidation of independence, freedom, the refinement of republican institutions and the raising of the living standards of the working classes, which makes possible the fulfillment of social and political principles, our country has had to sustain tensions, cope with crises and overcome pressures and conflicts, the effects of which have made their mark on our society but have also enabled us to respect our essences and affirm our principles in freedom.

Freedom is the primary expression of justice. It includes the freedom to think, talk and write, the freedom of political action by opposition parties, which helps to vitalize democracy and refine the actions of the administration.

The political reform implemented by this administration has aimed at all this, an administration that from its outset has stressed our freedom of political action and strengthened the healthy division of powers that the republic's first leaders chose for us.

The series of actions that we call the political reform offers an answer to the minorities who are an important part of contemporary society and also provides for the possibility of social change guided by a solid majority within a state of law like ours.

We are aware that from its outset the current administration has implemented a series of projects and programs that together are known as the Comprehensive Development Plan, which sets specific goals and charts strategies commensurate with our revolutionary principles but which, above all, rationalizes and marshals the activities that are useful for society.

It is encouraging that the plan seeks to coordinate the efforts of all Mexicans and to bolster our independence as a democratic mission that is fair and free economically, politically and culturally, as well as to provide a minimum level of well-being for our people by giving priority to food, housing, education, health care and job needs and by promoting rapid and sustained economic growth with particular emphasis on the distribution of wealth among the country's citizens, factors of production and regions.

The document contains abundant information concerning the course that our country ought to follow until the close of this administration, but it also contains the groundwork for development over the decades to come, calling for economic growth of eight percent a year.

The world economic picture is worrisome. There is disorder and a lack of global solidarity. Many countries, even the powerful ones, are suffering from inflation and recession, and their growth rates have come to a standstill or are negative. It is thus important to underscore in the face of all this that thanks to the efforts of all Mexicans, Mexico has succeeded for the second straight year in growing at the extraordinary rate of eight percent a year.

I must point out that although economic growth is important, it is just a required, though not sufficient condition for achieving development, which we will attain only by reaching the above goals, in other words, when we manage to better distribute income among individuals, the factors of production and regions.

I welcome the plan, the publication of which was a brave move by the Executive Branch, because by making it public, it can be subjected to a wide range of analyses and criticism.

In addition, development plans ought to be legitimized and institutionalized so as to insure their implementation.

The troublesome situation in rural areas and the worsening living conditions of our peasant farmers have necessitated novel and discerning responses to resolve them.

To this end, thanks to redoubled efforts, we have a modern strategy consisting basically of the Mexican Food Supply System, whose goals include national food self-sufficiency, the enrichment of diets, more jobs and a minimum level of well-being for our rural dwellers.

This is an attempt to improve the lot of our peasant farmers, not out of kindness but a sense of justice.

In the midst of the international food crisis, we have now clearly grasped that rural poverty also means food shortages and high prices in our cities.

Moreover, the inequalities between city and countryside have split us into sectors at differing stages of development, which has made our march towards progress slow and laborious.

For all of these reasons, we understand the efforts that the government is making by sharing risks with growers, thus encouraging their trust and helping them to earn a profit.

The Mexican Food Supply System can be successful only if it is decisively backed by the two main forces involved: the government and the peasant farmers, and all within a framework of renewed respect and trust.

Discontent has become widespread in the countryside and in the underprivileged communities in poor nations, in some of which the army has been used as a repressive force. Here in our country, thanks to our democratic tradition, our political stability, our discipline and the sense of responsibility and patriotism of the Mexican Army, the Armed Forces devote themselves to nobler activities. We ought to publicly acknowledge the virtues of our sailors and soldiers. They have all earned our respect.

Subsidies are a tool of social justice to cushion the inequalities that exist in our system. They represent government action to benefit the masses directly or through the production of goods and services that are socially and nationally needed. When these objectives are not fully achieved, they must be adjusted. Therefore, this Congress supports the Executive Branch's decision to conduct an in-depth reassessment of subsidy policy.

Particularly important are its determined efforts to develop our underprivileged communities through programs to supply drinking water, to build roads, to provide access to social security, to improve rural housing and to train people for jobs.

The social movement on which our political doctrine is based has represented grievances and just aspirations of children, families and communities, with priority given to the most deprived groups. Human solidarity, tenacity, selflessness and perseverance are the pillars of this effort.

Our gratitude goes to our women community action volunteers and to Mrs Carmen Romano de Lopez-Portillo for their noble efforts.

We hail the continued decrease in the unemployment rate, as 700,000 jobs were created last year, which means that for the first time the supply of jobs outstripped the increase in population. What is more, the 2.2 million new jobs that have been set as a goal for the remainder of this administration seem more feasible and attainable every day. Even though we are gratified by this laudable effort, we cannot ignore that millions of Mexicans are underemployed, earning income below the minimum wage. We must remember that six million of our fellow adult citizens are illiterate and therefore have very limited potential in the job market. It is basic common sense to urgently encourage them to better themselves.

The recently begun national productivity campaign, whose goal is not efficiency for efficiency's sake but to better distribute the wealth and to make better and lower cost goods, as you commented, can become a reality only if our labor force undergoes massive and ongoing training. Training is a challenge that we must all help to meet. Our workers and businessmen will be the main beneficiaries.

Furthermore, it is advisable that education programs be expanded and intensified, especially in the provinces.

The magnificent economic growth rate that we have been maintaining could slow down if we do not provide for better training. Let us all strive to do so.

With regard to your kind invitation to analyze the relationships of special jobs tied to higher public interests, this Congress, realizing the importance and currency of the issue, will undertake the pertinent studies.

We share your concern about the need to link education with the educational system. We hail the growing number of youngsters whose desire to serve is taking them to our most isolated regions. We appreciate what a major goal it is to train 600,000 peasant farmers for jobs. This training, together with the rise in the number of students in technical fields, will energetically enhance the quality of life in the provinces. I would like to emphasize here that we must spur technical education in our backward and isolated regions, in keeping with the principles of the founders of technical education, which are more valid than ever today.

One of the most significant doctrinal principles of the Mexican Revolution, education for all, is about to be fulfilled in the area of primary school education. It is a moving experience to realize that we are on the threshold of providing this education for all Mexican children.

One of the actions that set this administration apart last year was its unprecedented consultation of public opinion regarding Mexico's chance to join GATT. Many Mexicans expressed themselves through the mass media, and of course the Chamber of Deputies, through the various political parties that comprise it, also made known its various viewpoints.

Available statistics indicate that over the years the rich countries have benefited from this multilateral agreement. Moreover, its regulations threatened to curtail our sovereignty, especially with regard to the management of our oil. For these and other reasons, we were pleased by your decision not to join this organization for now. This demonstrated, furthermore, that when the Executive Branch asked Mexicans to voice their opinions, it had not yet made a decision, contrary to what some people had assumed. Independently of the technical arguments for or against GATT, this created responsiveness among important groups of Mexicans and gave a clear indication of our political health.

An up-to-date classification of nations would include rich countries with oil, rich countries without oil, underdeveloped countries with oil and underdeveloped countries without oil. There are a great many in this latter group and they are gradually realizing in desperation that their possibilities for development are vanishing, to the extent that a number of them will cease to be viable countries unless the system is revamped.

The rich countries, for their part, are to a greater or lesser extent also suffering from the effects of the crisis.

The World Energy Plan that you proposed to the UN General Assembly takes on importance in light of this panorama. This specific proposal charts a course towards a new international economic order.

Under this plan, Mexico and Venezuela, by guaranteeing oil supplies to Central American and Caribbean countries, have established a precedent of cooperation that also shows that principles and actions can be reconciled.

Your policy for managing our petroleum resources has benefited the nation.

First, by boosting our proven reserves, we began to move towards solvency. Then, this solvency has helped us to cope with the international crisis successfully though not without difficulties. We then had the good sense to utilize petroleum as a major tool in our development strategy.

Today we have been informed that our proven reserves have increased once again, by 10 billion barrels.

I would like to underscore the magnitude of this figure by noting that if we sold this amount at world prices, it would more than double our gross national product in 1980, more than double what all Mexicans produce this year in the form of goods and services. It is also equal to four times the government's current budgetary expenditures.

Our proven reserves have thus increased an impressive tenfold in just 4 years, from 6 to 60 billion barrels.

Lastly, just the 10 billion barrel increase announced today is three times larger than the total amount of oil extracted during the current 6-year presidential term.

Let us appreciate the significance of these accomplishments and let us hope that the generations to come realize the true dimension of these developments.

We support the foreign policy actions that your administration has taken because they vigorously uphold the views that Mexico has maintained in the international arena. Mexico has, in particular, acted with dignity and independence in its new and delicate position as a non-permanent member of the UN Security Council.

We also would like to stress our eagerness to intensify relations with countries on different continents and with different systems; we respect their self-determination and ask to be treated likewise.

The declarations, agreements and visits have had an economic, political and cultural impact and have aimed at establishing common ground and practical, mutually beneficial solutions.

Special mention ought to be made of the brave and just defense of our natural resources, as in the recent tuna incident. In this you have the support of all Mexicans.

Our various expressions of solidarity with what is happening in Nicaragua and your visit to Cuba are convincing demonstrations of the fondness we Mexicans feel for these sister nations.

Mr President: Under the constitution, this Congress authorized your trips overseas pursuant to the independent policy you have adopted in a clear-cut exercise of our sovereignty. As representatives of the people, we reaffirm our support for you again today.

In conclusion, the developments described here today constitute another link in Mexico's history. The represent the sum total of the nation's longings, concerns, efforts and accomplishments.

We have learned of significant gains, that what has been done this year is important but also that we still have much to do. To this end, looking to the future, we have a history, a culture and a tradition; we have a united government; we have achieved and maintained political stability for decades; our record has earned us international respect commensurate with our capabilities; we have the natural and human resources that guarantee that our Mexico is a viable country, a country with a certain destiny.

8743
CSO: 3010

REPORT ON PRIME MINISTER ULLOA'S SPEECH TO CONGRESS

Economic Crisis

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p 1

[Report on Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa's message to Congress, 27 August 1980]

[Text] "The Peru entrusted to us on 28 July 1980 is suffering from a serious moral social and economic crisis," said Prime Minister and Minister of Economy, Finance and Commerce Manuel Ulloa Elias in his diagnosis of the situation the country is in made just a few moments before starting on the report proper in his message to Congress.

As an example, he cited the revealing rise in the size of the country's foreign debt which, according to what he said, amounted to only $1.8 billion in 1968 and by the end of last year had risen to $9.361 billion, while the average rate of inflation over the past 2 years has been 70.2 percent.

Ulloa emphatically stated: "Peru has never been less independent. We are at the mercy of the good will of our foreign creditors, of foreign capital for the exploitation of our natural resources and big national economic groups have again been created."

He said that in 1980 we find a country which since 1968 has turned itself into one subject to the will of a dictatorship.

After pointing out that the state now controls 36 percent of the goods and services the country produces, as against 17.5 percent in 1968, he noted that, during the same period of time, the central government has increased the number of employees in its service from 165,000 to over 300,000.

He added that the regime that took over in 1968, without the legislative power that would have kept watch over its official acts, has massively intimidated our means of expression and made the judiciary subject to its will and discretion.

He said that this whole state of affairs was determined by a centralized government, insensible to the clamor of the provinces.

He said that the Peruvian businessman, small, median or big, was harshly persecuted and stripped, not only stripped of his property, but robbed of his initiative.

"As far as expropriations were concerned, the foreign capitalist, regardless of his importance, was treated according to rules of the game that were more favorable than those established for Peruvians," Ulloa noted.

The prime minister said that human capital was disregarded. He explained that caloric consumption, which amounted to 2,070 per person in 1968, has dropped to 1,590 and protein consumption from 62 to 50 grams a day.

Ulloa said that the consumption of milk, which with a normal diet averages 120 liters per person a year, had dropped to 30.4 liters in 1975.

As reasons behind this dramatic situation, he cited the drop in food production and inflation, the average rate of which has been 60 percent over the past 3 years, thus eroding the purchasing power of wages.

He also noted that the extent of the inflation had been deliberately concealed. The cost of living index was 19.8 percent, but the rate of inflation was artificially maintained. "Combined with the publicized rate of inflation and the effect of the impounding, the alternation would have meant an inflation rate of 37 percent, which is 17 percent more than the rate that was made public," Dr Manuel Ulloa categorically stated.

Ulloa also said that the educational system was "abused." He said that the government that has just come to an end built 2,208 schools, despite the fact that the student population had grown by 2 million students in 12 years time, while under Fernando Belaunde Terry the first constitutional government built 5,100 schools in 5 years.

He added that the society that went through this has been "ripped apart in terms of its physical bonds, the development of its customs, the lack of respect for the law and the general immorality that prevails throughout the whole."

He said that, of the country's 18 million inhabitants, only 5.5 percent can be classified as economically active population.

After pointing out that overt unemployment exceeds 7 percent and underemployment accounts for 52 percent, [he said that] the obviousness of the problem is demonstrated by the fact that a little more than 40 percent of the labor force is regularly employed and receives a wage equal to or higher than the minimum wage (22,020 soles a month up until the 31st of this month).

In 1968 the per capita income was $376 and in 1979 $788, while in Brazil, for example, during the same period of time, it rose from $356 to $1,723, and in Colombia from $303 to $890.

Between 1969 and 1980 the GDP grew at the rate of 3.8 percent a year. In Ecuador the annual growth rate was 7.7 percent, in Colombia 6.3 percent, in Brazil 8.7 percent and in Bolivia 5.2 percent.

In 1972 the public sector deficit came to 10.6 billion soles which, at today's value, would be equivalent to 123.6 billion. This deficit represented 3.6 percent of the GDP and, in the 2 years that followed, 4.8 and 7.6 percent.

He said that those responsible for the administration of the economy continued to generate fiscal deficits equivalent to 10 percent of the GDP in 1975, 1976 and 1977, increasing the debt to a magnitude equivalent to 85 percent of the GDP by the end of 1978.

He added that, once the possibility of continuing to incur foreign debts was exhausted, the crisis was exposed and the pressure to spend, which accelerated inflation, combined with an uncontrollable rise in costs, the product of the uncontrolled devaluation of our currency.

Government Plans

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p 4

[Text] Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa Elias has announced to the country that in 1981 a growth rate of 6 percent of the GDP, an inflation rate of 40 percent and a balancing out of the balance of payments will be attained.

Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa Elias has announced to the country that in 1981 a growth rate of 6 percent of the GDP, an inflation rate of 40 percent and a balancing out of the balance of payments will be attained.

After outlining the government's policy to Congress, he cited those macroeconomic goals it is hoped will be attained in the year to come.

Regarding national production, he said that farm production would amount to a gross product of 4.2 percent, a goal relatively easy to achieve, especially if the measures provided for in the Agrarian Promotion Law, which will be promulgated very soon, begin to have their effect.

After explaining the goals that have been set in different sectors, Ulloa said that "most indications relating to industrial activity permit us to expect that in 1981 we will be experiencing a third year of growth, after a serious recession recorded in 1977 and 1978."

He added that they feel that the rate of growth prior to the recession will be regained and that high rates of expansion in the field of nontraditional exports will be maintained.

Addressing himself to the financial program, the prime minister said that an inflation rate of 40 percent has been predicted for 1981, from December to December. This goal will be the result of a realistic program designed to contain the rise in prices.

While credit for the public sector will be maintained at levels compatible with inflation, credit for the private sector will be expanded by 48 percent, which is compatible with the predicted inflation rate and with the real increase in production.

Discussing the balance of payments, he said that they would strive to achieve a balance in 1981 if they succeeded in changing the volume of imports. Thus the international reserves accumulated by the end of 1980, amounting to $1.85 billion, would be sufficient for the balance of payments program planned for 1981.

He also reminded us that in 1979 a surplus of $1.579 billion in the balance of payments had been obtained and that in 1980 there would probably be a surplus of $1.3 billion.

He said that the government would look for favorable, low-interest loans with suitable terms and that in 1981 the appropriateness of restructuring the foreign debt would be studied with a view to reducing the cost of servicing it.

He announced the gradual reduction of subsidies, which in time will be temporary and discriminating, a broadening of the tax base and elimination of taxes that encumber the schedule.

He also reported on the measures that will be adopted to protect the workers in general against inflation. As of 1 January 1981, wages and salaries will be readjusted quarterly.

Elsewhere, he said that they will strive to reduce underemployment through the intensive utilization of manpower in an expansion and development of farm and road facilities.

Ulloa noted that "this great country, full of contradictions, poverty and greatness, is sick and has to be treated with filial devotion and love, but at the same time seriously and with the best professional competence we can find to rescue it from its affliction and misery."

And lastly, he commented that, while the image of national reality that has been presented fills us with consternation, we can also perceive an iron determination to repair what has to be repaired and to build a strong and vigorous nation.

Massive Employment Program

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa Elias yesterday announced to the country that a rate of growth of 6 percent in the GDP would be attained in 1981. inflation would be reduced to 40 percent and the balance of payments would be equalized.

He also said that farm production would attain a gross product of 4.2 percent, while private sector credit would be expanded by 48 percent, compatible with the anticipated rate of inflation.

He added that the promotion of employment would be tackled in permanent fashion by the constitutional government, which would earnestly develop a vast plan for mass employment and later many high-density manpower projects.

Analyzing the country's problems by sector, he outlined a number of guidelines and concrete proposals of the government plan which is to be implemented.

In his extensive exposition, he reported on maintenance of the Labor Community, the revision of many things like the CERTEX [Export Certificates] and the taxation system, with simplification of taxes and a revision of rates, the educational reform and agrarian program budgets, the incentive to be applied to the country's regionalization, the construction of housing and health care.

He concerned himself with projects for the colonization and full exploitation of the potential of the forests, with irrigation and with the granting of priority to farm and livestock development.

He proposed the conversion of PETROPERU [State Petroleum Agency] into a private corporation and the elimination of MINPECO's [Peruvian State Mineral Marketing Company] trade monopoly on minerals, among other important decisions.

Regarding the municipal elections to be held during the third week in September, he remarked that this means "a guarantee for the democratic regime established on 28 July" and he hoped that it would be "a new demonstration of the country's civic feeling and civilized attitude."

When he broached the topic of labor, Ulloa highly praised the invaluable capital represented by Peruvian workers. "This is why we are engaged in improving real wages, working conditions and the distribution of income," he specified.

He added that this goal would be possible thanks to the realization that the country's economic opportunities and employers' willingness to achieve an ever more equitable distribution of the economic surplus must be available to the workers.

Discussing the Social Security Service, he told the nation that they would strive to extend coverage to the economically active segment of the population to the maximum extent possible.

Ulloa Elias also said that a system for the periodic adjustment of wages and salaries would be created as of next 1 January, with quarterly adjustment periods and within the framework of a permanent climate of peace in the world of labor.

At the same time, the Ministry of Labor has already undertaken the task of synthesizing legislation now in effect for the purpose of preparing a bill dealing with the bases for labor laws.

In the field of education, Ulloa said that the new Constitution reclaims 20 percent of the national budget for this sector.

He added that the results of the educational reform program would be evaluated "to determine in precise and expert fashion both its successes and its mistakes."

He said that, as far as housing is concerned, the government will seek to improve the standard of living of the Peruvian family. He added that construction would be reactivated due to the fact that there is a dramatic housing shortage of a million units, 40 percent of which are in Lima.

With regard to the agrarian sector, he said that, due to the crisis brought on by the drought, the food import program provides for 1.5 million tons of food worth $500 million for this year.

In the field of energy and mining, he said that there would be periodic readjustments in electricity rates and that, in the case of oil, the promotion of exploration programs, drilling and secondary recovery require immediate action since the new contracts cannot prove themselves to be effective in less than from 5 to 7 years.

He noted that gradual rises in the price of fuels to "realistic price" levels would also be necessary.

In the field of mining, he said that, as a means of providing maximal incentive, the 17.5-percent tax on domestic sales and mining established in 1967 would gradually be eliminated.

Elsewhere, he said that the constant promotion of traditional and nontraditional exports would be furthered. He also noted that the tariff system would be revised, directing it toward the establishment of clearcut regulations for investment.

With regard to imports, he said that they do not amount to $3 billion. As to the foreign debt, he said that it would come to $1.362 billion this year. "It will devour 1 out of every 3 export dollars," he added.

He said that the income tax system would be revised and a bill would be presented before December, designed to correct the effects of inflation on the country's tax structure.

Education Budget

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p 4

[Text] Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa said last night that the new Constitution reclaims 20 percent of the national budget for the education sector, severely penalized during the former military regime.

He added that the results of the educational reform program would be evaluated "to determine in precise and expert fashion both its successes and its mistakes."

He announced that the new policy "would recognize and encourage the action of the teacher, the family and private initiative in the field of education."

He also said that new, general legislation on education would be passed with the aim of revitalizing the society.

He reminded us that education has been abused. While from 1968 to 1980 the student population grew by 2 million students, the government that ended its term in July built 2,208 schools. During the 5 years of constitutional government, between 1963 and 1968, 5,100 schools were built. This is why student density has grown from 134 to 208 pupils per school between 1968 and 1980. And the education law that was passed in 1972, for clearly political reasons, has merely served to gradually destroy our universities.

Also, from 1963 to 1968 the number of professors grew from 73,464 to 118,147. But, from 1968 to 1979 only 14,436 of them were incorporated into the teaching profession, resulting in the fact that the coefficient of pupils per teacher increased by 53 percent.

Ulloa, however, said that the figures cited do not reveal the dimensions of the drama of Peruvian teachers. Their income level remains extremely low.

"Under the political circumstances that prevailed until recently, they could only recover part of the dignity they had lost thanks to a politicization such that, while it permitted them to obtain a higher level of income, they had to pay the highest price for it that a professor can pay, namely the loss of their professional independence."

The education budget, which in 1966 was equivalent to 29 percent of the total, now amounts to only 11 percent.

Cooperatives

He was resolute on the cooperatives: "We propose to go on supporting the cooperative policy which is in agreement with the one developed by the constitutional government from 1963 to 1968." Among other measures, he announced the reestablishment of the National Institute of Cooperatives with broader functions and the particular promotion of the financial integration of the cooperative movement through the National Cooperatives Bank, which is to be created.

Real Wage Declines

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p 4

[Text] Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa notes that only 5.5 percent of the country's 18 million inhabitants can be classified as economically active population. Overt unemployment exceeds 7 percent but the worst of it is that underemployment affects over 52 percent of that population.

But the obviousness of the problem is demonstrated by the fact that only a little more than 40 percent of the labor force is regularly employed and receives a wage equal to or higher than the minimum wage.

This is why from 1973 to 1979 labor's share of national income declined, going from 51.3 percent in 1972 to 38.2 percent in 1979.

Real wage growth was negative in the 1970's but it reached dramatic lows between 1977 and 1978 when it was -20.6 and -11.3 respectively.

During the 1970's the cooperative system was disjointed and utilized as a political instrument by SINAMOS [National System for Support to Social Mobilization]. And when the movement was deactivated, they proceeded to divide it up, detracting from it the importance this associative form of ownership of the means of production should have had.

Ulloa said that it is a matter of public knowledge and obvious that the Social Security Service is going through a crisis, since not only does it protect merely a small segment of the working population, but what is more, it does not provide adequate benefits in terms of health as well as other risks.

He added that the skimpy figures figures we are plagued with every day reveal the fact that something very wrong was done as regards the creation and distribution of the wealth, as regards the policies that have been pursued and as regards the use that has been made of state funds.

So, how can we fail to recognize the fact that our society is an unjust one and that it is really sick? How can we fail to proclaim the need for revising the concepts that have served to orient government action for the past 12 years? How can we fail to call on all those who hold responsible positions, because the people have placed their hopes on us, to dedicate ourselves totally and exclusively to the immense task of repairing this society, of healing it and protecting it? How can we fail to call on all those Peruvian youths who have been living in a fog, in confusion to join us in this noble pledge of solidarity with the poor, the illiterate and the forsaken ones of our fatherland?

"Needless to say, religion, morality and virtue must constitute the frame of reference that inspires the behavior of Peruvians and of this society we are striving to restore and to make a more just and a more humane one," he added.

He said that, as far as the economy is concerned, there can be no doubt that the revolutionary process brought with it not only new ideas, but also different methods in the administration of affairs of state and in terms of the role which was assigned to private initiative in the development of the country.

Foodstuffs Import Allocation

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p 4

[Text] Last night Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa told Congress that in the field of housing government policy would be oriented toward improving the Peruvian family's standard of living.

He said that toward this end they would try to make use of the people's ability to save, to consolidate the urban scope of the cities, to carry out pilot housing programs and to locate the most depressed segments of the population in housing suitable to their means.

He announced the reactivation of construction due to the fact that there is an impressive housing shortage, estimated at 1 million units, 40 percent of which is in Lima.

Elsewhere, he noted that in the field of health they hope to reduce the mortality rate resulting from disease, especially among children, to protect the binomial mother-child relationship and to reorganize hospitals.

Farming

The prime minister announced that top priority would be assigned to the recovery and development of farming. "In this case, we will strive to consolidate the agrarian reform program, restore the farmer's standard of living and provide the incentives necessary to improve yields, increase production and exploit land on the coast, in the mountains and particularly in the forests with the aid of the special powers the Agrarian Promotion Law endows us with," he assured us.

Then he reported on the crisis brought on by the drought, because of which it is anticipated that 1.5 million tons of food worth about $500 million will be imported through the food import program.

He said that irrigation projects, in progress or under study, will cover 855,000 hectares in different parts of the country.

Forests

He said that the forest region contains 313,000 hectares suitable for the development of food and industrial crops, 135,000 hectares suitable for farm and livestock activities and 480,000 hectares for timber cutting.

Complete studies will be made for the appropriate utilization of the region and an overall plan for the development of the central forest region, which will involve various projects, will be drawn up.

Mining, Industry Promotion

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p 4

[Text] Last night Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa said that the mining industry ought to play an important role in the promotion of exports, the creation of wealth and the employment of manpower, and that among other measures to be adopted would be elimination of the MINPECO trade monopoly, as provided in the Constitution. In this way, the flexibility of efficiency and economy will be restored to the mineral trade. However, the state will continue to be a big mining producer.

Mining taxes amounting to 17.5 percent on domestic sales and on exports, established in 1967 and which are not today justifiable, will be gradually eliminated, but appropriate substitutes will be sought.

Industry

Speaking on industry, Ulloa confirmed the fact that the Labor Community would be maintained as it exists now, with some improvements in the employee shareholding system.

He criticized industrial policy in the past for not having regarded industrialization as an economic process. The government will draft an industry law and perform the role of promoter without enjoying the privileges or monopolies pertaining thereto.

"Under the circumstances, private activity will have to depend on its initiative and creativity, directing itself toward the attainment of high levels of efficiency with due consideration for the public interest and under conditions of free competition," he said.

CERTEX

As to the CERTEX, he announced that it would be maintained, while at the same time eliminating corruption in the administration of this instrument and seeing to it that not only business firms benefit from it, but also the towns where the corresponding work centers are located.

Farther on, he lashed out against the tariff system, which has been turned into an element of useless economic policy, complicated and basically unfair, as he put it. Therefore, the tariff system would be revised, directing it toward the establishment of clearcut regulations for investment, consumers and honest competition.

Exports

Ulloa said that the constant promotion of traditional and nontraditional exports would be achieved by means of a realistic exchange rate that reflects the scarcity of foreign currency.

He described the current export picture as being a dangerous one because it has been enlarged with prices having little stability, such as those of oil exports which this year will amount to 25 million barrels and which tend to be rapidly absorbed by domestic consumption.

He added that there are prices that have suffered drastic declines, as is the case with cotton, sugar, iron, etc.

Imports

Regarding imports, he said that they do not come to $3 billion and, on the public foreign debt, he said that this year it would come to $1.362 billion. "It will devour 1 out of every 3 export dollars," the prime minister affirmed.

He criticized the system of incentives and controls of the past 10 years and announced that the government would devote a major effort to improving its administration and to simplifying its procedures, laying emphasis on the facilitation of export and import procedures and those applying to loans and taxes.

11,466
CSO: 3010

END

JPRS 76632

16 October 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2202

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76632

16 October 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2202

CONTENTS

BOLIVIA

Columnist Focuses on Military Regime's Search for Stability
(Manfred Schonfeld; LA PRENSA, 29 Aug 80)..... 1

Paper Views Possibility of Southern Cone Pact
(Editorial; EL DIARIO, 29 Aug 80)..... 5

BRAZIL

Grain Production Expected To Reach 50 Million Tons in 1980
(Tarlis Batista; MANCHETE, 20 Sep 80)..... 7

Briefs
Suicide of Nazi War Criminal 10

CHILE

Political Prisoners' Condition in Santiago Prison Discussed
(Odette Magnet; HOY, 10-16 Sep 80)..... 11

Corvalan Protests Arrest of Paraguayan Communist
(TRIBUNA POPULAR, 12-18 Sep 80)..... 13

CUBA

Cuban-USSR Medical, Biological Space Experiments Described
(Jose A de la Osa; GRANMA, 20 Sep 80)..... 14

Cosmonaut Brain Wave Activity Experiment Reported
(Fernando Davalos; GRANMA, 22 Sep 80)..... 20

First-Year Results of Sixth Nonaligned Summit Noted
(GRANMA, 3 Sep 80)..... 27

FAR 20th Anniversary Medal Awarded to Internationalist Workers
(Fernando Davalos; GRANMA, 6 Sep 80)..... 29

Construction Workers Complete Projects in Guinea Early
(Gloria Marsan; BOHEMIA, 22 Aug 80)..... 31

FAR Emulation Launched at Guantanamo Guard Site
(Agustin Perez Hechavarria; GRANMA, 2 Sep 80)..... 36

Military Unit 2746 Members Receive Party Cards
(VERDE OLIVO, 24 Aug 80)..... 38

Basic Industry Ministry Six-Month Report
(Joaquin Oramas; GRANMA, 4 Sep 80)..... 40

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Pena Gomez on Private Enterprise, Elections
(EL NACIONAL, 5, 8 Sep 80)..... 43

Communism Not Appropriate, by Juan Baez
Opposes Presidential Reelections
Not Candidate in 1982

GUADELOUPE

Bomb Explosions Kill Expert, Damage Aircraft, Boats
(AFP, 18 Sep 80)..... 50

GUYANA

Briefs
Additional Defense Expenditures Approved 51
Guyana Rice Aid 51

HAITI

'OCLAE' Sees Upsurge in Opposition to Duvalier
(Carlos Font; OCLAE, Jun 80)..... 52

NICARAGUA

Borge Speaks at Ceremony Commemorating Nandaime Heroes
(Tomas Borge; BARRICADA, 16 Sep 80)..... 55

CAUS Forms New Trade Union Federation, Explains Objectives
(LA PRENSA, 17 Sep 80)..... 62

State Council Rejects Proposed Law on Political Parties
(LA PRENSA, 11 Sep 80)..... 63

COLUMNIST FOCUSES ON MILITARY REGIME'S SEARCH FOR STABILITY

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 29 Aug 80 p 9

[Article by Manfred Schonfeld]

[Text] The military government of General Garcia Meza in Bolivia is still a long way--perhaps even a very long way--from being stabilized. This concerns a characteristic which, if it is of any consolation to the new regime, appears to be inherent in most Bolivian governments throughout many decades, whether of those normally elected by the citizens or of those which came about through popular revolutions, coups d'etat or civilian-military movements.

The lack of sufficient stability to which we allude can be deduced, among other factors, from the fact that the problem presented by the confrontation of the new authorities with the Catholic Church, at its highest levels, continues to go unresolved. It arises, in addition, from the insecurity the government displays, to observant eyes, toward the information activities of journalists. When there is a need to refute energetically the story that there may be internal dissidence within the armed forces (and when we are looking at a country where such dissidence has clearly been manifesting itself for the last few years, through something more than mere ideological and personal differences, and rather through coups and countercoups or through open or latent armed confrontations), then it cannot maintain that pointing out the possibility that such long-standing dissension exists is only the product of journalistic fantasies, malevolent or sensationalist.

In Bolivia, the generals who--to give them some distinctive labels--are "rightists" have well-known family names, and the same is true of those who are "leftists." And in each case, they have sectors which support them. So, in a manner of speaking, it is a question of phantasmagoria.

Foreign Support

Let us start, then, with the premise that the Bolivian government is still relatively unstable (which, thanks to the explanation, does not discount the possibility that it may become stable: General Banzer also arrived in power in 1971 under conditions of stability which were not precisely ideal, and he succeeded in creating those conditions gradually); when that premise is accepted, it is understandable that General Garcia Meza is trying to shore up his new regime with support from overseas.

The option which, in this respect, was announced yesterday, is clear: it supports the idea of withdrawing from the sphere of influence of the Andean Pact--to which Bolivia has belonged from its inception with the signing of the Cartagena Agreement in 1969--and of compensating for that possible withdrawal with a rapprochement with what has begun to be called, a bit nebulously still, the "Southern Cone" of the Latin American subcontinent.

According to the Bolivian chief of state's remarks yesterday, that incipient trend would correspond to basic ideas shared with other governments of the countries of the aforementioned "Southern Cone," for example, with Argentina's President Videla.

Garcia Meza attributes similar ideas to Videla, based apparently on the ideological affinity of the regimes in question and on the need to guarantee, by mutual agreement, their respective national security.

The countries which Bolivian information sources mention as belonging to that proposed community would be, in addition to Bolivia and our own country, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay.

Chile, on the other hand--the first country which, after having been a founding member of the Andean Pact, withdrew from it because of economic considerations--was not mentioned.

The reason for that ommission is a bit obvious. There is an ancient and historical dispute between Bolivia and Chile, the solution to which will not be easy, and in addition--if Bolivia wants to make the scheme palatable to our country--it knows that at present and as long as we continue to have our eyes fixed on what is happening in the Vatican, one still cannot speak of any kind of common denominator between Argentina and its neighbor across the Andes.

Bolivian Complaint

Finally, Bolivia claims, insofar as its situation within the Andean Pact is concretely concerned, that its economic interests--in particular those concerned with its industrial development--were not taken into account sufficiently by the Cartagena Agreement bloc.

Spokesmen for this bloc--who reacted immediately to Garcia Meza's statements--to a certain extent confirmed involuntarily the truth of Bolivia's complaint: they served notice, clearly, that they very much regretted Bolivia's withdrawal from the group, but that Bolivia would not be missed all that much. And they are right: Bolivia was always the weakest link, the poor relation, so to speak, within the Andean Pact.

It has been that before, at least along with Ecuador; but since the latter, until recently no more than a banana republic, became a small, but not unappreciable petroleum-producing power Bolivia has fallen behind, in spite of the great potential of its natural resources.

Confusion of Several Ideas

With all this, there is in the Bolivian attitude--in that offensive of withdrawal from the "Andean countries" and of rapprochement with the "south"--an obvious confusion of ideas.

One is what the Andean Pact, as the bloc with few real pretensions to subregional economic integration, could have done or failed to do for Bolivia. Another is the political basis of the question, which looms sharply in the background of this suggestion.

At this time there is a clear dividing line in South America: on one side are the governments which, although they are stumbling and some of them are having to overcome a thousand and one difficulties, are maintaining their constitutional character and their status as having come to power through the majority vote of the citizens.

These governments are committed, generally, to the difficult task of keeping themselves in power; of making rule by a state of law valid, insofar as possible; of suppressing guerrilla and terrorist subversion--without exception--more or less successfully and, finally, of being always alert to the possibility that at any moment the undeniable presence of all those destabilizing factors combined will become the motive--or the pretext--for a military coup.

The countries in question are few, but all of them are part of the Andean Pact: Peru, Ecuador, Colombia and Venezuela.

Military Regimes

On the other side are those which are under military regimes. Among all of these, however, there are notable differences of hue: the fact in itself that a military government exists is--without any intrinsic significance--insufficient to establish, without any further ado, a so-called "common denominator," and much less a supposed ideological affinity.

Because, while in Brazil the military experience resulted in the need to channel the country once more toward the growing vigor of civilian, political and legal forces, and in Uruguay a straggling process similar to Brazil's appears to be taking place gradually, Paraguay, on the other hand, is the personal fief of a practically lifetime autocrat; in Bolivia it is not yet known what direction the endemic instability of the altiplano will take and, insofar as our country is concerned, there is permanent talk of democracy, of representativity; there is emphasis on the constitution--with not very clear allusions to reforms which, one may well imagine from their content, will only be minor ones--but at the same time there is continued play with the still indefinite concept of the "institutionalization" of the armed forces in some future administration which--according to the cream of the country's constitutional thinkers--is incompatible with that same constitution which it is claimed will be respected.

All of which constitutes such a heterogeneously formed mosaic that there is only one question: if President Garcia Meza thinks he will find support in a supposed community of ideas and ideals in the countries of the "Southern Cone" neighboring or close to his own, to which of those stages in the respective evolution of each military regime does this refer?

Economic Cooperation

The question of economic cooperation is very different, naturally. The Andean Pact cannot give Bolivia much, because the Andean Pact was--from the beginning and it continues to be, as LAFTA also was and, we very much fear, ALADI [Latin American Integration Association], so pompously created a short time ago, will be--one of those typically illborn creatures of the minds of international bureaucrats: an ambitious scheme, divorced not only from economic and social reality, but also geographically from the vast areas it pretends to include, and which in the best of cases serves to permit some of the more powerful members to expand at the expense of the other, weaker ones. General uniformity is already so far from reality that any attempt at integration is inevitably premature.

Bilateral cooperation, on the other hand, is perfectly possible; it has existed for some time and continues to bring mutual benefits. It can, however, have nothing to do with questions of the internal politics of the respective countries, as long as they do not attempt to "export" their internal problems or their "traveling ideologies" beyond their own borders.

One of the bases of the Andean Pact was, precisely, its apolitical character. When Chile withdrew from the bloc, it did not do so--under the Pinochet regime--because of the incompatibility of political ideologies, but rather because of economic policies. Chile was going its own way, opening itself broadly to foreign capital; the bloc was, basically, hostile or suspicious in view of the source of that capital (which nearly cost it the withdrawal of Venezuela, an Andean member which had joined late, although at the last moment the difference between the pact and Caracas was resolved, because it was less drastic than the one involving Santiago).

Politicization

We do not mean by this that the Andean Pact has not often--perhaps too often--run the risk of politicization, but only in recent times, as it did in the case of Nicaragua, which at the time was criticized from the editorial column of this newspaper.

But what the Bolivian Government--which as we indicated is in need of foreign support--is depending on, also, is politicization. A politicization which, to be consistent, must not exclude Chile, for example, but which, even though it might include Chile, would be light years away from having found a genuine ideological common denominator for the so-called "Southern Cone" of the continent.

8735
CSO: 3010

PAPER VIEWS POSSIBILITY OF SOUTHERN CONE PACT

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 29 Aug 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Change of Criterion of Policy"]

[Text] Without its yet being a question of a change in the political framework in which the South American countries used to be submerged, some elements of opinion are appearing which permit reference to the possibility of a novel recomposition of relations of this part of the continent with the developed powers. The appearance of that type of axis was foreseen, with certain reservations, by U.S. commentators writing for the press. They mentioned the formation of a power axis in the Southern Cone, which would be opposed to the policy the United States has been applying in its relation, which have not always been equitable, with the developing peoples.

The theoretical and phraseological tools with which that "power axis" was presented gyrated between the superficial and the alarming. They wanted to mix it with the human rights policy. They wanted to intertwine it, in addition, with vague speculations on U.S.-type democracy. They spoke of economic aid and technical assistance to underdeveloped countries, but without taking into account that that "aid" meant compensation for the terrible discrepancies in the terms of exchange. It is natural that formulation of the White House criterion should be influenced by superficialities or apparent reasons, particularly when it is not convenient that the real causes of deterioration in international relations be revealed in all their nakedness.

To understand one another frankly, we will state, once more, that we have supported at all costs the real validity of the political constitution of the state. When one examines its text, one is easily convinced that the fundamental rights of man and the citizen are included in the sections on rights and guarantees. It also contains a list of duties and obligations, so that man not only has rights, but also duties, which is quite proper for a just balance in the development of society. It is thus established that the dean of the national press struggled yesterday, is struggling today, and will continue to do so tomorrow for a true government of freedoms, guarantees and rights, including the right to life, work, education, health, the adoption of any religious creed whatsoever or the right not to believe in anything, to travel, hold an opinion, speak out freely, etc.

We will lay aside speculations about such rights, which must be maintained and respected without exception, to return to the probable establishment of a power axis in the Southern Cone. If there has been thought of encouraging it, the real causes have been clear and are found in the discriminatory U.S. policy toward sovereign nations, which it wants to treat like dependent minor children, who must ask permission, for example, to seek their own self-determination. The United States--not its people--has taken, through its political leaders, all the steps necessary to lose its influence in Latin America, and in several cases, to lose completely the cooperation of nations which have by this time come under the Castro influence.

The newspaper L'EXPRESS of Paris has touched on this subject. It has said: "The scope of the rapprochement between Brazil and Argentina stands out in special relief under the present circumstances, due to the enormous impact on the continent of the coup d'etat in Bolivia on 17 July. With the installation of a military government in La Paz, a clear line of geopolitical division has been established in Latin America."

That paper's point of view is interesting when it says that "the division of Latin America into two antagonistic, geopolitical areas, if this theory happens to be correct, would create an authentically novel situation in the continent, which up to now had demonstrated a natural hostility to the formation of ideological blocs."

Such a bloc, if it should be formed, has its justification--which the Americans do not see--in its frontal and open opposition to the penetration of Marxist socialism.

If all this does not please the present rulers of the United States, it is not the countries which defend their sovereignty and their right to develop freely that must change their criterion and their policy.

8735
CSO: 3010

GRAIN PRODUCTION EXPECTED TO REACH 50 MILLION TONS IN 1980

Rio de Janeiro MANCHETE in Portuguese 20 Sep 80 pp 4-13

[Article by Tarlis Batista: "Foreign Debt and National Economy"]

[Text] Brazil will this year produce about 50 million tons of cereals. This however is not the famous superharvest which the authorities have been hoping and which they had announced with so much euphoria. Unfortunately, certain unforeseeable factors, especially the tremendous and abrupt rise in agricultural pesticides [preservatives] and basic investments contributed to a decline in the anticipated harvest. But the harvest is considered to be "very good" and should slightly relieve the pressure from the national foreign debt which has been further aggravated by the imports of agricultural products, such as wheat or beans. Right now Brazil is the world's second-ranking cereal producer. There is every indication that the productivity index in this sector might go up substantially. Specialists say, for example, that planting cereal crops in the woodland savanna could be the solution to meeting Brazil's agricultural products requirement. Brazil could easily achieved self-sufficiency in this sector. According to farmers in Parana--especially the small growers--certain government measures, such as a realistic minimum price policy and financial incentives, helped in achieving the excellent harvest this year which is practically equal to the one in 1977. In addition to government measures, the weather was also stable during the past 2 years. Continuing along these same lines, the country's agriculture over the next several years will achieve the so fervently hoped-for superharvest.

"When God and the government help, the harvest is good," says Luis Boschirolli, chairman of the Cascavel Agricultural-Livestock Cooperative in Parana, which has already more than 4,500 partners. This saying was repeated among the farm workers in Palotina, Matelandia, Toledo, and Londrina, in Parana, and among the cowboys of Ijui, Cruz Alta, and Santo Angelo. "John guaranteed it," they said. This is the phase of optimism. And it could not be any different. Brazil will have to produce about 3 million tons of wheat grain in the wheat fields of Parana, Rio Grande do Sul, Mato Grosso, Sao Paulo, and Minas Gerais; this is equivalent to half of the nation's domestic consumption. This will represent a substantial reduction in the country's foreign debt because we would be reducing imports of wheat from Argentina, the United States, Canada, Germany, and other sources.

"Some basic factors contributed to this good harvest but it is not a super harvest, as they kept telling us," noted Reinhold Stephanes, Parana agriculture secretary. "One of the causes was the climate. We have not had any frost in Parana for the past 2 years. In addition to that, purchasing prices were excellent. Upon finding that there was need for giving agriculture priority in the award of loans, the federal government provided the funds necessary for the small farmer who accounts for 80 percent of the total in Parana, so that they would have the money necessary for planting." And Stephanes added that, when he harvested and sold his product, the farmer encountered excellent conditions on the market. All of these factors together helped provide an incentive for planting. Last year, every hectare planted in Parana yielded an output of 1,702 kilograms. The estimate for 1980-1981 is 2,231 kilograms per hectare planted. This will enable the state to share with a total of 1,759,000 tons of wheat grain, in other words, more than half of the nation's total output.

The tables in the Treviso Pizzeria in Cascavel are always crowded. The farmers from the nearby cities come there to the Coopavel to negotiate the sale of their harvest. They make the pizzeria their meeting place. This is therefore a perfectly valid guide as to the situation of the agricultural sector nationwide. Nobody can fail to recognize the importance of Parana, primarily the western part of the state, in the nation's agricultural output. When the pizzeria tables are empty, things go badly. When they are occupied, the situation is good. During the last weeks of August, similar to what happened in March and April, during the soybean harvest, the Treviso Pizzeria was jammed. The situation is no different in the cities of the Rio Grande do Sul, Sao Paulo, Minas, and Mato Grosso. Soybeans, wheat, or corn should top last year's records and should equal the figures of the 1977 harvest when Brazil produced 50 million tons of miscellaneous agricultural products.

"Are we in a position to achieve self-sufficiency in wheat?"

"We are inded," replied Luiz Boschirolli. "Our self-sufficiency in wheat will come when we move on to using parts of the woodland savanna. There the climate is more stable than in the regions of Parana and Rio Grande do Sul, the two major wheat-growing centers."

But wheat was not the only product to respond well to government incentives. Other crops reveal an excellent harvest index. As a matter of fact, Brazilian agricultural always reacts positively to the incentives it gets. We have good statistics this year likewise because, in 1971, the government extensively financed the purchase of machinery, fertilizer, and seed, in addition to instituting rice incentives. It is calculated that the current harvest should be 15.7 percent bigger than last year's harvest, according to the magazine CONJUNTURA ECONOMICA in its August issue. Soybeans showed and increase of 48.83 percent, wheat went up 8.9 percent--a rather reasonable rate which leaves the farmers happy.

Agricultural Output in Tons, 1979-1980

PRODUÇÃO AGRÍCOLA EM TONELADAS 1979/1980
1 Produtos	1979	1980	10 Variações percentuais
Trigo 2	2.914.367	3.174.867	8,94
Tomate 3	1.499.556	1.601.211	6,78
Algodão 4	1.635.601	1.823.137	11,47
Arroz 5	7.589.282	9.854.039	29,84
Batata 6	2.144.483	1.948.292	9,15
Laranja 7	49.407.713	53.424.072	8,13
Mandioca 8	24.934.982	25.991.795	2,43
Milho 9	16.308.950	20.937.325	28,38

Key: 1--Products; 2--Wheat; 3--Tomatoes; 4--Cotton; 5--Rice; 6--Potatoes; 7--Oranges; 8--Cassava, 9--Corn; 10--Percentage variations.

Due to the impetus received from PROALCOOL [National Alcohol Program], sugar cane has begun to increase and the anticipated output for this year is 142,291,157 tons. This is a 2.12 percent increase over last year. During the next harvest, with the further expansion of PROALCOOL, the increase should be one of the highest since the government is trying to use alcohol in resolving Brazil's energy crisis. The high cost of fertilizer meant that agriculture did not record the indexes of a superharvest as has been hoped. There was an increase of 49 percent for potassium chloride. Simple calcium superphosphate went up 33 percent. Urea, produced by PETROFERTIL of Salvador rose by 28 percent. As for wheat, although things went very well throughout the year, the output increase fell short of expectations since there was a reduction in the planting area, primarily in Rio Grande do Sul, on the order of 27 percent, due to the setbacks 4 years ago. According to Agroanalysis, "in just three harvest, between 1962 and 1979, the average per-hectare yields exceeded 1,000 kilograms. This is a relatively low figure when compared to the productivity obtained in other countries." In Argentina, for example, the average is around 1,770 kilograms per hectare and per year. "But the ecology in Argentina is more favorable than in Brazil," said agronomist Carlos Flores, of Coopavel. Even so, one cannot fail to recognize and praise the attitude of the Brazilian farmer. He eagerly responded to the government and turned out a good harvest this year. Good, but insufficient, because we are still importing 3 million tons of wheat, almost 2 million tons of corn, and 50,000 tons of beans.

5058
CSO:3001

BRIEFS

SUICIDE OF NAZI WAR CRIMINAL--Sao Paulo, 3 Oct (AFP)--Nazi war criminal Gustav Franz Wagner committed suicide this afternoon at his residence in the town of Itabaia, 50 kilometers from Sao Paulo, it was officially reported here tonight. The police report gave no details of Wagner's suicide, saying only that the Nazi war criminal had killed himself. The former SS sergeant, who died at 69, was detained in May 1968 and released in May 1969 after the Brazilian Federal Supreme Court turned down extradition request made by the governments of Austria, the FRG, Israel and Poland. [Excerpt] [PY052305 Paris AFP in Spanish 0532 GMT 4 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

POLITICAL PRISONERS' CONDITION IN SANTIAGO PRISON DISCUSSED

Santiago HOY in Spanish 10-16 Sep 80 p 19

/Article by Odette Magnet: "Uncertainty in Cell Block 5"/

/Text/ It was nearly 0700 hours when the political prisoners in Cell Block 5 at the Santiago Penitentiary were rudely awakened. In a matter of seconds the police had the inmates waiting in the hallways while they searched the cells.

The operation seemed routine. But on that day, Thursday, 28 August, the guards, under orders from warden Col Alberto Herrera, for the first time requisitioned all handicrafts made by the inmates. The items (bookmarks, ceramic doves, shoes, keyrings, burlap) have been valued at some 50,000 pesos. Up until now the inmates' relatives had sold the goods for a paultry, albeit, steady income of 400 pesos per week.

At present there are 64 political prisoners in the penitentiary. Fifty-seven of them are still involved in legal proceedings and the remaining seven have been "hopelessly sentenced" to 20 to 30 year prison terms. Most of them have been held for 4 or 5 years on charges of violating the Internal Security Law or the Arms Control Law.

Tense Relations--Because of the delays in bringing the cases to court, defense attorneys agree that the inmates morale is deteriorating gradually and they are suffering emotionally. At times feelings run high. The attorneys, however, agree on one thing: The government is in no hurry to settle these cases and the wait is long. At the same time, the attorneys add, treatment of the inmates has deteriorated. The searches, the attorneys say, are more frequent. Two or three times per week the guards carefully search the cells (they open the inmates food packages, rip open mattresses) looking for weapons and "subversive" materials. They remove everything ranging from Neruda's poetry to the blankets, recorders and stoves sent by the inmates' families and several national and international groups. Only long wave radios are permitted. Those prisoners who "misbehave" are punished by being held in solitary confinement for several days.

Alvaro Garcia Perez-Cotapos represents six of the political prisoners. Garcia, who has been working with them for nearly 3 years, has formed a clear impression of the group. He said:

"Generally speaking they are people who are 100 percent political. Almost all feel that they are providing testimony but not in the customary fashion. They are proud of being political prisoners because they do not feel at all like common criminals. Because they receive so little information they are inconsistent in their political analyses and their ideas are very radical."

Despite everything, this group, as compared to the rest of the prisoners, has certain privileges. In 1978 Minister of Justice Monica Madariaga agreed to a request made by the UN Ad Hoc Commission on Human Rights which visited Chile that political prisoners be kept separate from the other inmates, that they be provided with some kind of work and given separate food facilities. Since that time political prisoners take turns (the rotational system) preparing the food and they are permitted 1-hour visits three times a week. Family and friends are carefully searched as they enter and leave the penitentiary.

8599
CSO: 3010

CORVALAN PROTESTS ARREST OF PARAGUAYAN COMMUNIST

Caracas TRIBUNA POPULAR in Spanish 12-18 Sep 80 p 10

/Text/ Moscow (TASS)--The arrest in Buenos Aires of Antonio Maidana on 27 August has caused deep consternation among the rank and file of anti-imperialist fighters in Latin America and the entire world, according to a statement released here by PCCh /Chilean Communist Party/ Secretary General Luis Corvalan. It is also dismaying and distressing that the whereabouts and fate of Maidana and his companion Emilio Roa, who was arrested with him, are unknown.

In the name of all Chilean communists we appeal to our comrades in Chile and in exile to add their voices and actions to the powerful movement that is being organized to secure the release and save the life of such a distinguished fighter.

Comrade Maidana, first secretary of the Paraguayan Communist Party, spent 19 years--one-third of his life--in the filthy dungeons run by Stroessner's tyrannical government. He was brutally mistreated. Throughout his long captivity, he was completely isolated from the world and had no knowledge of what took place outside the prison's walls. We met him again after his release from prison in 1977. His health was affected somewhat by his imprisonment, but his convictions and indomitable revolutionary spirit remained intact.

Antonio Maidana, the statement concludes, is one of the noblest and most enlightened fighters we have ever met. We ask that everything possible be done to release him from prison and to prevent the loss of such a valuable life.

8599
CSO: 3010

CUBAN-USSR MEDICAL, BIOLOGICAL SPACE EXPERIMENTS DESCRIBED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 20 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Jose A de la Osa: "Soviet-Cuban Research in Space"]

[Text] Responding to the primary objective of manned flights being made under the auspices of the Intercosmos Program, the execution of scientific experiments under the exceptional conditions space station Salyut 6 is capable of providing, our country's research institutes have worked for months on a number of experiments now being performed by Cuban and Soviet cosmonaughts in the space around earth.

To simulate conditions of nongravity or weightlessness on earth for long periods of time is, of course, impracticable. Permanent weightlessness on the orbital station is its most spectacular characteristic and tends to be the most interesting with respect to the experiments being carried out on board. Moreover, there exists the possibility of working under very high vacuum, low temperature conditions, which is a very useful advantage in some technological experiments, while the presence of a relatively high level of radiation may have an influence in some medical-biological experiments.

Since the end of 1977, the Cuban Academy of Sciences, working through its Intercosmos Committee, has been responsible for the preparation, supervision and coordination of the experiments program for the study of a number of anatomical, physiological and psychological changes under conditions of weightlessness, genetic changes of microorganisms, the performance of various experiments on the growth of organic and inorganic crystals and, taking advantage of the possibility of being able to observe the earth from a height of hundreds of kilometers, studies will be made of our natural sources by means of long-distance detection, using multispectral cameras for this purpose.

Seven agencies of the central government of our country, more than 50 research institutions and production enterprises and some 500 technicians and workers participated directly in the preparation of the experiments.

Cuban scientists, technicians and workers have designed a broad gamut of original experiments and made special devices to be used in space.

The construction of these devices, accomplished in a short time, had to meet requirements of exceptional severity and reliability of operation under conditions of heavy vibration, great acceleration and possible problems of excessive heat because of a lack of convection (current established between two points of a fluid mass when there is a difference in temperature between them) due to a lack of gravity. It also had to be guaranteed that the components would not release toxic gases when heated and the weight of the devices had to be reduced to the minimum in order to facilitate their transportation to the orbital station.

In all cases there was the fraternal help of Soviet specialists, whose great experience in work related to space became essential for the success of our comrades' work.

Cuban-Soviet experiments can be subdivided into four large categories: medical-biological such as Cortex, Support, Blood Circulation, Anthropometry, Vision, Hatuey, Multiplier, Balance, Immunity, and Stress; the physicotechnical, among which are Sugar, Zone, and Caribbean; the Psychometric such as Perception, Coordination, Questionnaire, and Rest, and experiments on exploration of the earth such as Tropic-III, Biosphere-C and Spectrum.

Basing ourselves on reports published by the Press Office of the Joint Soviet-Cuban Space Flight, we offer in summary a general view of the main experiments.

Medical-Biological Experiments

As we have seen, medical-biological experiments are quite numerous. Among them is Cortex, with which it is intended to accomplish an electrophysiological investigation of the functional state of the human brain during the flight. Its objective is to determine the changes in cerebral electrical activity of the cosmonaut during the performance of his mission so as to be able to judge the degree to which his behavioral capabilities are affected during the flight and his recovery after returning to earth. For this purpose, the Cubans and Soviets working together developed the Cortex device consisting of a helmet with electrodes and earphones, a light and sound stimulator, amplifiers of cerebral electrical activity and a tape recorder.

Support: By means of devices called "supinators" (supports) installed in a sort of sandal designed for use under conditions of no gravity and which the cosmonauts should use daily for about 4 hours, this experiment is aimed at faster recovery and readaptation to normal gravity and bipedal activities by the cosmonaut when he returns to earth.

Blood Circulation: Electrocardiac readings will be made before, during and after the flight, which will allow learning the cardiac bioelectric manifestations of the processes of adaptation of the cosmonauts. Measurements of the circulatory system of the crew will be made also so as to evaluate some characteristics of their behavior.

Anthropometry: This will analyze the process of physical behavior of the cosmonauts in their flight mission and the possible changes in muscular surfaces and skeletal structure. A special instrument has been designed and built by Cuban specialists for evaluations of adipose tissue and the stimulation of body fat. It is called "Special Calibrometer Cosmos 726."

Vision: This joint experiment consists of investigation of the functional state of the cosmonauts visual analyzer during the flight and it includes a clinical ophthalmological examination before and after the flight by means of the appliclation of a battery of tests used by the Soviets on all their cosmonauts, using equipment existing in the USSR and following the methods developed by Soviet specialists. Cuban specialists have added new parameters to these tests.

Hatuey: This refers to joint Cuban-Soviet research on cell division. The cell is the basic and functional unit of almost all living beings. For an organism to grow or multiply, fulfilling the necessary prerequisites which define it as a living being, it is necessary that its cells divide, creating a larger number of them. With space stations, there appears for the first time the possibility of checking the effects of gravity on each of these vital phenomenons.

Multiplier: This investigates the influence of weightlessness on the rate of growth of ferments.

Balance: For the first time, this joint Soviet-Cuban flight provides a situation in which a man born in the tropics takes part. It is expected that it could show certain peculiarities in metabolic behavior with respect to water and minerals. This experiment intends to show changes in the water-mineral balance of the Cuban cosmonaut, allowing comparisons to be made with that of the Soviet. Medical examinations of both cosmonauts will be made before and after the flight with respect to water intake, urine output and body weight. From blood drawn and urine emitted during those two periods, an analysis will be made, using the most accurate and reliable methods now in existence, of sodium, potassium, calcium, manganese, chlorides and creatine levels and that of other substances so as to learn the changes undergone in metabolism with respect to these substances during the space flight.

Immunity: Changes which may take place in some proteins and minerals directly related with the natural defenses of the body under the influence of space flight factors will be investigated. Concentration in the blood of immunoglobulins, antibodies and other proteins and minerals, which take part in defense reactions, will be studied before and after the flight and changes which may take place because of the effects of weightlessness and other changes which may take place because of the influence of space flight will be studied.

Stress: Despite the excellent physical and psychological preparation of the cosmonauts and the careful training to which they are subjected, it is possible that there may be individual variations in responding to "stress" (state of tension) due to genetic, constitutional, psychological and even climatological (country of origin of the cosmonaut) characteristics. This experiment, which is the continuation of others carried out in other joint flights, attempts to determine the changes produced in hormonal characteristics and the metabolism of carbohydrates and lipids of the Cuban cosmonaut during the periods before and after the space flight.

Physicotechnical Experiments

The experiment Azucar is of particular interests to the Cubans because it is related to our main industry. This experiment consists of the study of the growth of a single saccharose crystal (a grain of sugar formed of a single crystal) under conditions of weightlessness by means of photographic techniques. The results obtained will be useful in the fields of biomedicine and optics. The "crystallizer" equipment used (built in Cuba) consists of a chamber within which are four crystals immersed in different solutions. For 3 days these crystals will grow and at certain periods the cosmonaut will take photographs of their growth using a Praktica EE-2 camera for this purpose, a camera made in East Germany and which is on board Salyut-6.

Zone: It simultaneously studies the dissolution and crystalization of saccharose using a very new technique used for the first time in space. A drop (zone) of the solution placed in the center of the crystal spreads through it because of the action of a variable temperature.

Caribbean: Two objectives are basically pursued by this experiment: the study of the mechanisms of nucleation and growth of crystals of different insulating materials, semiconductors and metals and the technological possibility of obtaining single crystals with a greater degree of perfection and the investigation of the possibility that in some cases the processes are more cost effective than similar processes under earth conditions.

Psychometric Experiments

Functional changes which may take place during space flight from the visual, tactile and muscular sensitiveness point of view will be recorded by experiment Perception, with the aid of several instruments built in Cuba based on commercial models adapted to function under conditions of weightlessness.

Coordination: This studies the effects of weightlessness on the voluntary motor activity of the cosmonaut and to do so the psychomotor abilities of the cosmonaut will be measured on earth and during his stay in the space vehicle, the results obtained being compared at the end of the flight. A device called a "Coordinograph," designed and built in Cuba, will be used for this purpose.

By means of the manual coordinated action of two handles, the cosmonaut must move the point of a crayon which will draw a line between the double outline of a complicated geometric figure without making an error, that is, without deviating from the established path. All this must be accomplished in the shortest possible time.

Questionnaire: How does the cosmonaut assimilate these new living conditions? Up to what point may they have a positive or negative effect on his basic activity? These extremely important questions for evaluating the psychological functional state are difficult to answer because they concern the subjective sphere of man. Experiment Questionnaire, questions to be asked the cosmonaut at different points during the flight, will determine the effects of the various phases during his space voyage on the self evaluation of the cosmonaut about his psychic state, internal (personal experiences and desires) as well as external, and will show his behavior, the purpose being the possible improvement of on-board living conditions.

Rest: In the practice of flights with international crews, it is already traditional that the visiting cosmonauts take with them to the "Salyut-6" space station video cassettes with musical programs prepared jointly by psychologists and TV producers of the countries participating in the joint flight. Those programs are a surprise for the station crew, on one hand, and on the other, they serve as material for the accomplishment of experiment Rest, which will be evaluated by means of experiment Questionnaire.

Exploration of the Earth

Tropic III: A multispectral survey of selected zones of national territory and the insular shelf will be done with the use of a Zeiss MKF-6 camera made in the GDR and installed on board the space station. The purpose is to obtain information on the natural resources of the country, atmospheric pollution and various subjects of interest to the national economy. Together with this survey, others will be made from aircraft and by direct measurements of the earth in selected areas.

Biosphere-C: This consists of making a study of a number of natural objects from the "Salyut-6" station by means of direct and instrument observations to be performed by the Cuban cosmonaut. Various tasks of scientific research are included in the experiment. When flying over areas of interest, the cosmonaut must fight fiercely against the cosmic speed of the vehicle so that he may execute the greatest number of the tasks scheduled. In this task the initiative and speed with which he can spot the objects to which he will devote his attention play an important role.

Spectrum: The processing of material obtained from this experiment, which bears the name of the spectrometer developed by Bulgarian and Soviet scientists, is aimed at resolving scientific tasks such as the preparation of methods for determining the physicochemical and biological characteristics of some natural and agricultural objects and masses of water of the ocean on the basis of spectral information, the study of the dynamics of physicochemical and biological properties of some natural and agricultural objects and masses of water of the ocean, among others.

8908
CSO: 3010

COSMONAUT BRAIN WAVE ACTIVITY EXPERIMENT REPORTED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 22 Sep 80 p 5

[Article by Fernando Davalos: "Cortex, a Cuban Biomedical Advance in Space"]

[Text] Conditions of orbital flight determine physiological and psychophysiological responses of adaptation by the human body. Weightlessness and isolation reduce the sensory information needed for the reaction of man to alerting stimuli. Moreover, there is a redistribution of the volume of blood which affects the brain and even each brain half, asymetrically. "What is the spontaneous function of the brain under these conditions and how does it react to sensory stimulation?

Experiment Cortex will accomplish the electrophysiological exploration of the human brain before, during and after the joint Soviet-Cuban flight and will contribute to giving a reply to these questions. The term "Cortex" is a Latin word which means "external layer" and it serves as a short description for this experiment which fixes its attention precisely on the cerebral layer, the so-called "grey matter."

Secrets Which Have Ceased to be Secrets

Very few people were up to date on what was going to be done when the worker submerged the strange object of plaster in the bucket of natural liquid latex in the Rene Bedia Morales Establishment 101 of the National Enterprise of Footwear Accessories. Now it can be said with pride: The first step was being taken in the fabrication of rubber helmets in which are placed the electrodes which record the brain activity of Romanenko and Tamayo pursuant to the program of Experiment Cortex!

With all certainty, the master leather workers of Havana did not know the destination of the very fine and strange cases of natural hides which were made a few months ago either. Their objective can now be made public: protect the personal devices--the latex helmets and other accessories--of Cortex!

It was not known with certainty why our jewelers of the Dos de Enero shop of the Lamps and Custom Jewelry Enterprise of Havana were ordered to make the very small and exceptional objects of the purest silver brought from the reserves of the Cuban State. Now there is no longer any reason for keeping it secret that those dimunitive devices were the electrodes for the Soviet-Cuban biomedical experiment!

For long months, since Intercosmos gave its approval to Cortex, silently and arduously, the careful work of scientists, technicians, workers and artisans of the various entities of the country has been going on. Now there is a Cuban cosmonaut in an earth orbit! Everything has ceased to be a secret.

How Can the Brain Microvoltage of the Cosmonauts Be Measured?

The human brain produces electricity as it functions but this power is of very low voltage (on the order of millionths of a volt) and is generated by an organ which is very well protected by its cranial container beneath membranes, bones, skin and hair. This microvoltage is the index which allows the evaluation of the neuropsychic functional state of the cosmonaut during orbital flight.

The Cortex experiment proposes to capture this spontaneous brain electrical activity in the absence of any stimuli, which is called an encephalogram (EE), and the electrical responses of the brain to brief stimuli, called "evoked potential" (PE).

In both hemispheres of the brain there will be successive recordings of a basic EEG with the cosmonauts at rest; an EEG during the execution of simple arithmetical calculations (mental counting); a basal visual PE with respect to light flashes, a visual PE while lighted stimuli are counted, the basal audio PE and the audio PE while counting sound stimuli (snaps).

These recordings are of common usage in neurological sciences but in previous manned space flights by Soviets or North Americans, only on occasions were electroencephalograms obtained, scientific interest being concentrated on the level of alertness and sleep. The Cortex biomedical experiment, which for the first time will determine the evoked potential in space flights, initiates a direction in scientific-technical work aimed at obtaining better and more complex indexes of the capacities for activity of the cosmonauts.

Undoubtedly this will be useful in determining the effects in this respect of environmental factors and the task assigned and in evaluating the effectiveness of training and prophylactic measures applied.

Soviet-Cuban Space Collaboration in Cortex

Cortex, the study of the functional state of the central nervous system of man during space flight, which is its official name, is a joint Soviet-Cuban experiment proposed and scientifically directed by the Cubans: The Department of Scientific-Medical-Military Research, which belongs to the medical services of our Ministry of the Revolutionary Armed Forces and to the Institute for Basic Technical Research (ININTEF) of the Academy of Sciences.

The Soviet agencies participating in Cortex are the Institute of Medical-Biological Problems of the Ministry of Public Health and the Institute for Biophysical Equipment (BIOFIZPRIBORG) of Leningrad.

The general management of the experiment is the responsibility of Doctor of Sciences Candidate Emilio Guma Diaz of the Department of Scientific-Medical-Military Research, with the help of a group of efficient Cuban and Soviet specialists and technicians who developed the research program and built the Cortex equipment installed in the "Salyut."

The Soviets (of BIOFIZPRIBORG) provided the system of amplifiers for the brain microvoltage, which includes the monitoring panel for the entire instrument system of the experiment and also the adapter tube for the light and sound stimulator (by means of which the cosmonauts will receive the light and sound stimuli).

The stimulator itself was created by a small taskforce in the ININTEF led by technician Fausto Rodriguez Sanchez, chief of its Electronic Circuit Laboratory and consisting of engineer Carlos Jimenez Padron and technician Mario Grijalba.

This compact device, in which was included the power supply for the magnetic recorder, produces the light flashes in a xenon gas lamp and the snaps in a transistorized circuit.

Cuban technicians also prepared the inclusion of the four-track magnetic recorder which will store the information obtained for its analysis by electronic computers once the cosmonauts have returned to earth.

Problems and More Problems, But All Resolved!

The development of equipment which would make the Cortex Program possible was not an easily resolved affair. The technological base of the biomedical experiment had to be reliable and sufficient, of possible and easy operation by the cosmonauts and, of course, it had to be as small as possible and highly resistant to the conditions of orbital flight.

To build the latex helmets, the characteristics of the cosmonaut who would use them were taken into account. Specialists from the Manuel Fajardo Superior Physical Education School made a plaster cast directly from the head of Cosmonaut Tamayo, over which his latex helmet for the insertion of electrodes was formed.

The use of an adjustable helmet guarantees the placement of the electrodes in the proper parts of the head in keeping with reference lines: from the middle of the forehead to the middle of the base of the skull and from ear to ear.

The manufacture of the latex helmets--it was necessary to make the sets for Romanenko and Tamayo and the backup space crew--included the drilling of holes for ventilation, the placement of reference marks for adjustment to the head, chin straps for fastening them on by means of textile closures [presumably Velcro], all this accomplished by technicians of the Department of Scientific-Medical-Military Research with high efficiency and creativity, on the basis of a basic idea.

The same magnificently finished case which contains the latex helmet, was a technical design perfected by Cuban leather workers. The latex helmets, electrodes, plastic syringes containing the conductive paste which insures good contact with hairy skin, the headphones, cables and other accessories are contained and very well fastened in this case, which in turn has textile closures (called "magic closure") which prevents it from "floating" because of weightlessness.

Any of these accessories must be prepared for space conditions and it supposes a serious scientific-technical effort.

The plastic syringe, for example, which contains the five cubic centimeters of conductive paste, is very well fastened in the case. But its plunger is in turn fastened to the piston by a small plastic cable and the safety which prevents the plunger from being accidentally pushed to squeeze out the paste is also fastened to the piston by a small cable. The orifice for the paste at the end of the piston has a cap and it is also tied to the body of the syringe. This prevents any of these elements from separating and "floating" around in the interior of the space vehicle during weightlessness.

Each detail of the elements which make up the Cortex technological system has been the result of fraternal development and Soviet-Cuban collaboration, of the efforts of scientists, technicians and workers of the two countries. Each accessory was tested on land to establish its suitability for space flight and all of them obtained--to the legitimate pride of the Cuban and Soviet people--technical approval.

The flight of the Cuban cosmonaut Tamayo and his space comrade Romanenko, gives credit to the very serious scientific work of Cuban biomedicine.

A Meeting With Cuban Master Jewelers Who Made the Electrodes For the Realization of Experiment Cortex

Domingo Caballero Arteaga and Raul Lopez Delgado are the two Cuban master jewelers who were mainly responsible for the fabrication of the silver electrodes used in the Cortex biomedical experiment. The two craftsmen work in the Dos de Energo shop of the Custom Jewelry and Lamp Enterprise of the Ministry of Light Industry at San Miguel and Amistad Streets in Havana.

The former has more than 40 years as a jeweler and the other, a little younger, has 31. The two have an enormous amount of experience in their trade.

Domingo and Raul--without knowing what it was about but feeling that it was something important for the revolution--began to work on the detailed plans of the electrodes with its specifications, measurements and so forth. They introduced some modifications so that they could be made faster. They made them on an assembly line basis and even made special tools so that the number required could be provided in the time stipulated.

They made a template, they made "rows" of special jewelry and other small accessories and they placed themselves at the head of a determined team of experienced jewelers of Havana, who worked many extra hours voluntarily, and a special shift on Saturday and Sunday. "We did not know what they were for, but I, in anything that is of benefit for my country, am always ready. And now that I know what I was working for, I feel very satisfied and happy."

This was said by Domingo when he learned where the tiny electrodes of the purest silver he helped make have gone.

"It took me by surprise. I thought that it was a piece for our pilots. I never would have imagined that it was for space work. I believe that if we had known that we may have even become nervous. Now I feel proud of having helped in that work," says master jeweler Raul Lopez when he was informed of the destination of his valuable effort.

The Leatherworkers Who Made the Cases For Experiment Cortex

"Just think, I feel very happy that our country has cosmonauts and, obviously happier yet because I helped a little bit in it. I believe this is a step forward only made possible thanks to the revolution and the help of the Soviet Union," says a Cuban leatherworker who has been 50 years at his craft, Rigoberto Primo Herrera, worker of the Specialty Shop of the Havana Leatherworking Enterprise of the Ministry of Light Industry located at Chaple and Palma Streets, Palatino.

"I suffered the contempt of management in the past and look at me now, working so that the cosmonauts can fly! I feel very highly regarded," says this veteran worker joyfully.

Pablo Homero Vega, smiling and happy, also took part in the work of making the cases for Cortex. "It fell on me to make the molds and the cases. They told me: 'It has to be light and the instruments have to be well fastened inside. It must be easy to open and close and easily handled. I made a sample for them and it was all right. Then the rest were made. I feel very proud and happy at having helped in that. It is a great thing that a Cuban goes into space," declares this skilled and veteran leatherworker.

Who Prepared the Latex For the Helmet With Electrodes of the Cortex Experiment?

Jose Gilberto Leal Ramos is a mixer of compounds in the Rene Bedia Morales establishment on Rancho Boyeros in Havana.

He usually works in the production of footwear accessories but on this occasion he was made responsible for mixing a tank of natural latex with other substances into which four large plaster forms were immersed.

The four "forms" were the molds which reproduce the anatomical configuration of the heads of the cosmonauts making the joint Soviet-Cuban flight (including the backup crew).

But this information was not known by Jose Gilberto. With discipline he prepared the operation carefully and carried it out successfully. From his work there emerged the latex helmets into which are fixed the electrodes which record the brain functions of the cosmonauts.

Now, however, Jose Gilberto knows everything and he feels satisfied. "I knew it was for something important. Officers of the Revolutionary Armed Forces came and it was necessary to work quickly and carefully. I did not ask what it was for. I was asked to perform a task for the revolution and I complied as always. At no time did I suspect that it was for a space flight. It has been a tremendous surprise to me and I feel happy. This is something very important for our society and humanity."

8908
CSO: 3010

FIRST-YEAR RESULTS OF SIXTH NONALIGNED SUMMIT NOTED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 3 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Today it has been 1 year since the opening in Havana of the Sixth Conference of Chiefs of State or Government of the Nonaligned Countries. On 3 September 1979, representatives of the countries making up that powerful movement met in our capital to hold a conference that, for more than one reason, will occupy a permanent niche in history. Never before had so many chiefs of state or heads of government gathered at the same place; on no other occasion had so many leaders from such a variety of countries met to discuss the most pressing issues confronting mankind. For almost a week, Havana lodged the most statesmen who had ever come together to discuss the modern world's chief problems thoroughly, candidly and in a responsible fashion.

The fact that they were able to do it, defying the pressure, intrigues and insidious machinations mounted by the imperialists and their henchmen, was in itself a major victory. For all our peoples' enemies shamelessly conspired against the Sixth Summit, against its taking place, against its being carried to a successful completion.

However, they failed resoundingly. On a day like today, Fidel Castro formally opened the conference with a speech that since then has remained a basic document of the movement, a blueprint and guide for future action. On that occasion, Fidel analyzed, with universally acknowledged profundity and clarity, the basic issues of international life, the problems of war and peace, of the difficult, resolute struggle undertaken by the peoples of Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean to overcome underdevelopment, to defeat colonialism, neocolonialism, imperialism and racism in all their forms and manifestations, to create a new economic order and a system of international cooperation that are genuine, eliminating injustice, inequality and oppression.

One year after the opening of that decisive meeting, the Movement of Nonaligned Countries is exerting increasing influence in world affairs, and it continues to be a powerful tool for the peoples fighting against imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism and racism, against Zionism, against exploitation and aggression, for peace, detente, disarmament, economic development and international cooperation.

During the past year, the movement has had to deal with the machinations of its enemies, who have tried unsuccessfully to turn it from its natural course and alienate it from its roots, which are nothing other than the age-old struggle of our peoples against colonial, imperialist domination.

Those efforts have also failed, as will all those intended to impede the inevitable course of history. Today, as yesterday, the nonaligned countries are renewing their adherence to the anti-imperialist, progressive principles from which they sprang. Today they are reaffirming their will to strengthen their unity and solidarity to fight for a better world. Today they are continuing to advance, guided by the words uttered by Fidel, speaking as chairman of the movement, on 3 September 1979: "Let us unite to demand our right to development, our right to life, our right to the future."

9085
CSO: 3010

FAR 20th ANNIVERSARY MEDAL AWARDED TO INTERNATIONALIST WORKERS

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 6 Sep 80 p 1

[Dispatch by Fernando Davalos]

[Text] Yesterday nearly 400 merchant marine and port workers, crew members and technicians who contributed to the successful fulfillment of the internationalist missions of our Revolutionary Armed Forces [FAR] received the medal commemorating the 20th Anniversary of the FAR. The solemn ceremony took place at the Cacahual, beside the glorious remains of Lt Gen Antonio Maceo and his adjutant, Capt Panchito Gomez Toro.

"Like the rest of the country, our ports and our merchant fleet became the secure rear guard for the internationalist Cuban fighters, and their workers rivaled, in courage and determination, the men who, on the various battle fronts and in close cooperation with the peoples under attack, inflicted the most crushing defeat on the enemy," said Jorge Risquet, member of the Secretariat of the Communist Party Central Committee, speaking at the ceremony.

He praised the self-denial, the efficiency, courage and strict discipline of our seamen, who contributed to the execution of the military operations in support of our brother peoples in Angola and Ethiopia, who had been viciously attacked.

Revolutionary Commander Guillermo Garcia, member of the Politburo and minister of transportation, and Div Gen Senen Casas, member of the Central Committee and first vice minister/chief of the general staff, were also present at the ceremony.

The sounding of "Assembly," the presentation of the colors, and a drumroll were followed by placement of a floral wreath against the mausoleum and then the playing of "Taps" on the bugle, all in honor of the heroes on behalf of the seamen and port workers decorated yesterday.

This was followed by the playing of the national anthem, and then Rear Adm Emigdio Baez Vigo read the Council of State's resolution granting the medal commemorating the 20th Anniversary of the FAR to these valiant workers. After that, the medals were presented by Guillermo Garcia, Jorge Risquet, Div Gen Senen Casas, Div Gen Sixto Batista, chief of the Central Political Directorate of the FAR, and Brig Gen Ulises Rosales, chief of the Western Army, all of them members of the party Central Committee.

Then, speaking on behalf of the internationalist seamen, Jorge Iturriaga reiterated their oath to continue carrying out honorable internationalist missions, to face all the maritime and port tasks our economy may require, to continue being loyal followers of our people's traditions of struggle, and to heighten their combat preparedness. Jorge Risquet spoke after that.

Also present at the ceremony were Brig Gen Calixto Garcia, member of the party Central Committee and chief of its Military Department, Lt Gen Sergey Krivoplyazov, chief of the Soviet military experts working in Cuba, Evaristo Baranda, secretary general of the National Union of Merchant Marine, Port and Fishery Workers, MITRANS [Ministry of Transportation] officials, FAR officers and other guests, including relatives of those honored with medals.

9085
CSO: 3010

CONSTRUCTION WORKERS COMPLETE PROJECTS IN GUINEA EARLY

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 22 Aug 80 pp 64-66

[Article by Gloria Marsan: "Cuban Builders in the People's Republic of Guinea Steal Time From the Calendar"]

[Text] Collaboration Begins

In the construction sector, Cuba began its cooperation with the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea in 1971, following a visit paid by Commander in Chief Fidel Castro to that country. Among the government agreements was one calling for the dispatch of a Cuban mission to carry out preliminary studies with a view to the establishment of a poultry industry for this brotherly people.

When the study phase was ended, agreement was reached on the building of a poultry-breeding combine, which would be located in the environs of the city of Conakry, the capital, incorporating the whole range in this important production sector. The project was to be the Ratoma Farm, which from the construction point of view began Cuban-Guinean collaboration in the architectural field.

The Ratoma poultry-breeding establishment was conceived as a base for future development. It is a farm with a double purpose, to produce eggs and meat. It has an incubator which can hatch 35,000 eggs every normal 21-day cycle. To obtain a pure breed, plans call for sending eggs from Cuba to guarantee maximal productivity in eggs and meat.

As a part of the complex, a feed mill and mixer was built, with a production capacity more than satisfying the feed needs at the farm, on the basis of domestic raw materials--fish, corn and other grains.

The Kaporo Poultry Farm

In 1978, as called for in the agreement, the second phase of Guinean poultry development was begun with the construction, in the Kaporo zone, of a high-production farm, with 11 double-purpose sheds accommodating 16,500 young chickens, 10,300 in the developing stage and 11,000 laying hens. In addition, a school with a capacity for 120 students, 80 of them boarders, was built to train technical cadres and skilled workers in this specialty.

The brigade in charge of construction in this new phase is made up of 27 workers, including carpenters, masons, welders, joiners, etc, in addition to administrative and service personnel, a chief technician, a topographer, and the brigade chief. To this group were added 35 Guineans from the militia force, who served as assistants while they were learning the various skills.

This brigade was congratulated on its excellent work and the overfulfillment, under extremely difficult conditions, of the plan for the delivery of this project, scheduled to take 22 months but completed in only 17. With their mission completed, the members of the brigade enjoyed a well-earned holiday on their return to Cuba. BOHEMIA interviewed some of the members to obtain a direct report on the work done.

Successful Internationalist Work

"Prior to the Kaporo experience," Comrade Hiram Aguila, chief of the Cuban farm brigade in Guinea, told us, "Cuban builders departing on internationalist missions made a commitment for a year. But the schedule for the Kaporo poultry farm was 22 months. This meant that the workers would return to Cuba at the end of 12 months, and a new brigade would be sent out to finish the project.

"After analyzing the situation with the UNECA [Union of Caribbean Construction Enterprises], the body which directs construction abroad, we were told of the new circumstance, when the brigade was already prepared to depart. We all stepped forth to pledge ourselves to complete the farm without taking a vacation, and to adjust the schedule so as to complete it in 18 months.

"On 24 January 1978, the work on the farm began, and we encountered serious problems in the supply of materials. In the month of April, the Cuban fleet succeeded in establishing a proper sequence for the transportation of materials, and the work stabilized. The personnel was divided into two voluntary work brigades, and at the end of the labor day, the designated group worked until 7 pm, including Sundays. And, as is natural, on the days when casting was being done, we all stayed until it was completed.

"It should be recognized," Hiram went on, "that it was not only all the Cubans in the brigade who collaborated on this project, but also others who were for one reason or another passing through there. For example, the crews of various ships did voluntary labor. Among these I recall the comrades from the Robalo and the Oceano Pacifico.

"It is important to note the decisive contribution made by the mass voluntary mobilizations of the Guinean people, carried out with great enthusiasm by the political and mass organizations, among them the Local Revolutionary Authorities (PRL).

"On a number of Sundays various diplomats from African countries came to work on the project, as well as Vietnamese and members of the Free German Youth Brigade from the GDR. Also the workers in the brigade currently building the Kissidougou highway made an outstanding contribution to the building of the poultry combine.

"And so it was with the cooperation of all that the great triumph was achieved. And on 14 June, in a ceremony to celebrate the birthday of Maceo and Che Guevara, this project vital to the future development of poultry breeding in Guinea was completed, after only 17 months," Hiram Aguilar concluded.

Three Times National Hero of Labor

Officially, Lazaro Sandoval is a clerk in a warehouse of the Hardware Items Supply Enterprise. But Lazaro is not a man to remain inactive long. He understands the usefulness of and need for his work, but he feels better when, in addition to this responsibility, he engages in greater physical activity.

For this reason Lazaro now has the Combatant for the Harvest certificate. He has participated in 13 sugarcane harvests and has been awarded the Jesus Menendez Order 3 times. In addition he was named a National Harvest Hero for cutting 175,000 arrobas of sugarcane in 1 contest. And also with machete in hand, he has 3 times won the title National Labor Hero, by cutting 200,000 arrobas.

"I believe that this is the greatest honor an ordinary man who behaves heroically can win. But the most moving thing for me was when I read a resolution published in the GACETA OFICIAL explaining that all the comrades who maintained a consistent attitude toward the building of a socialist society had been awarded the 20th Anniversary of the Attack on the Moncada Barracks Medal, and on the list of those receiving it was my name. Really I never thought I could merit such a high honor.

"One of my first jobs when I was young was in construction. And so, when an appeal for workers to go to the priority industrial projects was made in 1970, I returned to my old profession again. I was working on the construction of a container base at the Havana docks when an appeal was issued for volunteers for construction in Angola. I worked on the building of eight bridges there, and I was also named a vanguard worker.

"Back in Cuba, I returned to my job as clerk in a warehouse. But when the appeal for construction in Guinea came, I went back to my job as builder again. We arrived in the second group, on 11 February last year, and then we began to work. Although I am a painter, one does everything in construction, and what I do I do well, because I put in the vital ingredient in my work, which is love, and even if you have never done something, if you do it with love it must come out right.

"I found very great satisfaction in the building of the Ratoma farm. It was when we were all together in the Cuban embassy residence that I learned I had been chosen a vanguard worker of the brigade for 1979. I am not very sure why, but that announcement was extraordinarily moving for me. I who always lose my voice when I must speak in public was inspired and spoke very well. Then a comrade said he was sure I had been practicing. This was not really true, but these words came from my heart, and I have never since been able to produce words as beautiful as those were."

A Socialist Triumph

Without a doubt this is a triumph of socialist labor. Only socialist, internationalist morality could unite the will of all the workers. For it is a question not only of extraordinary effort on the part of those who promised to carry out the construction of the poultry complex, but also the collaboration of those who, without a specific commitment to that project, felt responsibility and internationalist solidarity for a revolutionary project.

Now the brigade is back in Cuba. The members were congratulated by Comrade Levi Farah Balmaseda, the minister for construction abroad, and they confirmed again their determination to go where the revolution sends them. Without a doubt this is a new example and triumph of socialism.

Merited Recognition

Col Ricardo Gutierrez
Chief, Construction Contingent
Guinea Poultry Brigade
Embassy of Cuba, Conakry, Guinea

Comrade:

It is with deep satisfaction that we read your report announcing the completion of the poultry farm which our government has donated to this brotherly people. It is a source of pride to all of us to have an internationalist brigade such as yours, which was able, under difficult conditions, to overfulfill the plan for delivery of this project in advance, and on such a notable date as that of the birth of Maceo and Che Guevara. We want to congratulate you on the work done and our certainty that we can rely on you for any other work which the fatherland may require. I wish you success personally and on behalf of the construction sector.

Levi Farah Balmaseda, Minister for Construction Abroad

The 27 Brigade Members

Hiram Aguila, Juan de Dios, Juan de Mata, Eduardo Pileta, Barbara Mustelier, Alvaro Perez, Rigoberto Jova, Aldo Gonzalez, Nelson Ramirez, Jesus Acosta, Ruperto Vidal, Fernando Gonzalez, Ernesto Ledesma, Emilio Fournier, Alexis Hernandez, Jose Jimenez, Lazaro Sandoval, Domingo Ortega, Manuel Silva, Guillermo Martinez, Aidel Diaz, Jacinto Vega, Gonzalo Gonzalez, Claudio Cobas, Angel Perez, Santos Correas, Julio Letran.

5157
CSO: 3010

FAR EMULATION LAUNCHED AT GUANTANAMO GUARD SITE

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 2 Sep 80 p 4

[Article by Agustin Perez Hechavarria: "Frontier Brigade Proclaimed Initial Unit in FAR Socialist Emulation"]

[Text] Guantanamo--The ceremony proclaiming the frontier brigade as the unit launching the socialist emulation in the FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces] in the 1980-81 training year began with a review of the troops.

Maj Gen Sixto Batista Santana, head of the political office of the FAR, and Alfonso Hodge, first secretary of the party for the province, both members of the Central Committee; Maj Gen Julio Casas Regueiro, commander of the Eastern Army and substitute member of the Central Committee; other FAR officers; and officials of the MININT [Ministry of the Interior] and the provincial party bureau; and representatives of the political and mass organizations were present at the solemn ceremony.

The pledge-emulation challenge to the other units of the Revolutionary Armed Forces was read by Col Orgelino Perez. The document calls for development of effective ideological work, increasing the combat readiness of the troops and implementing more profound psychological training, fulfillment of technical maintenance and repair plans and other aspects basic to the fulfillment of the missions assigned this historic unit.

The document further stressed the role played by the members of the frontier brigade in the anti-imperialist front lines of Cuba, just a few meters from the territory usurped by the naval base the United States government maintains in this province against the will of the people.

On behalf of the provincial party bureau, Arsenio Dopazo spoke, stressing the meaningful honor represented by the designation of the frontier brigade as the unit to launch the socialist emulation of the FAR in the year of the Second Party Congress, because of the self-sacrificing work of its members, and he appealed to the workers in the province to be exemplary in production as the soldiers of the brigade are in their work.

The concluding address was delivered by Brig Gen Jesus Bermudez, who stressed the extraordinary symbolism of the proclamation today of the frontier brigade as the launching unit of the socialist emulation of the FAR on the very spot where for almost 20 years its soldiers have heroically and calmly faced up to numerous provocations and acts of aggression.

He added that the fact that this unit was chosen among the many which would have liked to be is a result of the profound evaluation of the results achieved in the various sectors of its activities, which are firmly supported by a rich and solid combat tradition.

He stressed the fact that the movement of units initiating socialist emulation which developed some years ago within the FAR represents an effective tool for political-ideological work, contributes to the successful execution of the missions assigned and is a factor reflected in the constant increase in the combat and mobilization readiness of the troops and the increase in the defense potential of the fatherland.

In conclusion, he recalled the words spoken by Gen Raul Castro Ruz on his visit to this brigade on 1 February 1965: "If the Cuban socialist revolution is the vanguard in America, this military unit occupies the vanguard trench of socialism on this continent. This unit should be the most exemplary of all."

5157
CSO: 3010

MILITARY UNIT 2746 MEMBERS RECEIVE PARTY CARDS

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 24 Aug 80 p 55

[Article by J. C. G.: "Recognition of the Communists"]

[Text] Vice Adm Aldo Santamaria Cuadrado, substituting for the minister of the FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces], commander of the Revolutionary Navy (MGR), and a member of the Central Committee, presided at the solemn ceremony at which new Communist Party of Cuba cards were presented to the militants in Military Unit 2746.

The political gathering, held in the theater of that unit, was characterized by its patriotic-revolutionary content, and was an eloquent demonstration of the attitude of the MGR combatants toward each of the tasks the state assigns them.

After the playing of our national anthem, Guard Commander Raul Gonzalez Rigal read an order expressing the congratulations of Vice Admiral Santamaria to all the members of the unit for the effort and dedication they have shown in the fulfillment of the missions assigned.

Then a large group of commissioned and non-commissioned officers, seamen and civilian workers were presented with the cards accrediting them as party militants, while the invader's march provided a suitable background for the solemn ceremony.

After the presentation, a document drafted by the central political office of the FAR was read. It stated that the change in the cards and the use of the other party documents are of a basically political-organizational nature and will contribute to strengthening the internal life of the party.

This process has without a doubt served to encourage the individual analysis of shortcomings and difficulties, approached through healthy and constructive discussion, which has made possible closer links between the political bodies and the membership.

"Among the members receiving the new cards," the document said, "the most representative of the members of our military forces are to be found--soldiers in the rebel army and the clandestine forces, from the Bay of Pigs, the campaign against bandits, internationalist soldiers and others who have distinguished themselves by their vanguard position during the missions assigned to them, many of them also being founders of our party."

In the concluding address, the substitute for the minister of the FAR and commander of the MGR spoke of the significance to the communists in this unit of receiving their new cards, accrediting them as militants in the vanguard of our people, a status they have made evident with full intensity in the fulfillment of the missions assigned by the party, the commander in chief, and the minister of the FAR.

On behalf of all the combatants in the Revolutionary Navy, he congratulated them on the successful execution of their duty, and urged them to continue their training in order to face up with determination to their missions as a part of this people, which, the commander in chief said, "deserves victory."

5157
CSO: 3010

BASIC INDUSTRY MINISTRY SIX-MONTH REPORT

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 4 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Joaquin Oramas]

[Text] The Ministry of Basic Industry met its production plan with a performance rate of 97 percent. The value of all production was 581.7 million pesos and compared with the same period of last year, growth of 7 percent was reported.

The ministry announced that the branches which exceeded their respective plans during the period in question were electric power, with 3 percent, mining and nonferrous metallurgy, with 1 percent, and nonelectric machine building. These branches also produced more than during the first 6 months of last year.

Other branches with positive growth were chemical production, the paper and cellulose industry, the glass industry, ceramics, and construction and assembly.

It was also announced that 40 enterprises met their plans with performance rates of over 90 percent and of these, 32 achieved the maximum levels of the plan.

Lack of Demand for Electric Power

According to the Ministry of Basic Industry report, 4,288,863,200 kilowatt-hours of electric power were generated, which represents 96.5 percent of the goal set. This represents a growth of 8 percent over the same period last year. The failure to fulfill 3.5 percent of the goal set is due to the drop in demand.

Among the outstanding electrical power plants in the country are Diez de Octubre, in Nuevitas, which exceeded its goal by 22.9 percent, and Maximo Gomez, which bettered its plan by 7.2 percent.

However, the specific fuel consumption plan figure was not met. A total of 286.3 grams of oil was burned per kilowatt-hour generated compared with a goal of 284 grams per kilowatt-hour. The increase in fuel consumption is due to poor performance of thermoelectric power plants basically caused by drops in demand at nearly all plants, deferred maintenance at units of the Havana Generating Enterprise, and to a lesser extent, to problems of transmitting power, which makes it necessary to use less efficient units.

The Carlos Manuel de Cespedes plant in Cienfuegos continues to be the most efficient in the country, with a specific consumption of 237.1 grams per kilowatt-hour, compared with the plan goal of 239. There was also a failure to meet the planned available power, which was nearly 8 percent under the plan. Nevertheless, the number of outages dropped to 42 days, 22 fewer than during the same period last year.

In addition, in the fuel branch, processing of crude oil achieved a rate of 99 percent, although there were increases in the production of liquid gas, kerosene and manufactured gas. The lubricant goal was not met because of a lack of raw materials.

Good Six Months for Mining

The production of nickel plus cobalt, an important export bringing in foreign exchange, exceeded the plan goal by 1 percent, while the Maintenance and Mining Services Enterprises exceeded its goal by 18 percent.

Copper production is also going well, meeting the plan with a rate of 114 percent in Matahambre and 100 percent in Mina Grande del Cobre. Production of carbonates, dolomite and magnesite exceeded plan goals, while bentonite achieved a performance of only 92 percent due to the failure to deliver.

Iron pyrite production is behind due to difficulties in the preparation of the Santa Lucia quarry. Problems which affected silica sand transport are being overcome. Phosphoric rock production met 89 percent of its goal.

The Ministry of Basic Industry also announced that the extraction of salt met only 67 percent of the figure set because of rainfall affecting the Matanzas and Villa Clara salt works. Salt has been greatly affected in the past 4 years by intensive rainfall in salt regions, causing stocks to drop to the lowest levels ever.

For this industry, a project has been worked out envisioning an expansion of extraction areas and modernization of processing plants.

In the industrial gas branch, only acetylene exceeded its goal. Oxygen and argon, caustic soda, liquid chlorine and hydrochloric acid production did not meet goals.

Growth in Mixed Fertilizers

During the first 6 months, growth of 14 percent was reported in the production of mixed fertilizers. All enterprises with the exception of Felton exceeded their delivery levels compared with last year.

However, production was affected at the nitrogenous fertilizer combines, with a drop of 17 percent compared with the first 6 months of 1979.

Production of herbicides jumped 47 percent compared with the previous year, as did insecticides. However, regarding the latter and rat poisons, production was affected by agriculture's reduced usage. There was an increase in the production of superphosphates during the 6-month period and the plan was exceeded by 40 percent.

There was a significant increase in tire recapping and the total number was 184,254. It must be stated, however, that only 80 percent of the plan goal was met in terms of units, while 94 percent of the value was achieved, because the planned number of caps was not received.

During this phase, tire production is far behind programmed goals despite a growth of 30 percent compared with the first half of last year. Difficulties stem from delays in the supply of raw material and the lack of personnel in the month of May.

The Ministry of Basic Industry report emphasizes the Humberto Lamothe Shoe Factory's performance, as well as that of the Havana Rayon Plant and the La Lisa glass combine. It also reports difficulties in the management of the paper and cardboard branch, which met plan goals with a rate of 93 percent due to the inadequate condition of basic technological equipment stemming from a shortage of spare parts at the Havana Paper Enterprise and to technical and operational problems at the Pulp and Cuban Technical enterprises. There were scarcities of some raw materials.

Finally, the report emphasizes that paint production exceeded plan goals by 19 percent. However, delays in shipments of basic raw materials caused most production to be postponed until the second half of the year. Nevertheless, the volume of paint production rose 6 percent when compared with the same period in 1979.

11,464
CSO: 3010

PENA GOMEZ ON PRIVATE ENTERPRISE, ELECTIONS

Communism Not Appropriate

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 5 Sep 80 pp 1, 2

[Article by Juan Baez]

[Text] Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez said yesterday to a group of businessmen from this country that the Dominican Republic is in no position right now to endure a communist regime in the style of Fidel Castro of Cuba.

This was reported by some businessmen who participated in a luncheon given yesterday noon by the National Council of Businessmen for the secretary general of the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD) at a restaurant in the capital.

"A Fidel-type socialist regime could never take over this country, because we are not prepared for it," one of the businessman quoted Pena Gomez as saying at the luncheon.

The PRD leader explained to the businessmen the details of the interview he had with the leader of the Cuban revolution when both of them visited Nicaragua last month on the occasion of the first anniversary of the revolution that overthrew the dictatorship of Anastasio Somoza.

During that meeting, according to our source, Dr Pena Gomez asked that Fidel Castro release a grandson of the liberator Maximo Gomez, Andres Vargas Gomez, who has been held prisoner for several years there.

Castro responded that he could do nothing about it.

The luncheon began at about 1300 hours and lasted until nearly 1600 hours.

One of the businessmen who participated in the event said that Pena Gomez "is a man who can do a lot for the country. Many of us were wrong about him."

Another participant commented that he was reluctant to go to the luncheon, but after going he felt satisfied; he even asked the PRD leader to embrace him at the conclusion of the meeting.

With regard to the meeting between Pena Gomez and Fidel Castro, the businessman remarked that the leader of the Cuban revolution told Pena Gomez that support should be given to President Jimmy Carter in the U.S. elections next November. He did not go into detail.

Castro recently stated that a victory for Ronald Reagan, the Republican candidate, would represent a threat to the democratic nations of Latin America.

At the meeting between Pena Gomez and the businessmen, national politics and the economic situation of the country were not discussed.

Two basic points were brought up: the medical campaign in the south, sponsored by the PRD, to which the businessmen promised to give all their support, and a national literacy plan.

The businessmen promised to provide full economic and material support for the development of the latter plan.

"We told Dr Pena Gomez that we are willing to participate in a national literacy campaign sponsored by the PRD. We would provide economic support as well as training for teachers for the purpose of eradicating illiteracy in this country," commented the businessman who talked with journalists after the luncheon.

He said that at the luncheon there was a discussion of the advantage to be derived from that kind of meeting between businessmen and political leaders. He commented that this was the first time that such a get-together had been formally arranged. About 2 months ago another meeting of this kind was held, but in private.

The source indicated that all the businessmen left the luncheon satisfied yesterday. "We expressed our desire to meet again soon with other political leaders." However, no names were mentioned, nor did anyone specify parties, or dates when such meetings would take place.

Among those present were Antonio Najri; Mario Cabrera, president of the Industrial Association of the Dominican Republic; Belarminio Cortina, president of the Official Chamber of Agriculture and Industry of Santiago; and Roberto Bonetti, general administrator of the Dominican Industrial Society.

Others present were Lorenzo Garcia Troncoso, second vice president of the National Council of Businessmen; Heriberto Castro, vice president of that organization; Jose del Carmen Ariza; Ramon Vila Piola; Jose Vilarta; Andres Dauhajre, president of the Dominican Importers Association; and Antonio Najri, Jr.

Opposes Presidential Reelections

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 8 Sep 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] The secretary general of the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD), Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez, repeated last night his radical opposition to presidential reelections.

He said he trusts that in 1982 the Dominican Republic will have a new constitutional president.

Pena Gomez indicated that President Antonio Guzman will take a stand next year, and he asserted that reelection is a political defect here and in all of Latin America.

The political leader presented a general analysis of Latin American politics and the general elections that will take place next November in the United States.

He stated that if the Republican candidate Ronald Reagan wins the election, the reaction in Latin America "will be terrible," not because Reagan would encourage coups in the region, because he understands that in such cases the United States would lose its ideological battle with the Soviet Union.

Pena Gomez indicated that Reagan has a rightist and anticommunist image, and that a victory for him would have psychological effects on the right in the entire region, in the sense that it would feel stimulated.

He said that in such a situation of "general panic," there is no doubt that some people in this country would claim that in order not to lose the democratic advances that have been made under this administration, they would favor keeping Guzman in power.

He recalled that the United States has shifted to the right, and cited among the factors that have caused this shift the military imbalance between the Americans and the Soviets, and the holding of American hostages by the Iranian Government.

Pena Gomez appeared on the program "Cuarto Poder" [Fourth Power], hosted by journalist Miguel Hernandez on the government network.

The PRD secretary general repeated his stand against reelection, and asserted that the system that prevails in most of Latin America was inspired by the American system, "but it is a poor copy of the political system of the United States."

He said that the United States has separation of powers, but in America the power of the president outweighs the others.

For this reason, he stated, the only guarantee of a representative democratic system is to limit the time a chief of state can remain in office.

Not Candidate in 1982

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 8 Sep 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez stated once again last night that he will not be a candidate in the general elections of 1982, and asserted that only former President Joaquin Balaguer could face the party he leads in 1982.

He indicated that conditions are not yet ripe in this country for him to win the presidency.

He claimed to be a man without political ambitions, but explained that he did not reject any elective office through fear.

The secretary general of the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD) stated that his decision was not taken through fear of racists; he remarked that today there are more social and political prejudices here "than during other eras of Dominican history."

He recalled that two black people, Gregorio Luperon and Ulises Heureaux, attained the presidency of this country.

Pena Gomez has taken on the mission of leading the PRD, he said, "to its final destiny," without accelerating the pace so as to avoid falling.

He indicated that any acceptance by him of nomination to an elective office could create a division of groups, and that his mission was to unite the party.

Pena Gomez repeated that the PRD will not become divided after the national convention which elects the candidates for the 1982 elections. After that convention, according to him, the party will back the candidates selected, as it did in 1978.

Only the Reformist president, Dr Balaguer, could oppose the PRD in 1982, he claimed.

He remarked that the opposition should not be fooled in this respect, because "Balaguer has people all over the place." Pena Gomez stated, however, that the PRD has a great advantage over other groups, and it will win the next elections.

Pena Gomez appeared on the program "Cuarto Poder" [Fourth Power], hosted by journalist Miguel Hernandez on the government network.

He explained that the extreme leftists must be aware that here there will be no repeat of the Chinese or Cuban revolutions. When asked if it was true that he compared himself with the communist dictator of Cuba, Fidel Castro, he said: "Fidel is a giant; I am a pygmy."

At the beginning of the program, and in response to questions by Hernandez, the political leader mentioned the recent accusation by former President Balaguer that he was a "Trujillist."

He said that that was a spontaneous remark by Balaguer, and pointed out that even though he has always opposed the former president, the two have always respected each other.

Pena Gomez explained that it is possible that Balaguer was reacting this way to erroneous reports that he received about a recent event in Montecristi marking the opening of a PRD office.

He said that when construction began on that office, the then president of the PRD, Secundino Gil Morales, when breaking the ground, stated that he would like to give that honor (breaking the ground) to the Balaguer government.

Pena Gomez asserted that at the office opening ceremony, a PRD official of Montecristi quoted Gil Morales. Balaguer was informed that he (Pena Gomez) had said that the head of the former president should be crushed.

The PRD leader stated that during the tyranny of Rafael L. Trujillo, he made three or four speeches in favor of the regime, not just one, and that he had done so as an inexperienced youth. He claimed that he was also master of ceremonies at a Trujillo event in San Cristobal.

Pena Gomez indicated that one of his speeches, which was cited in Yaguate, during the Trujillo regime, was not made by force, as was alleged, but was made spontaneously.

However, he said he was an ardent anti-Trujillist, and that when he was a teacher in San Cristobal he launched an anti-Trujillo campaign among the teachers of that city.

He explained that when he worked at an educational institution for minors, he converted fellow teachers to anti-Trujillism, and did the same thing at Radiotelevision Dominicana when he was attending the Broadcasting School.

Later Pena Gomez recited three poems which he had written condemning the Trujillo dictatorship, and another one which he claimed proved his Christian devotion.

Pena Gomez also said that he has stood by his decision not to go any more to the National Palace for the rest of Antonio Guzman's presidential term, but he repeated that he would meet with the leader in his residence or that of Sans Souci.

He maintained that he understands the reasons why Guzman, after taking office on 16 August 1978, has not invited him to ride in his (Guzman's) limousine. He recalled that the campaign carried out by Dr Balaguer and the extreme right before the elections, was designed to emphasize the fact that Guzman, if he won (and he did) would be Pena's tool. He also claimed that the Palace is not the best place to deal with PRD issues with the chief of state.

He does not agree with those who claim he is opposed to presidential reelections in this country but is reelected every 2 years as secretary general of the PRD.

He said it is true that he is elected secretary general every 2 years "by acclamation," but he indicated that that is a democratic gesture by the party he heads. He asserted that the most important job in the PRD is the presidency, and that he has never sought that office because it is he, Dr Pena Gomez, who makes the secretary general position so important.

Social Aspect

Pena Gomez stated that in Latin America, under the representative democracy system, economic, social and cultural rights are not observed; only political and civil rights are observed. He claimed that in the communist system it is just the opposite, because political and civil rights are infringed upon, while economic, social and cultural rights are enforced.

He claimed that large nations of Western Europe have attained the observance of all rights, citing Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Switzerland, France and England.

He said that Soviet experts were able to see the inequalities between the Russians and the Swedes, in favor of the Swedes.

Then Pena Gomez asked what could be done to make democracy last.

He said human rights should be given their full weight, and the indispensable changes must be made in America.

He stated that in the Dominican Republic everyone should work for the people, in order to eradicate social inequality.

Pena Gomez then said that the PRD will begin this month a health crusade with 40 teams consisting of three doctors, a dentist, a nurse, a social worker and a laboratory technician.

He explained that on 13 and 14 October those teams will be in Bahoruco, Pedernales, Bahoruco [as published] and Independence, areas which were seriously affected by the passing of Hurricane Allen.

However, he defended the health policy of the Guzman Administration, especially that of the rural sector.

Pena Gomez also referred to the problem of illiteracy in the Dominican Republic, stating that more than 1 million Dominicans are unable even to write their names. He indicated that the PRD will launch a literacy campaign, and that in each neighborhood where there is a party office, that office will become a school.

He invited former rectors of the universities, businessmen, professors and political activists to lend their assistance.

He said that he was ashamed to recall that only Trujillo (Rafael Leonidas), in 1952, had a literacy campaign. He indicated that he was also ashamed that a group of Dominicans had gone to Nicaragua to work with the literacy campaign there, when there are a million illiterates right here.

8926
CSO: 3010

BOMB EXPLOSIONS KILL EXPERT, DAMAGE AIRCRAFT, BOATS

PA171431 Paris AFP in English 1327 GMT 18 Sep 80

[Text] Pointe-a-Pitre, Guadeloupe, Sep 18 (AFP)--A bomb disposal expert died as he tried to defuse one of four bombs which damaged an airliner and two police boats in this French Caribbean territory.

No responsibility was claimed for the explosions. But it was thought they could have been by a group for the armed liberation of Guadeloupe, which has been increasing threats and attacks against personalities, the police and the armed forces.

The explosions all occurred about the same time early yesterday morning, local time. The police expert died as one bomb exploded on the wing of an Air France Boeing 727 airliner at the airport at the island capital of Pointe-a-Pitre.

Another bomb left on the other wing had already gone off, but total damage was slight. More serious damage was caused to the two launches in the marina at Bas du Fort.

(In Paris Secretary of State for Overseas Departments and Territories Paul Dijoud today described the situation in Guadeloupe as calm following the airport bomb incident.

(He recognised that Guadeloupe had, "as elsewhere," small terrorist groups. That was one of the "problems of our times," he said.

(There was no tangible proof of any outside intervention in French departments overseas, he added in a radio interview. France was convinced, however, that "these isolated elements" could have received training "elsewhere," he said.)

CSO: 3020

BRIEFS

ADDITIONAL DEFENSE EXPENDITURES APPROVED--Georgetown, Guyana, Friday, (CANA) --The Guyana Parliament has approved $3.6 million (US$1.4 million) in additional expenditure for the defence force and the paramilitary national service. Of the amount, $800,000 (US$312,000) is going to the defence force under "other expenditure" head to supplement $20 million (US$7.8 million) approved for the same category in the 1979-1980 budget. The national service is getting $2.6 million (US$1 million) to maintain what government spokesmen said in parliament was the organisation's drive in quarrying and cotton production in Guyana's interior. The service caters for the military training of thousands of young Guyanese and also provides training and the development of skills in agriculture and technical fields. The new sum passed in parliament this week is also to supplement $15 million (US$5.8 million) granted in the 1979-80 budget. In all, the house passed a total of $15 million as supplementary provision on current and capital estimates for development work "and other projects" undertaken in 1979 and continuing this year. [Excerpts] [FL171300 Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 13 Sep 80 p 3]

GUYANA RICE AID--Georgetown, Guayan, Sunday (CANA)--The Guyana Government yesterday announced it was sending 5,000 bags of high quality rice to aid two fellow member states of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) hit by Hurricane Allen last month. The Information Ministry said shipments of 2,500 bags each are being expedited by the Guyana rice board for Saint Lucia, and St Vincent, two islands in the Caribbean badly hit by Allen when it swept through the region. The rice is expected to be shipped from Georgetown on September 15. The ministry said the Guyana Health Ministry has already despatched five cartons of medicines to Saint Lucia to meet an acute shortage of drugs on the island. [FL111405 Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 8 Sep 80 p 3 FL]

CSO: 3020

'OCLAE' SEES UPSURGE IN OPPOSITION TO DUVALIER

Havana OCLAE in Spanish Jun 80 pp 29-31

[Article by Carlos Font]

[Text] When on 9 November 1979 armed groups of the so-called "Volunteer National Security Forces," or the "Tontons Macoutes," interrupted the sessions of the International Human Rights Conference that was going on in a downtown location in Port-au-Prince, the capital of Haiti, and several participants were beat up, the regime of Jean-Claude Duvalier was unmasked before public opinion, ending the "liberalizing" charade that for 22 years had covered up the bloody, terrorist, fanatic tyranny that had been begun by "Papa Doc" in October 1957, with the blessing of the United States Government.

Born of violence, the Duvalier dictatorship has stayed in power at the expense of the blood and pain of tens of thousands of Haitian patriots, the dissolution of all associations, political parties and unions, and the indiscriminate looting of the nation's wealth by the governing oligarchy and by imperialists.

Today's Haiti is characterized by the resurgence and swelling of the popular struggle, as evidenced by the increasing numbers of Haitians who cast off their fear of official terrorism. This new wave in the popular movement has broken down "Baby Doc's" escalated demagoguery. Under strong internal and external pressure, he has felt it necessary to publicly proclaim the abandonment of all "democratizing" rhetoric and the return to "Duvalier orthodoxy," urging his bands and followers to "prepare to defend power," which was inherited from his father as a lifetime legacy.

This announced return to the darkest days of Duvalierism (and during 22 years of tyranny there has never been a light at the end of the tunnel for the Haitian people) has come at a time when factory workers throughout the country are striking with increasing frequency, demanding better wages and other improvements; peasants are protesting evictions and other arbitrary actions in which they are the victims of the Tontons Macoutes; and the independent press is growing increasing loud in its denunciation of official outrages, in defense of the democratic rights that are denied the people of Haiti.

The favorable image of the Jean-Claude Duvalier regime which imperialist propaganda has spread to the four corners of the earth has fallen into frank disrepute. The statement made in the report on human rights in Haiti by the Yankee Department of State, dated December 1976-February 1978, to the effect that the Haitian regime had become "truly liberalized," has been discredited; it fools no one. The resurgence of the public parades of the Tontons Macoutes; blatant assassinations of opposition members in the middle of the street, as in the case of the young engineer Reynold Taylor; the disappearance of hundreds of political prisoners; the intimidation of poor neighborhoods by armed bands, with many dead and injured as a result; all this makes up the real picture which the imperialist misinformation media were trying to cover up in order to deceive the world as to the real situation of repression and crime in which the people of that Caribbean nation live.

In conjunction with the policy of annihilating all individual and collective forms of protest by the people, the regime of Jean-Claude Duvalier last September passed a law designed to silence the powerful independent press. Under this legislation, any journalist who "writes articles insulting to the lifetime president, his mother Simone Duvalier or other government officials" shall be punished with a prison term and the cancellation of his professional license.

This law is a flagrant violation of the freedom of expression, and a "legal" way of repressing the journalists who in recent years have risen up in defense of the people's rights in Haiti. They have publicly questioned the system of lifetime presidents, and have criticized the political and economic chaos in which the country has sunk.

With this censorship, carried out with the most brutal repression, Duvalierism has revealed its extreme political and economic weakness.

It is impossible to hide the real situation in Haiti. Subjected to the harshest neocolonialism and imperialism, Haiti is a haven for transnational companies, which are granted the most scandalous privileges by the dictatorship in order to sack indiscriminately the natural wealth of the country.

Foreign capital has penetrated into all areas of economic life. In agriculture, concessions are granted by the regime at the cost of expropriation and eviction of the peasants; more than a million of those peasants are now wandering about the fields in search of a means of survival. If in 1975 LE MONDE DIPLOMATIQUE reported that one of every ten people in Haiti suffers from chronic hunger, today's reality confirms the rise in that number.

According to the latest ECLA report, the growth rates of the total gross domestic product (GDP) were 5.3 percent, 1.3 percent and 3.6 percent for 1976, 1977 and 1978, respectively. During the same period agriculture grew at a rate of 3.2 percent, 0.4 percent and 1.0 percent, respectively. These figures give conclusive evidence of the lack of dynamism in the overall economy, and of the critical paralyzation of the agricultural sector.

This situation takes on tragic proportions if we bear in mind that nearly 75 percent of the Haitian population is rural. Thousands of peasants and farmworkers are forced to move to the cities, swelling the ranks of the unemployed; or they take on the dangerous adventure of emigration.

In the middle of 1978 thousands of peasants, most of them children and old people, died of starvation in the northwestern area of the country. This event confirmed to the world the endemic nature of hunger in Haiti.

With regard to industry, Haiti has been invaded by foreign investors in search of cheap manpower and antilabor legislation, in order to set up export-oriented businesses.

The dictatorship has offered these twentieth-century pirates exceptional advantages: a wage of $1.30 for 8 hours of work, the prohibition of any kind of strike or protest demonstration, tax exemptions and no exchange controls over the transfer of capital.

But these industries only employ about 30,000 workers, a tiny part of the labor force. Currently more than 65 percent of the labor force is unemployed, which tends to become worse as the population grows at a rate of 120,000 births a year.

Thanks to the ruling oligarchy and imperialism, Haiti boasts the highest malnutrition and infant mortality rates in the hemisphere, and illiteracy is a scourge that afflicts nearly 80 percent of its inhabitants. The government allots a total of $1.00 per capita for education in its budget.

American capital loans to the weak, corrupt Haitian economy, and investments by the transnationals, have served only to sink the country deeper into financial chaos. This is reflected in the foreign debt, which nearly doubled between 1975 and 1978, jumping from $133 million to $225 million. And financial obligations increased by 60 percent over the past 9 years.

While this discouraging situation places the vast majority of the Haitian population in the most cruel state of hunger and poverty, dictator Jean Claude Duvalier is spending huge fortunes on yachts, luxury cars, costly villas (such as the one he acquired in the Principality of Monaco from an Arab potentate for nearly $3 million), and builds up his various Swiss bank accounts.

Within this context, the popular opposition movement is developing and taking on strength, despite the repression and terror. The Haitian people, who celebrated the 176th anniversary of their independence on 1 January 1980 (an independence earned at the cost of the blood and heroism of its greatest sons), are once again taking up the banners of Toussaint Louverture, Dessalines and other forefathers. Their struggle will not cease until the head of the Duvalier tyranny lies at their feet.

8926
CSO: 3010

BORGE SPEAKS AT CEREMONY COMMEMORATING NANDAIME HEROES

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 16 Sep 80 p 2

[Speech by Commander of the Revolution and Interior Minister Tomas Borge at the opening of the Third Assembly of FSLN Cadres and Militants honoring the heroes of Nandaime, on 13 September 1980; place not specified]

[Text] At the opening of the Third Assembly of FSLN Cadres and Militants to commemorate the heroes of Nandaime last Saturday, 13 September, the initial remarks were delivered by Commander of the Revolution and Minister of Interior Tomas Borge. We are reprinting his historic address for study by the entire Sandinist membership, the members of the mass organizations and all our people.

Comrade members of the national leadership, comrade militants of the Sandinist Front:

Throughout all these years since the founding of the Sandinist National Liberation Front in July 1961 many very valuable comrades, some of whom were extraordinary, died in the battle against the tyranny and on behalf of the independence of our nation. They died so that our people could be the masters of the water, land and air surrounding us, and of their own destiny.

Today, over a year since the revolutionary victory, our people have finally acquired the right to be the legitimate owners of their fatherland.

Since the people's seizure of power, certain fundamental gains have been consolidated, among which we wish to stress the following:

A Power Born of the People's Inner Being

We have liberated ourselves from foreign domination. The bonds, the chains which tied us to imperialism have been smashed into a thousand pieces. Despite the fact that the arrogant representatives of the United States have attempted to meddle in our internal affairs, using every means, and to create problems for the revolution, to destabilize our economy and, using the traditional policies, to intervene in our internal affairs in one way or another, the Sandinist revolution, with a lofty sense of national dignity, and with a patriotic spirit, has put the colonial administrators in their place and, without bilious friction, but with steadfastness, has constantly reaffirmed the sovereignty and independence of the fatherland.

On 19 July a revolutionary power came into existence, born of the people's inner being and the struggle of the oppressed and the exploited,opposing the oppressors and the traitors. The power that was conquered was rooted in the hearts of the people, and has become stronger day by day, and even minute by minute, with a higher degree of administrative organization, and with technical development and a capacity for response by the instruments created by the revolution for its defense, with the increased participation of the workers in the programs for economic reactivation, with the quantitative development of the mass organizations, with the sound reputation of the Sandinist revolution on an international scale and with the winning of new and reliable friends who will accompany us to the end, and who are helping us to cope with the problems of the future and to lay the foundations for the paradise that we are going to build.

We have begun an era of economic changes which have and will continue to have particular significance for agrarian reform and for the elimination, within a short historical period, of unemployment, of the annoying inequalities between the rural and urban areas, of the backwardness and of the vestiges of dependence.

There has been an obvious rebirth and development of the national culture, expressed in art, the dance and literature, which has now extended to the masses. The National Literacy Campaign is only the starting point for a new culture. There are 650,000 children and adolescents enrolled in the schools, setting an unprecedented record for the concern that the revolution has aroused for the people's education.

A New Democracy

We have achieved a new democracy and a new liberty for the people. In the past, democracy was confined to the aggressive, immoral circles of power, and even the ostensible democracy was violated, debased and falsified by the electoral fraud, deception, corruption and lying. Hypocrisy ruled. Under the Somoza tyranny, the torture and massacres, the assassinations and violations, and the most dreadful crimes were converted into a system, a way of life and an attitude toward life. We have all experienced and suffered that martyrdom, and we shall never be able to forget the gloomy past, the grief, tears, pain and blood.

The revolution has given the people the democracy of the Sandinist Defense Committees, of the workers, peasants and students armed in the Sandinist Militias, of the tens of thousands of young people organized into the Sandinist Youth, of the workers in the labor unions, of the women in the Luisa Amanda Espinoza Women's Association and of the peasants organized into the Rural Workers Association, and even the democracy of the children, happily running around in the parks under a rain of smiles.

It offered true democracy, putting an end to demagogy and lies; the democracy of respect for the human being, without torture or abuse, even if those human beings were the murderers, torturers or counterrevolutionaries, and those who coldly planned the assassination of our leaders. It offered the liberty of telling the people the truth, and the liberty enabling the people to express themselves, so as to freely oppose the diversionary campaigns and the lies of the reactionary, proimperialist press.

All-Importance of Unity

An important gain which is, at the same time, a contribution from our revolution to the struggle of the peoples of Latin America and the world, has been the unity of the Nicaraguan revolutionaries, the exemplary unity of the Sandanists and the growing unity of the people in the mass organizations. The workers, peasants, students and large social sectors of the nation are united around the Sandinist National Liberation Front.

Within the same context of unity, we must underscore the collective nature of the political leadership of our revolution. We have surmounted all the dangers involved in the cult of personality, combining the political, historical and moral authority of the revolutionary leaders with the homogeneous desire, in the fundamental, strategic decisions of the Sandinist revolution. We have preserved that collective desire, and we shall continue to preserve it, because we consider it an accomplishment and an example.

Who is the defender of these gains, and of the new democracy that has been conquered, the zealous guardian of the new culture, the irreplaceable custodian of the new phases of national development and dignity? The vanguard of the people, the revolutionary organization which had in its ranks Silvio Mayorga, German Pomares, Faustino Ruiz, Modesto Duarte, Jorge Navarro, Francisco Buitrago, Pablo Ubeda, Julio Buitrago, Selim Shible, Casimiro Sotelo, Leonel Rugama, Ricardo Morales, Oscar Turcios, Jonathan Gonzalez, Juan Jose Quezada, Carlos Aguero, Pedro Arauz, Eduardo Contreras, Roberto Huembes, Francisco Meza and Camilo Ortega.

It is the organization whose initial seed was bountiful in its fruits, with the blood of thousands of men and women who not only shouted "free fatherland or death," but who were consistent with that battle cry.

It is the revolutionary organization founded 19 years ago by Carlos Fonseca, the Sandinist National Liberation Front.

Towards the Party of the Revolution

In the early years, during the war waged against the tyranny, the Sandinist Front gained great guerrilla experience, and major experience with insurrection. It had virtually no opportunity to set up an organization that would meet all the requirements for what a revolutionary party should be. After the victory, the vanguard devoted priority attention to organizing the state.

Now that the phase of setting up the revolutionary state has been completed in essence, the time has come to devote a large portion of our best efforts to the development of the party of the revolution. So, we propose to create an organized revolutionary party, guided by scientific principles, aware of its role as leader, possessor of a lofty morality, with a clearcut political strategy, and cognizant of the fact that it is not confined to striving for partial reforms, but rather is preparing to pool forces and energy to eliminate completely the exploitation and economic dependence, so as to take the revolutionary step towards a new society.

We propose to create a realistic, flexible party, with its feet planted firmly on the ground, but unfaltering in its principles, and capable of intelligent handling of the political areas, and the alliances on the national and international levels, but without ever losing sight of its historic goal.

We propose to create a party which will carry in its hands the principles of internationalism, of a sacred obligation toward the peoples who are struggling; a party capable of devoting itself to the efforts of mankind in its struggle for peace which, at the same time, is the guardian of our patriotic traditions, the standard bearer of patriotism, and the first to defend the sovereignty and dignity of the nation.

We Are Taking an Important Step Today

We are taking an important step today in the organization of that party; we shall take more important steps in the future. This is a change, and perhaps a leap. However, the changes that are going to take place constitute an intermediate phase, a kind of test in organizational development. We are not desperate to create a perfect organization, for we shall have time to improve our party work. We believe that what is essential is not merely to organize the party, but to organize it well.

And whom must we organize? Who should be the ones organized in the party of the revolution, in the Sandinist National Liberation Front? Without question, it must be the most self-effacing, steadfast children of Sandino, the most consistent and unselfish brothers of Carlos Fonseca.

What Must a Sandinist Be Like?

What qualities must the members of the Sandinist National Liberation Front have? The individual qualities must be in harmony with the qualities of the entity as a whole, just as the qualities of the entity as a whole must influence the qualities of the individual.

Those who consider work to be a reward, and not a punishment; those who are aware that discipline is an honor, and not a burden; those who fully comprehend that being a militant is not a privilege, but a responsibility; those who practice simplicity, modesty and revolutionary humility, and who are converted, through an express desire, into an instrument for the interests of the workers and the people;

Those who, like Carlos Fonseca, Jorge Navarro and Camilo Ortega, restore the light of joy in the midst of battle, to foster the qualities of their combative brothers; those who could not conceive of pettiness, envy or selfishness, and who were apostles of unity, of personal integrity and of total forgetfulness of themselves;

Those who are always able to tell the truth, to criticize with a straightforward gaze, and to indicate to their brothers the flaws and mistakes, without fear of the consequences, with the firm intention of being constructive, and without the slightest hint of arrogance, conceit or malice;

Those who never forget the responsibility, obligation and right to remain closely associated with the masses, and with the desires and aspirations of the people, seeking out the workers just as fish seek water;

Those who do not become disheartened in the battle against their shortcomings and negative habits, against the persistent vestiges of selfishness, personal vanity and primitive appetites;

Those who are brotherly, and reach out their hands to help those who have made misteakes, and who would not even conceive of the possibility of destroying the ones who have made mistakes of one kind or another; and who notice more the efforts of today and the strength of the principles of today, than the weaknesses of yesterday; those who have a sufficiently great soul not to be judges, but rather critics, so as to give an opportunity to the ones who sincerely want to become reformed;

Those who are capable of suffering, of withstanding pain, and of defying the enemy, regardless of how very powerful it may be: These, precisely, are the true sons of Sandino, the true brothers of Carlos Fonseca, and the only ones worthy of militating in the ranks of the Sandinist National Liberation Front.

It is an historic duty to create a strong party. The party will be strong insofar as it has a single desire and is capable of taking homogeneous action. This is possible only on the basis of organic unity, democracy and party discipline. A party which constantly seeks a way of increasing its influence among the masses, a party with creative, revolutionary initiative, which is constantly nurtured by the new conditions and all the possibilities associated with the reality to become developed, and a party which is intransigent toward all the pathological threats of opportunists.

A party capable of learning from its experience and its mistakes, gaining lessons from them. A party capable of creating a correct strategy and tactics, and of being a creator as part of its own creation. An expeditious, practical party which is, at the same time, aware that revolutionary theory is the protein and the light for revolutionary practice; in other words, a party which is not a bookworm, but which does not underrate the synthesis of experience that is theory, and which is on guard against empiricism and mechanism.

The importance of theory is greater owing to the fact that our party organization has just seriously begun its formation, because we are coexisting in our country with other trends of thought which uphold the philosophy and the behavior of the exploiters.

An Internationalist Party

We must create an internationalist party which will have an appreciation for other experiences, but which will assume a critical attitude toward them, and test them itself, insofar as their efficacy and their adaptation to our concrete situation are concerned.

The task is obviously a difficult one. Our inadequate training in party work and the lack of skill in organizational effort are, in general, shared by all of us. We have often succumbed to a certain worship of spontaneity. We are faced with problems that other revolutions have not posed. Hence, the organic development is taking place in a revolutionary country with its own features, wherein the contradictions force us to grow, organically, more in depth than in breadth, but wherein the breadth has a certain value, which we are attempting to determine. This is because our position, marked by political pluralism, requires the attraction of sectors which could be lured by the reactionaries if they are not in some way integrated into a revolutionary system.

Moreover, we must battle against the vestiges of the past, against the expectations of certain sectors which have more than a mere suspicion that the Sandinist revolution is manna in the desert, and not effort, work and sacrifice in a country half trapped in bureaucracy and inexperience, to the point where we could claim that it is easier (because the dividing lines are clearer) to battle against the oppression of the exploiters than against the bureaucrats and empiricism.

But, despite all the difficulties that are confronting us, we shall develop our party. And, in the final analysis, what is the Sandinist National Liberation Front? It is the unity of the oppressed, the exploited, the revolutionaries, the workers and peasants, the anti-imperialists, the internationalists, and honest, innocent and simple men and women, those who were born standing upright and who will never be on their knees, and those who are willing to die for their fatherland, their people and their revolution.

Recollection of the Heroes

This event bears the name of the heroes of Nandaime. In September 1973, the exemplary teacher, Ricardo Morales, the student and fighter, Oscar Turcios, the internationalist, Juan Jose Quezada, and the laborer, Jonathan Gonzalez, died for this party, the Sandinist National Liberation Front and the fatherland.

Their generous blood made the victory possible, and made possible this meeting of outstanding cadres and militants who, spurred on by their memory, are today initiating a new organizational phase, and are persisting in the fulfillment of the dreams which completely filled the lives of those heroic brothers who, with a thousand merits, won the respect of history and of the future generations.

During this same month, there occurred the independence from Spanish colonialism, the National War of 1856, the insurrection of 1978 and the execution of the tyrant Anastasio Somoza Garcia by the patriot Rigoberto Lopez Perez.

September is a month filled with heroic dates, marking major chapters in our history.

With the spirit of the Indians who joined the battle against Spanish colonialism; with the spirit of the combatants of San Jacinto, Rivas and Granada who fought the Yankee freebooters; with the spirit of Ricardo Morales, Oscar Turcios, Jonathan Gonzalez and Juan Jose Quezada; with the spirit of Edgar Munguia, killed in the mountains on 13 September, we open this work session, which is another step toward the development of our party, the party of unassuming individuals, the party of honest individuals, the part of individuals looking toward the future, who are willing, as our martyrs were, to give up their lives and to work untiringly for their revolution and their people.

Long live the presence of the heroes of Nandaime!

Long live the immortal memory of Carlos Fonseca!

Long live the Sandinist popular revolution!

Long live the Sandinist National Liberation Front!

Free fatherland or death!

13 September 1980.

2909
CSO: 3010

CAUS FORMS NEW TRADE UNION FEDERATION, EXPLAINS OBJECTIVES

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 17 Sep 80 p 7

[Text] Sunday at 1000 hours the Managua Labor Federation (FSM) was formed. It is affiliated with the Center for Labor Action and Unity (CAUS).

Alan Zambrana of CAUS reported that the unions that make up the federation are:

Union of Textile Industry Workers (SITRATEL), Union of Meat Product Workers (SITRAPROC), Union of Electromechanical Industry and Related Workers (STIES), Union of Furniture Industry Workers (SITRAIM), Union of Plastic Industry Workers (STIP), Union of Commercial Enterprise Workers (SITRECO), Union of Industrial and Commercial Atmospheric Products Workers (SITRAPAICO), Union of Candle and Candlestick Workers (STICV), Union of Paints and Adhesives Industry Workers (SITRAIPA), Union of Mayco Workers (Javier Solis Rocha) and the Union of Managua Mechanical and Metallurgical Enterprise Workers (SITREM).

The name, Managua Labor Federation, means that the idea is to organize all the Managua unions affiliated with the CAUS, and other unions of the Department of Managua that wish to join.

The federation will be headquartered in Managua, and is receiving notifications at the headquarters of CAUS in the Costa Rica district on the corner south of the Colonial Theater, one block to the west and a half-block to the north.

Among the objectives of the new organization are: raise the ideological and political level of members by encouraging revolutionary study, work and discipline; work for harmonious labor-management relations within the context of respect and the recognition of the interests of workers as true protagonists of the process of production.

There will be a different social and economic policy in the state enterprises than in the private sector, given that the current state system is democratic and revolutionary, and the workers are playing a greater and greater role in the nation's economic life.

8926
CSO: 3010

STATE COUNCIL REJECTS PROPOSED LAW ON POLITICAL PARTIES

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 12

[Text] In a plenary session the Council of State voted down the law to regulate the political parties. The rejection came Wednesday, after the law was presented by Dr Enrique Sotelo Borgen of the Democratic Conservative Party.

The parliamentary commission charged with looking into the law, made up of Father Alvaro Arguello, Dr Jaime Bengoechea and Dr Alvaro Jerez, made an unfavorable ruling.

However, in the second part of the ruling, the commission recommended that there be a consultation with the Government Junta on the need to regulate Articles 24 and 25 of the Statute of Rights and Guarantees, which mentions Nicaraguans' right to free association.

The ruling led to a prolonged discussion and a certain amount of confusion, because according to Commander Dora Maria Tellez it had many contradictions.

Commander Tellez supported the ruling's suggestion to consult with the junta on Articles 24 and 25, based on the idea that those articles provide sufficient guarantee for the organization of political parties without the need for a special law.

Enrique Sotelo Borgen, who proposed the Political Party Bill, said that he ignored the offenses and allusions that had been made about him, because he is simply "a forgiver of insults."

He explained that after the law prohibiting electoral activities, action has been taken against political activities in housing projects and various other places. He said many complaints had been received at the headquarters of his party (Democratic Conservative Party of Nicaragua).

These events have taken place, he said, after the rally in El Rama, after a meeting was held in Leon, and after another meeting in Santa Cruz, but perhaps the leaders of the Revolution are not aware of that.

However, this new law (on political parties) is designed to affirm, confirm and stimulate, if you will, the right of Nicaraguans to engage in such activities.

Sotelo Borgen also indicated that the law which he sponsored would also regulate the independent parties of the other Bloc of the Patriotic Front of the Revolution, "which we agree with on several points. The law is not as bad as they paint it."

"The law," he stated, "simply regulates the activities which are carried out within normal party functions. These parties are represented here, and it is well known that we are free to speak out, although suddenly we are subjected to insults anddisrespectful language."

Commander Dora Maria Tellez indicated that the bill is inappropriate according to the Legal Counsel of the Council of State, because a political party law should fall within an electoral law, which should be passed on the initiative of the Government Junta in 1984.

8926
CSO: 3010

END

JPRS 76656

20 October 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2203

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76656

20 October 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2203

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Argentine Paper on Somoza Killing
(LA NACION, 25 Sep 80)..... 1

'International Plot'
A Slap for Stroessner

Political, Strategic Implications Seen in Corpus Agreements
(LA OPINION, 17 Sep 80; CONVICCION, 18 Sep 80)..... 3

Ita-Cua Site Agreed Upon
Technical Factors Affecting Decision, by Mario de Quinteros Objections to Corpus Project, by Martin Olivera

ARGENTINA

CIE Director Criticizes Tight State Controls Over University
(Fernando Storni Interview; CONVICCION, 3 Sep 80)..... 9

Proposed Tuition Fees To Be Decided by Rectors
(LA OPINION, 22 Aug 80)..... 12

CRUN Delegation to Junta To Underscore Financial Crisis
(CLARIN, 3 Sep 80)..... 14

'OCLAE': New University Law Inhibits Student Activity
(Edith Palma; OCLAE, Apr-May 80)..... 15

CHILE

Orlando Millas Calls for Unity Against Pinochet
(Orlando Millas; TRIBUNA POPULAR, 19-25 Sep 80)..... 18

COSTA RICA

Democratic Renewal President Discusses Unity Coalition
(Roberto Tovar Faja Interview; LA REPUBLICA, 3 Sep 80)..... 21

Legislation Proposed for Controls on RECOPE
(LA REPUBLICA, 5 Sep 80)..... 26

EL SALVADOR

Agriculture Minister Speaks at FAO Conference in Havana
(Octavio Orellana Solis; LA PRENSA GRAFICA, 13 Sep 80)..... 28

HONDURAS

Concern Expressed Over Clashes With Nicaragua
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 12 Sep 80)..... 41

Large Coal Deposits Discovered in Sensenti Valley
(LA PRENSA, 12 Sep 80)..... 43

Draft Bills on Trade, Military, Housing Explained
(LA PRENSA, 12 Sep 80; BARRICADA, 18 Sep 80)..... 47

Trade Licenses, Military Offenses
Law Regulating Housing

NICARAGUA

Various Aspects of Literacy Campaign Mass Emphasized
(Various sources, 31 Aug 80)..... 49

FSLN Leaders Present
Warning to Youth
Solidarity With Poor Urged

PANAMA

Students Salute Countries Struggling Against Imperialism
(Elixsandro Ballesteros; OCLAE, Apr-May 80)..... 56

PARAGUAY

Daily Favors Free Flow of Opinions
(Alcibiades Gonzalez Delvalle; ABC COLOR, 5 Oct 80)... 59

VENEZUELA

Labor Leader Discusses Economy, CTV, AD Relations
(Jose Vargas Interview; EL NACIONAL, 15 Sep 80)..... 61

Development Minister Criticized as Foe of Free Enterprise
(BOHEMIA, 22-28 Sep 80)..... 70

Government Invests 25 Billion Bolivars in Guayana Development
(EL NACIONAL, 16 Sep 80)..... 76

ARGENTINE PAPER ON SOMOZA KILLING

'International Plot'

PY261927 Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 8

[From the "NATIONAL POLITICS" column: "Death in Paraguay"]

[Text] Observers of military affairs have had reason during the past days to say that they are occupied with other matters that come within their sphere of action and which are equally as interesting as those of a strictly internal nature.

In the first place, there are more than enough reasons to follow from Argentina, in the most minute detail, the investigation that is being carried out in Paraguay into the assassination of former Nicaraguan Dictator Anastasio Somoza. There is no doubt that there has been an international plot sponsored by the Sandinistas, whose romantic halo of the 30's has already been smeared with blood, and who have had two contributions, so to speak, which have very deep Argentine roots: 1. the Montonero apparatus, which continues to exist abroad and which is characterized by its very close links with the most radical individuals of the Nicaraguan Revolutionary Junta; 2. the contribution of isolated individuals who are leftovers from the ERP [People's Revolutionary Army], who take part in actions such as the one in Asuncion, and who are close to being mercenaries, with special capabilities due to their high degree of professionalism as terrorists.

In conclusion, the extraordinary use of terrorist and subversive violence in Argentine from the mid 60's onward has determined, one might say, that our country has been placed not only in the role of an exporter of the know-how [given in English] of sinister doings, but also of ways and methodologies for combating them.

A Slap For Stroessner

PY261929 Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 8

[From the "NATIONAL POLITICS" column: "A Slap for Stroessner"]

[Text] The observations made in the previous article explain how an old militant of the eradicated ERP [People's Revolutionay Army] forces, such as Hugo A. Yrurzun, killed some days ago in Paraguay, could participate in a terrorist operation in which the Montoneros probably acted as the organizer.

Lastly, a matter must be pointed out that without a doubt is delicate with regard to Somoza's assassination. No matter from what viewpoint that incident is studied, it will be agreed that among all those who are alive in this world after Somoza's departure to the world of the dead, President Stroessner is the main political victim in all of this.

The Asuncion crime has been such a strong slap in the face of the Paraguayan president that he will not be able to forget it quickly. And as if this were not enough, in Buenos Aires quite a few people are asking how the impressive operation that had to be mounted to get rid of Somoza could have been feasible, in truth, if there were no cracks, due to corruption or whatever, at any administrative level, so to speak, of the old Colorado regime of Paraguay.

CSO: 3010

POLITICAL, STRATEGIC IMPLICATIONS SEEN IN CORPUS AGREEMENT

Ita-Cua Site Agreed Upon

Buenos Aires LA OPINION in Spanish 17 Sep 80 p 11

[Text] Yesterday, reciprocal notes were exchanged wherein Paraguay and our country agree in principle on the Ita-Cua site for the construction of the future Corpus hydroelectric complex on the Upper Parana. The diplomatic documents were signed simultaneously in Asuncion, Paraguay, and Buenos Aires, by the respective foreign ministers, Alberto Nogues and Carlos W. Pastor.

The decision confirms the recommendation favoring the Ita-Cua site made by the Argentine-Paraguayan Joint Commission on the Parana River which, through an international consulting entity that was especially contracted, studied the three geographical possibilities offered for the utilization of the Upper Parana included between Candelaria and Puerto Obligado. Ita-Cua, located 1,597 kilometers from the mouth of the Parana, is the one situated farthest south, of the three in question.

Consideration was also given to the possibility of placing the dam in Itacurubi, at kilometer 1641 of the river, and in Pindoi, farther north, at kilometer 1656, in the towns of Corpus (in the Argentine province of Misiones) and Puerto Obligado, on the adjoining Paraguayan shore.

The placement in Pindoi offered the relative advantage of less flooding of land in Misiones Province, and would have required a reservoir of lesser length. Nevertheless, the use of the river's hydroelectric potential would also have proven slighter.

Whereas if the complex were built in Pindoi, it could produce 3.7 million kilowatts, in Ita-Cua 4 million kilowatts would be attained. The studies of this option, considered optimal from the standpoint of output, called for the displacement of part of the town of Candelaria, and the relocation of National Route 12, which in their current location would be under the lake of the future reservoir. The other possibility, which was placement in Itacurubi, on an intermediate site, had to be rejected for technical reasons.

The Corpus design was made compatible with the similar Paraguayan-Brazilian one for Itaipu, through the tripartite agreement reached last year by Presidents Alfredo Stroessner, Jorge Videla and Joao Baptista Figueiredo. On that occasion, the problems involving the respective elevations were solved, making it possible for Itaipu, with a 220 meter elevation, to have a drop of 115 meters, and Corpus, an elevation of 105.

The exchange of reciprocal notes represents a decisive step forward in the progress of the project which must now, however, embark upon a phase of detailed technical planning and scheduling, which will require some time, before the engineering work can begin on the site. A few days ago, the Paraguayan minister of foreign relations, Dr Alberto Nogues, stated that it would be difficult to finish the work on preparing the final treaty on Corpus this year; and therefore, it would probably be signed in the middle of next year.

The site marked "A" indicates the future location of Corpus.

Technical Factors Affecting Decision

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 18 Sep 80 p 13

[Article by Mario de Quinteros: "The 105 Meter Elevation Left Just One Technical Option"]

[Text] Finally, as CONVICCION announced over 3 months ago, the Argentine and Paraguayan Governments accepted the proposal of the Parana River Joint Commission (COMIP) to build Corpus on the alternate site known as Ita-Cua, at kilometer 1597 of the Parana River, very close to the city of Posadas.

As a first consideration of the alternate site selected by COMIP and accepted by the governments of Gens Alfredo Stroessner and Jorge Rafael Videla, it should be noted that the binational entity studied the project from a strictly technical angle, without including political, geopolitical or strategic factors, an area which presumably must be dealt with by the members of the foreign ministries.

The Technical Selection

Actually, it was a long time ago that the three original choices being considered for Corpus (Ita-Cua, Pindoi and Itacurubi) were reduced to two; because both the sectors in favor of Ita-Cua and those advocating Pindoi admitted that Itacurubi was virtually impossible for reasons of geological safety.

The pro-Pindoi groups began their argument by stressing that, on that site (which is very near the locality of Corpus and within the canyons that comprise the section of the Parana with "geographical uniqueness"), the river is far narrower, and its natural walls are far higher; and therefore the construction of the reservoir would be considerably more economical, and the hectares in Misiones to be flooded would be greatly reduced in number.

The COMIP's view is exactly the opposite. On the one hand, it is of the opinion that this narrowness of the river would impede the work, owing to the irregularities of the watercourse. This is due to the fact that, in order to construct the foundation of the hydroelectric plant, the river must be diverted, something which is obviously more complicated in a "closed" area than in a semi-plain.

Furthermore, the time taken for the work will not be short, and hence one cannot overlook the possibility that, during the course of it, there might be major floods, which would delay and might even destroy the construction in Pindoi. Finally, all this would cause the presumed initial economy to become an eventual greater expense.

From a technical standpoint, COMIP adds to its arguments against Pindoi the fact that the geological conditions are not optimal, although this does not appear to be the main point in the discussion.

Different Determinants

Insofar as the number of hectares involved in the floods is concerned, the difference is quite considerable. In this regard, COMPI argued that the hectares to be flooded are not productive, since they consist of muddy lowland which is abandoned at present. Without assessing them from a geopolitical standpoint (that is not the job of COMIP), the fact is objectively real, because much of that land will be covered by the Yacyreta dam.

Proceeding one step further, the construction as planned by COMIP has no reason to flood the Jesuit ruins of San Ignacio, which have been claimed to be jeopardized on countless occasions.

The fact here is that the determinants which COMIP used, and the ones used by those advocating the alternate site of Pindoi are very different; because they result from different geopolitical assessments, and not from different technical assessments.

Whereas the official agency made its studies on the basis of the agreement with Brazil and Paraguay in October 1979, which set an elevation of 105 meters for Corpus, the other groups are still analyzing Corpus as a "useful" dam with an elevation of at least 110 meters.

If this had been the case (or if it is), then Pindoi would be the only possible alternative for saving Misiones from a vast flooding, which in that case would reach the Jesuit ruins. But, with the agreements with Brazil and Paraguay currently in effect (regardless of whether they are good or bad), technically, Ita-Cua is a logical alternative.

What should be analyzed now is whether, from a geopolitical standpoint, Corpus, at 105 meters, is a necessary and feasible project for Argentina, just because it has the ideal features for promoting the semicapacity operation of Itaipu.

Objections to Corpus Project

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 18 Sep 80 p 13

[Article by Martin Olivera: "A Political Decision With Strategic Implications"]

[Text] The selection of a definitive site for Corpus involves two significant factors of extensive scope: the political decision to build the dam, and the strategic decision to intensify a geopolitical concept of San Martin Palace, which is deeply rooted in an economic interpretation of the major hydroelectric projects.

The first thing to be explained is to what extent Argentina needs Corpus. Although it is true that any means of producing energy that is an alternative to oil is initially good, Corpus is not the only hydroelectric project in existence and, for various reasons, it is not the most appropriate one to head the list of priorities.

Among the major works projects planned in the Plate Basin, the Bermejo Integrated Project, the Middle Parana and the utilization of the Ibera estuaries possess, in themselves (and in that order) far more advantages for our country than Corpus and the Upper Uruguay projects, the latter of which have been incomprehensibly catapulted, when they only serve the geopolitical and energy interests of Brazil.

The Bermejo, Middle Parana and Ibera projects are totally Argentine, and would have a decisive effect on the progress of over a third of the national territory, while providing the country with a river navigation system. And, essentially, in order to construct these projects, it is not necessary to "make an agreement" with anyone, nor to be subjected to the vicissitudes of a bilateral relationship, as it would be in the case of Corpus, having Paraguay as an associate.

Argentina is already familiar with the problems of a bilateral project with a "difficult" associate, from Yacyreta, a project which had to be postponed and was even jeopardized by obstacles posed constantly by Asuncion. Not to mention the fact that the cost of the hydroelectric facility will be paid for in its entirety by our country.

We cannot even imagine what will happen with Corpus, which is not feasible for Paraguay to construct until Itaipu and Yacyreta are completed, because of an internal problem involving the employment of labor. The delays will be constant, and the project will produce more headaches than advantages.

The political decision to build Corpus at present does not appear to relate to the order of priorities required by Argentina, when there are entire regions waiting for the conditions associated with infrastructure in order to be able to attain progress. That will be achieved with Bermejo, Ibera and the Middle Parana, but not with Corpus.

The Strategic Course

From the strategic angle, Corpus, with the terms agreed upon in the tripartite accord of October 1979, is not only not a necessary project, but is, to some extent, useful to Brazil, because it would act as a compensator for Itaipu.

Why? First, because, when the Misiones territory is flooded (where the economic value of the land is less), there will be a dangerous isolation of the northern part of the province which, in turn, will be connected with Brazil and Paraguay through the Posadas-Encarnacion and Puerto Iguazu-Puerto Meyra bridges.

Second, because it will not eliminate the risk represented by Itaipu. The huge Brazilian-Paraguayan dam could entail incalculable geological consequences, and might even cause breaks in the retaining wall. If this were ever to happen, whether voluntarily or involuntarily, the flooding that would occur in Argentine territory would be unprecedented. The only possibility of eliminating this danger is to construct Corpus at Pindoi, with an elevation of 115 meters. At Ita-Cua, with an elevation of 105, nothing is eliminated.

In this respect, the construction at Pindoi offers an additional possibility. Owing to its construction features, Itaipu, although it may initially operate with 18 turbines, could use as many as 30. Owing to the geographical features, Corpus could be built in Pindoi with a higher elevation, if necessary. In other words, this would be a reassurance of compliance with the spirit of the tripartite treaty, which was based on an equation.

According to that agreement (which was politically necessary to give another impetus to relations with Brazil), Corpus cannot be built with an elevation greater than 105 meters. But also, in accordance with that agreement, Corpus may not be built. And that seems to be the most correct option, because it would make it possible to improve the dialog with Brazil without sacrificing Misiones geopolitically. It is not ideal, but it is possible.

However, the government took the first actual step toward making Corpus a reality, a Corpus surrounded by many doubts. There is still time not to build the project with these features, at least in the near future; provided the mercantile-oriented criterion does not prevail again, having Corpus built only because it is profitable.

2909
CSO: 3010

CIE DIRECTOR CRITICIZES TIGHT STATE CONTROLS OVER UNIVERSITY

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 3 Sep 80 p 10

[Interview with Fernando Storni, the director of the Educational Research Center (CIE); date and place not given]

> [Text] "The state continues to exert heavy pressure on universities. We cannot say that nonstate universities are free because they are really totally controlled." These remarks were made by presbyter Fernando Storni, the director of the CIE, in an interview with CONVICCION through the SAP agency. The following is his harsh analysis of the current educational situation:

[Question] As the director of the CIE, what is your opinion of the current trends in education in Argentina?

[Answer] I think that the current educational situation should be viewed not as an isolated development but as the culmination of a process in which there has been a relationship between the democratization or broadening of education and a cutback in it due to economic factors. We have always had a serious and troublesome problem with school dropouts in Argentina. Today, 45 or 50 percent of our children still do not complete primary school, even though several efforts have been made in recent years to reduce this rate. This means that in spite of Law 1420, up to 80 percent of the Argentine people have not completed primary school in certain areas. Nonetheless, no in-depth investigation has been conducted into the reasons for this dropout rate. Some people say that the causes are socioeconomic, others that families are not too interested in having their kids attend school, and still others might say that the schools themselves cause dropouts by choosing who will and will not continue studying. Intermediate-level schools, which have never had an organizational law and have always been experimented with, have been subjected to a series of initiatives that are soon abandoned. There is currently a lot of effort going into technical schools, which are very important and ought to be supported even more.

State Control

Lastly, we have the universities, which are the most complicated issue largely because they have always been exclusively state-controlled. Today, after 25 years of nonstate universities, the state's pressure on universities is still very heavy. We cannot say that non-state universities are free because they are really totally controlled. There have been two trends: the democratization and open-door trend, as we saw during the last Peronist term, and then the trend in the other direction, during that same period but more so at present, when universities have become places for the few, with tight restrictions and little study devoted to the country's real needs.

[Question] Will the university fees achieve the purposes announced by the authorities, in other words, that these funds will be earmarked for scholarships and student loans, or will they go to finance the university system?

[Answer] As far as the general issue of university financing is concerned, the Argentine Government has never wanted universities to have their own financing. This has been a longstanding battle that the universities have fought ever since the Avellaneda Law. The fees are fair because the students who make it into university were not put there by the system; our educational system unquestionably prevents children of the working class and lower middle class from getting into universities. Therefore, it is only fair for those students who get in just because can afford it to help those who cannot afford it. On the other hand, there are a great many students who have to work, which means that studying is an effort for them. Hence, we have to get a clear-cut idea of the income categories of students and their families to determine whether the fee-paying system is going to be fair.

Justice and Discrimination

[Question] Wouldn't this lead to social discrimination?

[Answer] Universities do not cause social discrimination. Those who make it into university are already discriminated against, and if the fees are proper, the system will be fair, in the sense that each student's financial burden should be commensurate with what he can afford. The serious risk is to what extent the fee-paying system will make it more costly to determine the economic status of the student body and wind up excluding low-income students instead of benefiting the university.

[Question] Regarding the much-talked-about topic of sex education, do you think that it should come from the state or from the family?

[Answer] Just as children are not educated solely at home or in school, sex education should be imparted through family-school cooperation. The thing is that our educational tradition keeps school and family separate. Schools do not allow the family to enter the picture, and the children are dropped off at school and forgotten about. Each has a function. The family must provide an upbringing and love, while schools play a parallel, complementary role, but the two should not be kept separate. The fact is that families set up schools to round out their children's education.

8743
CSO: 3010

PROPOSED TUITION FEES TO BE DECIDED BY RECTORS

Buenos Aires LA OPINION in Spanish 22 Aug 80 p 23

[Text] San Miguel de Tucuman--The Council of National University Rectors (CRUN) approved university tuition fees last night; slated to begin in 1981, the fees, which will have minimum and maximum levels, will vary depending on the university and major. This information was given to NOTICIAS ARGENTINAS by an official spokesman at the close of the CRUN meeting.

This major decision, which was preceded by newspaper coverage throughout the nation, was made in the presence of the minister of culture and education, Juan Rafael Llerena Amadeo, who "will submit the university tuition bill to the Executive Branch shortly," it was asserted.

According to the information obtained, the tuition fees will be set by the Ministry of Education, but universities will be able to adjust them in accordance with the economic status of their regions.

The same spokesman asserted that "the tuition fees, to begin in 1981, will vary according to majors; they will aim at discouraging those with many students and at promoting others that the government is particularly interested in developing."

In closing the assembly, which began on Wednesday in this city, Minister Llerena Amadeo told the rectors that "the university tuition will guarantee equal opportunity" and that "these fees, which are envisioned in the current University Law, will be paid by those who can afford them, while those who cannot will not be subject to the fees and will, in addition, be given aid so that they can devote themselves exclusively to their studies."

Llerena Amadeo noted that the tuition issue was of deep concern to public opinion and he called attention to the benefits that it would bring, asserting that "there will no longer be expensive and less expensive majors."

Although the minister did not refer to the tuition ceilings and floors, the spokesman specified that "the ministry will propose them, but the rectors will have the authority to modify them in accordance with the situation in each region."

To illustrate the spirit of the new university fees, he said that "for example, if they decide that the annual fees for 1981 are 500,000 pesos, payable in 10 installments, the rector of each university will have to decide whether this should be increased or decreased."

Other issues that the rectors took up were the institutionalization of teaching posts and the training of young professors to replace department heads in due time.

The tuition issue, which was supposed to have been broached at Wednesday's evening session, was postponed to yesterday's last session, in anticipation of Llerena Amadeo's attendance. This did not sit well with the majority of the rectors, who hoped to be able to consider the matter without a time limit, a reliable source reported.

Prior to his arrival in Tucuman, Llerena told the press: "I am observing the guidelines set down by the junta and the president of the republic, pursuant to the March 1976 program foundations."

He also pointed out that he was appointed to serve along with President Videla and that "it stands to reason that when his term concludes, mine will too."

8743
CSO: 3010

CRUN DELEGATION TO JUNTA TO UNDERSCORE FINANCIAL CRISIS

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 3 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] According to a reliable source, the rectors of national universities are preparing to give a rundown of the economic situation faced by their institutions to the president of the republic and the members of the Government Junta.

They will reportedly express their concerns about budgeting by requesting a meeting with Economy Minister Jose Alfredo Martinez de Hoz "to ask that university budgets not be cut in 1981."

The chairman of the Council of National University Rectors (CRUN), Guillermo Gallo, and its deputy chairman, Humberto Ricomi, from La Plata and Rosario respectively, will reportedly be in charge of this matter.

The CRUN recently held a meeting in Tucuman, and one of the issues it discussed was the plight that the economic situation has created for universities. On top of this came an announcement by Minister Juan Rafael Llerena Amadeo.

The education and culture minister said that in 1981 the Economy Ministry would be cutting the national university budget by 2 percent for staff and by 6.5 percent for investments, it was learned at the meeting.

Some days later, Gallo revealed that the CRUN would ask for the repeal of this move, while other officials pointed out that the 1980 university budget was down 30 percent from 1979.

Budget

Other rectors did not hide their fears that now that students have been ordered to pay tuition, the Finance Secretariat might try to cut the 1981 budget even more than it has announced, the NA agency pointed out.

The decision made in Tucuman to institute tuition at national universities stipulated provisionally that the tuition money should not be used to shore up the budget.

8743

CSO: 3010

'OCLAE': NEW UNIVERSITY LAW INHIBITS STUDENT ACTIVITY

Havana OCLAE in Spanish Apr-May 80 pp 20-22

[Article by Edith Palma]

[Text] Before discussing the current situation of the university student movement in Argentina, we must bear in mind that that country's students have a record embodying the most beautiful ideals of the struggle for peace, well-being and social progress.

We need only recall the Manifesto of Cordoba, also called the Introductory Manifesto, which was the first university student program of struggle for true university autonomy, academic independence and close ties between the university and the people. The Cordoba University students wrote indelible pages in Argentine history that would later serve as a banner for Latin American students in their lengthy battle against reactionary and exploitative regimes.

Everyone knows that the Manifesto of Cordoba was one of the most advanced documents of its time in Latin America and that it had a significant impact on the development of the student masses. In light of this heroic and unforgettable development, university students today could not possibly accept the imposition of a new university law calmly.

A Law or a Series of Arbitrary Regulations?

The current situation in Argentina is critical for the sectors that are striving to regain their rights. All of the country's structures are undergoing a crisis, and the university, as one of them, is suffering the consequences of action by those who are taking advantage of the present historical and political juncture to bring about a "change" that will lead only to an inevitable university crisis.

The draft of the new university law that the government wants to impose seeks to separate the university from the goal of promoting science and technology for independent national development; its objective is to train technocrats to help Argentina play the role that it has been assigned in the new international economic system drawn up by imperialism.

How can a law like this be instituted when the interested parties have not been consulted and when the causes of the university crisis have not been debated in-depth?

Without seeking solutions to the problems of universities, the government is now stubbornly engaged in imposing its policy, which is totally divorced from reality.

Arbitrary Features of the Bill

The comment is heard in universities today that they are not autonomous, not even academically.

There is good reason for student demonstrations because the bill calls for an "autonomy" whereby local or national authorities can intervene to maintain the "public order," while the National Executive Branch is in charge of defining and supervising university policy. What kind of autonomy is this when the university community is not entitled to elect its own personnel and issue its own laws and regulations, when it cannot establish its own bylaws without the intervention of the Executive Branch?

Universities are not autonomous, although there is much talk of "academic autonomy," because they cannot even determine their own entrance requirements, and the role of university faculty at assemblies is purely for show.

Autonomy is impossible in universities when their authorities are appointed by the Federal Government.

Other Aspects of the Law

The bills mentions the participation of the faculty in scientific, cultural, teaching activities, etc, but such participation is purely pro forma, and the students themselves are excluded from any sort of participation.

The Education Ministry had previously declared that "the students would devote themselves to their studies and ought to forget about the governance of the university." A role cannot be denied to those who have historically brought about countless gains for universities.

The bill also limits enrolment by requiring an entrance examination and charging a fee for undergraduate and postgraduate studies; the entrance exam conforms to standards set by the Education Ministry.

These two requirements directly reduce enrolment and are damaging to the national interest by compromising the training of the scientific and technical personnel needed for independent national development.

As far as freedoms are concerned, there is a total ban on activities involving political propaganda, indoctrination or agitation; the university president is not allowed to make the slightest political comment, and any professor can be fired if he is suspected of spreading political ideas.

The "temporary" provisions are permanent for all intents and purposes. How can a situation be temporary if the normalization period, which includes prescribed bylaws and teaching resources, lasts 2 years and if the boards of examiners and professors are appointed for 7-year periods by the government through the Education Ministry? The sole purpose of these restrictions is to make the university a mechanical toy that the government can manipulate at its whim.

Conclusions

The university bill will enable the Federal Government to intervene in all internal university affairs, its basic goal being to make universities antinational bodies. Another goal is to have universities perform highly elitist and restrictive functions by excluding the views of many civilian and military sectors that are included in the current university law, which was approved by most political parties during the last Congress.

Argentina must resolve its education problems and specifically those of its universities, but there is no way that a law like this can resolve such problems. This would require establishing formal discussions, initiating dialogs with the interested sectors and debating democratically and penetratingly each and every one of the elements that could affect the proper development of universities.

Enacting this law, which is completely at odds with a true university spirit, would undermine the tradition of democratic, progressive struggle that has always characterized university students. Universities need a just law that will help to profoundly transform the notion of education, in keeping with man's and society's current and future needs.

8743
CSO: 3010

ORLANDO MILLAS CALLS FOR UNITY AGAINST PINOCHET

Caracas TRIBUNA POPULAR in Spanish 19-25 Sep 80 p 15

[Article by Orlando Millas, member of the Political Committee and secretary of the Communist Party Central Committee of Chile]

[Text] The gangleader of the Chilean fascist junta, Pinochet, announced that he has decided to impose a new "constitution" on the country, denying the people all their rights and setting up himself personally as an autocrat with the most absolute power, for a practically unlimited time.

He entrusted the concoction of the document to some extreme rightist jurists, who had a grand time cooking up obscure formulas, institutions and mechanisms that would ensure the domination of imperialism and the oligarchy, and would prevent the people from having access to power. Next the matter was sent to another organization for its consideration. This body, called the Council of State (which supposedly represents the supreme legislative power of the nation) was not elected by anyone either; it was simply designated by him. The Council of State carefully reviewed the document article by article, with a super-reactionary point of view. Pinochet was still not satisfied, however, and ended up adding directly a series of temporary articles that turned out to be the meat of the document.

Absolutism

Pinochet's "constitution" grants absolute power to the president. It adds that there shall be a senate, a chamber of deputies, municipalities and other institutions, specifying that they will have no real authority or importance. The judges and justice courts shall be designated by the president.

According to the articles that Pinochet personally added to the basic draft constitution, over the next 6 months he will continue exercising all power. Later there will be a presidential term of 8 years, until 1989, during which time Augusto Pinochet will automatically be the president. The military junta, headed by Pinochet, is authorized to reelect him for another 8-year term, which will expire in 1997.

The president and the military junta are able to introduce new amendments to the "constitution," including the extension of their own terms.

In fact, this implies the nullification of all legal measures and the recognition that the direct source of law is now fascist arbitrariness and the desire to strengthen the fascist dictatorship in Chile, at the service of imperialism and the internal oligarchy.

Thus, on 11 September, the anniversary of the 1973 putsch, all residents of the country who were eligible to vote had to go to the polls and approve Pinochet's "constitution." The counting of the votes was done secretly by the junta itself, in order to ensure the desired results. . . .

CIA Tool

Everyone knows that Pinochet is a tool of the CIA and the Pentagon, of imperialist transnational corporations and the "pirate" clans of the internal financial oligarchy. His "constitution" was drawn up after consultations with Yankee officials and a meeting at the Army Camp Club in Penalolen, which was attended by the financial magnates of the Bank of Chile group, the main figures in the oligarchic groups of Cruzat-Larrain, Edwards, Yarur and Pico Canas, and other monopolist entrepreneurs. However, Pinochet went too far; the fraud was all too blatant. For that reason, the announcement of what the tyrant calls a "constitution" and what he terms a "plebiscite" has been met with the unanimous opposition of true Chileans, who are not supporters of fascism, as well as the various classes of society and the different ideological and political movements.

Those who had doubts and reservations before are now definitely convinced that there is no way out except for a struggle against the tyranny.

Workers Struggle

The Chilean working class is the backbone of the forces that oppose fascism. The fact that the workers have maintained their principles under the fire of fascist repression has been a fundamental factor in the regrouping of the people, and has opened up the prospect of resistance.

During the course of this year Chile has undergone a renewed wave of forceful measures and crimes perpetrated by Pinochet's henchmen. Selective detentions and raids on large sections of cities are complemented with massive search and seizure operations and summary arrests. Paramilitary fascist commandos have begun to operate along with the official organs of repression; the two compete in the commission of crimes.

Also coming out of Chile is news of new struggles, of increasing actions by the people against the dictatorship. The workers of Chile will not tolerate fascism; they are not resigned to it, but confront it actively, ready to overthrow it.

Throughout the period of government of the fascist junta, the Chilean Communist Party has struggled insistently to join together on a new basis all democratic forces that do not support fascism. There are increasingly strident calls to strengthen unity, made by growing numbers of Chileans. There is an ever stronger desire to unite and work together. In the unity of all anti-fascists lies the guarantee of the coming victory.

For that very reason, today it is more urgent and useful than ever to have solidarity throughout the world to support the people of Chile in their battle for freedom and true independence.

8926
CSO: 3010

DEMOCRATIC RENEWAL PRESIDENT DISCUSSES UNITY COALITION

San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 3 Sep 80 p 9

[Interview with Democratic Renewal Party [PRD] President Roberto Tovar Faja, by Wilmer Murillo in the column "Political Wednesdays in the Republic"; date and place not given]

[Text] If one examines the coalition of Unity parties, one has a superficial impression of chaos. A closer study reveals that what seems to be generalized disorder is in truth the face of the movement.

An unavoidable equation is threatening Unity today. The expectations are greater than the possibilities. This is a group in a period of change and with expectations. It is in tension because as in many other human processes, the suddenly awakened hopes of men vastly exceed the available resources, involving in this case political debts, the regime and popularly elected posts.

The main problem lies in being able to move from a static balance to a dynamic one, from a submissive party to sufficiently energetic tensions, without precipitating division and crisis. This is the great issue.

There is need for consensus, agreement, much dialog. The subject of our interview this week, the president of the Democratic Renewal Party Roberto Tovar Faja, says that only a coalition can do away with hegemonic intentions. The following is the text of the interview:

[Question] Do you believe that Unity can overtake the energetic processes of change it is experiencing without plunging into division and crisis?

[Answer] Unity is trying to achieve a new understanding to clarify the form of electing the presidential candidate, the deputies, aldermen and other officials. Without a doubt this involves the distribution of power. In 1977, the coalition parties were entirely separate bodies in history and in many ways of viewing solutions. Despite everything, it is possible to reach agreement with a view to a higher interest--giving the country a strong and permanent bloc opposite the PLN [National Liberation Party]. I do not see, because now in 1980 we have a common experience, a common social Christian ideology, and need to end certain phases of our political plans and launch others, why we cannot reach agreement on much more harmonious terms than in the past.

[Question] Do you believe that domination over the others in the coalition by a single party is acceptable and beneficial, or on the contrary is it a harmful factor threatening Unity with some type of division?

[Answer] If this were to happen we would be in the process of liquidating Unity. We are a coalition and from this point of view the four groups which comprise it are equally independent and autonomous. It would be illogical for one party to take command of the coalition.

[Question] Is there rivalry between the parties and leaders in the coalition? Do you believe that anyone seeks exclusive hegemony to the point of provoking resentment and frustration?

[Answer] Being in politics means struggling for power. We in the Unity are in politics and as a result the various groups making it up are seeking power. This is not the problem. A struggle for power as such, rather than as a means of finding a solution to national problems, would be the difficulty.

[Question] In the case of the PUP, to what point do you think it contributes to structuring the union and collaboration of the four coalition parties?

[Answer] The return of the PUP would put the coalition back in its original position. Doing this would mean introducing a pacifying element in the coalition, something which will be the more necessary to the extent that the struggles for power advance. Returning the national assembly of the PUP to its original leaders would be recognizing the importance it has, like the other Unity parties. There are some petty minds which might conclude that this would not be just since the number of members the PUP supposedly has is very small. We in the Democratic Renewal aware of the human virtues of the leaders of the PUP, and remembering the direction of Mr Carazo in the last elections, assign them importance despite the small number of members, for we believe that we can place full confidence in these leaders.

[Question] Do you believe that within the adjustment of the influence and power of the new political groups in the Unity and the reorganization of the PUP, an adequate balance of power can be achieved?

[Answer] The reorganization of the PUP cannot be viewed as a formula for increasing or decreasing the power of the Unity political group, or of the earlier or present leadership. It is a matter of ethics. Leaving the PUP as it is structured now might serve some people. Reorganizing its national assembly might serve others. Thus without ulterior political motives, the decision to reorganize the PUP should be dissociated from the struggles for power, which everyone has a right to pursue, but in a totally different field, that of popular support, rather than as a juridical fiction.

I believe that the majority of the leaders of the PRD are more inclined to support Don Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto. But no decision at all on support of him by the party as such has been made. It is the unanimous view that it is not essential that the three candidates represent the various parties in the coalition. This means that a single party can support various trends.

[Question] Might the present Minister Mendez represent one PRD trend?

[Answer] It has been said that Minister Mendez Mata, when he leaves office and enters the political struggle, will also represent a PRD trend, although others say that he would more likely represent the trend headed by Calderon. It may be that there are leaders who would like to support him, just as there are Calderon supporters who favor Madrigal Nieto. I believe, although this is not a party decision, that the parties and institutions would do well to stand aside from formal support.

[Question] Would this struggle mean a division within the Democratic Renewal?

[Answer] An internal war might begin. For example. the political directorate of the Democratic Renewal as a whole supports Rodrigo Madrigal personally. And there are some members, although only a few, who want to support engineer Mendez. They are trying to organize in order to get us out and nominate persons supporting the candidacy of Mendez. They could create totally harmful enmities making unity and harmony very difficult. I am persuaded that political parties should reorganize themselves periodically. As an advocate of renovation, I support carrying out this process in the near future, but I deplore its being done as a result of presidential ambitions. All of us who are members of the political directorate must in due course submit our names to the party base, and they, free of any tendentious thinking, will have the last word.

[Question] Mario Leiva, a member of your party who signed a minority report on the draft convention, later joined the Calderon sector. Does this mean that the Democratic Renewal is also divided on this matter?

[Answer] We do not respond to the whip. And we place full confidence in the unsurpassable judgment of Don Ronald Odio and Don Mario Leiva to decide what is best for Unity. I understand that they presented a minority report alone, and then gave their support to another drafted by the PUP representative. I have also learned that Mr Leiva, in a spirit of conciliation, added his signature to the report of the majority in the belief that this would contribute to the needed harmony.

[Question] Do you support the proposal concerning the redistribution of the PUP made by Calderon Fournier?

[Answer] Calderon's proposal has the added disadvantage of causing greater fictitious division within the Unity. However, I am certain that he was motivated by the best intentions.

[Question] In negotiating changes in the electoral code with the PLN, the Calderon sector did not take the deputies in the rest of the coalition into account. Does this mean that there are Unity parties acting as independent and autonomous bodies?

[Answer] All of us who are Unity deputies signed a motion some months ago now with a view to changing the agenda and being able to discuss these reforms. We are all committed to struggle for the single party. What is unacceptable is for some groups in the Unity faction to be able to claim the right to negotiate an agreement on behalf of all. No pact between the Calderon sector and the PLN is being reached. I have only heard rumors and I hope they are not true.

[Question] Would you, or Unity, negotiate amendments to the electoral code on the basis of payment of the political debt in cash?

[Answer] The decision to pay is made by the banks depending on the resources they have available. There is nothing to negotiate. If what is involved is forcing the banks by means of a law to do what is impossible, I think that would be counterproductive. One cannot discuss the proposal on that basis. But I believe that the PLN could involve itself in other proposals of national interest for reaching agreement. Making agreements is normal in politics. What is unacceptable is immoral compromises or pacts.

[Question] Is it true that a new voting list, turned over to the Calderon republicans by Alvaro Cubillo, will serve as the basis for the convention as proposed by this party? And that others will have to work with old and second-hand lists, thus being at a disadvantage?

[Answer] I have received reports that this last list was drafted by the TSE [Supreme Electoral Court] in December of 1979. There were various copies of this list. None was taken by the parties with representation in the assembly. It is a fact that Alvaro Cubillo took a copy in recent days which is presumably that intended for the coalition. It is to be assumed that his party will have to make it available to all the members of the Unity. As to which will be used for the convention, this is something we will have to decide in the next few days.

[Question] What will happen if the political directorate of the Unity decides to accept the majority report?

[Answer] None of the reports is binding on the national political directorate, either from the juridical or practical points of view. Unfortunately, in the convention commission, there could not fail to be positions which could serve one faction or another. This was logical. And now that the political directorate, headed by two great arbiters of the Unity, Professor Trejos and Manuel Jimenez, knows them all, a consensus will be sought to allow the Unity convention to satisfy everyone.

[Question] To speak a moment of the government, would you say that its actions are working concretely toward social and economic ends of considerable and unchallengeable importance, or that this is not the case and that the situation in the country is therefore deteriorating?

[Answer] My response would be taken subjectively by the reader. Therefore I believe that the people are making this analysis and we will know their final decision in February of 1982. An analysis such as you would like is very difficult to set forth in a few words, but I know of many programs to the benefit of the majority of the Costa Rican people. If indeed they are now embroiled in an economic and fiscal situation which is not entirely the fault of the government, it will in the end be they who will be clear about the basic work of these 4 years. I venture to say that the decision of the people will be favorable.

5157
CSO: 3010

LEGISLATION PROPOSED FOR CONTROLS ON RECOPE

San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 5 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] Legislation designed to subject the Costa Rican Oil Refinery (RECOPE) to supervision by the controller's office and to create a suitable legal framework for effective control of the refinery has been proposed by Deputies Luis Monge and Rafael Barrientos Germe.

The two legislators are members of the special commission appointed by the congress to investigate the activities of the refinery. In addition to these two deputies, Hubert Rojas and Hector Carballo, of the Unity coalition, and United People Deputy Humberto Vargas Carbonell are members of the commission.

The last-mentioned could not participate in the commission sessions because of lengthy illness. And the two Unity representatives did not attend the majority of the commission's sessions.

In addition to nine recommendations to the plenary session of the legislature, Deputies Barrientos and Monge presented a draft law setting forth the following, among other principal points: the products of the refinery should be of top quality and sold at a price established on the basis of total cost plus profit, which should not exceed 2 percent of the total sales for the respective fiscal year, total cost being taken to mean the cost of the raw material plus the cost of processing it into a final product, or lacking that, the cost of the imported product, as well as the freight, administrative, distribution and sale costs at the final destination. The SNE [National Statistics Service] would establish these figures within a period of no more than 15 working days from the effective date of an increase for hydrocarbons.

The proposal adds that the RECOPE will be placed under the supervision of the controller's office and will function on strict austerity norms. It will be required to submit an accounting report of its operations within the first 60 days of each fiscal year. No loans, donations or subsidies will be allowed except those authorized by law, and if the directors of the refinery violate the law or the regulations governing it they will be penalized by a fine of 10,000 to 100,000 colones, and will bear personal liability for loss and damage they cause the enterprise itself or consumers.

One of the recommendations would request the president to refrain from encouraging participation in the affairs of state by members of his family. Another asks the government to adopt a clearly defined energy policy. Yet another would establish a price system for fuels entirely separating expenditures from real production costs and RECOPE profits and extra prices due to taxes and subsidies.

They propose that the RECOPE establish a true austerity policy, that an increase in gasoline octane be reestablished and that it be determined through the controller's office if the executive presidents should return the daily fees paid them for failure to attend the sessions of the board of directors. The proposed legislation notes that attending the sessions is an obligation inherent in the posts of executive officers. And finally, a recommendation calls for more detailed studies by the plenary legislative body of a RECOPE request for 50 million colones in credit.

5157
CSO: 3010

AGRICULTURE MINISTER SPEAKS AT FAO CONFERENCE IN HAVANA

San Salvador LA PRENSA GRAFICA in Spanish 13 Sep 80 p 47

[Speech by Minister of Agriculture and Livestock Octavio Orellana Solis at FAO conference in Havana, Cuba, on 1 September]

[Text] Mr President of the 16 th Regional FAO Conference for Latin America and Cuban Minister of Agriculture, Your Excellency Arnaldo Milian,

Mr Vice President of the Conference and Colombian Minister of Agriculture, Your Excellency Gustavo Dajer Chadid,

Mr Vice President of the Conference and Minister of Agriculture and Livestock Development of our sister republic of Nicaragua, Your Excellency Jaime Wheelock Roman,

Mr Vice President of the Conference and Guyanese Minister of State for Agriculture, Your Excellency Ralph van Sluytman,

Mr Vice President of the Conference and Argentine permanent Ambassador to the FAO, Your Excellency Carlos O. Keller Sarmiento,

Mr Director General of the FAO, Dr Edouard Saouma,

Distinguished delegations attending the 16th Regional FAO Conference for Latin America,

Distinguished delegation from the Republic of Cuba, the host country for this great conference,

Distinguished members of the financial and technical assistance delegations:

As representative of my country, El Salvador, it is an honor for us to attend this conference at which big farm and livestock issues of major interest for the economic development and well-being of our republics are to be discussed.

The content of the messages delivered by the president of the Cuban Council of State and Council of Ministers, Dr Fidel Castro Ruz, and the director general of the FAO, Mr Edouardo Saouma, was truly inspiring for our delegation.

The governing revolutionary junta of El Salvador supports the principle of international solidarity without any discrimination due to ideological leaning. Both at home and abroad it promotes /pluralism as one of the fundamental elements of the new society it is building./ [in boldface]

The nature of our countries' structural problems, so realistically expressed in the FAO director general's message, fully coincides with the model of historic development our country was patterned after in the past.

At present we are implementing measures based on a structural view of economic, social and political development.

The people and the government of El Salvador respectfully request this conference to allow us a few minutes time to tell you what we have been accomplishing:

2. [as published] Philosophical basis of New Strategy of Development

Committed to the creation of a new social order in El Salvador, the governing revolutionary junta considers the application of a new model of development imperative, one based on a profound transformation of our economic, social and political structures, a transformation inspired by a philosophy whose mainstay is the establishment of a just, participating, pluralist and democratic society.

The foundations of this kind of society are the people's participation in the process of making decisions affecting their own destiny and the form of ownership of capital goods, based on a multistructural system of private, corporate and state ownership.

In this new social order, five values will guide the dynamics of the building of our new society: dignity, peace, participation, solidarity and well-being.

2.1 Dignity

Human beings form the hub of economic, social and political development. They are the protagonists and the goal of development.

The promotion of the individual, of his dignity and his freedom, is essential to the concept of democracy.

2.2 Peace

Peace is a climate, a social situation, by virtue of which the individual and social spirit gains tranquillity, calm and liberty, which enable man to fully achieve his capabilities and make optimal use of opportunities. The concept of peace is not visualized as being the opposite of war, rather of the general violence that was promoted by the special socioeconomic configuration that prevailed in El Salvador.

2.3 Participation

The participation of the individual in the daily functioning of the community is a result of the valuational and personalist concept of democracy, based on the very communal idea itself which seeks sociability deriving from the joint action of the people living in the community.

Participant democracy must institutionalize access to the decisionmaking power for each and every citizen and also the distribution among them of the rewards of social organization, be they material of moral, by means of equitable standards. The citizen must participate when he gives and when he receives.

Thus participant democracy is the property of a society that excludes and goes beyond those systems that establish political equality but in practice do not permit the people to exercise power. It also excludes and goes beyond the individualism of capitalist society which gives rise to deep-seated inequities and economic and social injustices.

The participant society is a process of development which is constantly evolving and undergoing change, one which needs the determined support of the people and the government to set it in motion and bring it to a favorable conclusion.

The economic power of the state is exercised through general participation of the workers and employers. The economy of the state must be integrated into the community and private economies, thus serving to expand them without absorbing them.

2.4 Solidarity

The new social order will be built on a basis of cooperation among all members of the society in order to jointly achieve the common welfare. Solidarity thus involves peace among all its members without racial, religious, class or regional discrimination. It obliges those who govern and those who are governed to contribute their efforts to the establishment of the new democratic society and to see to it that justice prevails in all aspects of life.

The integration of the nuclear family, in which man experiences his noblest feelings, will be promoted and also the basis of justice will be established so that man, now underprivileged, ceases to be so and has the opportunity to live in a state of equality.

2.5 Well-Being

The philosophical foundation pillars of the new model will be joined so that the common welfare can finally be achieved. In connection with this, three constitutive elements of the common welfare, narrowly linked to one another, stand out:

An atmosphere conducive to the free achievement of the individual.

The highest degree of material and spiritual satisfaction it is possible to achieve, given the existing resources at any given time.

The degree of personal perfection and development which people who live in this society can achieve through the use of these resources.

3. Model of Development

3.1. Historic Model

El Salvador's economic structure has been historically characterized by the domination within the economy of a farm export sector in which, while a certain amount of diversification has been introduced during the last few decades, since the close of the past century coffee has been and continues to be the chief product about which the accumulation of surpluses has revolved and on which, therefore, the development of the other sectors has depended. It has in a decisive way directly and indirectly influenced the volume of economic activity and employment in the structuring of the domestic production apparatus and even the institutional organization of the country.

Favorable ecological conditions for the growing of coffee have enlarged our economic space, allowing for the development of highly mechanized cultivation with very intensive use of labor, albeit highly seasonal, in contrast with a sector composed of small farmers who grow products basically intended for domestic consumption, using very primitive methods and, therefore, achieve only a low rate of productivity, constituting a group of subsistence farmers. In addition to this sector of small farmers, there is the great mass of landless workers which enables the coffee grower to have at his disposition abundant, cheap labor when he needs it.

The development of the farm export sector has been based on a high concentration of farm property and occupation of the best lands, forming a model in which economic results contrast with social and environmental results.

Coffee and traditional export crops in general require a large mobilization of labor during the harvest season and constitute the chief generator of employment in rural areas. The agrarian structure that has hitherto prevailed, inasmuch as farm export items are specialized in terms of one kind of cultivation, involves the need for a complementary agrarian economy that makes it possible to fluidly mobilize the labor required during the harvest seasons and to employ this labor force in other kinds of activities during the rest of the year without its constituting a burden on the farm export plantation's budget. Within this system, the earning power of these crops, particularly coffee, permits payment of a higher wage than in the rest of the farm activities, thus providing a low or marginal income during the rest of the year for the bulk of the rural population within the framework of their subsistence economy. In terms of this model, it is undesirable to promote urbanization, rather to maintain a basically rural economy.

The complementary agrarian structure has been subsistence farming by small landowners in which ownership or leasing of tiny parcels has played a central role. This system can to a certain extent control the labor supply and keep it in rural areas while at the same time controlling the size of the production unit and, therefore, incomes and the inclination to take part in the harvesting. On the periphery, farmers without land constitute the pressure that helps to regulate the land market by establishing minimal subsistence production as a marginal option for themselves.

The operation of this model has brought the complementary economy marginal lands and allowed these farmers to naturally specialize in the production of food crops for their own subsistence and to supply the domestic market with their limited surpluses. That is, the cultivated land area was increased, although badly farmed, thus supporting the population that had to harvest the major crops. But, at the same time, this population's income has remained severely limited and the result has been scattered settlement on land that is hard to reach, thus limiting access to services and development potential itself, directly due to the lack of means of production and indirectly due to social limitation, low levels of education, malnutrition and low degrees of social and political integration.

Considering the nature of the crop, which does not require extensive capitalization in the form of fixed assets, the economic surplus generated in the production of coffee has brought the sector itself a relatively low return. Thus the surpluses obtained have been directed toward other sectors, particularly the financial and commercial sectors, in addition to that part of them deposited abroad, giving rise to a system integrated in terms of its needs: primary cultivation, foreign marketing and financing. This has been a system in which the different parts are interdependent, in which each link supports the others, a system that tends to channel its own resources and the rest of national savings for its own units, emphasizing the process of concentration and restricting opportunities for the rest of the economic system. This structure incorporates all the advantages and disadvantages of the monopolistic systems, in the final analysis blocking economic and social mobilization and making democratization of property difficult. However, it has generated managerial ability.

The existence of profitable economic units and concentration of their holdings, and therefore of income, on the one hand, and the mass of farmers whose subsistence incomes basically stem from the operation of small farms and harvest wages, on the other, shape a dual farm sector that conditions all of the rest of the economic system. The first of these generates incomes that are high but have little impact on the domestic production apparatus, since these incomes are used to buy fixed income assets, for deposits abroad and for the consumption of luxury items which are by their very nature provided with goods and services that come from abroad. In contrast, with a production volume that scarcely exceeds the subsistence levels of the population dependent on it, the second creates a purchasing power that is insufficient to stimulate domestic demand and convey a dynamic character to the economy as a whole. This situation is reflected in an industrial sector in which the production of consumer goods, especially food items and textiles, utilizing very primitive technologies, has been predominant. Consequently, this industry, oriented toward the domestic market and with such low productivity, has also generated low returns, thus describing a circle defining a poverty economy.

During the past 2 decades, there has been some modernization of the economy, fundamentally based on a certain amount of diversification of farm production — the cultivation of cotton and sugar cane has been introduced — and on the launching of a process of substitution for imports on the extended market represented by the Central American Common Market. But, of great significance during the first few years, the dynamism that was in this way introduced, especially as a result of regional market incentives, rapidly and gradually [as published] lost impetus due to the lack of depth of the production processes that were introduced, the lack of specialization and reciprocity among the countries involved, saturation of the as yet limited regional markets and the end of the period of easy substitution for imports.

Thus this modernization process was insufficient to absorb the rapid growth of an impoverished rural population and succeed in constructing a dynamic, urban-based model.

In the end, we have a process rooted in the rural population wuich has structural defects that are transmitted to the rest of the system, with a farm export-financial sector and a great deal of power but which could not and would not set in motion a new phase and is in no position to revitalize a model that is not dynamic, nor to create the conditions necessary to correct its numerous shortcomings in the social sector. The agricultural model, in its traditional form, is worn out through having practically exhausted land resources and having demonstrated its inability to economically absorb the expansion of the rural labor force, in turn due to its inability to transfer farm-export sector surpluses to other sectors that could have provided the economy with new impetus.

In the historic model, the limited scope of the national market did not constitute an inducement to industry since this sector had, practically speaking, remained at the cottage industry level up until the first half of the present century.

On the other hand, the incipient modernization introduced by means of industrialization, the framework of the Central American Common Market, was also incapable of transforming the economy and of correcting the conspicuous economic and social inequities inherent in the form of development pursued up to now.

The two great resources available to the country are its people and its farm and livestock potential. To these we must add the product of material, human, technological and managerial cumulative efforts. A new model must, therefore, be set in motion, based on farming and stock raising, mobilizing human resources as the country's basic productive factor and as a relative advantage and developing its ability to accumulate wealth, providing the latter with a new direction.

Consequently, we must develop a new basis for the economy which can be none other than that of industry. To do this, we have to expand the domestic market, integrating into it the 3.5 million inhabitants now excluded from it. We must also urbanize a major portion of the population and simultaneously improve the standard of living and guarantee suitable accumulation of wealth.

3.2 New Model of Development

The need to modernize the country's economic structure with the aim of incorporating the people into an aggregate of productive activities that will turn them into producers and simultaneously equal sharers of the income and wealth generated in the process in such a way as to raise the standard of living of Salvadorans, chiefly from the poorest social strata, has led to the adoption of a new model of development.

The new economic structure is based on integration of the national economy, eliminating the great contrasts between the highly mechanized farm export economy and the poverty economy oriented toward the domestic market which have been typical of the historic model.

Convinced of the urgent necessity of a meeting of the minds with the people in the spirit of creating just living conditions for the population and scientifically tackling the historic challenge of the economic, social and political development of El Salvador, as of 15 October 1979 with its proclamation the Salvadoran Armed Forces profoundly modified the power structure in order to activate the new model and correct the consequences of the situation that had prevailed until then and which had led to intolerable social tensions.

To this effect, the proclamation proposed "to adopt measures that will lead to an equitable distribution of our national wealth, at the same time accelerating the growth of the GNP."

To achieve this objective, the essential elements of the new model are agrarian reform, nationalization of the financial system and nationalization of foreign trade involving traditional exports.

Radical modification of property relations and land use through agrarian reform will eliminate social conflicts stemming from powerful pressure by farmers concerning land. Consequently, social stability will increase and mechanisms will be created that will permit farmers to participate in the management of the new production process.

The democratization of farm ownership and the new forms of production have provided new sources of employment and income for farmers, permitting substantial improvement in their housing, health and food supply conditions.

Agrarian reform, on the other hand, will create the necessary conditions for reorienting and activating industrial growth. These conditions will assume the form of an expansion of the market. Redistribution of the profits generated by farm and livestock production activities among a significant number of farmers will trigger a reordering of the demand for consumer goods which will manifest itself as a sizable increase in the demand for domestically produced consumer goods.

The fundamental objectives of nationalization of foreign trade as regards traditional products are to increase export profits and to see to it that the surplus obtained from abroad is brought into the country. Through the centralized marketing of basic export items, the country will obtain additional profits from the better sales terms. On the other hand, this will guarantee that the result of the export balance attributable primarily to the farm sector will reenter the country and facilitate activation of the cumulative process.

Through nationalization of the financial system, the state is in a position to decisively influence rules for the allocation of credit, thus seeing to it that those sectors considered to be priority sectors obtain the financial resources necessary to carry on their operation. The cooperatives that come into being in the process of agrarian reform will thus be guaranteed access to credit. Also, the state will be in a position to be able to selectively orient resources through appropriate rules for the promotion of investments in such a way as to assure the nationalized bank's role as a mechanism for reallocation of funds in order to integrate the two so disparate production sectors found in the historic model.

Intensification of farm and livestock activity, both in the reformed sector and the unreformed small and median farmer sectors, will take the form of considerable diversification of production, mechanization in accordance with availability of national resources and better organization of enterprises. This intensification of farm and livestock activity will gradually lead to specialization in terms of relatively advantageous items and along with it the basis for a farm-product processing industry will be created, one which will make it possible to competitively market processed products both on the domestic and foreign markets.

The new demand structure resulting from the redistribution of income in the rural sector and development of the farm industry will give rise to an evolution of the country's production structure in the direction of a greater relative importance of that industry's contribution to the GNP, a sector that will come to be the most dynamic factor in the growth process.

The industrial sector's greater relative growth will also lead to greater development of urban activities, as concerns the construction of housing, necessary facilities and equipment supply as well as the incentive it will provide for the service industries.

The national transformation provided for in the new model of development will, in terms of the change in the structuring of the rural and urban populations and subsequent growth of the cities, in the long run promote the accelerated growth of industrial activities, related to construction, such as the cement, iron and other building material industries.

An observable indirect effect of the agricultural transformation will be the development of branches of industry oriented toward the manufacture of certain capital goods for the farm industry, such as light equipment and tools and the production of certain products like fertilizers and pesticides.

So, we can see that the key element in the promotion of economic development during the first phases of the new model will continue to rest chiefly on the accumulation of wealth originating in the primary sector, but now reinforced by the close linking of the farm and livestock and industrial sectors stemming from, on the one hand, the stimuli provided by a demand for manufactured consumer goods due to the raising of farm workers' income level and, on the other, the processing of farm products, the development of the metal and mechanical industry, chiefly a supplier of equipment and tools for farm use, and the development of that branch of the chemical industry which supplies products for farm use.

The very nature of the first phase of industrial development will generate the conditions that will favor evolution of this activity in the direction of the shaping of an internally dynamic sector. That is, the enlargement and extension of the market, the development of labor skills, the development of new managerial abilities and the appearance of big foreign economies resulting from the formation of given industrial complexes will form the basis for a more advanced phase of industrialization, one which, along with the farm and livestock sector, will produce a radiation effect on the entire remainder of the economy. Autonomous industrial growth during this phase will depend on items produced by a more advanced technology, but which will be subject to the criterion of selectivity in order to develop industries that are capable of being linked with the past and the future and which are in a position to provide products that can successfully compete on international markets, to do so making intensive use of those national resources which the country possesses in a relatively advantageous way. Because of the ability to compete on foreign markets which this modernized industry will have, the exporting of manufactured products will come to be one of the most dynamic elements in the economic growth of the country.

The development of the economy itself will continue to create conditions such that other sectors, distinct from the farm export sector, will gradually be incorporated into the category of surplus-generating sectors. To this effect, this dynamic and competitive industry must also be capable of creating surpluses that contribute to the financing of its accumulation of capital. At the same time, the greater ability to generate savings, throughout the entire economy, must be accompanied by development of the financial system such that it will be capable of massively acquiring savings from the public and directing them toward industries where they are needed.

The model senses the need for foreign investment in terms of the country's major interests, complementary to dynamic domestic factors. The incorporation of foreign investments will be promoted, especially in those sectors in which foreign capital is accompanied by a technological contribution, markets and managerial ability. They will be integrated into the domestic industrialization process and will in general complement the efforts of our national sectors. During the different phases of this process, in which the creation of employment will be one of the basic objectives, criteria for the selection of foreign investments will also be applied to activities whose chief contribution consists of the generation of employment.

In terms of geography, the initial expansion of demand produced by agrarian reform will make possible a better geographical distribution of income by stimulating local activities in addition to the importance of the redistribution of income per se in favor of reformed sector workers.

The process will simultaneously depend on the successful training of rural and urban manpower with the goal of increasing the productivity of this resource and, therefore, its ability to generate income in order to obtain a sustained improvement in the quality of life and equal opportunity for the entire population. The state will chiefly assume responsibility for this training function.

The state will play a very active role in the new model of development, especially during the early phases of the process. A fundamental concern will be improvement of the standard of living of the economically weakest sectors and development of human activities at a rate and in a way required by the new model. With this goal in mind, the chief actions in this domain will consist of extension of the coverage of regular education programs and extension of the appropriate programs to the nonformal sector, development of sensible nutrition programs and extension and improvement of the public health programs.

In the farm and livestock sector, the state is supporting the creation and strengthening of farmer enterprises and small and median farmers through more and better technical and financial assistance.

In the industrial sector, the creation of enterprises in accordance with the different phases of evolution of the industrial strategy already described will be promoted and the creation of industrial complexes that allow for suitable reciprocity among industries will be stimulated. The state will also assume responsibility for ordering the process of urbanization inherent in the features of the model.

The strengthening of the state's role of necessity forces it to strive for greater efficiency, which will involve cutting down operating costs in many cases and a tendency toward the self-financing of certain public services. However, the actions noted above will in any event lead to greater relative utilization of financial resources by the state than in the past. Hence the need for strengthening its financial capability through a restructuring of the tax system and sensible handling of the tariff system and the national and foreign debts when sources of taxes or other current income are insufficient.

The new model can thus sustain itself in a mixed economy in which the state actively participates and the role of private initiative is strengthened, developing the potential of each and every individual as an economic entity in terms of the relations defined in the model in which the elements of the common welfare and solidarity prevail to that end.

Municipal development will play a top role in the balanced development of the country's different regions and in the plan for participation which the model covers, which will mean a complete transformation of local governments in terms of their organizational, administrative, financial and technical aspects.

Basic Forms of Ownership

In a just, participating and democratic society, the system of ownership of the means of production is made appropriate to the social function they have to perform. To that end, the basic forms of ownership will be the following:

Farm and Livestock Sector

To guarantee direct participation of farmers, farm hands and small and median farmers in the process of reform and at the same time assure them a system of organization that will allow them more and better technical and financial assistance, greater productivity and bigger marketing profits, production units based on various basic forms of ownership will be organized: private ownership, joint ownership (state cooperatives composed of workers or employers and workers), community ownership and state ownership.

Industrial Sector

Private ownership, joint ownership (state-employer, state-worker and employer-worker), self-administered public ownership and state ownership are contemplated.

In joint-economy industries in which the state participates in ownership, the administration of enterprise operations will not necessarily be in the hands of the state, which will always reserve itself the right to determine the enterprise's more general policies.

The purpose of this is to avoid the emergence of a state that functions as absorber in the production sector.

Other Sectors

State and joint enterprises will predominate in the strategic services.

In the rest of the service sectors, private enterprises and cooperatives will basically predominate.

4. Our Appeal

We have no fear of free discussion of ideas and we favor a pluralist government. The public officials of my country are open to public criticism, ready to listen to sensible opinions and correct errors.

We also open the doors of our country and our hearts to all foreign citizens of good will who sincerely want to collaborate in the expansion of our country. We respect all ideologies and are always ready to engage in a dialogue, but we oppose those who want to resolve economic, political and social problems through terror and crime. We have faith in and respect for the will of the people as expressed in free elections. And, based on all these principles, which form an intimate part of the souls of all Salvadorans, we will briefly express a few opinions on international coexistence, which we firmly support, that is, the values that are valid for all developing nations which, like ourselves, aspire to a life with dignity within the concert of civilized nations.

In abolishing privileges of all sorts and in our haste to eliminate the monopolies, thus equitably distributing income among all majorities, we have emphasized the fact that we feel that all citizens have a right to get ahead. We extend this same idea to the international world; that is, the time has come for developing nations to join the great family of nations without discrimination as regards economic potential.

We applaud and admire in every respect those international organizations for whom distinguished experts from the different nations work with enthusiasm and energy on behalf of those countries with limited resources, especially food. It is worth noting that these progressive multinational agencies must not be made to play in response to the motion of the decision-making baton of the big powers. Democracy is a powerful force for progress in every civilized country but at the international level it is a sine qua non for the creation of a world without borders or hatred.

Economic aid from the industrial nations for nations with few resources cannot be postponed and it is urgently necessary that it be offered without strings or hidden proposals for the expansion of one's power. Long ago, people were subjugated with no other explanation than that of brute force under a system of collective slavery. Later, the pretext of religion was used to persuade, with apparent motivations of salvation, tribes or gullible peoples and later still we spoke of the colonial period with the apparently noble excuse of bringing the advances made by civilization to large masses of uncivilized people. At the present time, we talk of "hegemony." But regardless of what euphemisms or descriptive terms have been used to conceal or disguise domination over the weak by the strong, El Salvador demands that the exploitation of man by man and of developing nations by industrial nations disappear, nationally and internationally.

When we speak of financing, we do not do so in the sense of a gift or a privilege, but as a form of cooperation, of world solidarity that will increase people's production and consumption capabilities, which are the most powerful weapons we have to avert crises and arrive at an era of peace, which all men of good will yearn for, under the protection of a system of international justice.

We stress the fact that all economic aid involves full recognition of the fact that energy resources and technological advances must be made to serve humanity. What financial contribution from nations with great economic potential is more important for developing nations than the payment of fair and profitable prices for their basic export items, in our case coffee, cotton and sugar cane? Artificial price fluctuations obtained through tariff barriers or speculation must be avoided, since any financial aid is canceled out when a poor nation's products are bought at depressed prices.

We maintain that an attitude of brotherhood and the sincere desire to achieve peace within an atmosphere of economic and social equity must prevail over the established interests that manipulate the international markets.

And in closing, I would, with all respect and in the name of the Republic of El Salvador, request this conference to promote a constant exchange of technological advances, especially as regards farm and livestock development and to make a joint statement to the effect that the astronomical sums wasted on the manufacture of weapons of destruction be channeled toward the eradication of hunger and ignorance, bringing knowledge to the most remote corners of our planet. Thus, future generations will be able to progress, free of oppression, misery, ignorance, racial, religious and ideological differences, and rise into the infinite sky of progress on the wings of thought and liberated labor.

Many thanks.

11,466
CSO: 3010

CONCERN EXPRESSED OVER CLASHES WITH NICARAGUA

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 7

[Editorial: "Dangerous Skirmishes"]

[Text] The reports coming from the southern section of the country are not at all reassuring. They claim that, early in the week, in less than 48 hours, there were two clashes between Honduran Army troops and alleged members of the Nicaraguan Armed Forces, and five casualties were reported among contingents from the neighboring country.

The departments associated with the military institution in the capital of the republic had made no official report as of late yesterday afternoon, and a diplomatic source questioned by reporters (the ambassador from Nicaragua) claimed that he knew nothing about the incidents.

Meanwhile, the accounts from supposed witnesses who claimed to have observed the second skirmish (which took place on Tuesday, 9 September) did not give sufficient explanation of the incident, because they gave the impression that the (unidentified) men who were firing from Nicaraguan territory might not have been troops from the Sandinist Army, but rather cattle thieves who had already, on two occasions, committed holdups followed by the theft of cattle from the Las Hormigas ranch, the site of the gun battle.

The press reports also stated that the Nicaraguan Government has emphatically denied that its Armed Forces clashed with Honduran troops; something which has increased the confusion greatly.

Whatever may have occurred, there is one concrete fact: Armed men, apparently ready for anything, are attempting to create an area of tension between Honduras and Nicaragua; while, on the other hand, officials of the Managua regime are making frequent statements to the international press, in which severe hostility toward our country is expressed.

The matter would not be very significant if it were not for the fact that we are living in an era when international propaganda has become a weapon for psychological warfare.

Nicaragua, despite the strange incidents that have occurred on its territory recently, and despite the growing Cuban influence on its policy (which has just become evident once again in the OAS, when the Managua regime fought against an open discussion of the report on the status of human rights in Cuba), continues to have what in the jargon of the trade we call a "good press."

In other words, the Western news media are still assigning it a heroic role, one of the features of which consists of giving credit to everything said by its officials, and denying what is stated by those who feel harmed by its acts or declarations.

Honduras, on the other hand (as we observed in a recent editorial note), does not have a public image abroad that is in keeping with the atmosphere of peace, liberty and democratic openness that exists in our country.

And the result of all this is that the hostile publications, on the one hand, and the acts of provocation, on the other, are creating dangerous conditions which could prove to be the spark for a potential military and political crisis between the two nations.

Here, we deem it an obligation for the governments, through the respective foreign ministries, to exhaust all peaceful means for explaining what is happening.

If these are not members of the neighboring country's regular army, it would be well for us to know it, and especially for us to obtain guarantees from the Nicaraguan regime that those responsible for these acts of harassment will be stopped.

Concurrently, the Political Council and the authorities of the General Secretariat of the Organization of American States (OAS) must be informed of the matter, so that the continental entity will be completely apprised of what is occurring, and not allowed to be manipulated, at the last minute, with a fictitious story given by our neighbors which, as occurred in 1969, could depict us as the "villains" of the film, while they attack and invade our country amid an orchestration of publicity financed by the superpower which wants to convert Central America into another Afghanistan.

The diplomacy of our times must be active, dynamic and marked by anticipation. We are living in an era beset with threats, violence and disregard for international law.

And since we are a peaceful people, we must approach the pertinent regional forums to bring up these matters while, on the other hand, we prepare ourselves for any contingency.

Such is the challenge entailed in the most recent events. And it is our duty as Hondurans to meet it with imagination, creativity and patriotism....
2909
CSO: 3010

LARGE COAL DEPOSITS DISCOVERED IN SENSENTI VALLEY

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] Tegucigalpa--The largest deposit of coal (lignite), with a potential of over 25 million tons has been discovered in the Sensenti Valley, in the San Antonio and San Francisco del Valle areas of Ocotepeque. It may possibly be used to build a thermal plant for electric power which would save Honduras several million lempiras.

The discovery of the coal mine deposit was scientifically proven at the conclusion of two campaigns for diamond drilling and detailed geological surveys costing 650,000 lempiras, a sum contributed by the National Investment Corporation (CONADI) for exploratory work in the aforementioned region.

The total reserves in the deposits are 24.6 million metric tons of lignite, with a calorific power very similar to that of European lignite, which is currently being used to generate electric power.

Reniery Elvir Aceituno, head of the coal project, who remained in that area for over a year, said that the value of the deposit, using the price of lignite in the United States as a base, would be 202 million lempiras.

He reported that the price of the fuel oil obtained by the country would be 633 million lempiras, which would result in savings to the country when it was processed for electric power, through the thermal plant that it is intended to build, which would meet the energy requirements of the departmental zone of Ocotepeque, while simultaneously incorporating a large number of individuals into the activities for employment in the exploitation phase.

On the basis of their degree of exploration, these reserves are divided into three categories (15.4 million tons as probable reserves, and 6 million tons of lignite rated as possible reserves).

Evaluation

Another phase involved in the project will be to evaluate the probable reserves on the basis of their commercial exploitation and utilization, and to investigate the methods of extraction, costs and capital reserves that are required.

CONADI has now received bids for services from several foreign consulting firms with experience in the mining and use of coal, which are ready to make an immediate preliminary feasibility study. The first part of it, involving geological research and mine planning, has an estimated cost of 300,000 lempiras, including the fees for the experts, fares, packing and shipment of samples, laboratory anaysis and all the expenses of logistic backup.

Utilization

It is thought that the coal deposit may be used to build a large thermal plant which could solve the electrification problems of the entire Western section of Honduras.

According to the manager of CONADI, Augusto Coello, explorer Elvir Aceituno and the manager of the entity's promotion department, Norman Garcia, on the basis of the preliminary calculations, the thermal plant would have a power of 40,000 kilowatts over a period of 27 years.

2909
CSO: 3010

DRAFT BILLS ON TRADE, MILITARY, HOUSING EXPLAINED

Trade Licenses, Military Offenses

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 9

[Text] The National Reconstruction Government Junta has prepared nine draft bills regulating various aspects of the nation's activity.

Trade License and Trade Permit

1. In its article, the law creating the Trade License specifies that a license is mandatory and that the state will regulate this activity through the Ministry of Domestic Trade. The duration of the trade license will depend on fulfillment of the obligations, with the establishment of government penalties that may amount to a definitive cancellation of the license.

2. The Trade Permit will be required to regulate trade activity in the Central American area. The Ministry of Foreign Trade will issue the permit to Nicaraguan natural or juristic persons and to Central Americans residing in Nicaragua. It will be renewable and nontransferable. It will be cancelled, if violations of that law are committed. Foreign Trade will issue regulations under that law and its application does not impair the provisions of the Law on Trade Licenses.

Expropriation Decree

3. Because it is regarded in the public interest, the road passing through the San Joaquin Ranch, formerly the La Ceiba Ranch, owned by Joaquin Rivas Jarquin, registry number 7455, volume 189, folio 238 and 289, entry 4 and 5 in the Property Book of the Public Registry of the Department of Carazo, is expropriated.

4. Article 22 of the Labor Code is amended. It should read as follows: "A collective agreement is an agreement made for the purpose of specifying general labor conditions in an enterprise or in a group of enterprises between an employer or group of employers and a labor union, federation or confederation of labor unions and of workers. Negotiation and approval of a collective agreement require necessarily approval of the Ministry of Labor, in accordance with procedures specified by this ministry."

5. Expansion of the Immunity Law. This law will be expanded as follows in its article 1: "Judges of the Appellate Courts of the Republic and judges of the Higher Labor Court will also enjoy immunity."

Change in Replacement of Real Estate Registration

6. In its articles, it sets up simplified procedures for the replacement of real estate registration. The real estate registration certificate will cost 10 cordobas.

Temporary Law on Military Offenses

7. It consists of 15 chapters and 83 articles. It establishes the concept of military offense as follows: "Any act or omission covered and penalized by this law that is socially dangerous and directly affects military service will constitute a military offense.

"Nevertheless, [any act or omission] that lacks social danger because of the little importance of its consequences and because of the personal qualities of its perpetrator will not be regarded as a military offense, although it contains the rest of the factors constituting a military offense."

The following are subject to the Law on Military Offenses: members of the Sandinist People's Army and of the Ministry of Interior on active military duty, reservists performing military instruction duties or services of a military nature, other persons expressly determined by the law. The Nicaraguan Penal Code is applicable to military offenses and to persons when not in conflict with the present law.

The law regards the following as attenuating circumstances of a military offense: 1. Good military conduct prior to commission of the offense; 2. Execution of a heroic act before or after commission of the offense; 3. Having performed outstanding services to the country before or after commission of the offense; 4. Having demonstrated sincere repentance by means of the individual's own moral censure of his criminal behavior."

For purposes of military offense, the law regards the union of two or more persons as a "group." A military court may decrease the minimum limit of the penalty by half; it may not increase the maximum limit; it may order conditional remission of any penalty involving deprivation of freedom that has been imposed and it may be applied to fraud or culpable offenses.

Refusal expressly to obey a commanding officer or other superior, threatening him or defying him are regarded as insubordination in acts pertaining to the service or connected with military discipline. The offense of disobedience consists of failure to carry out, modify or exceed a military order. A collective demand is an offense, "if four or more submit petitions, collective demands either verbally or in writing," even when one is merely present with the demand.

Organization of Military Judge Advocate General's Office; Temporary Military Penal Procedure

8. It is specified in this law that military trials will be conducted by the Office of the Judge Advocate General of the Sandinist People's Army. It consists of 16 titles and 267 articles.

Law Regulating the Ship Registry System and Authority To Fly the Flag

9. It will govern the ship registration register until the act of supplying Nicaraguan ships, ships or seagoing devices of 1 or more gross register tons. The Directorate General of National Water Transportation will make the registration. Every ship must have the certificate of registration and navigation certificate or permit. It defines national ships and specifies that their registration will be indefinite.

Authority to fly the flag. The navigation certificate authorizes flying the Nicaraguan national flag.

The law establisnes penalties and rates. The highest for commercial or industrial fishing craft, amounts to 6,000 cordobas. For freighters, the highest amounts to 28,000 cordobas.

The provisions of this law are in accordance with domestic law and international law, which prescribe that ships shall sail with a nationality. It is up to each country to establish the requirements needed for granting the status of national.

From an economic point of view, the nationality of a ship represents a measurable benefit for the country granting it that status, insofar as the activity that it performs contributes to the country's economy, either by participating in the traffic generated by domestic and foreign trade, or by bringing into the country the profits from third flag traffic.

Included among the flag-flying privileges is participation in export and import cargo, because 95 percent of this cargo moves on water.

Law Regulating Housing

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 18 Sep 80 p 9

[Text] The Council of State will discuss shortly the proposed housing regulation law. There has been much speculation on this law, whose sole objective consists in benefiting the large majorities.

Object of the Law

The law would be for housing constructed by the state in the future. It has nothing to do with housing already constructed. That is to say that, if a person owns more than one house, he will continue to own the houses that he has. Nevertheless, purusant to the Tenancy Law, he is obliged to put it up for rent, at a rental rate within the specifications of that law.

The object of the housing regulation law has three large sectors: housing awarded by the state and built by the state with public financing; housing financed by the state by means of loans to individuals for building their housing; state-controlled housing developments.

In the first two cases, an owner acquiring his housing by one of those means can only sell it to the state, when he wants to sell it. Selling it or not is up to him, but when he sells it, only the state can be the buyer.

Housing is personal property and can be inherited, but, if the heirs want to sell it, they also have to sell it to the state. The purpose of this lies in not allowing an individual to profit personally from something that was paid for by all the people of Nicaragua. In this way, it is also sought to have housing not circulate on the free market like one more commodity. Once more, that does not affect housing already awarded at present, inhabited and being paid for or entirely paid for.

The price for the state will include the initial cost of the housing, plus improvements made by the owner, less a percentage for use depreciation. This percentage will be worked out by means of internationally accepted tables.

In the case of state-owned housing developments, the state will not be the only buyer. It will, however, be the preferential buyer. Rules for setting the price will be the same, but the house cannot be revalued as a result of improvements made by the state in the state-controlled housing development in which the house is located.

With this procedure, the state can acquire land for the purpose of stopping any waves of speculation that may occur.

Housing built by the revolutionary state cannot be awarded to a person who already has another dwelling. This is nothing new, because it was already contemplated, on paper, during the Somoza regime. But it was not carried out. Actually, some 20 or more houses came to be awarded to one single person. At present, we can be sure that this will not happen. What is sought, is for each Nicaraguan family to own its own dwelling and one dwelling for each family.

Housing built by the revolutionary government cannot be attached. In this way, the whole family will be protected.

10,042
CSO: 3010

VARIOUS ASPECTS OF LITERACY CAMPAIGN MASS EMPHASIZED

FSLN Leaders Present

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 31 Aug 80 pp 1, 12

[Text] The mass held to give thanks to the literacy campaign workers in Don Bosco yesterday constituted a beautiful ceremony of Christian-revolutionary faith. Christians and revolutionaries joined together in an act of peace and brotherhood, only possible in the new Nicaragua.

With the representatives of the clergy and Msgr Miguel Obando y Bravo and crowds of Christians filling it, the courtyard of the church offered a happy picture for the victorious return of the young guerrilla fighters in the literacy campaign. Inevitably, the crowd included representatives of the national leadership of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front], in the person of Commander of the Revolution Tomas Borge Martinez, and numerous reconstruction-government officials.

Msgr Obando y Bravo prayed for the happy return of the young people from the mountains. "The literacy teachers have won a battle, the battle against ignorance," he said.

He recognized the difficult work done to liberate the peasant comrades abandoned for centuries to ignorance. He said that the parents too have done everything possible to achieve the triumph of literacy in our fatherland.

After the homily, the bishop appealed for the embrace of peace among Christians. Commander Borge Martinez exchanged embraces with the representative of the Catholic Church and the faithful.

"We want a Church which stands with the poor!" This was the slogan under which hundreds of parishioners joined with the base Christian youth communities in a march with the literacy comrades throughout the streets in the neighborhood of the Don Bosco Church.

Shouting "To be Christian is to be revolutionary," "There is no contradiction between Christianity and revolution," and "We are with you," in salute to the religious heroes who fell in the cause of liberation, the marchers proceeded along the main street of the 10 June Settlement.

Commander Borge Martinez marched with the literacy workers, parents and other Christians participating in the march for several blocks. The crowd began to shout "We want Tomas!" and "Let Tomas speak!"

Along one of the blocks in the 10 June Settlement, Commander Borge yielded to their appeal. "Are all of you Christians?" the commander asked.

"Yes," shouted the comrades in unison.

"And are you Sandinists?" the representative of the national leadership asked. "Yes," the crowd shouted again.

"This means then that the majority of Nicaraguans are Sandinist Christians," the commander emphasized, to the accompaniment of loud applause.

"You say here that we must struggle for a Church standing with the poor, for if it stands with the rich it cannot be the Church," the minister of interior went on to say.

"The Church must stand with the poor because Christ did. Among his disciples, he chose only one--Judas--who was not a proletarian, and you know what he did, betraying Christ and then hanging himself.

"Well, it is best that all those who betray Christianity do that--hang themselves," the commander said.

He said that there are those who have wanted to put Christianity on one side and Sandinism on the other, as if there were no priests supporting the revolution. He gave assurance that the revolution stands with the Church of the poor.

Warning to Youth

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 31 Aug 80 pp 1, 8

[Text] During the mass of thanks to the brigade members held in Don Bosco on Saturday, Msgr Obando said the following:

"The triumphs of culture, which symbolize the triumph of light over the darkness of ignorance, are those which give civilized countries the greatest pride.

"Great are the battles won on the battle fronts, great is the prowess of the heroic military men and tireless politicians who within their specific fields are fighting to eliminate enslavement and social injustice. But equally great are the battles you literacy workers have waged in the cities, the slums, the towns, the countryside, the mountains.

"Culture is the emancipating weapon par excellence, and history knows of no people who have won their full freedom and civic maturity in the midst of individual ignorance among its members.

"I am certain that you have encountered serious difficulties in carrying out your duties. But a difficulty is a guide. Great things happen when man faces the mountains. The most difficult things are the most beautiful. Mountains are there to be overcome."

The Ideal

"Energy focused on an ideal is more powerful than dynamite. Ideals and thoughts are fragments of our lives and to the extent that these ideals are high, life develops.

"Life is but the result of thought. All that we are is the product of what we have thought. Before undertaking an action, we have created it in our thinking. This is the reason for the supreme importance of meditation and contemplation.

"He who reflects 'prefabricates' his life, sows the seed of what he will one day be. Each of us is what he sows.

"Do you sow the wind? You will harvest the storm. Do you sow ideals? You will harvest a healthy personality. Do you sow thanks? You will harvest glory. Do you sow hatred? You will harvest destruction.

"To think is to live. There are men who do not think and barely live. And if they are not entirely dead, it is because they seek to live through the thinking of others.

"To think is to place oneself in tension before worthwhile things. The tension between what we have already achieved and what awaits us in the future is what moves the great machine of life and keeps it rolling. Every man has done some good or evil in his life, has had a strong idea forged in advance, but one forged by emotion and the ideal.

"The ideal gives evidence of thinking and emotion, the head and the heart. The first is the guide and the second the engine. Without the guide one does not see the road, without the engine one does not proceed along it.

"He who has high ideals never believes he has arrived. To believe one has achieved the goal is to renounce a higher goal and to stay where one is. To remain static is to die. Death is the last stop.

"He who wants to survive must always advance, making good use of the talents given him by his maker.

"He who is prepared to do all he can will be safe from the accusations of society and of Christ himself, who condemned the fig tree.

"Why did he condemn it? Not because it did any harm, but because it did no good--it did not yield fruit.

"Man is a living tree imbued with the vital fluid of sanctifying grace. If he only gives shade but no fruit, he will be condemned, and, like the fig tree, will wither.

"When the mother gives birth to her child she does not simply give but gives of herself, and is even ready to die in producing her fruit.

"Lakes receive and rivers give. Blessed are those who know that it is more beautiful to give than to receive.

"Great men are known by small things. For all grandeur is the result of cultivating the small. The sea is a sum of droplets and the mountains the sum of grains of sand.

"The impression some men in our day give is of being happy not because they have need for obstacles, but because they avoid any striving for perfection and any form of excellence.

"Many men and women on earth today are passive, incapable of reacting, frozen in inertia, so influenced by the environment in which they live that they do not succeed in breaking out of the circle of routine.

"Masses of young people are unfamiliar with initiative and personal defenses. They all think in the same fashion, make their decisions in the same way and act by the same procedures.

"Environmental ideas and habits are so powerful that they can maneuver man as they like, and man surrenders his truth and his freedom to become a guided missile.

"The healthiest philosophy begins with dignity and is opposed to standardization, against which a resolute struggle is necessary.

"Standardized man is like the plain, a line which merges with the horizon. Man who does not allow himself to be standardized is like the mountains, standing tall and alone."

Solidarity With Poor Urged

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 31 Aug 80 pp 1, 10

[Text] The solemn mass to give thanks for the victorious return of the literacy brigade members to Managua was held at 1600 hours yesterday in the Don Bosco Church, in accordance with a last-minute decision by the church curia, although it could not be held outdoors because of rain.

A large platform in the courtyard opposite the western side of the parish building was covered, and the large number of parishioners attending had to crowd into the church and the adjacent premises in order to be able to participate in the Holy Office.

Inconspicuous among those present we were able to identify Comdr Tomas Borge Martinez and Dr Arturo Cruz Porras, a member of the National Reconstruction Government Junta.

Christ Among the Workers and Peasants

The Christian Catholics of the parish of Sts Peter and Paul, to the southeast of Managua (Nicarao, 14 September and Venezuela, among others) marched to the mass in organized fashion, under a light rain, carrying placards and banners proclaiming, among other things, the resurrection of Christ among all the literate workers and peasants.

The archbishop of Managua, Msgr Miguel Obando y Bravo, officiated at the mass. His homily stressed that "the triumph of culture, which symbolizes the triumph of light over darkness, is the great pride of civilized nations."

He said to the brigade members: "I am sure that you have encountered serious difficulties in carrying out your duty, but the most difficult things are the most beautiful.

"You have given your best efforts in the crusade, and some even your blood and lives to help those who remained in ignorance.

"But he who has high ideals never believes he has reached the goal, but touches it and leaves it for a higher one."

The archbishop added that we are all the product of what we have thought, of what we have prefabricated in our thinking. But there are in our society many men who do not think, who live by what others have thought.

He went on to attack standardization, saying that "the standardized young people are unfamiliar with initiative and personal defense. Environmental ideas and styles are so powerful," he added, "that they maneuver the personality of man as they wish.

"The healthiest philosophy," the monseigneur said, "is that based on dignity and opposed to standardization. Man who does not allow himself to be standardized stands like the mountains, high and alone."

Brief Hubbub

Following the holy mass, a noisy but minor confrontation, soon ended, occurred in the courtyard. In the end the voice of the Christian Youth rank and file communities prevailed over the shouts of some small gorups seeking to defend their old privileges, wealth and exploitation, under the pretext of the liturgical purity of Christianity and the omnitemporal nature of Christ.

No Response

But no one took up their cry, and they would have gone unnoticed had it not been for a rather heavy, dark woman wearing slippers who stopped briefly in front of them and said to them:

"How is it possible that you have no sugar? And where then do you live? Look, I am very poor but I have enough sugar in my house because we have a cooperative in the neighborhood. We are well organized and there is enough for everyone. Why don't you organize and form a cooperative instead of standing here, where there is none, shouting that you want sugar?"

They Wanted Sugar

Two ladies of a certain age, well dressed and distinguished looking, noted that the shouting they favored had ceased and began themselves to shout: "We want sugar, we want sugar!"

Cooperatives Indeed!

The distinguished ladies had no answers for these arguments of popular simplicity, but they stood staring at the woman with an air of offended royalty, and one of them said contemptuously: "A cooperative, indeed! And since when have we needed to establish cooperatives in Nicaragua in order to eat?"

"The fact is that you have always eaten," the woman responded. "Now we are beginning to eat." And she went on her way.

Church of the Poor

The crowd, for its part, continued to shout slogans concerning the need for a Church standing with the people. As a result of the above, the young Christian brigade members issued a document for circulation to all Nicaraguan Christians of good will, in which they stated that "you have known and experienced in practice the reality of the workers and the peasants, the heritage of centuries of exploitation. And this contact has helped you to understand the choice the Church makes for the poor, who are the majority among Nicaraguans.

"Would that our Church," they added, "that our bishops would learn to listen to us, to hear us. We are not speaking for ourselves, but for the workers and the peasants who are tired of shouting for years about their exploitation, and still they do not feel that the Church hears them."

5157
CSO: 3010

STUDENTS SALUTE COUNTRIES STRUGGLING AGAINST IMPERIALISM

Havana OCLAE in Spanish Apr-May 80 pp 17-19

[Article by Elixsandro Ballesteros: "The Progressive Students of the World Reaffirm Their Anti-Imperialist Solidarity"]

[Excerpts] Communique on Solidarity With Panama

The rally for solidarity with the people, youth and students of Panama, held on 2 October 1979 in Panama City, joyfully salutes the date celebrated by Panama marking the entry into the defunct and terminated "Canal Zone," and the beginning of the end for North American colonialism.

We 23 national and international organizations of the progressive student movement of the world have taken part in the 1 October ceremonies and, on the occasion of this rally, we reiterate our profound, constant solidarity with the just and heroic struggle of the Panamanian people.

Today, this struggle for national liberation has reached a crucial stage in its development. During the course of its 76 years of republican existence, Panama had to confront major obstacles, abuse and maneuvers from the North American imperialists, who never ceased their attempts to maintain their hegemonic preeminence in the region.

Hence, 1 October symbolizes the fruits reaped in each one of these heroic feats. However, on this date there begins the final countdown of the colonial presence on Panamanian soil. With the Torrijos-Carter treaties signed in 1977, the Panamanians achieved an important, decisive step in the course of their constant battle. Although they have not achieved all that is desired, this does constitute a major milestone beginning the total decolonization of the national territory.

On behalf of their loftiest and noblest aspirations, the Panamanian people will redouble their fight and vigilance to see to it that the terms of the treaty are fulfilled during the years remaining until the total recovery of the Canal.

The international solidarity has been a decisive contribution to the movements for national liberation of peoples. It has never ceased to be felt, and even during the most difficult periods experienced by the cause of all Panamanians, it was present to activate this productive struggle.

Nevertheless, the imperialists have proven through historical experience that they always make use of tricks and specious arguments to interfere with the agreements that have been concluded.

Thw world witnessed the ambushes that Washington attempted to set up against the leaders of the liberation process in Panama, as well as the maneuvers aimed at impeding the gains made by the Panamanian people in the new Canal treaties.

The international democratic and progressive youth and students movement will not allow the imperialists to make a mockery of the conquests which cost the Panamanian people blood, grief and mourning. Thus, we reiterate today our backing for and solidarity with the peoples who now, like those of Panama, are fighting to eradicate from their soil the colonial presence, including the military.

This meeting denounces the maintenance of imperialist military bases in Panama, Puerto Rico and Guantanamo, as well as the military pacts which represent a threat to the independence and liberation of peoples, not only in Latin America, but throughout the entire world.

We also salute the independence attained recently by nascent republics in the Caribbean.

At the same time, we express gratification at the success of the democratic, anti-imperialist battles against colonialism, neocolonialism, fascism and reactionaries taking place at present in Latin America, and Central America in particular.

We salute the revolutionary victory of the Nicaraguan people over Somozism, one of the most ruthless and genocidal dictatorships that ever existed on the American continent.

The Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN), vanguard of the people of Nicaragua, conquered the most powerful Central American army which, backed by the North American imperialists, could not withstand the bravery of a people determined to fight and free themselves from the bonds shackling them.

This document voices satisfaction at this victory and the one being upheld by the people of Panama which, as might be expected, are influencing the liberation struggles being waged by the peoples of the world to free themselves from the exploitation and repression to which they have been subjected by dictatorial regimes.

Similarly, it urges all the progressive and democratic forces in the world to keep the solidarity with the Panamanian people active, and to denounce and condemn the imperialist plans attempting to perpetuate their domination over the nation of the Isthmus, and the attempts to thwart the struggle for national liberation of that fraternal people.

Now, as in the past, the youth and students of the world will continue to bear witness to their solidary, combative support for Panama.

Long live the just cause of the Panamanian people!

2909
CSO: 3010

DAILY FAVORS FREE FLOW OF OPINIONS

PY071827 Asuncion ABC COLOR in Spanish 5 Oct 80 p 10

[Commentary by Alcibiades Gonzalez Delvalle: "The Antidemocratic Barbarism"]

[Text] "Very Private Line" of the newspaper "PATRIA" expects "the colleague newspaper ABC" not to publish "statements made by Laino, Madame Coca and Resk," in order to contribute to the establishment of a "climate of unity and general harmony." It referred to Domingo Laino, Mrs Carmen de Lara Castro and Alfonso Resk.

We do not believe that the "climate of unity and general harmony" will be achieved by silencing the thoughts, aspirations and desires of distinguished citizens. The imposition of silence on people whose ideas we do not share is a return to barbarism. What is the purpose of criticizing a newspaper for publishing statements made by those who do not share the view of the author of "Very Private Line"? A free man loves the freedom of others; he does not wish slavery for anyone. The good citizen wishes to have a country which lives in peace, but an authentic peace, not one imposed through gagging. The more we discuss ideas, the more we spread the thinking of distinguished people, the more we are working for the real peace of the republic. The imposition of silence on the adversary is not the way of civilized people.

The aim of "Very Private Line" is even more repulsive because a journalist suggested it. Someone who believes himself to be a journalist is committed only to the interests of the country. The country will gain little when a newspaper is criticized for opening its pages to all opinions.

What are the best attitudes to achieve the "climate of unity and general harmony"? Those attitudes which permit the exercise of the right to think, dissent and give opinions, or those which threaten, intimidate, silence and imprison those who think differently?

There will never be a "climate of unity and general harmony" with the suggestion made by "Very Private Line." To silence adversaries is the easiest way to kill peace. It is the shortest path to achieve generalized fear.

If someone has exercised his right to express his thoughts and has expressed concepts which we do not share, let us then refute him with the same weapons, but let us not commit the "antidemocratic barbarism" of asking for his imprisonment or his silence.

On the same page as "Very Private Line," the newspaper publishes an editorial which is entitled "The Antidemocratic Barbarism."

This title is very suitable for the suggestion made by the journalist who wants a newspaper without "statements made by Laino, Madame Coca and Resk."

CSO: 3010

LABOR LEADER DISCUSSES ECONOMY, CTV, AD RELATIONS

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 15 Sep 80 p C-1

[Interview with Jose Vargas, vice president of Democratic Action and president of the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers, by Alfredo Pena; date and place not given]

[Text] Right now, the National Cost, Wage and Price Committee must be set up. The antimonopoly law must be promulgated and a strict law on supervision of profits.

Venezuelan economy has been handled with a series of foreign formulas. It is stupid and irresponsible to copy models and solutions applied to other situations.

Jaime Lusinchi is the consensus candidate.

There is no animosity whatsoever between Betancourt and Perez.

Some businessmen compute their recreation and that of their executives as production costs.

Worker comanagement is part of a longer range objective: democratic socialism.

AD [Democratic Action] members are still celebrating, because they have reached the age of 39 years. Their enthusiasm is so great that Jose Vargas, vice president of the party and president of CTV [Confederation of Venezuelan Workers], assures that there is no disagreement between Carlos Andres Perez and Romulo Betancourt. It is merely a question of style.

The social democrats appear to be ready for unity now. However, Vargas is concerned that the virus of presidential aspiration may spread toward every party and make a country with priority issues to solve lose its perspectives. He is concerned that Democratic Action may become involved in a give-and-take for nomination of the 1983 candidate, instead of continuing to make doctrinary and political reflections and to devoting itself to the preparation of a new development model.

Jose Vargas is an old labor leader who displays optimism with regard to difficulties. He has provided considerable support, together with his Labor Union Bureau, in behalf of the internal unity of a party that has been faring so poorly recently.

Vargas is convinced that the solution to the present troubles is basic. We have to proceed toward a complete reform of the Venezuelan State. A new political, economic and social design that will make a more just life possible.

He is concerned about the excessive profits of the nation's businessmen, always ready to double their invested capital in only one year of work.

[Question] To what extent can Venezuela's economy support the demands of the worker movement?

[Answer] The demands of the worker movement are adjusted to the situations of the enterprises. There is exaggeration when it is said that we submit grievances beyond what is fair or normal. What actually happens when a contract is signed? At most, that contract incorporates only 20 percent of new conquests. What is actually approved is a contractual extension. But, because this word is not liked very much at the labor union level, employers allege that it costs them this or that amount, that is to say, they include all the clauses that have been in effect for a long time.

[Question] What indicators do you have for determining that the demands are consistent with the profits or the financial situation of the enterprise?

[Answer] The worker knows perfectly when an enterprise is in crisis, is booming or is in a state of normal production.

[Question] You do not believe it necessary to use more technical mechanisms for determining costs, prices and profits?

[Answer] That is very difficult. Businessmen maneuver to conceal their real profit margins. They often establish various enterprises (or conglomerates) in order to sell and buy raw material from and to themselves. In some places, they have four or five employees and in others 100 or more. They usually end up by showing losses in these last-mentioned places. In other words, they "buy" raw material at high prices and the final product turns out to be "cheap." Here is a concrete example: multinational automobile companies sell the vehicle (as if it were complete) to its subsidiaries. Then, the branches established here add the aggregate value to it. That is to say that we users pay twice for it. As is known, the car comes incomplete and they double its value. The same is true of medicines. The world pharmaceutical industry is a real mafia. An accusation was made in the United States Senate that brought to light the mafia behavior that I have pointed out. This is also true of baby food. Gerber sells the pulp at a given price and here it is packaged so that the people may buy it at exorbitant prices.

[Question] What about the books of the enterprises?

[Answer] They do not let them be examined. They are afraid not only of a check on profit margins but also of tax violations that they commit frequently. Leoni granted the workers the right to examine them. Since then, there has been no conflict. They pay the two months earnings. We have insisted on checking real costs and earnings, because there are many anomalies in this connection. Businessmen include their vacations and their executives' vacations as production costs: air fares, yachts, dinners in top-rated restaurants and other pleasures. Worldwide, when a corporation obtains an annual profit margin of 10 or 12 percent, this is regarded as very positive. But here, Venezuelan capitalists are accustomed to doubling their investment in 1 or 2 years.

[Question] What mechanisms does CTV have in mind for straightening out somewhat this twisted capitalism that we have?

[Answer] That is the basic problem. We have suggested to the executive branch a cost, wage and price committee. Moreover, an antimonopoly law must be passed and another law that will make it possible to supervise profits.

[Question] Everyone's profit can be determined perfectly by means of the income tax.

[Answer] Yes, but capitalists evade it. The only ones who pay taxes here are the wage earners.

Market Economy

[Question] You have said that we cannot describe our country as an exponent of market economy. How, then, do we describe it?

[Answer] Venezuela's economy has been handled with a series of foreign formulas. Our economy resembles no other. In our case, the problems of inflation and unemployment must be viewed differently from the United States and Europe. The formula cannot be the one used in the Southern Cone, either. Apparently this is the one that the regime is now applying. Neither Chile nor Argentina has an oil revenue. It is, at least, stupid to impose that model. There is no competition here. The trend is for prices to go up and not go down.

State Capitalism

[Question] What you are proposing is a new economic system, a complete reform of the state.

[Answer] Precisely. There is no other course. This is a very exceptional economy. Sixty percent is in the hands of the public sector. The other day, we talked with a FEDECAMARAS [Association of the Chambers of Commerce and Industry] spokesman, Salas Romer, who pointed out the following to us: "Be very careful about that matter of state capitalism. It is very dangerous. That is a Leninist idea." We answered him: "It is a reality that we have not invented."

[Question] I insist: What kind of economy do you propose? Socialism is governed by a state or collectivized economy. Capitalism, as is obvious, by a market economy. What are we then? What can that original course in economic matters be?

[Answer] We are faced with a new phenomenon. We are living in a hybrid economy. An economy that is neither specifically capitalist or socialist. In traditional capitalism, the state is a collector of taxes from individuals. In socialism, it owns all the means and sources of production. Neither one nor the other occurs here. But the truth is that, in one way or another, all the existing enterprises have been established with public funds. This is not the typical liberal state. And here lies also a basic question: Who carries off most of the revenue? A minority. At any rate, instead of financing an individual so that he may carry off the profits for himself, the state could rely on good managers who will guarantee production and the establishment of enterprises in which the enterprises will have a more just and human objective.

[Question] The alternative that the CTV is proposing in the face of that economic hybrid is still not clear to me.

[Answer] There is no other one different from the new model of development. In the present situation, we believe that -- at this time in history -- public and private capitalism can persist. But it is true that the whole economic and political structure has to change. The wealth promoted or produced by the state with its own money cannot continue to be channeled to a few persons. That is the main source of injustice at present. What is understood by running expenses is also questionable. Because the individual who produces must receive part of the national income by means of his wages and services. In short, we have reached the conclusion that the political, economic and social organization of this state is not good.

Comanagement

[Question] What is the real scope of worker comanagement that you are proposing?

[Answer] We are proposing comanagement for every area of the economy. Because, actually, there is no private sector here, as I have already stated. Every enterprise is run with capital from the state. But it happens -- in this unusual relationship -- that the public sector does not reap the profits but only the losses. We want to participate in managing, planning and organizing production. This would also make a fair distribution of profits possible. Thus there would be no way for the workers or the state to be swindled out of the real amount of the dividends. Obviously, we workers, who are members of the production councils, would not accept the recreation of the owners and of their executives as costs of production. Likewise, it is necessary to move toward different labor relations in state enterprises. We have nationalized the iron and the oil industry, but, in practice, the worker-employer relations have not been changed. It is the same tobacco with a different pipe.

Political Party Injection in Labor Unions

[Question] We think that an excessive political party injection has lessened labor union sovereignty and democracy in Venezuela. In short, how can composition of the CTV Executive Committee be decided by the top level of the party?

[Answer] The worker leadership -- and I feel proud of this -- makes its decisions almost always unanimously. That is to say, by full agreement. There is a class-oriented concept. The political party injection that you note is expressed primarily in issues of an electoral type and not in issues of a principle nature.

[Question] When the secretaries general of AD and COPEI (Social Christian Party] and the respective labor union heads make the final decision on the composition of the Executive Committee of the CTV, is not labor union democracy being harmed?

[Answer] I do not believe so. In Venezuela, as in few countries in the world, in order to be a labor union leader, it is necessary to go through every position, from the bottom up to the very top level.

[Question] Then, what did Alejandro Izaguirre, Jose Vargas, Manuel Penalver, Eduardo Fernandez, Dagoberto Gonzalez, Rafael Leon Leon discuss recently? You know very well that they discussed the composition of the Executive Committee of CTV among other things.

[Answer] A problem not connected with CTV is involved. The COPEI side is interpreting an episode in the worker movement in a pettifogging manner.

It is maintaining an absurd position. They are denying the right of the Farmworkers Federation to go to the Workers Congress. But that has already been resolved. The members of the Social Christian Party have a problem that is internal in nature. As a result of the national and municipal victories, they promised "to sweep out the AD members" from the CTV. Obviously, their calculations were wrong. We are now more influential than ever.

[Question] In short, what will the force relationship on the Executive Committee of the CTV be?

[Answer] There are 15 posts and democratic voting will come up with this: nine AD, three COPEI, two MEP [People's Electoral Movement] and one for the minorities.

[Question] Although COPEI is a rather weak force in CTV, it should be realized that it is the government party, that is to say that it is the force that came out most favored in the last national election. If the COPEI members should reach the conclusion that their presence in the top-level labor federation is not taken into account in its just proportions, would not an institutionally difficult situation be created for the organized labor union movement?

[Answer] I do not think so. COPEI's withdrawal from CTV would not have a great effect on the institutional structure of CTV. It would have an effect insofar as they are an important political force in the country. At any rate, that kind of decision would harm the government primarily and not the opposition. What happens is that the worldwide Social Christian movement has as its line the establishment of its own worker federations. These pressures are being felt here.

[Question] In conclusion, will the present force relationship and the principal leadership positions (AD presidency and COPEI secretariat general) be maintained?

[Answer] Yes. We are not interested in changing that relationship. Although we have been in the majority in every congress, we have always yielded that position. We are pluralists and we show this in our acts.

Thirty-ninth Anniversary of AD

[Question] Of his own free will, Betancourt has removed himself from active party work. While Carlos Andres Perez is emerging as the most active and influential leader in social democracy.

[Answer] Democratic Action remains the same. Betancourt is still the theoretician and the man with great political vision. He is a national and continental leader. He has full effectiveness. Carlos Andres, a very important political figure, is not rebelling against what Romulo represents. He, perhaps, is one of his most outstanding disciples. Moreover, Betancourt's talent has led to our becoming the only party that has not depended on the wisdom of a leader to be able to subsist. The resistance movement demonstrated it. One leadership after another was arrested, tortured or driven into exile and the party continued to function.

[Question] You say that Democratic Action is still the same as always, but not the country. Venezuela has changed much.

[Answer] All of present-day Venezuela's changes have an AD imprint. Now, as is demanded by the present moment in history, we are seeking a political, economic and social relationship. Therefore, we are insisting on the new economic model and a reform of the state. Our basic point of view, the point of view of democratic socialism, continues to be stated.

[Question] What will the priorities of the electoral program that you will offer in 1983 probably be?

[Answer] Basically, the country's juridical and political change, the new economic design and a reform of the state.

Earthquake

[Question] Carlos Andres Perez produced an earthquake in Tachira: to be differentiated from the Christian democrat right and from the Marxist left. He alleged that the lack of a clear differentiation did much harm in the 1978 elections.

[Answer] Unfortunately we have never gone deeply into an analysis of why the elections were lost. And we did not do it because of the internal circumstances in which were were and that have now, fortunately, been overcome. I must point out, however, that the AD labor union movement did not suffer from that paralysis. But what really is concerning me is that haste to decide now on the presidential candidate. The virus started in COPEI, spread to MAS [Movement for Socialism] and threatens to spread more. That election prematurity will harm not only Democratic Action and the other parties, but also the country, which is more serious. The problem is not who will be president. The question lies in the kind of society in which we are going to live. This matter of untimely presidential aspirations may put obstacles in the way and blur the real prospects. I insist on the party's devoting its time to doctrinary reflection, instead of discussing whether it is Lusinchi, Canache, Morales Bello or Lepage. Let us set that small task aside and let us devote ourselves to drawing up the great guidelines of the future.

[Question] I insist: at what is that formula aiming? Neither leftist Marxism nor rightist Christian socialism?

[Answer] The Latin American situations, especially the ones in Central America, are making it necessary to take stands. In El Salvador, Christian socialism supports the military dictatorship. Castroism is encouraging guerrilla warfare. Social democracy is in the middle of the two, trying to establish political, social and economic democracy. On our continent, democracy is in perpetual struggle against these two traps: dictatorship of the right or of the left.

[Question] Christian democracy cannot be regarded as a dictatorial threat...

[Answer] But it is conducting a very odd policy. It is not dictatorial but it is the right. I believe that Carlos Andres tried to rock the party by driving it toward the outside and by attempting to eliminate internal confrontations. Let us not forget that we were practically dead. Now we are reviving very vigorously.

[Question] All his life, Betancourt has been a great fighter, a daring man, a controversial figure. Why is he now staying so distant, as if the party's fate did not interest him as much as at other times?

[Answer] Betancourt knows what he is doing. He has much knowledge of history.

Romulo and Carlos Andres Perez

[Question] It is hard to believe that relations between the one you call the most outstanding disciple and the teacher have not deteriorated recently.

[Answer] I have no judgement data for determining this. Nevertheless, from the party's point of view, there is a common area to the effect that Democratic Action has not fulfilled its final objective. There are no basic reasons for the creation of splits in the party. Relations between men, between human beings, have their vicissitudes. We even fight with our wives over foolish things! We all agree that the party has to be adapted to the present times and we are working on that. Notice that the consensus point of view did not come from Betancourt. It originated in the Labor Union Bureau. Subsequently, it was echoed by Carlos Andres Perez and then by Romulo.

[Question] Then, there are no differences between Romulo and CAP [Carlos Andres Perez]?

[Answer] Essential, fundamental ones, no. They are different styles. Romulo prefers the rearguard, but he intervenes in the party's basic matters. Carlos Andres is a type who cannot stay still and no one is going to take that from him for many years.

[Question] Do you have evidence that they are cordial in their dealings with each other? Have you any information on whether they visit each other and discuss party matters?

[Answer] They both attended the latest labor union conventions.

[Question] That is formal. Does Romulo invite CAP to his house?

[Answer] I believe so. Carlos Andres goes to Romulo's house.

[Question] You talked with them recently and perceived that the relation between both is cordial and friendly.

[Answer] True! There never have been any differences between them concerning what must be done in this country.

[Question] Has political party pluralism in Democratic Action made it possible for a trend to emerge more similar to the style and emphasis of Carlos Andres Perez and another similar trend but toward Betancourt?

[Answer] No. Not even the lineups that emerged around candidates for the secretariat general. When they occur, they reflect local problems.

[Question] You say that there is consensus for the secretariat general. How do you explain the existence of three candidates?

[Answer] There is practically only one: Lusinchi. And this is logical. He has already had a campaign and for several reasons no one opposed him from the beginning. Actually, he is the consensus candidate.

10,042
CSO: 3010

DEVELOPMENT MINISTER CRITICIZED AS FOE OF FREE ENTERPRISE

Caracas BOHEMIA in Spanish 22-28 Sep 80 pp 6-9

[Text] The peaceful residents of Puerto Cabello were awakened on Saturday 2 June 1962 in surprise and terror as a machinegun suddenly shattered the silence of that tranquil town. It was a truly rare event in a country that 4 years earlier had resumed a democratic process, and at that time was enjoying the benefits of a constitutional government headed by Romulo Betancourt. He had come to Miraflores with the majority of the Venezuelan electorate's votes.

The rumor of a coup spread like wildfire throughout the nation, and that event, fortunately aborted, would go down in the history of Venezuelan politics with the sadly famous name "El Portenazo." It was an insurrectional movement inspired by a group of military and civilian leftists, who seemed to have a solid backup in various garrisons throughout the country.

If the backing really existed, the only place where any planned action took place was at Puerto Cabello. The rebels took over the police station, the prefecture, the General Directorate of Police (DIGEPOL) and the Judicial Technical Police (PTJ), as well as the offices of the radio and telephone, electricity and radio broadcasting companies (the local station was Radio Puerto Cabello). The two civilian subversive leaders, Manuel Quijada and another man, went to the radio station to read the "minimum government program," which had nine points. They also distributed fliers around town containing the same information.

This coup attempt came after the abortive attempt by Carupano, and although Quijada's role in the other uprising has not been established, he was reportedly the brains behind the Puerto Cabello attempt. He was aided by another leader who was in charge of coordinating the movement with the Communist Party of Venezuela.

After the trial in the military courts, sentences of 16 years and 8 months in prison were given to the following civilians, whose participation in the coup attempt was clearly proven: Manuel Quijada Gonzalez (the current minister of development), Gaston Carballo, Oscar Carreno, Julio Domingo Blanco, Oscar Eduardo Sanchez, Servando Garces and Boris Dominguez.

In a letter dated 20 July 1962, Manuel Quijada wrote to the president and other members of the Supreme Court Martial, openly expressing his convictions, his full adherence to communism, and using terms such as "the glorious revolutionary action of Puerto Cabello," and "sooner or later, we will triumph," and other such things. He also defended the Cuban case: "On the other hand, with the exception of Cuba, which has taken the reins of its destiny, Latin America is a disgrace to the international community."

The document, which is too long to reproduce completely in this Political Report, is an exceptionally bold piece, especially when compared to the statements made by Quijada 16 years later (by then he was a minister) to the entire nation. However, a curious paragraph merits repetition here, 18 years after "El Portenazo": "Propaganda has tried to instill terror of our movement among industrialists and producers whose economic prosperity is also Venezuela's prosperity, because their wealth is derived from our soil; they invest their wealth in this country, and they consume it here as well. They should know that in underdeveloped countries, which are now on their way to industrialization, having won full independence, that class is not included in the revolution, because the success of economic development depends on these people and their prosperity."

Everyone knows what happened afterwards: Manuel Quijada Gonzalez was not only blessed with a presidential pardon so that he did not have to serve his term, but years later, he became minister of development of the present administration.

Guerrilla Minister

If the policy pursued by the ministry of development has been erratic, also erratic is the attitude of Manuel Quijada Gonzalez to the labor and production sectors. He has criticized people left and right, posing unnecessary challenges and opening up "fronts" to the government all over the place. He has even gone so far as to become the most controversial minister, earning the sobriquet "guerrilla minister" from those who oppose his actions. In this he has the advantage over even the controversial Leopoldo Diaz Bruzual, who appeared to accept defeat--maintaining a discreet silence--in view of Quijada's ability to fight with everyone. But is it true that he is wrong, that he is inefficient, and that he hasn't the foggiest notion of the country's economic situation? Or is he too clever and astute (a wolf dressed in sheep's clothing), now searching for a legal way to do what he failed to do before through insurrection? Is he taking advantage of the confidence the president has placed in him by naming him to such a crucial post, a post whose direct and strong ties to the economy have placed him in a position to be able to realize old dreams? The term "guerrilla minister" can certainly be interpreted in different ways.

Capitalism of the State

The words of Gumersindo Rodriguez could lead us to the most diverse conjectures if we apply them to the behavior of Manuel Quijada in the Ministry of Development: "The capitalism of the state could become a danger if we do not manage it well, because there is a lot of capital and not very much state. In Venezuela, the way the country is developing, we run the risk of provoking the armed forces, which until now have kept their institutional position and have respected the constitution." In contrast to this, for definitive purposes, it would be appropriate to present here a theory of capitalist economics: "Capitalist economics is based on individual economic decisions, hence the name 'free enterprise system' or 'private enterprise,' within a context that permits individuals to join together freely to achieve the economic objective of reaching high levels of income and consumption in order to bring about a higher standard of living. For this purpose they are free to choose their own way of earning a living; to divide their income between saving and consuming; and to pursue personal goals, as long as they are compatible with the goals of society at large and do not infringe upon the freedom of others."

What does all this have to do with the actions and decisions of Minister Quijada? A lot, because each and every one of his measures in the ministry would seem to be designed to create confusion and a lack of confidence in the private sector. The deregulation of product prices, which had been subject to a policy of control for many years, led to the expected results: a drastic and violent rise in prices that appears to be unstoppable, coupled with the sad fact that the country had no idle production capacity, as many thought.

The decontrol of prices--a positive move in the long run--had an immediate impact on the explosive growth of inflation. As a consequence, some products were in short supply, there were massive imports, and buying power was undermined. The minister took this action even though he knew that a general wage increase, tied to the decontrol of prices, would present a complex picture for the Venezuelan businessman, because that price decontrol did not include the basic sectors that are still regulated, thus putting pressure on the producers and leaving them no alternative. The consequences: damage to the businessmen's reputations, and doubts about their efficiency, encouraged by the constant statements by Minister Quijada calling into question the management and administrative capacity of the private sector.

No one knows for sure what can happen, but the question posed by the eminent Carlos Acedo Mendoza practically contains the answer: "Can private enterprise remain free of suspicion in such a delicate situation?"

Terror and Confusion

If we look at the overall picture--it is not the purpose of this report to go into details that we are all familiar with--of what is happening in private enterprise, we can agree that Manuel Quijada Gonzalez has had tremendous success in what could be called the implementation of his personal policy from his ministerial office, if that has been his goal. The metalworking industry is in virtual danger of extinction. Small and medium industry, particularly the trades, are suffering incalculable losses, with the disappearance (through bankruptcy) of thousands of small businesses whose owners have gone back to the labor market to find jobs, once again becoming salaried workers.

But if the situation is truly dramatic in small and medium industry, it is no less encouraging [as published] in the traditionally prosperous and profitable businesses. Cervecera Nacional, which reported 8 million bolivars in losses so far this year and had to close down two plants, is hardly an isolated case. The same thing is happening in other sectors, such as the specific case of the powerful and economically solid Mendoza Group, many of whose enterprises are undergoing severe financial difficulties. Meanwhile, other business groups of well-known solvency and productivity are making drastic personnel and cost adjustments.

What Does the Minister Say?

Minister Quijada laughs heartily every time he hears the news about the closing of businesses, justifying his attitude to public opinion by saying that in this country only the efficient businesses will survive. He has the same manner, the same personal style whenever he deals with the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers, the Association of the Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FEDECAMARAS), the Venezuelan Industrial Council, the Commerce and Services Council (CONSECOMERCIO), FEDEINDUSTRIAS, the National Association of Supermarkets and Related Businesses (ANSA), and everything that represents individual will in this country, the creative force and the principles of free enterprise.

And while the minister declares and attacks without letup, the ministry is going from bad to worse in its internal operations. Import licenses continue to be one of the most scandalous and lucrative rackets, benefiting a handful of people who inside and outside the ministry are milking the confusion, disorientation and of course the hassle for all they are worth. The situation is so desperate that someone put out a "Manual para el Aspirante a Industrial" [Manual for the Aspiring Industrialist] which tells of the thousand and one vicissitudes that face any honest person who to his great misfortune finds himself having to go to the Ministry of Development.

It is clear, however, that these things are not of much interest to the "guerrilla minister." His goals and perspectives, according to his adversaries, are oriented in another direction. One comes to the conclusion that this speculation could well be true, in light of his actions and their results (or consequences) in the Ministry of Development.

Guerrilla?

Economic experts agree that the performance of Manuel Quijada Gonzalez, the 60-year-old former revolutionary, doesn't survive a minimal objective scrutiny, subject to the rigorous demands of the praxis of democratic capitalism.

Everything he does has just the opposite orientation: to disrupt the economic structure, starting from a strategic premise which the COPEI experts who support him have called the "cooling" of the economy.

Be that as it may, in principle Quijada has committed the tactical error of adhering to the recommendations of the Merhave Report, which was probably very good for Israel but definitely of little or no value to Venezuela, whose atypical economy and socioeconomic realities make it an exceptional case.

The general picture now has many variations. In the first place, a general wage increase which exerted explosive pressure on the inflationary spiral, spurred on by a hurried decontrol of prices without any apparent technical implementation. There are two kinds of enterprises: the very deficient ones that produce enormous dividends; the very efficient ones which are hampered by price controls that are still in effect; and the apparently productive ones (because there are fictitious profits on their balance sheets which are nothing but "inflated" inventories resulting from inflation). There is also a gradual and increasing mistrust of investments, coupled with an accelerated demographic explosion. If we add to all this the violent expansion of the underprivileged population, which makes it virtually impossible to obtain an equitable distribution of wealth, we have no other alternative than to think of the fertile ground suggested by such a situation.

Furthermore, if we accept the idea that the closing of small and medium businesses leads to a displacement upwards, to the exclusive benefit of the large enterprises and oligopolies, we should also agree--although it seems contradictory--that the concentration of wealth in very small--privileged if you will--sectors, more openly facilitates any attempt at promoting statism. Because any government will find it easier to absorb a powerful enterprise, no matter what its magnitude, than 20,000 small enterprises.

Bear in mind that we are not talking about "nationalization," because at present the government, with the nationalization of the iron and petroleum industries, is itself the most powerful entrepreneur in the country. It controls 80 percent of Venezuela's fiscal income. Statism would mean giving the government control over basic enterprises. How could that be done?

Prospects

A well-known group that consults in matters of national development has issued a warning that cannot be more explicit about what we have tried to present in this report: "A minister of development who is unaware of economic realities, the problems of marketing and production, has used well-known weapons to launch a program of 'economic terror' aimed at discouraging production at all levels. If his goal is to nationalize and replace private enterprise with state enterprises, this would make sense. But when he simply proposes to discredit a system in the belief that he will thus build up his popularity among the leftist groups, the situation is complicated because he is causing shortages, paralysis and ultimately the demise of industry."

For Manuel Quijada Gonzalez, however, all these realities, warnings, recommendations and even suggestions made to him by the private sector are not important in the least; nor is he concerned with the gloomy prospects for industrial activity. For him, everything that has been said recently about the closing of businesses is "mere speculation." As far as he is concerned, everything is running smoothly; rather than coming to a standstill, what we are doing is "consolidating the industrial plant."

The shortages of food products and other mass consumer goods, the unstoppable inflationary spiral on all levels, the disappearance of milk-producing livestock, the uncertainty in the automobile industry, the bankruptcies of businesses, and in general the drastic drop in Venezuelans' buying power, are really attributable to Manuel Quijada Gonzalez, the 1962 guerrilla, today's minister. They cannot be termed the planned results of him who yesterday was advocating a communist Venezuela, but it is clear that even discounting any intention on his part, the performance of the Ministry of Development, under his leadership, is evidently a disturbing element in the free enterprise system, in national development and in the institutional order of our republican life.

8926
CSO: 3010

GOVERNMENT INVESTS 25 BILLION BOLIVARS IN GUAYANA DEVELOPMENT

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 16 Sep 80 p D-7

[Excerpt] Puerto Ordaz, 15 Sep--More than 25 billion bolivars are being invested by the government of President Herrera Campins in the development of Guayana, according to Deputy Pedro Luis Borges, secretary general of the Social Christian Party (COPEI). The announcement was made by him at a press conference today in the iron-producing region.

The Social Christian leader indicated that he categorically "denied the repeated accusations by opposition groups trying to lead the community to believe that development in Guayana has come to a standstill."

With regard to the large investments planned by the government to conclude Sidor Plan IV and build an expansion of the plans and projects plant of Interalumina, during the final stage of the Guri dam, he stated that the completion of these projects would require more than 20 billion bolivars.

"The plans plant and the completion of Sidor Plan IV will require more than 2.535 billion bolivars in investments in order to finish the final stage of the Guri dam and build the Interalumina plant, another 19 billion bolivars are required," explained the COPEI deputy, recalling that these projects were left unfinished by the previous administration.

CVG Investments

Dr Pedro Luis Borges accorded special treatment to the 200 million-bolivar investment by the Venezuelan Corporation of Guayana (CVG) for the renovation of the barrios of San Felix. That population has been called "the Cinderella of the iron region."

Concerning the Electrical Administration and Development Corporation (CADAFE), he asserted that in this city "power outages are a thing of the past," and claimed that so far this year the electrical enterprise has undertaken more than 24 million bolivars in projects and plans to invest another 20 million between now and the end of the year. He also indicated that CADAFE is investing more than 30 million bolivars in the electrification of rural areas of the milk program, which cover some 100 agricultural holdings. In his opinion, this program will be one of the most important accomplishments of the enterprise in the Guayana region.

With regard to IPOSTEL the COPEI official reported that before the end of the year this institute expects to build six modules in Ciudad Guayana. It has invested more than 3 million bolivars here to build four modules in different parts of the city.

Dr Pedro Luis Borges then mentioned 300 million bolivars in investments by the National Housing Institute (INAVI) to partially solve the housing problem. He also mentioned the 150 million-bolivar projects being carried out here by the National Telephone Company of Venezuela (CANTV) to build mobile telephone centers and to string new lines. He also spoke of 300 million bolivars in investments by the Aluminum Company of Venezuela (VENALUM) to build a primary education school going up to the ninth grade, a liceum, a daycare center, a sports center, a technical school, a health center with a 20-bed capacity, a preschool center and other projects of a social nature. He announced that the National Institute of Sanitation Workers (INOS) is spending 40 million bolivars to improve its service in Ciudad Guayana. The deputy also indicated that the Alta Chirica network repumping station will be ready by December, and mentioned that INOS is doubling the capacity of the Macagua intake shaft and building a supply pipeline 14 kilometers long to increase the pumping capacity to transport water to Upata.

"With this series of projects, we are showing that the development of Guayana has not become paralyzed, as the opposition leaders claim. We are fulfilling our commitment, and we ask the people not to let themselves be confused," said the COPEI deputy.

He also announced that more than 40 barrios of Ciudad Guyana in a short time will have their streets asphalted and the corresponding sewers installed.

He reported that there has been a strong impetus here for the education, health, sports and recreation, highway and housing construction sectors.

With regard to health programs, he said, the Uyapar hospital will be operating by the end of the year, and construction has finished on the oilworkers' health clinics and the UD-145 in San Felix, and the new headquarters of the Institute of Social Welfare and Aid of the Ministry of Education (IPASME). Bidding on the health clinic is underway, he reported, for the Vista al Sol barrio, and on the general hospital in Chirica, which will have 200 beds.

Concerning education, he indicated that eight educational centers are being built for primary instruction in the South Airport section, and two school groups for 640 students are being completed in Vista al Sol. Other projects are two primary school centers for 1,400 students in the Dalla Costa and Primero de Mayo barrios, and six liceums for 1,600 students, three in San Felix and three in Puerto Ordaz.

8926
CSO: 3010

END

JPRS 76661

21 October 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2204

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76661

21 October 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2204

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Former Venezuelan President Addresses Nicaraguan State Council
(Rafael Caldera; BARRICADA, 8 Sep 80)..... 1

BOLIVIA

History of Student Movement, Achievments Recounted
(OCLAE, Apr-May 80)..... 5

Projected University Reforms Reviewed
(Hugo Castrillo M.; PRESENCIA, 11 Sep 80)..... 9

Mission of Church in Political, Social Aspect Defined
(Editorial; PRESENCIA, 11 Sep 80)..... 12

New Labor Law To Serve as Instrument in Labor Relations
(PRESENCIA, 8 Sep 80)..... 15

Feasibility of Nation Becoming Food Exporter Studied
(Carlos Romero Alvarez Garcia; EL DIARIO, 11 Sep 80)... 17

Planning Ministry Aims To Revolutionize Agricultural Sector
(EL DIARIO, 11 Sep 80)..... 19

Proposed New Investment Law Geared To Benefit Farm Sector
(EL DIARIO, 12 Sep 80)..... 21

Roadworks To Be Completed With German Aid
(PRESENCIA, 31 Aug 80)..... 22

BRAZIL

Guerreiro Speaks About Political Asylum, Bolivians
(O GLOBO, 5 Sep 80)..... 24

'Classified' Lecture by Golbery do Couto e Silva Published
(VEJA, 10 Sep 80)..... 26

Naval Defense of Continent Very Important Says Admiral
(CORREIO BRAZILIENSE, 7 Sep 80)..... 33

Naval Updating Plan Calls for New Submarines, Corvettes
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, various dates)..... 36

Submarine Construction Planned, by Roberto Godoy
Brazil Could Export Ships
Navy To Halt Imports
Navy Receives New Ship

Oil Problem, Exploration of Other Energy Sources Discussed
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 7 Sep 80)..... 46

CHILE

'OCLAE' Sees Increase in Student Opposition Movement
(Ricardo Cortez; OCLAE, Jun 80)..... 56

Nicaraguan Paper Interviews Christian Left Leader
(EL NUEVO DIARIO, 11 Sep 80)..... 62

COLOMBIA

Carter's Latin America Policies Criticized
(Editorial; EL SIGLO, 18 Aug 80)..... 65

New Ambassador to Honduras Appointed
(EL TIEMPO, 26 Sep 80)..... 68

Huge Powerplant To Open in Cartagena
(EL TIEMPO, 25 Sep 80)..... 69

COSTA RICA

Paper Praises People's Democratic Choices
(Editorial; LA REPUBLICA, 22 Aug 80)..... 70

CUBA

Sancti Spiritus Party Holds Review Meeting
(GRANMA, 5, 6 Sep 80)..... 73

First Provincial Meeting
Perez Herrero Closes Meeting

Reportage on First National SEDE Conference
(GRANMA, various dates)..... 77

Training Methodology Discussed, by Jose Norniella
More Realistic Standards Needed
Conference Closes, by Jose Norniella

HONDURAS

Columnist Deplores Nicaraguan Revolution, U.S. Aid
(Ariel Remos; EL CRONISTA, 21 Aug 80)..... 81

MEXICO

Vazquez Colmenares Appointed Governor of Oaxaca
(EL DIA, 15 Aug 80)..... 83

PCM: New Rightist Group Advocates Killing Communists
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 14 Aug 80)..... 85

Leftist Editor Ramirez y Ramirez Dies Suddenly
(EL DIA, 15 Aug 80)..... 86

Labor Studies Institute Issues Unemployment Figures
(Miguel Angel de Alba; EL SOL DE MEXICO,
26 Aug 80)..... 88

Oteyza, Diaz Differ on Energy Secretariat Possibility
(Fermin Vazquez Legaria; EL SOL DE MEXICO,
26 Aug 80)..... 89

Second Nuclear Powerplant Due in 1990
(Maria Elena Lopez Segura; EL DIA, 28 Aug 80)..... 90

Uses of Geothermal Water Discussed
(Maria Elena Lopez Segura; EL DIA, 27 Aug 80)..... 92

NICARAGUA

Reagan Seen as Threat to Revolution, Humanity
(Gladys Campos de Orozco; EL NUEVO DIARIO, 22 Aug 80). 94

U.S. Blockade Against Cuba Seen as Harmful to Island's People
(J. Davila y Castellon; LA PRENSA, 9 Aug 80)..... 96

Government's Decommercialization of Christmas Applauded
(LA PRENSA, 22 Aug 80; BARRICADA, 21 Aug 80)..... 98

Neither Commercial Nor Political, Editorial
U.S. Influence Criticized, by Ignacio Briones Torres

Minister Describes Literacy Campaign as World Model
(Carlos Tunnerman Bernheim; BARRICADA; 8 Sep 80)..... 101

Minister Discusses Problems in Health Sector
(Lea Guido Interview; EL NUEVO DIARIO, 10 Sep 80)..... 104

FORMER VENEZUELAN PRESIDENT ADDRESSES NICARAGUAN STATE COUNCIL

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 8 Sep 80 p 4

["Excerpts" of speech by the former president of Venezuela, Dr Rafael Caldera, president of the World Interparliamentary Union, to the Council of State of the Republic of Nicaragua on 3 September 1980]

[Text] "I want to say that the World Interparliamentary Union welcomed with unanimous joy the news of the liberation of Nicaragua, and I must add further that for my country, Venezuela, this event has been adopted as its own, as a victory equal to the victory won by the Venezuelan people, when after many humiliating experiences for our democratic awareness, they were able to win their freedom and establish a regime based on pluralism, respect for human rights and the will of the people, as the decisive factor in its orientation."

The Legacy of Sandino

"I come here to hail the representatives of free Nicaragua, the representatives of Nicaragua who hold the figure of Augusto Cesar Sandino high as a symbol, the symbol of the struggle for independence and freedom. On reading Sandino's thought, one may differ with him in one or many respects, but it must be admitted that the basis of his concept was the impassioned struggle, the bold determination to do everything for the defense of one's fatherland, one's freedom, one's independence. In this thinking we find the central affirmation which says: 'Nicaragua must not be the property of the imperialists and traitors and therefore I will struggle so long as my heart beats,' or that other which says: 'It is preferable for us to die as rebels rather than to live as slaves.' And the fact of his sacrifice is the most palpable proof that these words were not empty, not a mere declamatory statement, not a demagogic assertion, but reflected the truth of a life."

Faith in the Future of Nicaragua

"I have talked at length with the president and the vice president of the Council of State, with the members of the government junta, and I have found a great depth of sincerity, a great desire for renewal, a great determination to work, but above all, a conviction, a full awareness of the great commitment which you all, all of the leaders participating in the decisions guiding the life of this nation, have made to the people of Nicaragua. Because of the experience of my country, I am familiar with the dreams, the expectations which arise in the people of Nicaragua when after 40 years of dynastic government and history failing to respond to the true reality and substance of their real aspirations, they have decided that the time has come to correct popular injustices, to obtain attention to their vast needs, to see that the efforts of all work together to lead them toward advancement consistent with the dignity and the rights of the people of Nicaragua in the concert of nations."

The Peculiarities of Each Country

"All countries have their own way of life, their own peculiarities and idiosyncracies, and it is not possible to transfer the experience, the way of life, the systems used, from one to another. But similarities are found in all the countries of the world, and in particular those which are linked by a single origin, unity of culture or history, and I am perfectly well aware of the difficulties which will have to be faced as the Nicaraguan people demand, with justification, that the fall of the long dynastic dictatorship shall mean a real and effective approach to the solution of their great problems and the satisfaction of their vast needs."

Praise for National Unity

"This great example of national unity, which has in addition the responsible contribution from other sister nations, in an example which the Latin Americans should not forget, when it comes to rewinning the freedom which is as easily lost as it is difficult to re-establish, must have the contribution, the will, the support of many people representative of the whole of national life, of the compact will of a people. For otherwise, the efforts, however promising they may be, will be frustrated. The efforts, however generous and noble they may be, are condemned to come to nothing. And this is a great lesson Nicaragua has taught us, a great lesson which I hope will not be lost on our brothers to the south, in the countries which I think have been the most civilized in America and have been an example of institutional life and culture, but are today subject to regimes of force which violate all the principles, all the institutions, and attack all the basic values of human dignity and which think that they cannot be defeated, but will be when the day comes when the complex of civilian and military, workers and intellectuals, young and old, priests and peasants, those from all social sectors, businessmen and workers, contribute their share of what is needed not only to achieve a new institutional and democratic life, but to build the foundations of a new society on a solid and stable basis."

Confidence in Pluralism

"This struggle of yours commits you heavily, but I am certain that the leaders of the Nicaraguan people are equal to this commitment, that there is a capacity and will to carry this process forward, that there is the intelligence and willingness to understand, to interpret, to incorporate the desires of this society, and that the feeling of unity which led you to bring down this tyranny will prevail in achieving development within a system of human dignity, freedom and justice. I am sure that this pluralism which led each of you to respect the way of life and identity of the others in joining your common aspirations in an effort of solidarity will continue to guide the difficult and delicate steps you must take for the strengthening of the regime, in the certainty that to the extent that you succeed in establishing for the Nicaraguan people a system of freedom and justice, based on human dignity, inspired by respect for ideological pluralism, active pluralism, with the necessary coordination of the efforts to serve the will of all, you will be making an invaluable contribution to the brotherly peoples, for you will be aiding them to strengthen their faith in the building of a better life."

Nicaraguan Democracy

"It is not for me to analyze the aspects which may lead to differences of opinion and views within Nicaraguan life. I believe that we all have the inescapable duty to be absolutely respectful of the sovereign right of each people to decide its fate. In Nicaraguan life, in the government leaders and the other political, economic and social sectors, I have encountered the concept that the Nicaraguan experience should not be oriented toward copying, translating or feverishly imitating the experience of any other people, that an effort is being made to seek your own path, your own formula within the great principles which inspire the aspirations of men toward freedom and justice. I know that when the word democracy is used it is done in full sincerity, not using the word as a pretext to be adapted to conventional situations or whimsical positions, but using certain words which represent high values of the human spirit in their full meaning, their full content, in all that they represent. And when there is talk of democracy it is because in truth a government of the people is wanted. It is because in truth the aspiration is to give the decisions about their basic affairs to the people, a will which naturally presumes an opportunity for the people to be fully informed about the various choices, a possibility guaranteed each individual to set forth his viewpoints and compare them with others within the requirements of the country, which are many, and the present circumstances of the country. One who observes these in good faith must come to the conclusion that it is not possible to ask that all problems be resolved immediately, and that all the new structures be built, much less that the old mechanisms which had some use in another era but which do not correspond to the present time be re-established."

The 1985 Elections

"For example I have heard opinions about the problem of the electoral consultation, always controversial when a revolutionary government of a new and social sort is involved. I understand clearly that in a country which has spent more than 40 years under a dynastic dictatorship which has gone to the extremes to which the Somoza regime went, a country which has just experienced a difficult and costly revolutionary war, which has seen much blood shed, which has seen many emotions run out of control, cannot immediately demand that everything be as if there were full normalcy. I must say, without getting into a matter which is not my affair, and in which I have no right to interfere, as to when would be the best time or opportunity to proceed with elections, that the fact that a law has been promulgated setting a date for the holding of elections, establishing an earlier date so that the electoral process can be pursued within the norms which the exercise of democracy would dictate, is something of immense value, determining a path and a direction. I want to say that I have no reason to doubt the sincerity of the national reconstruction government when it indicated, not by a mere promise but by a legal text coming from its supreme junta, after consultation with this Council of State, that its intention, its will, is to hold an election process in the time it deems desirable and necessary, through which the Nicaraguan people will decide on the timeliness of voicing their views in sovereign fashion about the direction of their destiny."

The Role of the World Interparliamentary Union

"Within the World Interparliamentary Union, I am certain that the parliament you elect on the date which has been established will be welcomed with great joy and profound esteem, and meanwhile, we will seek ways in which this Council of State, if it so desires, can participate in some way, if only as an observer, in this closer relationship undertaken by all the parliaments of the world. There are 88 countries, 88 parliamentary groups, 88 very different parliaments represented in the World Parliamentary Union, ranging from parliaments which gave rise to the parliamentary life and system of Europe, such as those of the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland and the French Republic, or the Swiss parliament, to the parliaments very different in structure and basis of the socialist nations of Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union, or the Asian countries, or the African countries, each of which has its special form. Within the union we all engage in dialog and not in order to exchange courtesies and amiable phrases, but to discuss the most serious problems, to compare theses with a profound polemic content, but always with the idea that dialog must be maintained, that it would be catastrophic for mankind if an armed conflict were to develop, putting an end to all hopes and all the illusions of humanity, that it would be absurd to abandon the struggle for peace, not simply as a lack of war, but as a situation allowing the harmonious coexistence of all, each nation with the right of sovereign decision for its own affairs and all committed to the general effort to create a better destiny for mankind. I bring you the affectionate and cordial greetings of the groups represented in the interparliamentary union. I bring you the greetings of the Latin American countries which have won and are defending their existence in freedom and democracy. In particular, I bring you greetings from my fatherland, Venezuela, which has such profound ties with your fatherland, Nicaragua."

5157
CSO: 3010

HISTORY OF STUDENT MOVEMENT, ACHIEVEMENTS RECOUNTED

Havana OCLAE in Spanish Apr-May 80 pp 4-9

[Text] The Bolivian university movement has a long history of struggle. Although it did not always obey the interests of the exploited and oppressed classes, it was constantly involved in national political life.

Strongly influenced by the Cordoba reformist movement, it managed to win university autonomy and to introduce many university reforms around 1930. Immersed in the dynamics of workers, peasants and the impoverished middle classes, it contributed to the consolidation of the 1952 "National Revolution." However, its marked revolutionary nature began and was maintained through Che Guevara's guerrillas in Bolivia, reaching its peak under the governments of Ovando and Torres when it became a staunch ally of the Bolivian working class united in the COB [Bolivian Labor Federation].

In this way, when the fascist coup of 21 August 1971 put Hugo Banzer and Paz Estensoro in power, Bolivian University became an important pole of resistance to the military coup. This led to its harsh repression from which it is recently beginning to recover.

To the university and its student movement, the year 1971 meant: the murder, imprisonment and exile of hundreds of university students and professors; the closing of academic activities for more than a year and several recesses in those 7 years; the violation of university autonomy, equal teacher-student cogovernment and all the conquests achieved in 50 years of struggle; the imposition of a university system copied from U.S. and Brazilian universities; armed intervention in student leadership by paramilitary groups; and, finally, the destruction and alienation of Bolivian University.

It is important to give a brief summary of the 7 years of intervention and isolation that Bolivian University suffered under Banzer's fascist dictatorship as well as the harm this caused to the nation and the Bolivian people.

The creation of CNES [National Council of Higher Education] under an unconstitutional Fundamental University Law was used by Banzer's dictatorship as an instrument for direct intervention in the universities.

This organization under the executive branch, by its nature and application, meant the abolition of autonomy, the equal cogovernment and all internal democracy in the universities.

In addition to converting the university into a means for economic enrichment of the political clique of the dictatorship, it transformed its structures with the intention of adapting them to the objectives of maintaining the dependent and backward structures of the Bolivian economy. This filled the requirements of support to the Bolivian bourgeoisie and U.S. imperialism.

Nevertheless, the inability of the dictatorship and its education mercenaries to consolidate its plan was once again demonstrated. The deficient and mediocre training of professionals, the high rate of student dropouts, the damage to studies caused by the continual closings and recesses and the extraordinary departure of university students and professionals to other countries were some of the factors that soon caused a strong adverse reaction to the dictatorship's university policy.

In spite of the harsh blows of repression, the university movement had a minimal organization and internal mobilization that not only served to resist and denounce Banzer's university policy but also to support the fight of the working class and the popular sectors in their most fervent demands and the defense of natural resources, the national economy and national sovereignty. It achieved some objectives which permitted it to progress.

1978, New Terrain for University Movement

Facing the growing swell of the struggles of the Latin American peoples, the Carter administration, through its hypocritical "human rights" policy, is trying to replace the dictatorial Latin American governments with other regimes that, in its concept, are models of "protected democracies" and controlled democracies. The need to politically avoid internal economic and social crisis, confidently facing an allegedly unstructured worker and popular movement based on apparent economic development obtained at the cost of a large and unseen foreign debt, is the primary condition for the democratic opening with the Banzer dictatorship's call for elections.

Nevertheless, the aim of imperialism and the dominating classes to institutionalize the dictatorship through this plan was thwarted by a massive hunger strike that won total and unlimited amnesty from the dictatorship as well as an intelligent and rapid response by the Bolivian left which, in spite of scandalous electoral fraud, defeated the official candidate, Banzer's former minister of interior.

Within the democratization process of the country, the university movement encourages the democratization of universities at all levels, the student leadership as well as the academic and university authorities, by wide-ranging unity of students and professors.

The 20th National University Congress reestablished the CUB [Bolivian University Confederation], the top and only national leadership of the Bolivian university movement. This permitted it to unify and institutionalize its struggle and complete democratization of the student sector. It took 8 years to elect the new executive committee of the CUB.

This occurred with the universities. The 5th National Congress of Universities, held in December 1978, included all the universities in the country with equal delegations of democratically elected student leaders and university authorities. It established and elected the CEUB [Bolivian University Executive Committee] which expresses a national need, inspired by the political constitution of Bolivia, to integrate, coordinate and plan the activities of each one of the universities of the country based on autonomy and internal democracy.

Recovery of Autonomy, Equal Cogovernment

With the reactionary, antidemocratic and antiuniversity sectors ousted, the university immediately reestablished university autonomy and equal teacher-student cogovernment as they were understood before armed intervention in the universities--that is, as a democratic system independent from the government.

Within this context of university struggle and the present process of democratization of the country, the government of the armed forces promulgated a number of decrees which abandoned the CNES and recognized the CEUB with all its attributes acquired at the 5th National Congress of Universities. It returned economic autonomy to each one of the universities, the basis of all autonomy, and recognized the Bolivian constitution as pertains to the national universities.

The university movement and Bolivian University have recovered, in practice and legally, university autonomy and the resulting conquests. It is a matter now of endowing Bolivian University with a popular, democratic and anti-imperialist context.

Present and Future Tasks of Bolivian University

Based on the 5th National Congress of Universities, the objectives of Bolivian University should be as follows:

1. To contribute to the creation of a national awareness, based on the knowledge of the reality of the dependence, exploitation and oppression of the country, from the perspective of free national determination;

2. To promote scientific knowledge through the objective investigation of reality to achieve its transformation, assimilating, creating and developing advances in science and technology;

3. To identify, in its scientific and cultural work, with the interests of the popular sectors, joining them in their fight for liberation; and

4. To train professionals with a critical and creative awareness based on the needs of the sovereign development of the country.

Nevertheless, it is necessary to keep in mind the problems involved in carrying out these four tasks in a dependent and backward country like Bolivia which is immersed in the structures of international capitalism and has few human and technical resources.

To overcome these problems and conflicts inherent to university and national reality, a broad debate and investigation has begun inside Bolivian University to combine ideas and create a theoretical base that gives consistency to the project of a university based on national and social liberation. It will attempt to stipulate, at each moment, the real possibilities of the university to influence transformation of economic and social structures.

Concerning the immediate future, the university is trying to recover from the serious academic, economic and institutional crisis left by the fascist dictatorship. A number of measures are being taken like: restructuring the academic system; free access to the university, favoring the most oppressed social sectors; the implementation of an annual as opposed to a semester academic system; revision of study plans and programs based on the needs of national development; and implementation of university extension systems to permit teachers and students to join the popular movement as a group through their professional, academic and research activities.

The progress achieved until now--in less than a year--contributes to the creation of a new image of Bolivian University, interested in the major national problems and willing to offer solutions and alternatives, a university with national consensus, not vanguardism or academicism.

The consolidation of this national liberation project for Bolivian University will not be easy to achieve due to the problems of democratic and popular struggle in a country that is isolated in the U.S. "zone of influence." The progress or regression of the university in relation to its people and its country are closely related to the victories or defeats of the Bolivian worker and popular movement as well as the international repercussions of the capitalist conflicts and the fight for socialism in Latin America and the world.

7717
CSO: 3010

PROJECTED UNIVERSITY REFORMS REVIEWED

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Hugo Castrillo M.: "University Uncertainty"]

[Text] Once more the topic of the "trends or changes or reforms" in the development of the Bolivian educational system is in style.

The explanations and the bases presented to plan another new university lead to doubt concerning the near future.

It would seem that all these projections, explicitly or implicitly, are the result of the deductions from social factors by "empirical" academic researchers. They are supported by experience in education rather than a profound knowledge of the true "technology of education" or "educational administration" to solve the fundamental aspects of the educational situation.

The uncertainty becomes stronger as the universal cultural crisis intensifies.

From the arguments stated, it can be deduced that the change that the university system could experience would have to purge the impurities that have separated the university from its identification as an "advanced house of study," plural in orientation and content. In other words, it would have to consider the structure itself of the university and not the current politicized universities that have lost their academic function.

Bolivian University is now "mired" because all the investigations on advanced education lack a scientific focus in order to penetrate into the Bolivian university phenomenon.

We cannot remain indifferent to the decisions that can seriously and dramatically affect the destiny of our youth. We have the patriotic duty to present and direct a new social contract for the university based on rationality with the desired image that leads to promising results.

It is indispensable to analyze some deviations of recent reforms whose results have been more negative than positive.

The 1972 Reform. With 71 volumes of university reform, the terms for a radical university transformation died at birth from partisan political distribution from the top to the bottom levels. It was done like plucking the petals of a daisy: "one for you and one for me." That distribution of rectorates, vice rectorates, deaneries, offices and professorships has destroyed an educational system that could have had a better fate.

Through this political mechanism, the Bolivian University system was directed by untrained people with more partisan credits than academic ones. This was the most serious mistake in the reformist restructuring.

Everyone understands that the university is a potential threat to the political stability of a government through its social influence. This is the basic reason that the political parties have infiltrated the university. However, the real structural reform of this interference in reorganizing this top-level institution had nothing to do with the consolidation of parties. Under these conditions, the reform failed and the nepotistic political advisers made a mistake.

From the general balance of this reform, we would say that the university could never become a national enterprise. "University autonomy," the fighting banner of all student movements in university history, is applied differently, depending on the university regime which makes good or bad use of it.

Other criticizable aspects of this and previous reforms are the lack of coordination and compliance of the universities with the process and execution of the scope of the university system. The irrationality and useless repetition of courses and the creation of departments have led to separation among universities. Other problems include: resistance of the traditionalist and conservative faculty because of its backward nature unreceptive to any change; lack of past norms for the democratic functioning of university organizations; and unification of study plans and elaboration of a rational and coherent catalog with minimum programs.

In summary, the 1972 reform was not able to give radical solutions to its organic plan or to the fulfillment of the precepts of its fundamental law which were theoretically stated.

The CEUB [Bolivian University Executive Committee], the organization that replaces the CNES [National Council of Higher Education], has a high dose of autonomy in principle and in practice but it has done nothing but accommodate itself to the political situation with feigned "demands" and formation of a "Supreme University Council" and the organizational peculiarity of a "secretariat," typical of modern "scientists." With this type of behavior, it has lost all the attributes of the previous organization and become an entity without authority to carry out the alleged "plan" to reform what was being reformed. The final result is a deformed CNES.

With the repeal of the Fundamental Law of 11 June 1972 and the dissolution of the CNES, its critics and detractors have had the opportunity to direct Bolivian University with a feigned "democratic appearance," presenting other bases and destroying everything good from the past.

Unfortunately, the successor organization has been nothing else than, in Bolivian jargon, "the same head with a different skirt." It has become a partisan political "trench" which is dangerous because of its ideological confusion.

It was a big mistake to have declared free admission and then sweep away all degrees from those who, as their just right, had declared a "hunger strike," demanding fulfillment of this demagogic resolution that, in the end, tried to hide in "preuniversity courses." These were onerous and harmful and would have frustrated and hurt the Bolivian youth even more than the "entrance examinations" established in every other country in the world.

The solution to student demographic growth at a rate of 20 percent has not yet been found.

The majority of the resources should have gone to the construction of classrooms, saving secondary expenses.

The "persecuted university" has not resolved substantial problems like its legal organization and structure, the academic period, the education programs in a general catalog that has not been finished in 8 years, improvement of short courses, the physical infrastructure and, primarily, the academic policy as the essential way to make up for the deficient training.

The course-classroom-student-teacher-administration relationship should have been balanced. This second summary is an obvious sign of the university confusion. The attempted "reform" did not even reach the heart of the university. The CEUB did not even achieve the status of a revolutionary instrument since it did not lay the foundation for a new educational structure for the functions of the university in the present period.

This brief analysis leads to one opinion. A basic transformation requires many years to carry out a true reform for our beloved university so that it is respected, venerated and involved in the destiny of our country.

Today Bolivian University can be seen in the "crystal ball." What will its future be with the 1980 plan?

There is a skeptical way to determine the features of its plan and its content.

7717
CSO: 3010

MISSION OF CHURCH IN POLITICAL, SOCIAL ASPECT DEFINED

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 3

[Editorial: "The Church and Society"]

[Text] The important topics expressed in the last pastoral letter of the Bolivian Episcopal Conference included the relations of the church--and of priests and the religious--with politics and society. This was clearly discussed in the document that we are commenting on. It was necessary to do this since its precise limits have not always been accepted.

In this case, as in others, the words do not usually have a single meaning. That happens, for example, with the word "democracy" and the word "politics."

There are those who maintain that religion and morality do not have anything to do with politics. This position is not new; some sophists believed this 25 centuries ago. Machiavelli, at least as he is usually interpreted, stated that morality has its rules and politics has its own. Politics--and the politician--should not concern itself with good or evil but with how to acquire power and keep it. In more recent times, liberalism, which was so successful a century ago, maintained that the church should limit its actions to "the sacristy."

Even what Pope John Paul II said in Puebla and repeated in his recent visit to Brazil has been cited to support this position: the religious should not meddle in politics. Neither the age-old Christian doctrine nor the pertinent clarifications made in Puebla and Brazil suffice to determine the true meaning of these words.

The Christian position, as expressed by the bishops of Bolivia, is clear: politics, like any other human activity, should not be considered separate from religion or morality. These two sources of rules of conduct are valid in every field: politics, economics, education, etc. Therefore, it is legitimate and proper to speak of Christian or non-Christian political regimes.

There are two essential areas, expressed by the bishops, where Christian interest focuses on political matters: human rights and the construction of a more just society. Both are as intrinsically religious and moral as political. The Christian who ignores them is adopting Pilate's attitude of washing his hands of a responsibility that is his.

Human rights, if analyzed with proper care, have a religious basis. They are derived from the fact that man, as the bishops emphasize, has been created by God and redeemed by Christ. Those conditions are the basis of human dignity and freedom. All morality, duties and rights stem from that. If this moral and religious basis is removed, everything tumbles down. It would be necessary to accept what one of Dostoevsky's characters said: "If there is no God, everything is permitted."

The church and the Christian have to concern themselves with society which exists to achieve the common good and has man as its center. It is idolatry, as the bishops stress, to consider the society or the state as absolute goods as if these could do whatever they wanted. Their action is limited by human rights and the common good.

The church and the Christian, therefore, not only have the right but the unavoidable duty to concern themselves with these principles, supreme guides for every social action.

Once the principles are established, there is a broad field for selecting means and establishing economic, financial and educational objectives although these cannot contradict the principles. In this second area, citizens can aline themselves to the best of their knowledge in exercise of their freedom. Now we are in the field of political activism, parties, the necessary pluralism and legitimate opposition which should not be impeded.

Certainly in practice, there can be areas where the limits are not mathematically defined and are subject to frequent discussion.

What the church has taught is that priests and religious should not enter into the field of active and partisan politics because this is not their mission as religious and priests. As citizens, they can choose options but this is the field of laymen, politicians, economists, etc.

It is necessary to recognize, because it is a fact, that the words of Pope John Paul II and the bishops have a basis. It is a fact that there have been priests and religious who have not known how to establish the clear distinctions in their behavior in order to avoid the danger of causing confusion. Their downfall--it is probably a downfall--into political activism has not been constructive and has brought harm to Christianity itself by causing division where they should not cause it.

A calm analysis will demonstrate that these have been exceptions which, perhaps for that reason, are particularly well known. It is incorrect to say that this has been the rule. What has happened is that political groups that have felt threatened by truly Christian sermons, facing the impossibility of responding to them, have preferred to argue that priests and religious have meddled in the forbidden field of political activism. In that way, Christians who have preached respect for human rights and social justice have been called pure politicians and have even been accused, generally without reason, of following anti-Christian doctrines.

There have been priests and religious who have fallen into confusion, but there have been many more people in the opposite camp who, in defense of particular interests of persons or groups, have fallen into greater confusion. This has already led to the rise of many new true martyrs of Christianity. This is a sad situation that has already occurred in several countries. Let us remember that in El Salvador it has even led to the murder of a bishop, known for his ideas in support of the people.

7717
CSO: 3010

NEW LABOR LAW TO SERVE AS INSTRUMENT IN LABOR RELATIONS

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 8 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] The General Labor Law has been cited as an indispensable requirement for the regulation and improvement of worker-management relations at the Bolivian Mining Corporation.

The document approved by the recent meeting of managers and technical experts of that enterprise in La Paz, contains a section that deals with social problems in the chapter entitled "Instrucciones" [Instructions].

The managers advocated the establishment of a constant dialog in order to find timely solutions to labor problems, while they proposed the reorganization of the social relations of the state mining enterprise.

They also approved an instruction to study a new wage system "that would avoid the proliferation of unproductive bonuses, replacing them with a wage that would be a factor of production and productivity."

The instructions approved in regard to social matters, which are part of a series of measures designed to allow the economic and financial recovery of the Bolivian Mining Corporation (COMIBOL), are the following:

--Renewal of the principle of authority at all levels, with a strictly corporate nature.

--Enforcement of the General Labor Law and the enterprise's internal regulations.

--Reorganization of the basic personnel squads in strict relation to the production and productivity of each enterprise, with a view to gradually eliminating superfluous personnel. From now on it shall be strictly forbidden to hire new personnel without the express authorization, in writing, of the Technical Administration. Such a request should be duly justified, and should only pertain to proven production tasks.

--Rationalization of manpower such that there is coordination between mine and surface personnel.

--Reestablishment of administrative channels with regard to movement of personnel, medical care, travel and travel pay, food allowances, commissions, vacations, education and others, with the definitive elimination of pernicious influences.

--Establishment of dialog and mutual respect between workers and management, as a means to provide timely solutions for labor problems in general and any problems that affect the enterprise.

--Careful review of the status of renters of tailing and trough equipment and others who, although their relationship with the enterprises is clearly defined, have become factors of pressure and disorder by taking on functions that do not correspond to them.

--Presentation of a rational plan for facilities to benefit workers, within the economic limits of each enterprise, and tied to production, especially with respect to housing at mining centers.

--Advance planning of food items and materials essential to production, in coordination with the Oruro and La Paz warehouses and the support administration, in order to avoid social conflicts and interruptions of production, and to exercise strict control over the use and consumption of these items.

8926
CSO: 3010

FEASIBILITY OF NATION BECOMING FOOD EXPORTER STUDIED

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 2

[Article by Carlos Romero Alvarez Garcia]

[Text] A World Bank report, parts of which were publicized recently, portrays India as a country which has achieved self-sufficiency in the production of wheat and rice, and which is on the way to becoming an exporter of those grains. The Bank, the principal source of financing for the necessary agricultural programs, has indicated its optimism and satisfaction. However, at the same time it warns that even with these rural programs, hunger and poor nutrition have not disappeared from the Asian nation. On the contrary, they could become worse by the end of this century.

It is interesting to note that according to the statistics presented in the document, Indian consumption of grains for the 1978-79 period averaged 170 kilograms per capita; even so, there is still a poor national distribution of food, which means that there are vast sectors of the population that do not reach this level of consumption and show clear indications of poor nutrition.

Undoubtedly, the highly touted Green Revolution has attained a stupendous level of development in that densely populated nation (approximately 500 million inhabitants). In a few years it has managed to reduce imports that seriously drained its economy. What is remarkable, however, is that not only does it no longer have to buy food, but it can place large amounts of surplus food on the world market.

It is emphasized that India's production feat is not the result simply of having applied revolutionary technology in the fields, but of having convinced rural residents of the need to use fertilizers and irrigation (the latter having been provided through intelligent government-run programs). As the financial institution's report notes, the amount of land under cultivation has not drastically changed.

We should point out that what happened in India is the result of appropriate, timely and voluntary agricultural production policies. The same tools could be used in this country. In our area there are many agencies and some people who are anxious to give high priority to agriculture. Bolivia needs to satisfy its food demands in order to begin improving the quality of its people's lives. In addition, it could simultaneously export farm products as a result of appropriate technological measures, and these products could be internationally competitive.

Along these lines, special attention should be given to the work of agronomer Eduardo Romecin, who for many years has dedicated his time and attention indefatigably to these matters of national interest. I recently had the opportunity to read several of his articles, which are stimulating reading for all those interested in agriculture and livestock, and also contain very interesting technical information. They are the result of his recent experiences in the United States, a nation which became a large producer of grains, fodder and raw materials for industry.

No one will deny that the distinguished scientist has a near obsession with converting Bolivia into a nation with acceptable levels of agricultural production. In our area there is no shortage of human resources, much less of land suitable for achieving these constructive goals. To be sure, we must overcome persistent indifference on the part of the people who are in charge of managing these affairs, and we will have to convince many programmers and planners that a country can develop economically and emerge from underdevelopment by means other than assembling machines. We would have to take advantage of the American experience: although that country has become the primary industrial center of the world, its agricultural exports constitute its most important commercial activity. It seems inevitable that to achieve a similar end (although in proportion with our physical situation), any national institution that has anything to do with this kind of program will have to leave the beaten track on which, unfortunately, the best intentions seem to have become bogged down.

Bolivia should draw inspiration from this example of hard work and tenacity (on a scale corresponding to its size) presented by the spiritual and complex Asian nation which has achieved its Green Revolution.

8926
CSO: 3010

PLANNING MINISTRY AIMS TO REVOLUTIONIZE AGRICULTURAL SECTOR

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] The intensive promotion of the development of the primary sectors, with a view to turning the country into a large-scale food exporter, is the high-priority plan formulated by the Ministry of Planning and Coordination. The plan is called the National Strategy for Long-term Economic and Social Development.

The document states that "the world crisis of the future will involve raw materials and food," and asserts that Bolivia is a "geo-economically gifted and strategically located" country in terms of geopolitics. It adds that for these reasons, the country "is destined to play an important role in the context of the nations of the future, because it has comparative advantages over the other countries of the world."

It also claims that "everything depends on how we orient our economic and social development and whether or not we make maximum use of the nation's regional potentials."

The document studies the image and objective of the basic social and economic objectives, the strategic guidelines for development, and strategic priorities.

It points out that intensive promotion of development of the primary sectors will enable Bolivia to raise the standard of living of national residents and will help reduce internal social desintegration by eliminating poverty.

With reference to the strategic guidelines for development, it sets forth the following ideas: imperative planning for the public sector, social market economy for the private sector, concerted planning and incentives for cooperativism in the traditional agricultural sector, and tax exemptions for the trades sector and the cooperative sector.

Mention is made of strategic priorities such as traditional agriculture and the traditional and non-traditional export sectors, with preference given to mining.

It recommends that the industrial sector avoid the growth of artificial industrialization; on the contrary, it promotes the growth of small industry, crafts and the consumer goods industry.

With regard to medium- and large-scale industry, the document says it is necessary "to favor those which are directly involved in the development and rational use of natural resources."

If an industry is oriented toward the external market, it says, it should specialize in those areas in which the country has comparative advantages in order to avoid competition and direct dependence on technology and inputs.

Finally, it asserts that industry in general should create many jobs, and should not fear competition from foreign products.

8926
CSO: 3010

PROPOSED NEW INVESTMENT LAW GEARED TO BENEFIT FARM SECTOR

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] In order to rejuvenate the nation's economy and increase the production of goods and services, the National Investments Institute is working on redrafting the nation's Investment Law, giving preference to agroindustry and livestock.

It was also reported that the Investment Law, which has been in effect for 9 years, has fulfilled the objectives of its promotion system, as evidenced by the achievement of an investment totaling more than $682,728,408.

The new Investment Law will take into consideration the following objectives:

1. The Investment Law, during this stage of national reconstruction, should improve its promotional program in order to stimulate the economy much more and provide for better living standards and conditions among the population.

2. The economic activities within its purview should be reoriented, turning attention to agroindustry, agriculture and livestock so that these priority sectors will receive greater benefits and incentives under the promotional program, obviously without ignoring other productive sectors.

3. The benefits of the Investment Law should trickle down to all levels of the nation's population.

4. Ways should be found to provide incentives for existing industry in order to balance competitiveness with the new units of production that may benefit from the promotional program.

5. New and better incentives should be devised in order to attract more national and foreign investment, analyzing the country's real potential.

6. Capital goods imports should become better and more selective, and the importation of technology that is suitable for the country should be rationalized.

7. New concepts and procedures should be devised so as to streamline the bureaucracy.

8926
CSO: 3010

ROADWORKS TO BE COMPLETED WITH GERMAN AID

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 31 Aug 80 p 2

[Text] Santa Cruz, 30 August--The National Highway Service and the German Technical Assistance Mission have indicated here that they are interested in stepping up work on building the San Ramon-San Javier-Concepcion highway. They also want to complete in a few more weeks the graveling of the second layer between Rio Grande and San Ramon.

The assistant regional director of the Highway Service, Julio Perez Chacon, indicated that German technical and economic assistance for these projects in the Nuflo de Chavez Province has evidently not been suspended, although he admitted that due to economic factors some projects were temporarily cut back.

Neighbors and civic leaders of Chiquitania had expressed their concern over a reported suspension of work on these projects. It was even said that the Germans threatened to withdraw technical aid if matching funds were not provided, in this case by the Highway Service.

Perez Chacon stated that as of Monday, 119 workers, with nearly 60 semi-heavy machines and earth-moving equipment, will give a new impetus to the road work. It was reported that three German highway construction experts are participating in these programs.

The Rio Grande-San Ramon section, 77 kilometers long, is at the stage in which the second layer of crushed gravel is being laid down, and the work is more than 70 percent completed. Seventy kilometers have already been graveled, and progress is being made at the rate of 200 meters a day.

According to the official spokesman of the Highway Service in Santa Cruz, the road between San Ramon and San Javier, 45 kilometers, has 20 kilometers graveled and 6 kilometers with prepared fill. This year, said Perez Chacon, the clearing and grading of the last 10 kilometers will be completed.

Between San Javier and Concepcion there are 70 kilometers. Along this stretch, there are several bridges that will have to be built jointly with the neighbors in both locations. Earlier, it was reported, this common effort was made through Highway Loans, and the road was thus improved considerably in comparison with the state it was in before.

Passable

The assistant director claimed that the Highway Service as well as the German Technical Assistance Mission fully intend to maintain the San Ramon-San Javier-Concepcion road in passable conditions year round, especially during the rainy season. For this purpose, there will have to be coordination with neighbors.

8926
CSO: 3010

GUERREIRO SPEAKS ABOUT POLITICAL ASYLUM, BOLIVIANS

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 5 Sep 80 p 6

[Text] Minister of Foreign Affairs Saraiva Guerreiro declared in an interview that descriminations of a political nature will not be made in the granting of asylum in Brazilian embassies. He added that Brazil will comply with international agreements on the subject but will not encourage requests for diplomatic asylum.

Guerreiro also emphasized that the concept among Latin American countries is that the possible granting of political asylum should not affect the normal relationships between governments since it does not mean the assumption of a political position. Therefore, he denied that having received Bolivian asylees the Brazilian Government is trying to show its disapproval for the military takeover in that country.

The Interview

[Question] Was the decision by the parents of Siles Suazo and also of other Bolivians to choose Brazil for asylum after the coup that overthrew the Lidia Gueiler Government a positive reaction to the institutional stability of the Figueiredo Government?

[Answer] I cannot interpret the motivation of each person requesting asylum. We comply with the Caracas Convention and the position of the Brazilian Government is justified according to the terms of that document, which we follow because we ratified it. The 1954 Convention prevails for diplomatic asylum, however, we also signed the Havana Convention which prevails between Brazil and those countries which did not sign the later one at Caracas.

[Question] Would the granting of asylum to a large number of Bolivian politicians who oppose the new government be a way of showing the world that Brazil had no part in the coup?

[Answer] We are not concerned with that aspect or with showing anything. We believe that it is objectively impossible to doubt the behavior of the Brazilian Government in that affair. Asylum was simply granted to some persons who sought it at the embassy under conditions which in the pondered evaluation of Ambassador Afonso Arinas, who consulted us first, asylum could be granted.

[Question] Could your statement that Brazil would accept the presence of Siles Suazo with pleasure not be interpreted as encouragement to politicians from other countries?

[Answer] We act only according to the rules. Any person who meets the qualifications stipulated in the convention shall have asylum. We would not discriminate for subjective reasons because we linked or did not like the person.

[Question] There was a time when Brazil did not grant political asylum. There was even an incident at the embassy in Chile at the time of the overthrow of Salvador Allende.

[Answer] There was no problem that I know of, nor do I believe that there is anything to that, particularly because of the fact that I knew Ambassador Camara Canto, a good man under any circumstances. He had a proper relationship with the Allende Government and saved many lives.

[Question] At any rate, Brazil is not a country with a tradition of granting diplomatic asylum.

[Answer] Well, we do not encourage it but we comply with the commitment we have with the four conventions. It is a Latin American tradition and basically an extension of inviolability. Local authorities in any country do not have the right to drag a person out of an embassy by force. However, neither do they have the responsibility for facilitating the departure of that person.

[Question] In terms of its image abroad, would it not be even positive for Brazil?

[Answer] The concept of diplomatic asylum among Latin American countries is that it is a legal institution whose application should not affect relationships among countries positively or negatively. That is the spirit.

8908
CSO: 3001

'CLASSIFIED' LECTURE BY GOLBERY DO COUTO E SILVA PUBLISHED

Sao Paulo VEJA in Portuguese 10 Sep 80 pp 3-6

[Text] The War College (ESG) has just published classified outline T202-80, giving the text of the classified lecture delivered by Gen Golbery do Couto e Silva, chief of the military household of the presidency of the republic, to the students at that institution last 1 July. Since that time the lecture has been cloaked in a mantle of secrecy. The few copies distributed to the authorities had key words changed, so that the person responsible for any copy from which information was "leaked" could speedily be identified.

The lecture, entitled "The National Political Situation--The Executive Branch," runs to 17 pages and is divided into 5 parts. In it, General Golbery maintains the thesis that the political and administrative life of Brazil is made up of alternating periods of centralization and decentralization of authority. Along this line of reasoning, the centralization effected beginning in 1964 and above all 1968 was followed by a decentralizing trend, a more democratic approach. This more open approach, of which Golbery is one of the main ideologs, was based on a complex of conditions the most important of which, he said in his lecture, is the disappearance of the opposition front which existed for as long as AI-5 [Institutional Act No 5] was in effect. Golbery showed that the transition regime needed various opposition parties so that the government could negotiate sometimes with some and again with others.

This is the first known political text by Golbery since 1964, when he appeared on the Brazilian scene as the founder of the National Intelligence Service (SNI). It has the exquisite and detailed style of the general's books, the reading of which requires a certain measure of discipline and patience. The text often leans toward the sin of excessively long sentences or unfamiliar words or phrases, for example "paramount," "systemic complex," or "homeostatic types." Despite this style, the address, the main sections of which we carry below, is the clearest explanation of the motives, intentions and prospects for the more open Brazilian political approach set forth by the individual who contributed most directly toward planning it.

Centralization After 1964

The first part of the lecture is entitled "Systoles and Diastoles in the Life of Nations." In it the history of nations is compared to the two heart movements in which the muscles cause successive increases and decreases in pressure in blood circulation. Thus the Old Republic gave less power to the state and then, after 1930 and above all under the Vargas dictatorship, power was concentrated again, to be deconcentrated in 1945 and again concentrated beginning in 1964. Golbery's terminology might better be understood by saying authoritarian regime instead of centralization and a more open approach instead of decentralization.

"The 31 March revolution, without any intention of centralization or authoritarianism--as after all it did not expect to last beyond a short redemptive moment--was to be gradually forced to espouse them, to assert them and to reassert them, initially merely as temporary expedients essential to the maintenance of the recently established public order itself, to the reorganization of the highly inflated and weakened economy, and shortly afterward, to the irrational attacks by urban-rural terrorist movements without any commitment to the national reality. Slowly, these mere expedients were reinterpreted as elements essential to national reconstruction and, finally, to the creation of the great power emerging from our dreams."

The second part of Golbery's lecture describes, in simple outline, the problems created by the centralizing upsurge which began in 1964.

"Political and administrative centralization, openly and cumulatively escalating, would in the end concentrate the sum of public power in the federal union, and within that, the executive branch. Thus it could no longer be affected by small distant uprisings, many of which were simply ignored, while more serious or closer challenges would always merit agile and decisive repression.

"The paternalist state machine through which there was ever more frequent recourse for intervention in all circumstances and from the most remote corners could be seen to expand daily to meet these requirements (. . .). A powerful bureaucracy, almost never properly oriented or enlightened, was to expand, functioning in many cases in disguised rebellion or persistent passive resistance for its own exclusive profit.

"This regrettable reality was to take on serious dimensions above all with the proliferation of obviously fictitious foundations and, in the indirect administration, the development of new public or mixed economic enterprises, both federal and state, all provided with privileged bylaws and a large measure of autonomy, and not, moreover, entirely visible (. . .).

"There was an unconscious movement toward maximal centralization along with maximal inefficiency, in a concentration which could perhaps be compared in the final analysis and ironically to the black holes* detected by modern astronomy, which exercise an immeasurable gravitational pull from which light cannot escape."

Ending Censorship

After setting forth the problems created by centralization, the chief of the civilian household of the presidency gave an explanation of the birth, development and articulation of the opposition front formed against the regime.

"The sector which was visibly most backward and where there soon developed reactions, some even ideologically inspired, against the easy target of increasing and unconcealed authoritarianism was the political sector, above all that part of it on the boundary with the mass media. Press censorship, extremely difficult, almost impossible to manage, which is at the same time required to be intelligent and efficient, was to attract the almost intolerable pressure of the most vehement attacks, mobilizing widespread sympathy and multiple support, some of it crushing and productive.

"It is not surprising, then, that the deliberate decentralizing effort of the government should take the form of a democratizing more open political approach, adopted precisely through the gradual relaxation of censorship control. Nor is it surprising either that this initial stage of the process should require a rather long period and vigilant and active leadership so that it would not escape all controls. And one had of course to expect the inevitable excesses, the setting of limits more or less identified with permissiveness. And on the other hand, it would, despite the inevitable lapses into coercive power, earn a sufficient degree of credibility as to the very intentions and then as to the future of the whole liberalizing process."

This process, however, was threatened, according to what the general said in his lecture, by pressures coming from the economy and by "growing tensions, above all in the explosive peripheries of the large population centers and the zones in the interior hardest hit by successive natural catastrophes."

"These pressures would all work intensively in the direction of greater centralization, because they would require greater rigidity in the whole social control system, and would point in alarm to the danger of disruption and breakdown in the social structure, subjected to intolerable tensions within the framework of the centralization-decentralization binomial.

"The cards had been dealt, however. Decentralization, through the liberalizing of press censorship, as a first step, and the open democratic approach, is not yet completed today, but what will inevitably follow will be its establishment in decisive fashion in the political area (. . .)."

*A black hole is a star so compressed that it attracts the very light it would have emitted were it not compressed. Thus this is no exaggeration.

General Golbery then went on to describe the political move toward an open approach in detail.

"At the outset there was truly a doubly bipolar situation--government versus anti-revolution--vulnerable at all times to dangerous radicalization, always difficult to eliminate or neutralize. It is not that these polar extremes coexisted always in a single dilemma. The government would by definition be the revolution in power or the institutionalized and legal revolution. The opposition, with two fronts, would theoretically, whether right-wing, headed by those who claimed to be legitimate revolutionaries --the eternal "pure," the "hawks," the "Jacobins," the hard-line, or left-wing, cover a wide highly variegated band in which the subversives, the challengers, the dissatisfied and those yearning for the past would take their place. But, although ideologically or strategically opposed, these two groups frequently serve each other's purposes in practice, showing once again how very close the left wing and the right wing are to each other rather than to the center sector in this spectrum of political trends which is in no way rectilinear, but rather follows the pattern of an almost fixed state of affairs. There could be alliances, most often tactical and at the same time tacit, making it possible always to give differentiated treatment to this or that component. Treatment which in no way would always contribute to keeping them separate."

How can the struggle with these two sectors be waged? General Golbery turned here to military terminology to describe the government's action.

"Thus the obvious maneuver available to the government, in a strong central position between two groups of opponents--to keep them whenever possible separate, and alternating efforts to contain, if not to counterattack, between one and the other, thus guaranteeing for itself ever-greater maneuvering room, and thus greater freedom of action for the implementation of its own political goals, without disastrous or disturbing interference."

Disarming the Single Front

Golbery maintained that the future elimination of one of the two groups would lead to the development of a single opposition front, a possibility which would not suit the government.

"This would be the strategic problem with which the government found itself faced after the decisive episodes involving the resignation of General Frota, minister of army, the removal of Gen Hugo Abreu, chief of the military household of the presidency of the republic, and the vitiation of the opposition candidacy of Gen Euler Bentes Monteiro. Undeniable success was reflected by the final, calm completion of the succession process. But it would raise a new question: how then to move ahead against a single opposition front?

"The strategy would suggest, as the very democratizing intent would moreover require, the prompt dismantling of the opposition system, encouraging the emergence of multiple and different fronts (. . .). The innate heterogeneity of the opposition would facilitate the achievement of this goal, which is not for all that any less essential either to the advance of the very cause democracy and liberalization so insistently urged by the best-organized sectors of the national elite, long imbued with individualistic and liberal ideals. In political terms, there would be available there the vigorous multi-party system thesis, finally established by the reforms late in 1979 (. . .).

"In any case, the abysm of cultural lag between the institutional advance toward democracy, which it is thought should be more progressive and liberal and participational, and the rigidity of the economic front, which for its part demands greater breadth and efficiency in government control, is widening.

"What then will we do?"

Our Sole Option

Before going on to the answers, Golbery noted the main difficulties which the open approach will encounter. One of them is the individualism of the politicians in the government and opposition parties. Another derives from the economic problems, which are in seeming contradiction to a process of redemocratization.

"Doubtless it seems a strange paradox to want to carry forward democratizing liberalization from the political viewpoint just now when the conditions prevailing in the economic sector are so negative as insistently to demand broader and more effective control, and thus a centrally coordinated discipline with profound effects on the governmental and social structure as a whole.

"In reality, we are left with no other choice. More favorable moments in the past were not seized, for reasons which we need not go into here. But in any case, this cannot justify delaying further this decentralization process, long since demanded now as necessary and urgent. Otherwise, pressures in the other direction, strong and almost intolerable today, would again accumulate speedily, putting the durability of the entire system in danger in this tremendous pressure-cooker into which, as has already been seen in times past, the national organism becomes after a decade and a half of increasing compression."

After analyzing the picture which made decentralization, or the more open approach, inevitable, the chief of the civilian household of the presidency set forth the strategy which the government will have to pursue between 1980 and 1985.

"With the polarity previously dominant destroyed by breaking up the opposition front, new prospects are now developing for the governmental strategy with a view to the further advancement of a more progressive and democratic style of life.

"Through multi-party dissociation what was sought was a better characterization and individualization of the political forces, through more homogeneous parties more authentically representative, offering them the hope of the just monopoly on political action shared among them and them alone, for which they are by right the sole specialized tools. Earlier, because of their lack of definition in a single extremely heterogeneous party and the precarious nature of uncertain isolated action, the opposition political forces were in the end submerged in broader conglomerates ranging from religious and semi-religious organizations involved in a confused pastoral practice limited in utopian fashion to the political realm, to literary cultural associations, trade unions and many other professional and even pseudo-philanthropic bodies, seemingly uncommitted. The true agents in the political field came to be these conglomerates to a greater extent than the single opposition party itself. And because of the traditional prestige and protection they could offer, the religious and semi-religious organizations were to assume an important, almost hegemonic, position among these conglomerates.

"The resurgence of party life, not only recognized as legitimate but protected and even honored by the government itself, will in the end, it appears likely, restore to the parties their original role as the main protagonists in the political field, such that the many non-political bodies which had strayed from their functional areas will return to the channels of their specific activities (. . .).

"Until then, however, the opposition political picture will continue to be a miscellaneous complex in which one can distinguish an ever more clearly defined and specialized multi-party front, apart from various auxiliary fronts which still remain active, with varying degrees of autonomy and involvement, in the religious sector, the trade union sector, the mass media agency field, intellectual circles, etc. The lesser radicalization and greater liberalization of the regime and tolerance by the government will contribute greatly to the emergence of strong trends toward splintering of the opposition front."

At the conclusion of his lecture, Minister Golbery do Couto e Silva set forth a number of suggestions which in his view would work toward re-education for democratic coexistence.

"On the military front an immediate end (should be) put to the undesirable statements which can be interpreted as an indication of the weakness of the government or division in the armed forces.

"Then, on the trade union front, it is necessary to liquidate a vigorous strike movement, which, preferring the revolutionary option of confrontation to the democratic choice of negotiation, has strayed into dispute of a political nature, discrediting the key leadership and also the heads of auxiliary bodies who, leaving their legitimate and legal fields of action, interfere unduly in these matters.

"Later, on the student front, bodies which are not legally representative, peculiar alliances of teachers and students and any challenging pressures with regard to the measures announced should be excluded or brought calmly to an end.

"Then, on the parliamentary front, aggressive and improper demonstrations should be halted, with recourse to the proper legal provisions.

"Finally, on the communications front, illegal actions by the media should be prosecuted with the means offered by the law."

Negotiation With the Parties

After these suggestions have been put into practice, Golbery believes that the country will be closer to a climate of relative calm.

"This calm is conducive to the advancement of the basic goal--institutionalization of a more perfect democratic system with an inherent capacity to perfect itself still further. Therefore an effort has been made to consolidate and if possible expand the forces of the regime itself, always keeping the opposition front splintered, which is now also being done by privileged concern for the claims of this or that party or group to the detriment of the other. And this will be ever more feasible, the more our sincere proposals to effect democratizing liberalization include many of the aspirations of other parties or groups which are closer to us and whose cooperation or support could be won through a skillful and enlightened maneuver of co-opting one or another."

5157
CSO: 3001

NAVAL DEFENSE OF CONTINENT VERY IMPORTANT SAYS ADMIRAL

Brasilia CORREIO BRAZILIENSE in Portuguese 7 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] Minister of the Navy Maximiano da Fonseca declared that the coming visit by President Figueiredo to Chile in October will result in a number of understandings between the two countries, as happened with his visit to Argentina.

For the minister of the navy, the joining of the three forces of Brazil, Chile and Argentina for the defense of the American Continent in case of foreign aggression "is of the highest importance." He even cited the Inter-American Reciprocal Assistance Treaty signed in Rio de Janeiro in 1947, which states that an aggression against an American country is an attack against all American countries.

In the interview, Minister Maximiano da Fonseca condemned the South Atlantic Pact. According to him, there exists the Inter-American Reciprocal Assistance Treaty and the "important thing is that the navies understand each other very well and perform joint exercises. An understanding of the language does not appear but it is very important."

On the help the navy is providing, primarily to the riverine population of the Amazon Region, the minister declared that the navy has been helping the population in that region for many years. He also said that the navy has the Amazon Fleet in Manaus. It consists of five ships built in Brazil exclusively for that region.

[Question] Minister are the navy units based in the most remote points of the country such as the Amazon Region helping in Census-80?

[Answer] Indeed, the entire navy is helping with Census-80. I was personally sought out by Dr. Jesse Montello and I said that the navy would do everything it could and would provide a maximum effort. I give you some examples: In Amazonas we are transporting cargo and census takers, we provide helicopters in areas of difficult access by other means. In the Territory of Rondonia, we provide boats for the work of supervision through the Mato Grosso and Mato Grosso do Sul Port Captains Offices. We transport census takers on navigable rivers. In the other states, in addition to facilities for the census takers' work in military units, we provide the general support which was requested. The navy is ready to provide support.

[Question] With which other countries, in addition to Operation Unitas, does the Brazilian Navy participate in exercises?

[Answer] Operation Unitas, which is regular and takes place during the entire year, is a multilateral operation. Argentine, Uruguayan, and Venezuelan ships take part in various sectors.

[Question] Will it be possible to export the know-how acquired in building the "Niteroi" class frigate by the Brazilian Navy in the Rio de Janeiro Naval Shipyard to other countries?

[Answer] Undoubtedly it could be exported. Moreover, it is our interest that it come to pass because the shipyard is a very great source of employment and because of the fact that we are in difficulties because of a lack of orders and we want to remain busy and not lose money. That is possible and I can report that there is an understanding with a certain country for the building of frigates for them here in Brazil. I do not know what country because it is something very premature, very preliminary.

[Question] How is the navy participating in social programs such as medical assistance in the country, primarily for the riverine population of the Amazon Region?

[Answer] For many years, it can be said a century, the navy has been already providing that help to the people. At this time the navy is more concerned with the Amazon Region. It has the Amazon Fleet in Manaus, which consists of five ships built in Brazil, ships very suitable for that region. These, which regularly make trips to the interior of the Amazon River, have reached places never before reached by ships. For example, one recently arrived at Boa Vista. During the dry season, the marines dynamited rockets and they were able to pass and arrive at Boa Vista. This means that more and more the ships are penetrating, exploring, seeking to reach the most remote points in the Amazon Region. On those occasions they have doctors on board, not only naval doctors but also those of the State Department of Health, a large quantity of medicines, dentists and so forth. They provide a great help to all the people. This takes place not only in Manaus and in the Amazon Region Fleet. In Para, in Belem, we have the Northern Naval Group, which also has corvettes and ships we call the "Coastal Patrol," doing the same thing.

To complete the picture, the navy already has a plan ready and within a very short time we shall begin the construction of two small hospital ships, exclusively for providing that help. The present vessels are only patrol boats. They patrol, seek to investigate, and try to go up the rivers more and more, at the same time providing that medical and dental care to all those people. That is also done on the Paraguai River, Bahia, the riverine regions, and possibly when the marines are on maneuvers.

[Question] How many new naval units will still go into operation during the present government?

[Answer] Actually, very few will go into operation because a ship takes many years to build. We have a program of refitting and we are going to have to wait for the money to initiate that construction. During this government we have only small ships under construction. We have four buouy tenders, very important for supervising the marking of coastal channels and beacons, under construction and they should join the navy within 2 years. Therefore, during this period of government we would possibly only have to purchase small ships. For example, we are now buying two practically new tugs in Brazil from a company interested in selling them. The important thing is that the execution of our naval program be initiated by this government because then the other one will have the satisfaction of obtaining these ships. However, it is unlikely that we shall begin the construction of the ships of the program--those tugboats and buouy tenders are part of the program but we have not begun the construction of the larger ships. As I said, they depend on money. However, the important thing is that the construction of these ships, entirely planned and built in Brazil, be initiated.

8908
CSO: 3001

NAVAL UPDATING PLAN CALLS FOR NEW SUBMARINES, CORVETTES

Submarine Construction Planned

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 9 Sep 80 p 5

[Article by Roberto Godoy: "Brazil is Building The First Submarine"]

[Text] The first submarine built in Brazil should be ready and added to the fleet in 1988. It will be a medium-sized, high-performance model, although of conventional not nuclear propulsion. However, before that, the navy is going to carry out "Project Corvette" with national technology, project aimed at providing the fighting fleet with an extremely advanced vessel for territorial sea patrol missions.

At the same time, and treated as "priority one" by Director General of Materiel Admiral Albano de Aratanha, the Ministry intends to build a new schoolship with the capacity for up to 200 midshipmen to replace the present schoolship, the "Custodio de Mello," which has been on active duty for 26 years.

This week, however, is still a holiday at the Rio de Janeiro Naval Shipyard where all those warships must necessarily be built. The ceremony in which the Frigate "Uniao" will join the fleet will be held on Friday. This is the last of the frigates purchased from England and the second one built in the installations of Ilha das Cobras. It is a very modern ship, of the same generation, for example, of its equivalents in operation in NATO forces. During the ceremony, the launching toasts of 1975 will be repeated so that "good winds may accompany it always." Later it will be on the sea, an impressive fighting machine capable of responding to commands in only 6 seconds.

The "Uniao" measures 129 meters, displaces 3,300 tons, and has four diesel motors and two gas turbines. Maximum speed is 30 knots. On the bridge is a CAAIS [Computer Assisted Action Information System] computer system which analyzes all information gathered by electronic sensing devices (radar, sonar, countermeasures and radio communications) or by visual observation, providing specific options for an attack, for example.

Under a specific program, the CAAIS can automatically activate the defense units. The weapons system consists of an MK-8 113mm cannon, two 40mm cannon, one Bofors A/S MK-44 mortar, "Exocet" surface-to-surface missiles (for operation under any atmospheric condition) with an average range of 37 kilometers, short-range Sea Cat surface to air missiles, Ikara antisubmarine missiles, which can even hit submerged targets, and a Lynx WG-13 helicopter armed with A/S MK-44 torpedoes.

Certain armored sections in the interior of the ship make up an atomic radiation proof chamber. All the knowledge acquired in the production of such a sophisticated frigate will be applied "in the proportion justified," in the construction of corvettes--from 12 to 18 ships--the beginning of which is scheduled for 1981.

The construction plans for the submarine will be in keeping with the same method of transfer of technology established with the British Vosper Throneycroft organization for the frigates, except that it will be broader: not a single ship will be assembled outside Brazil. Up to now three proposals from Shipyards in Italy, Germany and France have been presented to the Ministry.

Admiral Aratanha said: "At the end of 1979 we decided as our first step to promote a more profound joint analysis by our shipyard technicians and foreign companies of the Italian offer." The class specified is the "Sauro," 1,250 tons displacement with six heavy torpedo launching tubes.

Resources Availabe in 1981

An elongated bubble with a superstructure on top--the shape of the submarines, "the silent scourge" of World War I--did not change much since a Holland-A, 19-meters long, imported from the United States, was presented to Queen Victoria in England in 1899. A small woman, the queen descended by the main gangway, examined the first compartment and left. She considered the vessel "a suitable resource for a weaker naval power." It was the era when the British Empire covered an area of 40 million square kilometers, ruling 640 million inhabitants.

"Prejudice and stagnation were to cause London to lament that attitude a short time later," says an officer of the Brazilian Submarine Force, referring to the devastating effects the German U-boats had in the 1914-1918 world conflict. "As a simple matter of security and of preservation of the effective capacity for action of the Navy, decisions need to be made now while the equipment now in use is still up to date."

Actually, according to the official timetable, the first resources for fulfilling the preliminary phases should be released in 1981 so that for 2 years the personnel and installations of the Naval Shipyard may be prepared for the undertaking, which would begin the execution phase of the program in March 1983.

Cycle

"Taking into consideration a work cycle of 5 years for construction, ship 01 should join the fleet in 1988. At that time the "Humaita" of the "Oberon" class will be completing 15 years in service, an advanced age for a fighting ship at this time," said Admiral Aratanha.

The three "Oberon-class" submarines (in addition to the "Humaita, "Riachuelo" and "Toneleros") were purchased from the English Vickers Shipyard, and delivered for operation in 1973. They are the most modern of that type, the last ones before the nuclear models. "They could be the forerunners, however, since a regression is noted, even among the great powers, with respect to the use of nuclear energy as a standard," explains a specialist.

Each of them measures 90 meters in length, displacing 2,400 tons at 17.5 knots, submerged. It can remain underwater up to 6 weeks, renewing its air supply through a snorkel, a collector which eliminates toxic gases and produces oxygen--indeed, a miniaturized plant which is linked to a connecting tube between the cabin and the surface. Controlled by a computer, one man alone can carry out the operations of rising and diving. It has eight torpedo-launching tubes. Continuing negotiations with the "Trieste Club," the Italian consortium which manufactures the "Sauro," the next generation of Brazilian submarines--60 percent nationally manufactured--will be even more sophisticated technologically.

Weapons Systems

"After all, what is a submarine? It is a house full of hydraulic pumps. To dive, it opens the ballast tanks, which fill with water. To rise, it expels that water with the help of compressed air or through the mechanical evacuation of the tanks. The problem existing, therefore, is not there but in the configuration of the electronic resources and the weapons system," explains a naval engineer of the shipyard.

The "Sauro" has unusual technical specifications in that respect. Although it is of medium size, it has all the advances of the sector with capabilities for supplementing its basic armament, which consists of six torpedo tubes, mine-launching towers and missile-launching ramps, when it is on the surface, of considerable range. The crew consists of 45 men, maximum height of vessel is 12.38 meters; length, 63.85 meters; beam, 6.33 meters; draft 5.70 meters; displacement 1,250 tons (1630 tons submerged); submerged speed, 19 knots (11 knots on the surface, 12 knots operating with snorkel). It is driven by three diesel generators and one electric motor.

In addition to the Italian version, the navy has proposals on the French "Agosta," the German "Iki," and the English "Export-2400," the latter signalled by the manufacturer as "the successor to the 'Oberon,' " although it is still in the development stage, which reduces it to the status of an unknown "perhaps greater than that of a possible exclusively national long-term program."

Fleet Not Adequate Say Specialists

The Brazilian ready fleet, which means the fleet available for an adequate mobilization for naval warfare, consists of 1 medium aircraft carrier, six frigates, 10 corvettes, 10 submarines, 11 patrol craft and 14 destroyers or torpedo boats.

It is not enough in the opinion of the London Institute For Strategic Studies, which goes beyond maintaining that in the balance of forces in the continent only the combination of tactical and stratetic factors (such as the well coordinated work performed by the Brazilian Air Force [FAB] and the Brazilian Navy [MB] confers superiority to the country, since only the frigates and the three "Oberon" submarines can be considered "advanced" equipment.

Indeed, the majority of the destroyers are beginning to attain the advanced age of 35 years; the aircraft carrier "Minas Gerais" needed 3 years of refitting to be modernized and to be able to approach the next decade as a real presence. The corvettes are approaching 25 years on active duty, with obvious signs of weariness, or worse, with "signs of obsolescence," in the opinion of Admiral Albano de Aratanha, for whom "the electronic, weapons and communications systems of a warship need to be updated every 10 years, even though the hull may last longer than that." Thus, when reworking the 1979 reequipment plan, Minister Maximiano da Fonseca approved the priority "Project Corvette."

It deals with light, speedy vessels which are being reconsidered throughout the world because of the tendency--with the exception of the fleets maintained by the principal powers--by nations to increase the number of ships but reducing the size of them. The Brazilian corvette will be entirely planned and built in the Isla das Cobras Shipyard "seeking the maximum use of local private enterprise resources," declares Admiral Aratanha.

To the same degree that frigates such as the "Uniao" have the fighting capability of a World War II cruiser, the patrol units under development, and which should be maintained until the year 2000, will have devices capable of giving them a very great firepower.

Technical Specifications

Technical specifications describe a vessel 85-meters long, 11.4-meters wide, a draft of 3.4 meters, displacement of 1,660 tons, radius of action of 4,000 nautical miles, flank speed of 25 knots, a crew of 112 men, and weapons which consists of a rapid-fire 76mm cannon, surface-to-surface missile launcher, torpedo-launching tubes and a helicopter equipped for antisubmarine activities.

The average cost of a vessel of this class on the international market is on the order of $70 to $80 million dollars, the cost varying in keeping with the options ordered for the engine and weapons systems.

The project is being headed by Adm Aluysio Ferreira dos Santos, director of Naval Engineering, who since 1977 began to create an internal structure of engineering planning and maintenance teams "to plan vessels with a high degree of nationally-built components, military operational efficiency and readiness." Government guidelines on all new classes of warships to be built or planned in the country are oriented toward "enhancing, in addition to building them ourselves, logistic support and proper usage of them to the maximum."

Now that group consists of 100 Brazilian specialists. At the same time, the Navy signed technical assistance contracts with the Sao Paulo Technological Research Institute [IPT] and with the Marinetechnik consulting firm of West Germany. The IPT has tanks for testing propulsion resistance and a cavitation tunnel, while Marinetechnik offers the "best conditions for the transfer of know-how in the form of data banks, computer programs for weapons or propulsion system projects."

Approval for "Project Corvette" was given in 1979, when feasibility studies led to the selection of the characteristics suited to our needs. The phase of conception and determination of the main items will be concluded by next December.

Degree of National Construction

In anticipating the selection of propulsion and weapons systems, the intention "is to provide the qualified manufacturer with a maximum of time to maximize the degree of national construction," explains Admiral Aluysio, a prerequisite for the entire process that will only allow participation by foreign organizations when they are in partnership with Brazilian companies or at that time are established in the country.

The preliminary overall plan will be completed in 1981 and contract drafts will be made with the assistance of technicians from selected shipyards, allowing them to have the earliest possible knowledge of all details.

Now, in cost percentage terms, the prospects for national manufacture of the various assemblies of a corvette are as follows:

Hull construction materials	100 percent
Propulsion system	80 percent
Power generation and distribution	90 percent
Communications and control	50 percent
Auxiliary systems	90 percent
Finishing materials	100 percent
Armament	10 percent
Construction labor force	100 percent

Some agreeable surprises, in the area of motors, for example, may occur. There are arguments at the shipyard advocating the exclusive traditional use of diesel-turbine arrangements. There are also advanced ideas advocating the exclusive use of turbogenerators, which would increase the efficiency of the vessels, greater productivity, although at the cost of a greater fuel consumption. This is relevant, because at this precise moment the Sao Jose Aerospace Technical Center is testing a turbine which burns pressurized alcohol--a solution to the negative aspect of greater fuel consumption.

"Everything is possible," says an adviser to Admiral Albano de Aratanha, "after all, we are going to use the structure of a frigate to make what shall be possibly the best equipped schoolship of the Third World, even the Second World, including in electronic simulation. The naval industry is the oldest of the country. In Bahia in 1714, we built a galleon, the "Padre Eterno," of 1,000 tons and 60 guns. A year after independence, the frigate "Campista" left the Naval Shipyard, constructed of lumber at first destined for the furniture of the Palace of Sao Cristovao. Build a corvette? That is easy..."

Brazil Could Export Ships

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese, 13 Sep 80

[Text] Minister of the Navy Maximiano da Fonseca yesterday admitted the possibility that Brazil could export warships on the basis of technology acquired in the construction of the frigate "Uniao," the last of a series of six purchased from England and the second built in the country. The new frigate joined the Brazilian fleet yesterday.

The minister's statement was made at the end of the ceremony in which the frigate joined the fleet, ceremony over which Naval Chief of Staff, Admiral of the Fleet Roberto Andersen Cavalcanti, presided. It was attended by the vice president of the republic, Aureliano Chaves. Maximiano da Fonseca believes that despite difficulties--the construction time of the "Uniao" was 2 years more than normal and the largest part of the equipment was imported--Brazil can obtain competitive prices for its ships on the international market.

The country participates modestly in the export of naval technology in the area of the war industry. A Rio shipyard, for example, has just delivered a lot of six patrol boats ordered by the Chilean Navy. From now on, "Project Corvette" will be put into practice. It is the next phase of reequipment of the Navy in which there shall be a greater participation by private enterprise.

In this fashion, the Ministry of the Navy intends to facilitate the sale of ships to interested countries. The Brazilian corvette, with respect to its displacement (1,660 tons), is the most advanced in the Southern Hemisphere.

Submarines

In his speech during the ceremony in which the "Uniao" joined the fleet, the director-general of materiel, Adm Jose Geraldo Albano de Aratanha, pointed out the work of the Naval Shipyard in its 200 years of existence, announcing the construction of submarines soon. The construction of frigates in its installations, according to him, "allows the placing of Brazil among the few powers of the world capable of beginning such an undertaking and the frigates built here leave nothing to be desired by comparison with others built abroad." The order of the day by Naval Chief of Staff Ad Roberto Andersen Cavalcanti was then read. In it he made a historical review of the five Brazilian naval ships also named "Uniao" in the past.

Characteristics

The frigate has a length of 129 meters, is propelled by diesel motors and gas turbines, has a displacement of 3,300 tons and a cruising range of more than 4,000 miles. Planned mainly for defense against submarines, construction of the frigate "Uniao" was begun on 11 June 1972 and was launched 14 March 1975.

Its armament consists of missiles, torpedos, rockets and cannon assisted by digital computers for tactical data processing, an atomic radiation decontamination chamber and an antisubmarine helicopter. Its construction in Brazilian shipyards, according to technicians of the sector, allowed the obtaining of technology and of management training in handling warships of large size despite the fact that the plans and a large part of the materials and equipment were imported.

Navy to Halt Imports

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 10 Sep 80 p 6

[Text] Minister of the Navy Maximiano da Fonseca said yesterday in Sao Paulo that "no new ship will be purchased abroad because the decision has been made to purchase everything here." He said that 12 corvettes will be planned and built in the country in addition to three submarines "whose nationally-built components may reach 50 percent of its value." Maximiano added that "technically and professionally, the Brazilian Navy is very good but the only problem is the number of ships, which are insufficient for guarding the entire coast and the oil-bearing shelves:"

The minister said: "The entire problem is one of money. Brazil is one of the countries which spends the least on its armed forces." As proof of his statement, he said that "the budget for the city of Sao Paulo is double that of the Navy." This year the Brazilian Navy obtained 25 billion cruzeiros and in 1981 the budget should be 36 billion, explained Maximiano.

The greatest invasion by foreign vessels takes place at Amapa, because of the great quantities of shrimp existing on the coast of that region, said the minister "We had up to 300 ships from other countries fishing there." The origins of those ships is varied, he continued, naming the Caribbean, the United States and multinational fishing companies. "The difficulty in maintaining that surveillance is caused by the small number of ships we have," said the minister, saying that "the problem is very delicate and there have been several incidents at Amapa."

The remarks by the minister of the navy were made during a talk yesterday at the auditorium of the Federation of Commerce, where he spoke to nearly 50 businessmen on "Activities of the Navy in the National Context." At that time Maximiano da Fonseca declared that "ships will be powered by nuclear energy in the future." Warships are now powered by gas turbines.

Fleet Admiral Maximiano da Fonseca also announced that "women in the navy are already a reality. I signed the regulation today (yesterday) and within 2 months there will be a competition for the entrance of women." He pointed out the help provided by his service "to the riverine population of the Amazon Region and other isolated areas, bringing medical and dental care and legalizing documents." The minister also said that the Navy is not having any problem in recruiting officers; quite the contrary "Sometimes we even have 12,000 candidates for 200 vacancies." According to him "youngsters of the lower middle class are the ones who most seek careers in the Navy because it is an opportunity for an education. However, the ideal thing would be for us to have people from all social strata." The problem faced, he added, is that "there is a great number of those officers leaving the service after being trained."

Maximiano da Fonseca also said that the new law on the territorial sea will be "a better solution for Brazil," since "resources will be safeguarded by the creation of an exclusive economic zone of 188 miles and the important thing is sovereignty over our resources."

Aerial Defense

Nearly 50 aircraft of various squadrons of the Brazilian Air Defenses stationed in Fortaleza, Anapolis, Santa Cruz, Canoas and Santa Maria will participate during this week in training and competition for training tests in the various units in areas of Rio Grande do Sul. They began yesterday at the Canoas Airbase, the 45th Fighter Meeting and the Third Phase of the 10th Fighter Aircraft Tournament.

Participating are the Fortaleza Fighter Squadron (Xavantes AT-26), Anapolis Airbase aircraft (Mirage F-103), Santa Cruz Airbase (F-5), Santa Maria (Xavantes) and the Pampa Squadron from Canoas, where F-5 aircraft are also based.

The tournament is held every 2 years in Canoas but it is also held at other bases. Its objective is "the technical-professional refinement of combat equipment," as was explained by sources of the airbase, by means of aereal firing tests (which will take place at sea at places far from inhabited areas), ground firing (at an army training camp in Sao Jeronimo), strafing runs (machinegunning fixed targets) and low-level flights. Those meets, said the base sources also, will improve the level of efficiency of the fighter aircraft.

Navy Receives New Ship

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 4 Sep 80 p 6

[Text] The Rio de Janeiro Naval Shipyard will deliver the second of the two "Niteroi" class frigates ordered by the Brazilian Navy tomorrow. That frigate, which has the name of "Uniao," will join the fleet in a ceremony presided over by Naval Chief of Staff Adm Roberto Andersen Cavalcanti and which will also be attended by Vice President Aureliano Chaves, Minister of the Navy Maximiano da Fonseca and Minister of Industry and Commerce Camilo Penna.

Construction of the frigates began in June 1972, when the keels of the "Uniao" and "Independencia" were laid. The other frigate built by the Rio Shipyard joined the fleet in September last year.

One of the advantages of building the two frigates, according to technicians of the sector, was the chance to train personnel specialized in the various sectors of naval construction. There was, for example, the need for special aluminum welders and equipment and this led to the Rio Shipyard becoming the national industry best equipped in material and men for the welding of aluminum.

The "Uniao" has been afloat since 2 June and passed its tests with what are considered very positive results, however, after it joins the fleet it will have to pass through a new period of tests before becoming a completely operational ship.

For the naval construction manager of the Rio de Janeiro Naval Shipyard, Commander Armando Senna Bittencourt, one of the advantages of building a warship in the country "is that the portion of the cost pertaining to labor becomes wages for national technicians. It is important to know that labor makes up approximately 40 percent of the total construction cost of a modern ship."

Characteristics

The ship that will join the fleet tomorrow is the sixth Brazilian Navy warship to receive the name of "Uniao." The ship was planned by the British company Vosper Thornicroft Ltd and has a length of 129.94 meters, a beam of 13.52 meters, a maximum draft of 5.5 meters and a hold depth of 9.08 meters.

Half loaded the "Uniao" displaces 3,300 tons and fully loaded displaces 3,900 tons. It uses an automated, combined diesel-gas turbine propulsion system: two Rolls Royce Olympus turbines and four MTU diesel motors make up its main power units.

Its weapons system consists of a Vickers MK-8, 4.5-inch cannon, two sets of Bofors L-70 40mm cannon, a dual Bofors 375mm antisubmarine rocket launcher, two triple torpedo launching units, two triple Seacat missile launchers, one Ikara antisubmarine missile launcher and one Lynx WG-13 helicopter.

The frigate is also equipped with surveillance equipment consisting of a Plessey AWS-2 aereal search radar complemented with an MK10 IFF, an HSA ZA 06 surface search and navigation radar, an Ikara guidance radar, an ED0610 Sonar and electronic countermeasures equipment.

The "Uniao" also has a system for processing and handling tactical data from radars and combat intelligence, using a Ferranti 1600B computer and six Decca display units. This allows a visual presentation of the entire existing tactical picture, also transferring information to the other two weapons systems, which also use Ferranti 1600B computers, controlling the equipment and resolving problems of aiming, including missile guidance.

The frigate "Uniao" will be commanded by Nelson Ceriani Braganca a native of Rio Grande do Sul and a 1955 midshipman. His first post was on the cruiser "Barroso" and he later commanded the Ocean-going dispatch boat "Bocaina" from May 1969 to August 1970. He has attended qualification courses and also served in several command units.

8908
CSO: 3001

OIL PROBLEM, EXPLORATION OF OTHER ENERGY SOURCES DISCUSSED

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 7 Sep 80 p 59

[Report on round-table discussion sponsored by O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, with Minister of Industry and Commerce Joao Camilo Penna; Edward Frieman, a high official in the United States Department of Energy; Joao Alberto Meyer, of the FAPESP; and journalists Oliveiros S. Ferreira, Robert Appy, Alberto Tamer and Antonio Carlos Godoy, of O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO]

[Text] Country Seeks Coal Agreements

O ESTADO: Does collaboration on resolving the energy problem in the Americas really exist, in terms of physical energy exchange and distribution of labor in the search for alternative sources?

Penna: I have accompanied President Figueiredo on his trips throughout America, and I see, on the part of the presidents of the countries we have visited, a profound conviction of the need for greater unity in America, both political and economic. The word "integration" was used here, and in my view it is a strong term. Integration means a single command, a single, integrated process. Thus I would prefer unity or cooperation. I believe that integration is a final goal of a world community which is very difficult to achieve. It is utopian.

In Brazil, we have undertaken the great experience of Itaipu, along with Paraguay, and we have already signed a series of agreements with Argentina with a view to joint work to utilize our frontier rivers. Itaipu, it can be stated, is a victorious project, because its completion is now expected within 2 1/2 years. It represents a substantial and major victory in terms of united effort in the hydroelectric energy field in Latin America, as has existed between the United States and Canada.

Another field in which a united effort has already been launched is coal. We are in the final phase prior to the signing of a contract for the exclusive use of a large coal mine in the United States to supply the SIDERBRAS [Brazilian Iron and Steel Corporation]. The contract was signed with the Celso Rocha group, which controls mines in the United States. We are also rather well along in negotiations for the exploitation of coal mines in Colombia, an enterprise in which Brazil and Spain are jointly associated. As to oil, it is truly the most burning issue, the newest and the best-advanced in terms of cooperation. The proximity of Venezuela and Mexico to Brazil is not in practice very important, because the cost of oil is established in international terms, without consideration of freight costs. There is an overall apportionment of freight. Thus the relatively short distance does not benefit us. However, there is a clear political readiness on the part of the governments of Mexico, Venezuela and Brazil to cooperate, which is gradually, but not slowly, leading these countries to increase the supply of oil to Brazil. The supplying of oil to Brazil by Venezuela involves not only a political decision of continental and Latin American importance, but has an economic meaning, because Venezuela has heavy oil and Brazil is one of the few clients for that oil. In October, a mission headed by my ministry will travel to Mexico to study broader cooperation between Mexico and Brazil in the energy field.

Frieman: There is an increasing understanding on the higher levels of my government of the global nature of the energy problem, and this leads us to great interdependence. We are all facing problems of the type the minister mentioned. The United States is allocating more than $90 billion a year to the oil producers, and the main concern of our energy policy is to reduce oil imports. Obviously, this is a common goal for the countries in the Western Hemisphere.

We have much to learn from the development of alcohol in Brazil. You have advanced in extremely forceful fashion. The alcohol program is functioning and its goals are ambitious. The United States has cooperated in the areas of research and development with other industrialized countries. But in truth, we should be cooperating with all of the countries in the Western Hemisphere, because the whole world has the same problem. Brazil is in a stage of industrialization different from that in the United States, but we have much to learn. It is obvious that the policy of our government is to seek cooperation. In fact, I have brought specific proposals on this trip of mine. It is also very clear, due to the differing natures of our countries in terms of natural resources, that we will have diverse problems in the future. Brazilian coal resources differ from ours. In some cases, we will advance in parallel fashion, and in others we will follow different directions. For example, in talking with PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] experts yesterday, I mentioned that we are engaged in research on heating with microwaves, in connection with schist exploitation. Perhaps something can be done in this direction, even though currently there is no major exploitation of schist in Brazil. However the resources are enormous. If we examine the whole spectrum of technology which can be developed, the potential for cooperation is enormous, and I believe we are just at the beginning.

Meyer: Cooperation in research leaves much to be desired. There are many sectors in which this cooperation could be more intensive. Even with the alcohol problem, cooperation in the field of research could be extremely important, because the United States has an extremely important program for gasohol. This program uses techniques and methods entirely different from ours. Thus the United States could learn from us, and we too have much to learn from them. But as far as I know, there are no very clear mechanisms through which this cooperation in the research field can really come about.

Another more long-term field is that of solar energy, which will not come under this government or the next, but will be established in 10 or 15 years or by the year 2000. Research in this field is essential. Finally, and perhaps here I am blundering, there is the nuclear sector. Nuclear energy too can, in the case of Brazil, be regarded as an alternative energy source. We have the agreement with Germany, and this is not the place to discuss the pros and cons of this agreement, but I mean that we have a very special nuclear position.

For example, we have relatively little uranium, but a great deal of thorium. Then there is a great deal of development remaining to be achieved in the research field in order to make our thorium viable and transform Brazil into a nuclear nation by the year 2000 or 2010, when it will be necessary to cooperate not only with Argentina, as already exists in a very incipient fashion, but also with other countries in America, which is highly desirable. We must work to ensure that the proper mechanisms are found to make this cooperation possible and viable.

O ESTADO: What would the path toward integration be? Through bilateral agreements or the international organizations?

Penna: On the basis of my experience in international contacts in government, and within a practical and more short-term view, it seems to me that bilateral agreements are speedier and more efficient than multilateral contracts and complex organizations. However, this does not mean that there should not be bodies for overall coordination. Just now precisely we are seeking to establish some bilateral agreements with Argentina, Mexico and the United States. Professor Frieman, who is involved in this, says that the results are more rapid since it involves countries at various different stages, with different economies and diverse cultural phases. But obviously, I think that the world trend today is toward the formation of continental or semi-continental blocs. The American nations need to be more united. I have no doubt that, whether it is for reasons of culture, proximity or the economy, or to reduce vulnerability, the Brazilian government is actively seeking to move closer to the rest of America. This is a clear decision of the Figueiredo government, and the president intends to pursue this with determination. This is one of his obsessions. I can bear witness to that.

Frieman: Where research is concerned, I agree with the minister. Bilateral agreements are quicker and more appropriate. For working on a bilateral basis, we will be in a position to understand Brazilian problems speedily, and vice versa. We can exchange information and obtain rapid results. But in the solution of the more immediate energy problems, bilateral agreements make much more sense. It is much easier to reach common viewpoints, to decide who does what, in terms of research, and to obtain results.

The United States Department of Energy is spending $6 or 7 billion on all energy research programs. The expenditures on solar energy research are the double of this. We define solar energy in rather broad fashion, to include hydroelectric energy, biomass, wind energy and other sources. It seems to us that this type of energy has the disadvantage of requiring high initial investments.

O ESTADO: Energy cooperation in South America has been difficult. And when the United States is involved, the problem becomes worse, because in terms of oil, there are Mexico and Venezuela, almost separating that country from the South American market. Did the 1979 crisis alter this picture, creating better conditions for agreement among the American nations?

Penna: I too have the same concern, and for this very reason. Before speaking of integration, we propose to be more modest. I will use the term cooperation, because we must take progressive steps. Moreover, we cannot, after a crisis, make extrapolations based on the past. In other words, projections based on trends observed in the past do not remain valid when a crisis or a change in the curve of development occurs.

From what I know of the world energy economy today, it seems to me that for the nations to seek to cooperate is a matter of necessity. It is almost a question of survival. It seems to me that the governments of the countries I have visited recently--Venezuela and Argentina (and I have been in constant touch with Paraguay and Chile)--also follow the same line of reasoning. There is a new need, a new world born after the crisis. The world is different, Brazil is different. Society must understand this.

Also in recent years, a relative distance has developed between the United States and Brazil, which were previously closer. There has obviously been in recent years a cooling of relations, and it seems now that the two governments are concerned about this and want to strengthen these relations again.

O ESTADO: Where nuclear energy is concerned, Dr Frieman, do you believe that the existence of an agreement with Germany can be to some extent a hindrance to closer relations in the technical realm between Brazil and the United States?

Frieman: The nuclear agreement with Germany will not hinder our relations. In addition, the Three Mile Island accident opened the eyes of many people in the world to the problems of nuclear safety. There is great concern in this area in the United States, and we are spending increasing resources on investigation of the situation both in the public and private sectors. I am certain that these problems are common throughout the world. In all the places I have visited, this question comes up, and I do not see why we cannot cooperate in this field with Brazil, even in view of the existence of an agreement with Germany. We must learn to live with this technology and to control it.

O ESTADO: Is there cooperation between the scientific communities?

Meyer: On an individual basis, without a doubt, there is no problem. From the institutional viewpoint, there is very little, less than would be desirable. But I would like to present an idea to the minister about cooperation with regard to alcohol. Would it not be more intelligent, for Brazil and the other American countries, if we exported surplus alcohol? As a barrel of alcohol costs more than a barrel of oil, we could with this money purchase a barrel of oil and still have a little profit. Is this not possible?

O ESTADO: We would add two points: First, this would help to resolve the problem of the other oil products, because alcohol does not replace them, and we could set up a scheme for the import of oil products, including gasoline. Secondly, to what extent is the eagerness of the automobile industry for growth, in an effort to safeguard its image with oil consumers, hindering an agreement of this sort and forcing intensive, ever-greater, and improper or uneconomical use of alcohol?

Penna: There is a great desire in Brasilia today to develop alcohol technology, to stress the search for greater efficiency for engines using alone, so that they will have an equal or better performance than alcohol in a 20-percent mixture.

There is still a great margin for increasing the yield of alcohol for engines using alcohol exclusively. In a year we have progressed from an average cost of 25 percent more than gasoline to about 12 percent today in a controllable fleet. The theoretical limit is 4.5 percent more. If we reach about 10 percent, then hydrated alcohol will have practically the same yield as the 20-percent mixture. This is a rather interesting point.

We are still then in a stage of technological development which may resolve the problem in terms, let us say, of a closed economy. But as this research progresses, there is already now an effort to reach agreements with neighboring countries with a view to a compromise.

We are already exporting alcohol today to some neighboring countries which are beginning experiments with a mixture. Both paths are being pursued, with greater stress on the search for technological improvement of the alcohol-burning engine, because this is a technology Brazil is seeking along with the multinational companies working here.

There is great complexity in the phenomenon, moreover, when oil is considered as a whole.

Alcohol replaces gasoline and as a result puts refining out of balance. Thus there is a broader complexity when we include fuel oil, diesel oil, naphtha and liquefied gas. Currently we are dealing with the problem of replacing gasoline with alcohol. We now have made the substitution for 18 percent. We want to reach 33 percent. However, we have already begun to encounter difficulties, since the problem of coal to replace fuel oil is tied in.

We are exporting alcohol at $62 per barrel on an average, i.e. alcohol costs more than oil, for mixture or for technological research. Alcohol truly does cost more than oil. It is important for us to know this. Where the program for vegetable oils to replace diesel oil is concerned, for its part, we are well advanced. The government hopes to be able to announce a broad program for the substitution of vegetable oils for diesel oil shortly.

But the problem is the oil complex overall, what type of oil is bought, because there is oil which yields more diesel fuel and that which yields more gasoline. Now, for example, we are purchasing heavier oils which have a lesser percentage of gasoline from Venezuela. As a result, they serve Brazil's purpose. The problem then must be seen as a whole. But your position is rather interesting and entirely correct. This may be one of the paths which will be pursued.

The Various Advantages of Alcohol

O ESTADO: To repeat our question, is the automobile industry pushing alcohol consumption?

Penna: It does not seem to me that it is exactly pushing where alcohol is concerned. We have been criticized for producing alcohol to replace gasoline in passenger vehicles when we should be concerned with trucks which carry goods. The criticism is a little hasty, because alcohol is a light fuel which lends itself to substitution for another light fuel, gasoline. In other words, technically it is suited for a gasoline-burning engine. There was no elitism in this, then, but a natural technical requirement.

I believe then that the program which is not economical today in strict terms, because alcohol still costs more than oil, does however represent first of all a reduction in national vulnerability, and secondly the development of a technology. Third, this is a means of creating jobs and utilizing the installed industrial capacity of the country. And finally, it is a program which will inevitably make other programs necessary. Thus it is not an elitist program in any way. It is already economic, because the reduction in vulnerability, taken together with other aspects, offsets the additional cost in excess of that of oil, and I am not taking into account what the real dollar rate for conversion and comparison is.

O ESTADO: How much is this additional cost?

Penna: Well, we are buying oil today at let us say $32. For gasoline from oil, one must add $8 or $10 for refining. Gasoline then costs something over $40 a barrel, and alcohol comes to about 20 percent more, at the current rate. It remains to be seen if this is a difference in rate of exchange or if it is additional cost, and what the proper rate for comparison is.

As I am convinced that oil will continue to go up in real cost in the years to come (I have just come from the Middle East) and the supply will be limited, this means then that very shortly, even with the official exchange rate, let us say, that alcohol will be competitive in economic terms.

The program then is one of developing technology as well and seeking economy. As we have increased the efficiency of the engine, we have already gained 5 or 10 percent more, and we are fully persuaded that technological, agricultural and industrial development in alcohol production will make it possible to lower the real cost of production. There are various technological possibilities for reducing the production cost of alcohol. We are already pursuing some of them.

O ESTADO: I would like to ask Professor Frieman a question. Brazil is one of the large countries which has bituminous schist. The United States has made great progress in the use of bituminous schist. Would it be possible, providing that PETROBRAS relinquishes its process, that we can utilize this research?

Frieman: There are various research projects being pursued with bituminous schist. Oil companies have also made their own economic studies, and they show that the extraction of schist from the surface is competitive with the current price of oil. What they are asking from the American government is the concession of large areas to make research viable, and allow the building of large plants. If these areas are granted, they can produce 1 or 2 million barrels a day by about 1990 in the Colorado region alone, which is a rather substantial quantity. The studies ordered by the department of energy are available, I believe, but this is an area on which I have no specific proposal. We believe that this would not be a priority area for Brazil for the time being. But if there is interest on the part of the Brazilian government, I would be happy to take this to Washington.

O ESTADO: Your answer suggests another problem. The fact is that the study done under the sponsorship of the American government is available, but there are other types of studies, private ones. This brings up the problem of the large companies, the multinational firms, in the field of cooperation. How would you view this, Mr Minister?

Penna: Obviously, private businesses have the right to their studies, but they are business enterprises selling technology. In other words, it may even be easier in some cases to buy technology from a private business than to negotiate a political agreement between governments. Precisely when technology between different countries in the world is involved, we have found it easier in some cases to pay a private enterprise for technology than to negotiate a political agreement with a given country. This is a rather interesting fact. Private business sells technology normally, and I believe that the oil enterprises, if they have the proper technology available, in the case of Brazilian schist, would not hesitate to sell it, because this would entail an increase in oil, which is of interest to all of them.

Moreover, just a few days ago I was talking with a PETROBRAS director, and he informed me that the enterprise is persuaded that it already has a technology, if not the best, the optimal one, at least one adequate for the exploitation of Brazilian schist. They very firmly believe that at a rate of return of 8 percent per year on the investment, it would be possible to produce oil from Brazilian schist at about $40 per barrel, i.e. $8 more than in the United States.

O ESTADO: But with the advantage that these $40 would be in cruzeiros.

Penna: Yet another interesting fact. With a return of less than 3 percent a year, this cost would drop to $30.

As Brazil is now having extreme difficulty in obtaining foreign savings for investment, it will perhaps prefer to buy oil at $30 than to invest heavily, for lack of investment resources. From the point of view of oil exclusively, PETROBRAS is persuaded that with a low rate of return, it is possible to produce oil from its schist today on an international level. The value of the money remains to be seen. This is the crucial point, the value of Brazilian currency today. There is a great shortage of resources.

O ESTADO: Is it a question of appropriate cost?

Penna: Exactly. I might also note that the exploitation of schist involves very serious ecological difficulties.

Meyer: Perhaps, to venture into the political field a little, cooperation might have advantages beyond the immediate economic ones. Brazil might in the future export electrical energy on condition that it has the money to invest in power plants. Naturally, since it does not have, it is not doing that. But Brazil can export electrical energy, either in the form of aluminum, or in the form of enriched uranium, or in the form of ammonia, all possibilities requiring the use of electrical energy very intensively, while the final product is a solid one which can readily be transported even by plane, and exported very advantageously.

O ESTADO: I have a question about a somewhat apocalyptic view of the energy problem. It is said that one of the dilemmas at the end of this century will be the choice between producing foodstuffs or producing energy, since with the oil crisis, energy production is shifting to agriculture, and agriculture, having to produce raw materials for energy, will produce less food. Is this true or is it an exaggerated view? I would like to hear what three specialists have to say.

Meyer: It is very difficult to say. The extent of the arable land available in the world is very limited. In reality, while there is one person in the world suffering from hunger, we must think very seriously of that single person. He may not be Brazilian, although there are Brazilians suffering from hunger. But the use of these lands to produce energy is truly a very serious problem.

A second thing which is also very serious is that as the land is limited, the cost of food will increase. Then there is a truly very serious problem. I do not know the answer, except that I have great concern about the future.

Frieman: This is a problem which has received great attention in the United States. A congressional report which has just been released estimates that, for the United States at least, when alcohol production exceeds 2 billion gallons per year (8 billion liters), there will be an increase of $1 in food prices per gallon of alcohol produced.

Therefore, since Brazil has a goal of 10.7 billion liters, we in the United States are in a position to increase the volume produced without facing this apocalyptic problem of the energy-food dilemma. Truly, this is a very serious problem which has led to an intensive debate.

O ESTADO: In conclusion, let us give the floor to our minister, because we must respect the governmental obligation.

Penna: Prophets of catastrophe and utopians--both schools will always exist. Catastrophic predictions have been a frequent occurrence in the world. This is not the first time it has happened. In general, I would like to be a little more optimistic.

On the other hand, it is always necessary to remember that the energy problem is not the oil problem. Energy covers much more than oil, much more. A large part of the energy in the world is electrical, coming in the case of Brazil mainly from hydraulic energy, and the world is moving toward nuclear programs, either fission or fusion, later. Thus in terms of one or two generations, then, there will be no great electrical energy problem in the world. The problem is oil energy, which is the type necessary today for transportation, basically, because heating by oil can also be done by electrical energy as well.

I would note also that the increase in alcohol production in Brazil does not involve, for the most part, the use of new land. It involves an increase in the productivity of land already planted to sugarcane, either by means of fertilizer or irrigation. It is vertical growth, away from the land. This also is a case frequently forgotten.

The picture is not as disastrous as one might think. But I come to a final point which, I would say, is a political and technological experiment of the greatest importance. I would even venture to say that it may serve as an example for the United States. It involves the problem of price policy, i.e., as a given item becomes scarcer and its cost becomes very high, it is necessary to pursue a price policy which signals the consumer to change habits. The Brazilian price policy heavily burdens oil products with additional taxes and they, in turn, are used to develop oil substitutes, thus reducing consumption and creating alternative sources. It is a very successful policy we are pursuing in Brazil, firmly and progressively, and it does not lead to inflation (inflation in Brazil has causes other than this).

Just a month or two ago, a great leader of a great Arab country told me that he is supplying oil at $30 in order to cooperate with the world, because they feel there that the oil is worth much more, worth $100,000 per barrel, because it cannot be replaced.

Thus they plan to continue firmly in escalating oil price increases. It seems to me, for example, that the United States has a very timid price policy. It is encountering great difficulty in the Congress in obtaining an adequate price policy to reduce consumption, and if the United States fails to resolve this problem, it will do no good for the rest of the world to try to resolve it, because the United States accounts for 50 percent of the world total.

If the United States cannot really develop an oil products conservation policy, efforts elsewhere in the world will be useless.

Frieman: You have said no many true things that I have nothing further to add.

5157
CSO: 3010

'OCLAE' SEES INCREASE IN STUDENT OPPOSITION MOVEMENT

Havana OCLAE in Spanish Jun 80 pp 4-6, 9-11

/Article by Ricardo Cortez: "Resurgence of Student Activism"/

/Text/ In Chile 1979 has been a year of considerable progress for the struggle of the anti-fascist masses. The come back of the popular movement, which can be seen on all fronts, takes on special meaning in the youth front.

Different sources provide information on the development of youth activities in trade unions and federations which have large concentrations of young fighters. In this context the creation of CODEJU /Commission to Defend the Rights of Youths/ and the support it has received at all levels of opposition youth activities represents an important victory in the struggle to reestablish democracy.

The political groups united in the UPJ /Popular Unity Youth/ show signs of great activity. Through such diverse actions and initiatives it seeks to integrate large sectors of the Chilean youth into the organized resistance against the dictatorship.

Cultural activities in their diverse forms have served increasingly to channel the expression of the youths' antifascist libertarian feelings. Sports, neighborhood or church groups have provided adequate levels of communication and for broadcasting the general discontent of the young workers, peasants, students and settlement members.

The aspirations of the Chilean youth are common to those of other sectors of the population and they are indissolubly linked to the national struggle to overthrow the military dictatorship.

From among the diverse social classes and groups which make up the youth sector, the students play a prominent role. The special common interest and the characteristics themselves of the students' activities have traditionally given this movement, especially the university student movement, a primary role in national politics.

The purpose of this paper is to review the most relevant aspects of the present structure of the universities in Chile, their dependence on the governing clique and the course the student struggle has taken since the time of the military coup to the present.

Militarism at the Universities

For over 6 years, in other words since the fascist coup, all Chilean universities have been intervened by the military government.

As a direct result of the government's economic policy and the repressive nature of the national security doctrine, the dictatorship has attempted to impose an official ideology that will legalize and justify totalitarianism and exploitation. To accomplish this and, in addition, to eliminate the democratic elements that have traditionally been present in the educational system, it was proposed that a new "renovated" educational system be created to disseminate and reproduce the official ideology.

Within this framework an effort has been made, by intervention, to deprive the universities of their autonomy to generate and discuss ideas. A single ideology and the technocratic training of professionals who will be incorporated into the economic model supported by the government has been introduced in its place.

From the moment the rector-delegates, all military officers, are appointed measures to gain complete control of university activities go into effect. Democratic students and teachers are persecuted and expelled, prominent researchers are victims of this "inquisition" against pluralism and creativity.

This intervention and the subsequent repression provide the material basis for the dictatorship to begin the profound changes which were necessary to put into practice a concept that was aristocratic, militarist and economic in nature and ideologically had nothing to do with the concept of a university.

This is how a university living style that parallels that of a military institution is implemented. The vertical organizational structure places the students at the lowest point of a pyramid which has the rector-delegate at its highest point autocratically directing teacher and student activities and administering the university.

Efforts to impose military discipline in keeping with their concept of national security and to control outbreaks of dissidence, lead military authorities to introduce an organized system of informants, institutionalize denunciation and place special agents at the universities. Militarization converts the universities into just another link in a system of fascist political-military decisionmaking. All elements are linked by a vertical organizational structure and are submissive to Pinochet's government.

The initial persecution of supporters of Salvador Allende's government was expanded later to include actions, based on economic considerations, to stabilize the model. The policy of having self-financing universities has a two-fold purpose: to lower public spending and allow only those students to remain who are from middle and high-income families thereby excluding students from low-income families. The bourgeoisie has always aspired to an elitist, aristocratic and antipopular university.

From the viewpoint of the quality of the education that is being provided, there is inadequate funding, a serious shortage of teachers (in addition to those who have been expelled, many have emigrated for political and economic reasons) and courses are designed to turn out aseptic technocrats who can easily adapt to the political and economic model of the ruling junta.

Efforts are also being made to strengthen those political groups that support the military government by giving them representation of the entire student body and assigning them the task of building a new student movement that is supportive of fascism.

Resurgence of the Opposition Student Movement

However, the student movement which has been growing within the universities has not been the one backed by sectarian and fanatical minorities. The powerful appeal for reforms, the broad support which this struggle has among students, teachers and administrators has provided the basis for unity of action by democratic university sectors and the resurgence of an opposition student movement which more and more forcefully protests this retrograde model of a university.

The Chilean student movement has a long history of fighting to regain a university that is in tune with the nation's progress.

Since the beginning of this century the opinions of university groups have had a growing influence on national politics. Important aspects of this development are, for example, the formation of national student federations and, in particular, the university process of reform begun at the end of the decade of the 70's.

The movement for university reform grew out of the objective need to replace the old model of academic confinement, which is elitist and alien to our national way of life, with a dynamic, democratic, participatory concept that has direct ties to the rest of the nation and is ideologically pluralistic.

The same sectors which promoted and actively participated in the reform movement today are in conflict with the fascist university because it is a threat to all the gains and aspirations of long years of struggle.

A feature of the student struggles has been its historic unity with the labor sector in its permanent struggle against capitalism.

For the Chilean left the unity of action between the workers and the students has also been one of the pillars of its political platform. The students themselves have expressed on more than one occasion the wish of the majority to join with the Chilean workers in their quest for social progress.

The struggle for a democratic and pluralistic university and the support for the cause of the workers are the most significant elements of the student movement. For this reason, the efforts of the military government to build an aristocratic, antidemocratic university under surveillance as part of a system designed to repress the people and the workers are facing the resurgence of a powerful student movement that has inherited the richest democratic and combative traditions of our recent past. It is a student movement which is rising out of the ashes, which is being reborn after being attacked by tyranny.

One of the first steps taken by the military regime was to do away with the student centers and federations throughout the nation. Many leaders were jailed, persecuted and even murdered. Large numbers of democratic students were expelled or suspended for long periods. Never in Chile's history have the universities been so savagely assaulted nor the students so brutally repressed.

This phase of profound revival of student activism provoked by military intervention is being gradually replaced as the political organizations of the Chilean youth regain more basic levels of operation.

In 1976, as a result of the discussions over the bill providing for self-financed universities and the regulations concerning the payment of tuition, it was possible to express opposing views which gradually became the basis for a broader criticism of the fascist model. As of 1977 different sectors, the leftist parties, the Christian Democrats, and even the Catholic Church through the University Ministry Vicariate, made public statements expressing their concern for the situation at the universities, denouncing the criminal acts committed there and proposing alternatives to the official model. These ideas have not been incorporated by the student community. However, they provide a new frame of reference for the protests arising from measures imposed by the authorities.

The dictatorship's approval of the statutes for student federations and centers at the University of Chile and the creation of autonomous and independent federations at each school at the University of Chile opens the way for broader discussions of the shortcomings of the statute, the selection of officers and the nature of the student organizations.

The Rise of Student Struggles

In early 1979 opposition groups with ties to the UPJ and sectors of the JDC /Christian Democratic Youth/ promoted a student platform whose effects were visible throughout the year and which marked the beginning of a surge in the student struggles.

A milestone was reached with the election of student leaders at the University of Chile in April of last year. Despite adverse conditions, the absence of candidates, debates and discussion of goals, the opposition won 60 percent of the elected posts. Independents won 12 percent of the posts and the supporters of an intervened university won only 28 percent.

This majority rejection of the official line unquestionably was a surprise for officials. Absolute control of information, the expected influence of student leaders chosen by the powers that be and the effects of the terror that was unleashed gave the authorities confidence that they would win. It was to have been a time for the students to legalize the dictatorship's guidelines for student organization.

The failure of Pinochet's university policy, despite all the irregularities in the April elections, indicates the acceptance by the new generation of students of democratic dialog, the free exchange of ideas and it represents a categorical rejection of the fascist model. At the same time, the legality and the authority of the FECECh, created by the military rector, are in serious question.

Theoretically, the delegates elected in April could at the end of 1980 elect FECECh's new officers who would take office in 1981. The prospect of an opposition student leadership concerns the Pinochet regime. It is very likely that trickery will be used to interrupt this process and the legitimate student leaders will be reprimanded.*

Not less significant has been the series of events which followed the action taken by the people on 1 May 1979 in which the students took part. At that time a large number of students and workers were violently repressed. This incident gave rise to different demonstrations of protest and solidarity.

The most significant incident occurred at the Catholic University's School of Theology when 122 students were expelled for expressing their solidarity with the jailed students. The chain reaction of solidarity

---

*An unmistakable sign of the government's intention not to respect the will of the student sector was the suspension of elections, which the government hoped to manipulate, at the University of the North. The basis for this decision rests on the rise of a broad united movement which threatened to win important seats on the student courts. The fascists did not wish to face a new defeat on the university front.

which followed, the different kinds of demonstrations, public acts, fasting and strikes, heated debates and lighting meetings in the patios of the different schools are new elements in this revival process of university activism. The university debate goes beyond the classroom walls and becomes a problem of national interest, a factor which has further polarized the democratic people and the fascist government.

The model for controlling university activity in an autocratic and repressive manner is in crisis during the second half of the year.

The response of the opposition students has acquired very basic connotations which are expressed by the rise of independent student centers in support of representatives elected by the rank and file or of parallel centers in those schools where the centers are controlled by government supporters.

The rise in the struggle for university autonomy, for a democratic and pluralist university and the growing force of the emerging student movement have further sharpened the contradictions in the government's policy on education and university matters.

The supporters of keeping the universities under intervention, under the direction of rectors-delegates, and of non-participation by the rank and file in the decisionmaking process--the status quo backers--have had to face criticism from the ranks of government supporters calling for adjustments in the fascist model to bring it in tune with the new reality.

The replacement in December of Gonzalo Vial (minister of education), who seemed to be the primary spokesman for the faction supporting adjustments, appears to underscore Pinochet's determination to keep the situation at the universities as it is and allow only minor changes.

The growth of the student movement, which is still weak, has opened a new front for the struggle of the masses against the dictatorship. The movement gains strength in direct relation to increased efforts to organize and coordinate democratic youth organizations and by the search for original ways to arouse the entire student community and infuse it with the idea of unity which is the alternative supported by the Chilean left.

The emerging student movement has had to resist the combined repression of educational authorities and the repressive organs of the state. These are tests of fire which will result in a growing awareness by the university students and the recovery of the student movement for the democratic, antidictatorial struggle.

The basic problem has been identified. The choice is between a pluralist university at the service of the democratic and progressive community or the fascist model. The student movement and the political forces which guide it have an enormous, unified and creative responsibility of converting the students into a force capable of realizing academic aspirations and claims as well as continuing the historical path of unity and compromise with the struggle of the workers.

8599
CSO: 3010

NICARAGUAN PAPER INTERVIEWS CHRISTIAN LEFT LEADER

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 11 Sep 80 pp 5, 6

/Text/ Luis Maira Aguirre, head of the Chilean OIC's /Organization of the Christian Left/foreign affairs department and former Santiago deputy from 1965 until the 1973 coup, on Sunday attended the dedication of the first section of the Salvador Allende Playing Fields. The Salvador Allende Sports Fields are being built in the northeast section of the capital from Kilometer 8½ along the Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Highway, extending eleven blocks to the lake and two blocks towards the instant coffee plant.

Maira Aguirre currently heads the CIDE /Economic Research and Teaching Center/ in Mexico, a research project on U.S.-Latin American relations.

In response to questions from the EL NUEVO DIARIO reporter, Maira Aguirre said that he was in Nicaragua because he has been very interested for a long time in coming here. He said that "the heart of the Latin American political process is being formed here."

No political analyst, no social scientist, no militant can remain aloof from the importance of knowing our process and dealing with our leaders.

The OIC has also given him the task of studying this process, contacting as many people as possible and obtaining the experiences, lessons and testimony it has to offer. "We will not copy anything because imitations are not good. Instead, we will consider all the good aspects of the fight against Somoza as lessons," the visitor said.

As director of the research project on U.S.-Latin American relations, he intends personally to study the development of the process.

In addition to the posts we mentioned earlier, Maira Aguirre also served as president in 1963 of the Student Federation of Chile and he was a major supporter of the unity of the Chilean left. He is a political exile in Mexico whom the Chilean military junta has forbidden to return to Chile.

The Pinochet Coup

Referring to the plebiscite scheduled by Pinochet, Maira Aguirre said that it could signal the end of the growth of the Chilean opposition to the tyranny. He said that Pinochet's government was in crisis and that some irregularities had come to light involving the payment of customs tariffs by important government officials.

He said that the plebiscite will provide the Chilean people with an opportunity to repudiate Pinochet's dictatorship by not voting or invalidating their ballots. The outcome, he said, is already known beforehand. But there is a committee in Chile which is composed of people who will not participate in the plebiscite eventhough they are exposing themselves to a 2 month prison term if they fail to take part.

The Chilean dictator is also trying to assure two rightwing groups which have come to be called "hardliners" and "doves."

But it has been learned that there are extreme rightwing organizations in existence which, under the protection of the government, operate their own jails, commit murders and are the major ones responsible for the disappearance of many individuals. These paramilitary groups are considered to be responsible for more killings than the Chilean security policy.

About the United States

As for U.S.-Latin American relations, he said: "First, I would say that the United States was surprised by the strength and vigor of the popular movements here. Those of us who have professionally followed President Carter's Latin American policy know very well that the Americans had prepared a policy designed to convince the dictators that they should accept orderly transitions, transfers of power, provide a relative opening. Because in the language of the Department of State they were called viable democracies, restricted democracies under tutelage in which the old leaders were apparently removed from power but the regime was barely retouched to give it a better international image, a better image at home."

Maira Aguirre continued: "The United States thought it had time to do that in Central America. In fact, its first great operation was scheduled to have taken place during the 1978 Guatemalan presidential elections. The State Department thought it was possible to isolate the MLN /National Liberation Movement/, Sandoval Alarcon and produce an agreement between moderate forces and the military regime which would continue in power under Lucas Garcia. We all know that it failed."

He continues: "Second, the United States Government was taken by surprise by events in Nicaragua. The events in Nicaragua represent a turn, a moment of decisive change in U.S. policy. The Nicaraguan situation shows a new vitality, a new style of popular movement, a different way of solving the problem of military dictatorships, a successful way through the rise of the Sandinist Front and all patriotic sectors in Nicaragua."

"With the front's offensive, especially the September offensive, U.S. diplomacy in Central America begins to crumble. It is worthwhile to note that it becomes a policy without direction."

He pointed out that if Carter is the winner of the election in the United States, the situation in the area would not change much. The same would apply if Reagan were elected. A Republican victory is a threat hanging over us. Reagan has advisers who are well-known reactionaries. From Reagan's policy we can only expect more intervention and less understanding. Therefore, regardless of whether Carter is re-elected or if he is defeated by the Republicans, the picture is still glum for us.

The Christian Left, side-stepping Frei's maneuvers, gave its support to Salvador Allende in 1970. Thus several coup plans to prevent Allende's rise to power were aborted. Allende took office on 4 November.

The OIC is a PDC /Christian Democratic Party/ splinter group which was formed in October 1971 and later joined the Movement of the Chilean Left. It joined the Popular Unity to work as a base group, to provide support to Salvador Allende's government and to work for socialism in Chile. The Christian Left joined the Popular Unity and expressed solidarity with it and with the errors and successes of Allende's government.

Only 2 years after the birth of the Christian Left, Pinochet's coup falls over all the parties of the left in Chile. Many of its members are murdered, arrested, tortured or forced into exile. In October the Christian Left will have been in exile for 7 years.

8599
CSO: 3010

CARTER'S LATIN AMERICA POLICIES CRITICIZED

Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 18 Aug 80 p 5

[Editorial: "International Nonpolitics"]

[Text] The Latin American countries are lacking an international policy. They lost the unity required for such a policy a long time ago. The ties to the past, the racial affinity, the common language and, if you will, the Latin temperament, no longer suffice to convert a sentimental brotherhood into a true alliance capable of maintaining a universally accepted position.

This lack of solidarity can be constantly observed in the most deplorable ways. The foremost example is the negligible importance of our central organization, the OAS, which has become heterogeneous with the inclusion of certain countries which honor a different tradition, racial as well as cultural and political, and of other small republics which do not deserve to be included. Because of the wide variations in the political systems the OAS has not achieved sufficient stature to be able to act as a disciplinary judicial organization. The diversity of views expressed in the OAS with regard to the value of democracy and its significance discriminates against all governments no matter what their philosophical bent, and the organization cannot bring together more than two countries on any proposition. This has been the reason why nothing practical can be expected from that organization. It is little more than a forum where the most exalted occupy the speaker's platform most of the time, while conflicts are created and even resolved without the OAS showing any decisionmaking capability.

The Latin American countries play a servile role in the conglomerates of nations which are formed here and there among the proletarianized nations of the world: the North-South dialogue, the Third World, the nonalined nations. Their presence is unimportant and they are not identified with any specific outlook.

We Colombians have had the hope of turning the Andean Pact into a sort of political alliance. But this has not been an official decision made after due consultation. Instead, it has been a more or less unpopular undertaking which made its deplorable debut in the unfortunate intervention in Nicaragua. At the present time it is an unknown quantity and has no specific objectives.

Colombia has a coherent and steadfast international policy in everything related to its sovereignty, to the guarding of its borders and to its rights to the sea and to the continental shelf. It must be recognized that our Foreign Ministry has been vigilant, has been timely and energetic when called for, and tolerant when it has been necessary to preserve cordiality with our neighbors.

But beyond that there is no policy, as for example on the serious and complex political problem of Central America and the Caribbean. Things are happening there which could affect our institutional stability, our future trade relations and even our sovereignty. And we remain dumbfounded, taking of course no direct action--which would be unimaginable--and not even searching for some form of rule of law and of American solidarity with regard to certain bloody conflicts and certain coups d'etat which create unlawful or anarchic situations which, far from constituting isolated incidents, set in motion a chain of contaminating circumstances.

This lack of policy is not the fault of our Foreign Ministry. The problem is that there is a reluctance to attribute a continent-wide character to this phenomenon of decomposition.

The most disturbing factor has been the sluggish performance of the United States, which is always uninformed, lacking in judgment, wavering in its attitudes, and shamefaced in its decisions. At the end of every incident there is left behind a stream of lost opportunities, a painful trail of institutional corpses.

At the same time the Latin countries of our America have no recent experience of solidarity which would allow them to call for joint action in order to at least set some goals. This lack of unity in action, which has become the established way of doing things, would have El Salvador bleed itself down to its last drop of blood so that nobody would really suffer defeat.

History will consider President Carter's government as one of the most costly for democracy. This good man has transmitted his undisguisable mediocrity to the entire international mechanism of the United States. The Department of State is an unreliable agency which has lost its character. There are people "infiltrated" from the left prowling about as well as people from the center. Every one there is doing his own thing, without there being unity of command, not to mention unity of outlook.

What is happening in Central America is better understood in the Foreign Office in London or in the Chancellor's Office in Bonn than in the corridors of Washington where people speak in hushed tones, because no one there can count on solidarity with his neighbor.

The Reagan alternative may not be too sparkling. Not much is known about his views on Latin America. But everyone is confident about his already proven ability to take advice effectively. Perhaps peace in Central America and the possibility of its reorganizing itself politically in such a manner that democracy and order are preserved depends on the aging Republican's success in getting elected. What appears to be certain is that Mr Carter's lack of judgement, extended for another 4-year term, would create more problems for us than could be jointly solved by the rest of the countries of the hemisphere if they finally came to an agreement.

9204
CSO: 3010

NEW AMBASSADOR TO HONDURAS APPOINTED

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 12-A

[Photo Caption]

NEW AMBASSADOR TO HONDURAS--The government has appointed Gen Jaime Sarmiento Sarmiento as its new ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Honduras. He will replace Victor Garcia Ramirez who will be assigned to another post. Gen Sarmiento was previously the commander of the Colombian Armed Forces.

CSO: 3010

HUGE POWERPLANT TO OPEN IN CARTAGENA

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 4-A

[Photo Caption]

NEW POWERPLANT FOR CARTAGENA--Aerial view of the new unit of the Thermoelectric Powerplant by means of which it is hoped to put an end to the continual blackouts. The monumental project will be inaugurated on 11 October, next, by President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala. (EL TIEMPO photo by Rafael Lombana.)

CSO: 3010

PAPER PRAISES PEOPLE'S DEMOCRATIC CHOICES

San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 22 Aug 80 EL INDUSTRIAL Supplement p 2

[Editorial: "With the Government in Peace and Conformity to Law"]

[Text] A calculated, methodical and aggressive policy of destabilization of our democratic system has led our country to carry out an illegal strike which extremist leaders want to turn into a conflagration disastrous for everyone in Costa Rica.

The overwhelming majority of workers who do not support the work stoppage have been threatened and harassed by a small union group whose function is to act at the sound of the Red Square bell.

The government acted wisely in sending the National Guard to the area of conflict to safeguard the lives and property of those who, with true patriotic spirit, are living up to their responsibility of staying on the job, a responsibility we all have if, in truth, we claim to have faith in democracy and unshakable love for the country in which we were born and in which our children are growing up.

We can criticize the government for its slowness in adopting a measure like that it has now taken, since the Executive Branch was fully backed by law to act as soon as the courts decreed the strike to be illegal. However, despite the enormous losses incurred and the violation of the true spirit of a lawful state which we profess, the time which has elapsed also shows that the government officials made an honest effort to find means of settlement and conciliation in the labor conflict.

In more than a month of striking it came to light, without dissimulation or subterfuge, that the intentions of the small union group were not to find solutions but to provoke our democracy and to make it less stable.

When the Compania Bananera, through the mediation of the Ministry of Labor, gave affirmative answers in order to resolve some of the questions raised, the Red unions replied with more allegations and greater confusion, thus closing the paths of understanding and disrupting the people by appealing to their distrust of foreigners and alluding to an alleged stubbornness in not recognizing the demands made.

The first order of business--the banner--in a communist revolutionary process is to promote economic demands. The man who dwells on the possibility of receiving more money for his labor is found to be more susceptible and flexible when the moment arrives to make him a part of the docile flock of Red sheep. Beginning with that fact, and without considering the difficulties of a nation submerged in crisis, events are snowballing for a rebellious and extremist minority and its ideological interests.

Marx maintained that the condition of the "working class" would inevitably and gradually worsen until there would be a cataclysm which would destroy the "capitalist system."

The tactics used in the banana sector reflect the Marxist principle. The intention is to bring the workers to the point of desperation so that they erupt like a volcano and level everything in their path. It does not matter how much the country is harmed, for what is important to the submissive milksops is not tradition but betrayal. The Communist International is of greater interest than Costa Rica's national democracy.

Under these circumstances, Costa Rican public opinion is capable of distinguishing between the wolf in sheep's clothing and the bloody stigma of Red imperialism. For today's Marxist-Leninist fanatics, dying for Moscow is like death for certain members of medieval denominations who believed they were purifying themselves and would enter paradise if they died in the heat of battle. It is similar to the Japanese kamikazes of World War II. To the death for their emperor! However, we all know that yesterday's and today's fanatics arrive at their state of delirium as the result of a form of indoctrination which enslaves and degrades them. After all, he who dies serves as a torch of freedom.

The sordid and tragic plans of international communism could have made headway in Costa Rica if the institutional systems of our society had been unable to accept change. However, this was not the case, since the same institutional flexibility which had previously made it possible for private ownership rights to replace feudal rights served to achieve positive results to the extent that the conditions of the proletariat have constantly improved.

In reality, the entire attitude of our society has changed in that respect. One of the most important discoveries in modern times is that mass production requires a people's market and, conversely, the people's market requires that the masses be able to purchase goods resulting from that mass production.

This concept, so obvious that it now appears to be an axiom, has penetrated the thinking of the modern community as gradually and unobtrusively as that of shortage penetrated its thinking in times past. Many eminent thinkers have expressed this clearly but no one as effectively as Gilbert Seldes in a single sentence which deserves being quoted: "The only luxury the wealthy cannot permit themselves is the poverty of the poor."

In short, our democracy and development will never be based on poverty but on the participation of the entire community in the benefits of production.

Freedom is an essential condition for achieving abundance and, in turn, abundance is an essential condition for achieving freedom. Freedom is possible only among equals and equality is possible only among individuals who have rid themselves of arbitrary social distinctions. Red activists want to tie the people's will to the wagon of totalitarianism through violent means. And violence is always the work of a few. Fear is promoted by a small group which destroys and shouts vehemently.

The decisive action taken by the National Guard to protect anyone wanting to work offers hope of relief for our democracy as well as a synthesis of our realities and an indication of the Costa Rican vital process.

Faith in democracy guarantees every kind of accomplishment required to provide a better life for Costa Ricans next year, for our children in the next century and for all humanity in the next millenium.

8568
CSO: 3010

SANCTI SPIRITUS PARTY HOLDS REVIEW MEETING

First Provincial Meeting

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 5 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Sancti Spiritus (AIN)--Antonio Perez Herrero, member of the secretariat of the CC [Central Committee] of the PCC [Communist Party of Cuba], presided over the second PCC review assembly in this province. It began yesterday with 297 delegates participating.

The meeting is the first of its type held at this level in the country. During this meeting, the last 2-1/2 years of party work will be analyzed and the new provincial committee as well as the delegates to the Second Party Congress and nominees for the CC will be elected.

This will conclude the organic process in the Sancti Spiritus area prior to the great meeting of Cuban communists.

As a salute to this event, the workers and different organizations accomplished a broad range of tasks. For example, ANAP [National Association of Small Farmers] members cleared and planted cane and prepared 470 caballerias of land for tobacco.

Others who presided over the meeting included: Armando Acosta and Faustino Perez, CC members; Joaquin Bernal and Alfredo Hondal, first and second secretaries of the party in Sancti Spiritus; and Levi Farah, government minister.

This province has experienced important achievements in the political and socioeconomic field since 1977 as a result of fulfillment of the Theses and Resolutions of the First Party Congress and the agreements of the 8th CC Plenum. This was stated in the long, critical report discussed yesterday at the meeting.

The document was read by Joaquin Bernal who pointed out the successes and problems of party work since the last assembly.

In the past 2-1/2 years, 14 industrial projects, 87 agricultural installations for livestock development and capacity for more than 17,000 new students were completed in this central part of the country.

MICONS [Ministry of Construction] is working on 113 projects, the most important of which is the paper and pulp complex being built near the Uruguay Sugar Mill in Jatibonico, valued at 132 million pesos. It will produce 60,000 tons of pulp and 60,000 tons of high-quality paper per year.

There was progress in general economic activity; there was a 4-percent increase in production this year compared to 1977 as well as increased labor productivity.

There were also positive results in cane cultivation and the effort by the sugar industry to increase efficiency in the grinding process and to increase capacity.

The document referred to the constant increase in mechanized cane cutting. In 1977, there were 74 machines and this year there were 164.

The production of fruits and vegetables, especially potatoes, showed good results. Yields of more than 6,000 quintals of potatoes per caballeria were achieved in the last harvest. The work of the peasants who produce tobacco and the rising rate of coffee recovery were pointed out.

The province also had substantial achievements in the field of communications.

The party also praised the efforts of the workers of the Sur del Jibaro Rice Enterprise for their dedication in increasing yields and achieving the largest seasonal harvest with 1,232 quintals per caballeria.

The report stated that the results in livestock have not been good although there have been slight general increases so far this year.

Perez Herrero Closes Meeting

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 6 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Sancti Spiritus (AIN)--Joaquin Bernal Camero, substitute CC member, was confirmed yesterday as first secretary of the PCC here at the end of the second assembly for review, renovation and/or ratification of mandates in this province. It was the first held at this level in the country.

This assembly met for 2 days at the Principal Theater in this city with 297 delegates in attendance. Antonio Perez Herrero, member of the secretariat of the CC of the PCC, closed the meeting.

The assembly was characterized by a wide-ranging analysis in the report on the work done during the past 2-1/2 years. A new provincial committee consisting of 75 regular members and 9 substitutes was also elected.

In its first meeting, the party leadership also confirmed Alfredo Hondal Gonzalez as second secretary and elected Dagoberto Perez Perez, Pedro Rodriguez Diaz, Oliver Lorenzo, Luis Rodriguez and Marcos Reloba as professional members and Hipolito Rodriguez Migollo, Ramon Covas, Adalberto Leyva and Hector Rodriguez as nonprofessionals.

Delegates to Second Congress Introduced

Also the 58 Sancti Spiritus delegates to the Second Party Congress and the 20 nominees for the CC of the PCC were introduced.

In recognition of the work done by the province, Antonio Perez Herrero gave Bernal Camero a bronze plaque. The Politboro is presenting these to the provinces that fulfill their tasks in the 20th anniversary year of the triumph of the revolution.

The delegates also approved the objectives for the next period of mandates based on fulfilling the agreements of the assembly as well as the Theses and Resolutions adopted at the Second Party Congress and other directives of the superior organizations.

The objectives included systematic control of the restructuring and renovation of the historic areas of the cities of Trinidad and Sancti Spiritus and support for the tasks involved in writing the 1981-85 5-year plan.

Another was to supervise fulfillment and give attention to the UJC [Union of Young Communists] and its organizations and to demand that the construction plans for the paper and pulp complex in Jatibonico be carried out so it can go into operation in 1981.

Perez Herrero's Conclusions

In the conclusions, Antonio Perez Herrero stated the positive results of the assembly, the depth of the report and the critical analyses on party work during that period.

He referred to the work of the party cadres in achieving greater economic efficiency as shown in indices like productivity, average wage and cost per peso.

He also praised the results achieved by the province in cane clearing and planting and other preparations for the next sugar harvest as well as the work done by the rice enterprises south of Jibaro and the provincial swine enterprise which achieved substantial success in their economic activities.

He also discussed the activities to be done in consolidating the plans for coffee recovery and the completion of tobacco planting, very important sectors for the economy.

He emphasized the importance that the party should give to educational work, cultural and political training of its members and other social, political and economic tasks.

Armando Acosta and Faustino Perez, CC members, and Levi Farah, government minister, also presided over the assembly.

7717
CSO: 3010

REPORTAGE ON FIRST NATIONAL SEDE CONFERENCE

Training Methodology Discussed

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 29 Aug 80 p 1

[Article by Jose Norniella]

[Text] About 20 tasks aimed at improving the methodological and teaching work of the teachers in the System of Schools for Economic Management (SEDE) were accomplished on the fourth working day of the First National Meeting of SEDE, which is scheduled to end tomorrow, at the Higher Institute for Economic Management (ISDE) here.

Nine reports from yesterday's program were debated in five of the faculties of the ISDE. These reports were of very high quality, and all treated real problems which are found in the enterprises and which the economic cadres encounter every day--problems which make difficult the process of implementation of the SDPE [Economic Management and Planning System]. But we must also say that all the papers offered conclusions and made recommendations concerning the problems confronted. These studies were done by the teachers in the various departments of the Provincial Schools of Pinar del Rio, Havana, Cienfuegos, Camaguey, Holguin and Santiago de Cuba and of the Higher Institute.

The Camaguey Provincial School presented a very interesting paper on the subject of planning storage in the agricultural and livestock enterprises. This research was done by the National Economic Planning department, with the collaboration of the Livestock Enterprise of Florida Municipality. The purpose of the work is to improve the storage plan and to determine the basic factors which influence its completion, as well as to find ways to do it efficiently.

This economic study showed that no scientific methodology is followed in the enterprise to correlate central planning with territorial planning; that its technical and economic plan is weighted down by an inadequate storage plan and by the pricing system. They also discovered that the planning methodology for this enterprise is inadequate because it does not depend on autonomy of the enterprise for compliance with the storage plan and for increased income.

All this brings higher costs in the feeding of the cattle, great waste in salaries and other problems which beset the finances of the enterprise and make it economically inefficient.

More Realistic Standards Needed

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 30 Aug 80 p 1

[Text] The need to base planning on a more realistic set of standards to prevent the plan's figures from turning against the enterprise like an element of administrative imposition, was the consensus of an interesting debate on the subject, "The Degree of Decentralization of the Activities of Cuban Enterprises," by a group of businessmen during the second to the last day of the First National Meeting of the System of Schools for Economic Management (SEDE), held yesterday in the conference room of the Higher Institute for Economic Management (ISDE) here.

This criterion arose from open discussion of the subject in question by a panel made up of Juan Sanchez, director of the Maritime Shops Enterprise and deputy to the National Assembly; Santiago Figueroa, an engineer and director of the Union of Electric Power Enterprises; Candido Caceres, director of the Pharmaceutical Production Enterprise; Guillermo de la Cuesta, director of the Sports Industry; Berto Gonzalez, deputy economic director of the Yuri Gagarin enterprise, and Marta Ferrer, head of the Industrial Enterprises Economics Faculty of the ISDE. Moderator of the panel was Rodrigo Rossie, an engineer and candidate for the degree of doctor of economic sciences and professor in that department.

Enterprise Directors Fail To Use Rights Granted by Decree Law 42

One can also conclude from the panel discussion that the directors of enterprises have powers given them by the state, through Decree Law No 42, which they do not use, nor do they know how to use those prerogatives granted them by present legislation. In this regard, Guillermo de la Cuesta's speech was outstanding, recounting his experience in the much-discussed matter of unofficial statistical information.

The director said that for 2 years now his enterprise has not turned over any unofficial statistical information. This has caused not a few agruments with upper-level management cadres, and in all the internal bulletins the enterprise always appears to be failing to comply with the requirement for statistical information, but this concerns unofficial statistics, because the official information is indeed being delivered in due time and with the required quality. We do not send in the unofficial information, which is protected in the rights conceded to enterprises by Decree 42. It also appeared that the problem of guaranteeing an assured production presents difficulties which conspire against the plan, and the enterprise has no margin to maneuver. In general, there is the criterion that the workers must have questions about the plan explained to them, but without reading them a bunch of cold figures which tells them little, since the leading indicators are so numerous that not even the most experienced director could know them from memory.

Emphasis Must Be Placed on Methods of Leadership Based on Economic Behavior

Another stumbling block in the implementation of the SDPE is the fondness for administrative methods in managing the economy. This is why there are cases of inflexibility when the plan is implemented, such as failure to respond to a variation in a complete indicator when it might be wise to do so. Because, if a selection is changed for any good reason, it is necessary to change the price, because the goods are different, and from there to continue to be consistent with the variety which this change introduces into the plan, so that the enterprise is not affected in its business negotiations by an artificial inefficiency.

The second subject discussed related to the implementation of the internal economic calculation, but lack of experience in this field was well demonstrated here.

This lively work session concluded with a speech by G. A. Shvidanenko, candidate for doctor of economic sciences and consulting professor of the faculty of business economics, who emphasized the important role of autonomy in the enterprise in raising the level of efficiency of business activities. He also referred to the fact that the enterprises must work to establish a group of standards which truly reflects the productive process of each.

Other Activities

In other activities, a lecture, "Critique of Anti-Marxist Economic Theories," was offered in the political economy department by A. F. Zverev, candidate for doctor of economic sciences and consulting professor in that department. There was also a lecture on the basic changes in the National Accounting System, the discussion of five reports, two of them drawn up by the Provincial Schools of Las Tunas and Villa Clara, seminars and analysis of class plans. The First National Meeting will close at noon today, Saturday.

Conference Closes

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 1 Sep 80 p 4

[Article by Jose Norniella]

[Text] After completing an intensive program which included a hundred activities aimed at achieving the improvement and perfection of the teaching-methodological and scientific-investigative level of its teachers, the First National Meeting of the System of Schools for Economy Management (SEDE), which met for 6 consecutive days at the Higher Institute of Economic Management in Havana, [ISDE] closed Saturday.

As is logical at such a meeting, methodological work was studied thoroughly, but a large part of the time was given over to reports (23 were discussed) and seminars (19 were held). In both instances, actual cases in our economic development were discussed and, in particular, the current level of understanding of the process of implementation of the SDPE [Economic Management and Planning System] in the country's enterprises.

The active work of the provincial schools of Camaguey, which presented four reports; Holguin, three; and Villa Clara and Havana, which presented two each, were outstanding. Matanzas, Granma and Isle of Youth were the only schools not presenting papers. The ISDE teachers presented five.

The papers and lectures had as their central purpose to update the knowledge of the SEDE teachers and those of the party schools and state central administrative organs, because they teach economic disciplines to the cadres and leaders of the economy at all levels and therefore need to be informed and brought up to date on concrete problems and economic policy lines so that they will be able to transmit to their future students real experience from economic practice.

In the last work session, Miguel A. Figueras, First vice president of the Central Planning Board, gave a complete lecture on "The Basic Objectives of Economic Development in the 5-Year Period 1981-85."

Value of Papers As an Active Teaching Method Emphasized

Laureano Leon, president of the National Association of Cuban Economists, in closing the meeting characterized as very outstanding the innovation of presenting papers related to economic practice as an active teaching method.

Referring to the organization and usefulness of this event, Laureano Leon said that this reaffirms the need to repeat and maintain it systematically as a very important practice whose results and experience he considers worthy of being followed by other teaching agencies and centers.

Previously, Cruz Maria Fuentes, deputy director of the ISDE, had spoken, reading the recommendations of each department with a view to improving the teaching-methodological and scientific-investigative work of those who teach economics in these specialized schools. Ideldo Grandal, director of the Camaguey Provincial School, spoke on behalf of the students.

Also at the closing ceremonies, among others, were Antonio Diaz, chief of the Department of Internal Education of the party's Central Committee; Rosendo Morales, rector of the ISDE, officials of the government and of the Soviet embassy in our country and the directors of the provincial schools.

8735
CSO: 3010

COLUMNIST DEPLORES NICARAGUAN REVOLUTION, U.S. AID

Tegucigalpa EL CRONISTA in Spanish 21 Aug 80 p 3

[Commentary by Ariel Remos: "Revolutionary Internationalism"]

[Text] The State Department--a good example for a study of masochism as a factor of foreign policy--has announced that it is "unalterably pursuing" its plans for economic aid to Nicaragua in the amount of $75 million (DIARIO LAS AMERICAS, Sunday, 16 March 1980) despite the fact that a number of top Sandinist leaders are harshly criticizing Yankee imperialism throughout the world and that, as the best example of imitation of the Cuban model, Tomas Borge, top FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] leader, went to Russia to proclaim vehemently: "We have come to grasp the hand of the generous, heroic and brotherly people of the USSR."

Commander Borge is the leader of a revolution which wants to feign humanitarianism and concern for the welfare of its people. However, it continues wholeheartedly to embrace genocide and those who bloodily crushed the desperate heroism of people like those of Nicaragua: the Hungarians, the Czechoslovaks and now, as though to remind everyone of their status as annihilators of life and human rights, the Afghans. This is just to cite a few examples.

And to the grotesque farce of these so-called revolutionaries, who join hands and openly conspire with the top organization of international assassins, we now add the State Department, insistent on giving the country $75 million, not to alleviate the suffering of the friendly Nicaraguan people, but rather to strengthen the subersive maneuver which is already spreading to El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala. How long will it continue to deceive with the hypocritical song of human rights and the other nonsense which has been spread around serving only to facilitate the task of the enemies who want to annihilate us?

Nicaragua is the second bastion which the USSR has succeeded in establishing in America in its plan to conquer the United States. And despite the fact that the proponents of world socialist government are trying to hide the true nature of the Sandinist revolution and the purpose it is serving, the truth of the overall subversive maneuver being carried out in Central America and the Caribbean is gradually coming to light.

Before their trip to Moscow, the Sandinist leaders held an important secret meeting at El Laurel farm in the vicinity of San Jose, Costa Rica. Attending the meeting were Sandinist Comdrs Tomas Borge, Henry Ruiz, Moises Hassan and Humberto Ortega; Cuban Gen Manuel Pineriro (alias Barbarroja), chief of subversion in Latin America; and Cuban Gen Senen Casas Regueiro. The subject of the meeting can be summed up as follows: to determine more precisely the degree of commitment the Sandinists should have toward the Soviets and the extent of Sandinist participation in the world revolution the latter are promoting.

The broad outlines of a new assignment for Nicaragua were perhaps decided at that meeting: to send people to Angola. Nicaragua's participation in sending men to Angola was the subject of discussion between Sandinist Comdr Daniel Ortega and Angolan President Dos Santos at a recent meeting held in Havana. At that meeting it was agreed that a group of Sandinists would train in Havana prior to being sent to Angola.

This is an indication of the extent of the commitment and exchange now taking place between the leaders of Marxist subversion in the world. Nicaragua is joining the ranks of "revolutionary internationalism," while, in reality, what it wants is to reduce every vestige of nationalism or private sentiment to subservience to the directives of Soviet imperialism, in this instance disguised under the broad and supranational concept of "revolutionary internationalism."

It would be sad for American taxpayers to provide $75 million to Soviet revolutionary internationalsim, the objective of which is to destroy the United States.

8568
CSO: 3010

VAZQUEZ COLMENARES APPOINTED GOVERNOR OF OAXACA

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 15 Aug 80 p 2

[Text] Oaxaca, Oaxaca, 14 Aug--The members of the 50th State Legislature, operating as an Electoral College under the chairmanship of Deputy Jorge Wincler Yessin, have declared Pedro Vazquez Colmenares to be elected governor of the state for the years 1980-1986, as per decree No 253 of 14 August.

The meeting hall of the local legislature was the setting for the solemn ceremony which took place in the presence of a large audience and leaders of the Institutional Revolutionary Party [PRI] headed by their President Agustin Marquez Uribe. After the reading of the results of the balloting, a decree was approved in which the elections which took place on Sunday, 3 August, were declared valid and in which it was made a matter of record that the majority of the votes was obtained by Pedro Vazquez Colmenares.

At the end of the meeting the legislature communicated the above to Eliseo Jimenez Ruiz, governor of the State, who stated that once again the will of the majority of the Oaxacan people had been carried out, and that Vazquez Colmenares, who will take the oath of office on 1 December 1980, will continue working for the prosperity and happiness of Oaxacans.

Will Work Diligently for the Progress of Oaxaca

When Pedro Vazquez Colmenares and his wife, Ana Maria Guzman de Vazquez Colmenares, received at his home the legislators who informed him of the result of the balloting in which by a majority of votes he was designated constitutional governor of the State, he repeated his firm intent to work with the greatest diligence and with the greatest integrity so that Oaxaca may attain a higher level of progress.

"I am fully conscious," Vazquez Colmenares stated, "of the historical commitment on my part that this declaration by the State Legislature entails and it is for this reason that in your presence, as the people's representatives, I repeat my dedication to service so that by joining our efforts and coordinating our actions, we may undertake to reach a higher standard of living, of welfare, of work and of prosperity for our people."

The representative of the Executive Committee of the PRI, Manuel Garza Gonzalez, was also informed of the result of the balloting and he asked that the same support that Vazquez Colmenares received during the intense campaign he waged throughout the State, and later at the election polls, should continue to be given him during his term of office to enable him to carry out the immense task which awaits him.

9204
CSO: 3010

PCM: NEW RIGHTIST GROUP ADVOCATES KILLING COMMUNISTS

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 14 Aug 80 p 2-A [Text] The ultrarightist group "Tecos" of the Autonomous University of Guadalajara [UAG], is urging the killing of communists in the State of Jalisco, Jose Luis Rodriguez, leader of the Mexican Communist Party [PCM] in Jalisco, charged yesterday.

Rodriguez asserted that the "Tecos" are spreading in leaflets and wall writings a terrorist motto which says: "Kill Reds...Kill Reds...Kill Reds. It is not a crime; it is a sport."

According to the PCM, orders for the anticommunist campaign are coming from the UAG and the campaign has the support or the consent of Flavio Romero de Velasco, the governor of Jalisco.

Recently, anticommunist meetings have taken place at that university at which decorations have been bestowed on prominent Latin American fascists, such as the former Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza.

The Jalisco communist leader asserted that this criminal campaign has been concocted at a national level and among its immediate plans are terrorist acts in addition to murdering PCM members.

In another connection, Rodriguez pointed out that a climate of unrest has developed in Guadalajara because the principal streets of the city of Jalisco are being turned into a major thoroughfare.

Hundreds of families who will be displaced from 20 blocks of dwellings are living in a state of social insecurity like that which has been experienced by thousands of citizens of the Federal District during the last 2 years.

9204
CSO: 3010

LEFTIST EDITOR RAMIREZ Y RAMIREZ DIES SUDDENLY

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 15 Aug 80 p 1

> [Text] Personalities of the political, journalistic and cultural worlds and of the worker's movement have expressed their condolences to the family of our director and to the members of the Mexican Publications Cooperative [SCL], which publishes EL DIA.

Enrique Ramirez y Ramirez, general manager of EL DIA and of the SCL, has died of cardiac arrest at his home in Cocoyoc, Morelos, at the age of 65.

SCL workers, politicians, government officials, factory workers, plantation owners, students, journalists, teachers, leaders of workers organizations, representatives and senators filed past the casket at the Felix Cuevas funeral home.

Among the prominent persons who extended their condolences to the relatives of the deceased and the workers of the cooperative which publishes EL DIA were the following: Jose Lopez Portillo, president of the republic; Enrique Olivares Santana, secretary of government; Fidel Velazquez, secretary general of the Confederation of Mexican Workers; Pedro Ojeda Paullada, secretary of labor and social welfare; Luis Echevarria, former president; Angel Olivo Solis, president of the Labor Congress; Luis M. Farias, chairman of the major committee of the Chamber of Deputies; Rafael Corrales Ayala, secretary of the major committee of the Chamber of Deputies; Mario Moya Palencia, director of FONATUR; Alejandro Carrillo Marcor, counsellor of the Secretariat of Agrarian Reform; Hilda Anderson, representative; Elena Poniatowska, writer; Dr Pablo Gonzalez Casanova; Pedro Ramirez Vazquez, secretary of human settlements and public works; Antonio Andere, president of the Association of Publishers of Daily Newspapers of the Republic of Mexico; Gerardo Dorantes, secretary of the rector's office of the UNAM [National Autonomous University of Mexico]; and Fernando Alcala, director of the television news program Antena 5 and of the newspaper AVANCE.

The body of Enrique Ramirez y Ramirez will be transferred at 1000 hours today to the San Lorenzo Tezonco mausoleum where it will be cremated.

Enrique Ramirez y Ramirez

9204
CSO: 3010

LABOR STUDIES INSTITUTE ISSUES UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 26 Aug 80 p 2-A

[Article by Miguel Angel de Alba]

[Text] There are 1.5 million unemployed persons in Mexico and over 10 million underemployed, the technical coordinator of special studies in the National Labor Studies Institute, Julio Castillon Guillermo, stated.

When the offical participated in the National Council of the Regional Worker Confederation of Mexico, he stated that unemployment is a problem that is getting constantly worse instead of being solved.

The first serious attempt made to solve it is the National Employment Program whose draft was submitted recently to President Lopez Portillo. It should yield results in the extent to which the various sectors do everything in their power to make it work.

Up to now, there has been a favorable response to the plan, but the efforts to achieve the goals must be intensified, if there is a desire to attain full employment of all the inhabitants of the country.

The increase in unemployment and underemployment is owing, primarily, to the fact that the incorporation of a large number of young persons in the economically active population is constant.

He pointed out that, if private initiative fails in its contributions to the program, this program will fail. It is a plan for everyone, because it must be borne in mind that we are living under a mixed economy requiring state and private investment equally.

He remarked that, at present, the sectors participating in production are submitting their possibilities for expansion, their experience and their alternatives, in order to solve the unemployment and underemployment problem.

In turn, the secretary general of CROM [Regional Worker Confederation of Mexico], Antonio J. Hernandez, stated that the Mexican Food System] will contribute to achieving a definite solution to those problems.

10,042
CSO: 3010

OTEYZA, DIAZ DIFFER ON ENERGY SECRETARIAT POSSIBILITY

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 26 Aug 80 pp 1-A, 11-A

[Article by Fermin Vazquez Legaria]

[Text] Yesterday, the secretary of Patrimony and Industrial Development, Jose Andres de Oteyza, observed that establishment of a Secretariat of Energy is possible. On the other hand, the director general of Mexican Petroleum, Jorge Diaz Serrano, pointed out that everything being said on that subject "is pure coffee shop speculation."

Both were interviewed briefly during the working tour of the Federal District made by President Lopez Portillo.

Oteyza remarked that "government administration is so varied and vast" that it has room for this kind of organization.

He added that, if the requirements of the system make it necessary, thought might be given to the establishment of a Secretariat of Energy.

In turn, after Engineer Diaz Serrano categorically refused to talk about anything, he finally made a very brief comment in which he described the above-indicated statements as "coffee shop speculation."

Moreover, according to what this newspaper has been able to observe, there is concern over establishment of a Secretariat of Energy in administrative circles and at every level in PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum].

While some civil servants and members of PEMEX personnel think that a super-secretariat would simply cause them to be drowned in "bureaucracy," others have hopes of seeing the possibility of attaining a higher position or better pay.

On the other hand, it is said that President Lopez Portillo has a wonderful piece of news for the oil people in his next government report.

10,042
CSO: 3010

SECOND NUCLEAR POWERPLANT DUE IN 1990

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p 8

[Article by Maria Elena Lopez Segura]

[Text] Jalapa, Veracruz, 27 Aug--Mexico's second nuclear electric powerplant will be built -- probably -- in the northern part of the state of Veracruz, very close to the Laguna Verde plant. It will probably be scheduled to go in operation in 1990.

Enrique Garcia y Garcia, head of the Bureau of Nuclear Technology and Services of the Federal Electricity Commission, stated that the second phase of the Mexican Nucleoelectric Program will start with the installation of that plant. By the year 2000, this program is to provide the country with 22 atomic reactors for generating electricity.

When he was interviewed before his speech in the Energetics Forum arranged by the University of Veracruz, he stated that the Laguna Verde plant, being built within the first phase of the program, will be placed in operation at the end of 1982 and the middle of 1983.

He stated that the capacity of the first nucleoelectric power generating unit will amount to 650 megawatts electric, which will be utilized a year after the Laguna Verde plant goes in operation.

In the same connection, the nucleoelectric program aims at having the power generated by this means amount to 25 percent of the country's energy requirements. He also said that 50 percent of the power needed by Mexico at the end of this century will be supplied by means of using oil and the remaining 25 percent by hydroelectric plants.

It is important to emphasize that the nucleoelectric program will represent for the country a saving of 1.2 billion barrels of oil, in the period between 1982 and 2000. At the present price of oil, this would mean 1 billion pesos.

In addition, the funds that this energy saving will produce will make it possible to cover an investment for the installation of 22 more nucleoelectric powerplants.

Finally, Garcia y Garcia pointed out that the main problem for the installation of that kind of powerplants in our country is represented by the suppliers, because, although the technologies are different in view of the fact that the equipment offered to Mexico comes from the United States, France, Sweden, the Federal Republic of Germany, Canada and other countries, they are similar in their objective and the decision for their purchase entails a political and economic feasibility analysis.

10,042
CSO: 3010

USES OF GEOTHERMAL WATER DISCUSSED

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 27 Aug 80 p 7

[Article by Maria Elena Lopez Segura: "Importation of Potassium and Lithium Fluoride Will Cease If Geothermal Water Is Utilized"]

[Text] Jalapa, Veracruz, 26 Aug--Mexico will achieve self-sufficiency in potassium and lithium fluoride, if the large amounts of those compounds contained in geothermal water are utilized adequately.

Arturo Gonzalez Salazar, head of the Department of Geothermal Energy of the Federal Electricity Commission, stated that this is very important, because those salts are raw material for the production of fertilizers and are now entirely imported.

For the purpose of determining the amount of those compounds that can be obtained, FERTIMEX has installed a pilot plant at Cerro Prieto, Mexicali, from which small amounts of potassium and lithium are already being obtained experimentally.

It is expected that approximately 1,000 metric tons of salts a year will be obtained from that plant. This will help solve the problem of importing those items.

In addition, he stated that in Los Azufres, Michoacan, where close to 20 wells have been drilled, studies have started for setting up a fixed electrical generating plant and also, at the end of 1981, five mobile wellhead plants, each with a generating capacity of 5,000 kilowatts, will go in operation.

During the first roundtable in the Energetics Forum held in this city, Gonzalez Salazar stated that Mexico has achieved great development in the technique of exploitation of geothermal wells. For that reason, techicians come frequently from Russia, Italy, Spain, El Salvador, France, Japan and China to make studies and there are many requests for future study trips.

The CFE [Federal Electricity Commission] is carrying out exploration all over the country for the purpose of promoting utilization of geothermal energy, because it is necessary to avoid burning oil and gas (which is like burning money), Gonzalez Salazar stated.

Because of that encouragement, the installed capacity in our country is comparable with Russia, although it does not exceed it. For example, at Cerro Prieto, 150,000 kilowatts are generated. This represents 1 percent of the total power produced. This plant is scheduled to reach a capacity of 400,000 kilowatts by 1985.

Work is also being performed in Veracruz. If it continues as it has been going along, the specialist stated, very soon an amount equal to the amount for Guadalajara will be generated for this state. Likewise, drilling will start in 1981 at Los Humeros, Puebla, where geological and geophysical studies have already been completed and very good results are expected.

Mexico is rich in geothermal energy because of its large number of volcanoes closely associated with geothermal energy. There are over 3,000 volcanoes on the neovolvanic axis in Mexico. Therefore, there are over 300 possible areas of geothermal exploitation.

Cesar Mondragon, in charge of the coal-2 project of MITARE stated, when he was interviewed after his participation in the Energetics Forum, that our country must produce 4.2 million metric tons of coal a year, for the purpose of supplying the first coal-fired electric power plant of CFE. This amounts to 70 percent of what is being mined at present.

He also stated that, by 1987-1988, production of 9 million metric tons a year will be attained, thanks to the present administration's program of stimulation of the development of alternate areas of energy. This represents a great effort, because development of the use of coal has been slow in the last 20 years, because it has been used in connection with the requirements of the iron and steel industry.

10,042
CSO: 3010

REAGAN SEEN AS THREAT TO REVOLUTION, HUMANITY

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 22 Aug 80 p 2

[Commentary by Gladys Campos de Orozco: "The Reagan Candidacy"]

[Text] That Uncle Sam's nephews appear, throughout history, to have been "cut from the same cloth" with regard to their godfatherly attitude toward Latin America is certain. But occasionally Uncle Sam produces "outstanding" nephews, who specialize in deepening the abyss which has always existed between the powerful nation to the north and the countries of our Latin America and all the poor countries on earth which appear to be condemned eternally to live under its unfortunate interventionist policy.

The case of candidate Reagan is the classic example of "The Ugly American." Reagan was born to politics with the "big stick" in his hand, declaring himself, defining himself openly to be an enemy of humanity, as in the words of that beautiful hymn, which many reject because it is the truth. If Reagan wins the election, a thing which seems dangerously probable, Latin America must be prepared to confront new torments. If before--if always--the rains of the north have fallen on us, this time, with the arrival in power of candidate Reagan, we would have to fight real hurricanes. Mr Reagan, who as a movie actor projected a false image in celluloid, like all those who project themselves by that medium on the wide screen, is now displaying his true image: that of the powe ful bad neighbor, threatening to subject us to his policy of eminent "landowner" and indisputable master of the world. His arrival in power would mean the beginning of a cold war in which the most danger would be to Latin America.

Reagan's policy, in open conflict with our young revolution, would place an enormous barbed wire fence around our already mistreated economy. Our revolution has traced its route and has been very clear in its determination to advance, come what may, along the path cleared for us by our martyrs and heroes. And if candidate Reagan did not look kindly upon this, he would try, by all the means available to him, to close all doors to us in his crazy zeal to grab at least one of the reins of our revolution and try to divert it toward the path of submission and defeat where, according to him, we must place ourselves in order to merit the aid which unfortunately we need, as a country which is rising from ruins. The sectors which sympathize with and support Nicaragua--which are, of course, in the minority in that northern country--would thus find themselves absorbed by the reactionary majority. This majority would have the approval of the Pentagon, which has always been at the ready, like a cat with its claws sheathed waiting to extend them quickly at the appearance of any daring rat which might rustle past.

If Sandino in his time was a sliver in the eye of the gringos, the Sandinist Revolution is now a plank in the eye of the blond giant, in spite of all the friendly demonstrations and good will of the minority sectors which support us. To think that it will close its eye on this plank is a false notion, and therefore candidate Reagan suits them to a T. He is an "outstanding" nephew of Uncle Sam, with a hard hand and a hostile attitude, firm and determined to "contain" the poor people of the earth who are committing the "imprudence" of wanting to be masters of their own destiny. What Uncle Sam ignores is that his image has been deteriorating after so many Vietnams, so many Playa Girons, so many attacks and outrages such as La Moneda in Chile, so much "unconditional" aid to strongmen like Somoza, and now so many millions of dollars for murdering and crucifying the suffering people of El Salvador. He also appears to be totally unaware that there is a global force growing little by little, slowly but surely, a force generated by the same repression and omnipotence they have used for years in the poor countries of the world. This force, which is spreading and which they want to contain and extinguish with that same interventionist policy is called /revolution/ [in boldface]. And that, for them, is a /plague/ [in boldface]; for humanity it is /redemption/ [in boldface]. But they don't want to admit it and they are alone with their millions of dollars and their trips to the moon and their powerful nuclear weapons of all kinds and their degrading Watergates and Billygates. A Reagan in power at this precise time is what Americans least need. It would be inauspicious not only for Latin America, but for the United States as well, because the con ditions of former times no longer exist. The situation is no longer the same. The people have grown in wisdom, in valor and in determination. The big stick now would not operate only in one direction, but would become a dangerous boomerang which, returning with powerful force to its place of origin, would imminently endanger world peace.

Reagan is not just one more candidate. He is an open and brazen threat. He is the boot which oppresses. He is the hand which gives with a thousand conditions involved, shameful conditions which are against the dignity of oppressed peoples. He is the number one leader of imperialism. He is the intransigent gringo with whom true, brotherly American relations could never be established. We hope, then, that Reagan does not achieve his goal of using, from the White House, the big stick which he is now brandishing so menacingly, because then a mantle of mourning and blood would fall over humanity.

8735
CSO: 3010

U.S. BLOCKADE AGAINST CUBA SEEN AS HARMFUL TO ISLAND'S PEOPLE

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 9 Aug 80 p 2

[Commentary by J. Davila y Castellon: "The Blockade and the Cuban People"]

[Text] The blockade against Cuba did not get rid of Fidel Castro; on the contrary, it favored his entrenchment in power. But the most serious thing about it is that the damage it was expected to inflict on Fidel has been transferred to the noble Cuban people. The people are the ones who are still suffering the consequences of the State Department's unwise policy, whose unconditional supporters did not know how to anticipate or measure the consequences of such an important decision.

After 20 years, can we list the benefits or positive achievements of that decision? Who will dare to applaud now the decision made yesterday? Time has passed. Latin America is showing itself daily to be more mature and master of its own actions; it has realized that it has no reason to behave like the timid daughter of any great power. The day is not far off when the fraternal countries will lift the blockade by their own initiative and decision, because keeping it in force does not make sense.

Lifting the blockade so unfortunately imposed on Cuba would be an index of the political independence of Latin America with respect to the United States. But without denying the importance such an independent gesture on the part of Latin America might have in the political sense, we want to stress the direct and specifically human character of the problem with relation to the Cubans, taken as a people in themselves, rather than politically.

It is no secret that economic conditions are not very good for the Cuban people, and this situation is not unconnected to the economic blockade agreed upon by the OAS against the Castro government. This tremendous and said international historical error has contributed to accentuating the poverty and privation of an entire people who, like any other people, should not have to suffer in any way for the ideology or policies of its government.

The Cuban people are the heart of the problem; it is the Cuban people who must be saved from the shortages and the poverty imposed in large part from overseas, since the long, cruel and unwarranted punishment has been inflicted only on them.

The political intent failed; it was a complete fiasco. The effects of the frustrated intent have been more disastrous.

The world now appears to be opening up to a new posture regarding human relations, and within this broad concept international politics have been favorably affected. Humanism is penetrating this area. Cold and hypocritical diplomacy is losing force; it is completely devalued when the powerful concepts of brotherhood, solidarity and justice prevail over less noble considerations. The prevalence of human values is what is most important in the case of Cuba.

Cuba cannot continue to be isolated. Cuba must be integrated into the world of broad, respectful and fraternal relations with the rest of America.

It is inhuman to condemn the people of Marti to an isolation whose results have in no way served those who, in using a political strategy, completely forgot the human factor. In the name of that human factor, it is more than high time it were rectified.

President Carter, before ending his administration, should include in his human rights program the right of the Cuban people to live in a more comfortable and dignified manner. No government has any reason to take this right from any people, but it does have the duty to obtain, insofar as possible, its greater well-being and progress.

The reincorporation of Cuba into the framework of Latin American international relations is part of human rights, because the island's unjust and unnecessary isolation is an attack on its people.

8735
CSO: 3010

GOVERNMENT'S DECOMMERCIALIZATION OF CHRISTMAS APPLAUDED

Neither Commercial Nor Political

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 22 Aug 80 p 2

[Editorial: "A Real Christmas"]

[Text] Christmas is the most important holiday in Christendom. We celebrate in it nothing less than the birth of God as man, Christ Jesus, the Saviour of humanity. It is a day of jubilation and happiness on which we thank our Heavenly Father for having sent to us the greatest proof of His love: His Son Jesus. It is not human solidarity or certain human or social values that are celebrated at Christmas time. It is Christ we exalt, from whom everything else emanates as a corollary. At Christmas time we glorify Christ who is its center, its meaning, its totality.

Christmas is also essentially a religious celebration. It is not a commercial, patriotic or civic celebration. Transcendental and supernatural events are honored in it: the Incarnation of God in Christ-man, and Mary's bringing forth a Son conceived by the act and grace of the Holy Ghost.

Through the centuries Christmas celebrations have frequently been undermined and adulterated by men. Sometimes the destructive mechanism has been commercial materialism, other times it has been political and ideological materialism. The former changed Christmas into a business event, an opportunity to sell and obtain profits. The latter has tried to reduce Christmas to the level of a civic festivity where solidarity among men is proclaimed at the same time that God is subtly denied or set aside.

We have had sufficient examples of the former in Nicaragua and in all capitalist countries. We have seen examples of the latter from the French Revolution, when Christmas was declared a republican festivity, to the Cuban revolution, when Christmas was moved to July 26th to be absorbed by the patriotic celebration of the revolution.

The origin of all these adulterations has been the rejection of the true God and His replacement by other gods. The materialistic businessman has only one god he worships: money. Materialistic politicians have another unique god they worship: political power. Therefore, while for materialistic businessmen Christmas is an opportunity to make money, for atheistic politicians it is a festivity that must be deprived of its religious significance and be given a basically political meaning. Their objectives--albeit different--are very close: for some it is financial profit, for others political change.

U.S. Influence Criticized

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 21 Aug 80 p 3

[Commentary by Ignacio Briones Torres: "The Commercial Defeat of the Infant Jesus"]

[Text] It was not so long ago that when Christmas approached creches were set up in many homes in anticipation of the big night when, according to Christian tradition, Jesus was born. Kids were taken by their parents to those places where prayers alternated with Christmas carols and where, in addition to the singing, children and adults showed their devotion to the occasion.

Fervor and humility characterized the celebration.

We might say that this corresponded to a provincial society or to a Managua where all neighbors knew each other or even where--without knowing each other--they were infected by a tradition that was passed on from generation to generation, especially among certain families, some of which still lament the subsequent adulteration of Christmas and of what we might call its vanished charm.

What was it that characterized this adulteration and what caused it? A greed for profit, commercialization, consumerism, all those things that some people like to call civilization but that if we examine them in detail reveal their true exploitative qualities.

The rise of an overwhelming commercialization--largely the product of the United States--started by snatching the Infant Jesus away from the Nicaraguans and replacing Him with Santa Claus. Gone were the creches, leaving enthroned in our homes the jolly character from the North.

Instead of "Felices Pascuas," our season's greeting cards carried the new "Merry Christmas." The sweetened pumpkin, the candies and the fruit juices--exclusively homemade and offered to people gathered around the creche--were replaced by export products: confetti, plastic toys and sodas, so harmful to the health.

The Masaya whistles gave way to tin instruments made abroad. In short, not only was the original symbol of the holidays--the Infant Jesus--taken away from the people, but in addition consumer goods entering our country created new habits that drained our foreign exchange.

As can be easily understood, this attack on our simple and wholesome customs was not limited particularly to our Christmas celebration or generally to traditional Christian holidays like the Immaculate Conception and Holy Week. That foreign invasion and imposition--conducted in accordance with general plans of imperialistic cultural domination against our communities--was extended, and is being extended even to this day, to all aspects of our life.

A frankly disgraceful situation was created in connection with the religious celebrations. Businessmen, export companies, shameless publicity agents and cheap promoters with their minds fixed on their own pockets have not only encouraged cultural invasion to the detriment of our people and to the benefit of their own interests, but have also distorted the Nicaraguan reality through campaigns having only one goal--profits. We still have here a broadcasting station that year after year transmits the Passion of Christ sponsored by a beer manufacturer. And nobody seems to care, although the owner goes to confession and insists that he is a devout catholic, which should make him show some respect but does not, even remotely.

This case exemplifies the level of moral decay to which--perhaps without realizing it--even those who attest to being religious have fallen. And at the same time it demonstrates the need for and the merit of the recent decree issued by the National Reconstruction Government Junta concerning the Christmas celebrations.

Our country has entered a new historical era. Within the framework of this singular opportunity that we never had before all kinds of social scars must disappear. Past vices, mistakes and sins must be eradicated by the patriotic fervor of the revolution. There must be respect for traditions and religions.

9674
CSO: 3010

MINISTER DESCRIBES LITERACY CAMPAIGN AS WORLD MODEL

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 8 Sep 80 p 4

[Speech by Minister of Education Carlos Tunnermann Bernheim on the occasion of International Literacy Day in Managua on 8 September 1980]

[Text] Today, on 8 September, we are celebrating International Literacy Day. All countries--capitalist or underdeveloped--some to a greater and some to a lesser extent, are hastening to make formal promises to promote campaigns leading to the total elimination of illiteracy, which affects 42 million adults in Latin America alone and 800 million throughout the world.

These campaigns have in truth been numerous, but having been pursued in nonrevolutionary contexts, the results have been unsatisfactory. In fact, great frustrations have been encountered in more than one campaign which was begun but not finished.

From the time of the signing of the agreement to eliminate illiteracy at the general conference of the UNESCO, during its 14th meeting in 1966, to the present, all of the countries have fully embraced the memorable goal, but if we evaluate the countries involved in the agreement, we find that instead of declining, illiteracy has increased in absolute figures worldwide.

"This problem of eliminating illiteracy, which is basic and worldwide in scope," the UNESCO says, "affects all the member states, including those not directly affected by this scourge. To be persuaded of this it suffices to realize that the number of illiterates is increasing steadily, despite the fact that the rate of illiteracy has been reduced, and that the total may come to a billion persons before this century ends if the current trends continue."

The UNESCO itself, at the recent international conference of ministers of education in Mexico in December of 1979, was able to cite frightening figures about the international literacy situation. These figures are so alarming that there was talk there of implementing a new main project, some of the guidelines of which might be taken from an old design, plus the recent contributions made by other signatory nations which have been more or less helpful in this noble pedagogical task of cultural liberation.

And it is precisely here that we come in. It is here that the specific example of our national literacy crusade can be displayed to the world, if not as a perfect model at least as the effective result which a truly democratic revolution has achieved in 5 months of intensive work.

Undertaking the task of rebuilding a country in ruins, the Sandinist revolution realized that along with plans to reactivate the economy, the task of reactivating our teaching system on the basis of the most sizeable strata, had become urgent.

This would be the equivalent of launching a second cultural revolutionary war, a massive one, with an army of more than 95,000 volunteers heading more than 600,000 literacy workers. All of Nicaragua transformed into a great school, thanks to the spontaneous contribution of the best of its children, skilled in the war of liberation but still more skilled now against the crudest form of oppression.

For it was in going to the groups neglected by education for centuries that we were to find the reason for the existence of this Sandinist revolution which set forth, as one of its priority goals, the elimination of illiteracy throughout Nicaragua once and for all.

And the Sandinist revolution, which planned a crusade in the midst of rebellion, completed it in a time of peace, to the extent that we can now speak of an entire people, workers and peasants, incorporated in the advance of technology and the advantages of civilization.

Last year this Literacy Day meant nothing special to us. It was commemorated as an international commitment and nothing more. This was the period when we were busy bringing to our worktables other teaching experiences to be studied and analyzed in depth, so as to extract from them that which could be useful to our revolutionary process. Thus this giant enterprise was planned, and success was not long in coming.

Now, however, International Literacy Day will be celebrated, not only on the governmental level, but within that vast sector, our youth, which in every corner of our fatherland today knows from its own experience what it is to be illiterate and what methods to use to achieve true literacy.

For less than a month now we have been able to carry a different message of sociocultural solidarity to the world. It is to urge the brotherly countries to promote literacy campaigns, and if they cannot do so within a truly revolutionary context, which is the ideal, they must at least take into account broad sectors of the population interested in eliminating this evil which is today affecting some 800 million individuals who are groping their way on the 5 continents, their horizons limited by their own impediments.

Nicaragua, a small, free nation in the heart of the Americas, is celebrating this day with the simplest of its slogans raised on high by thousands and thousands in each district: "Territory triumphant over illiteracy."

For this reason, UNESCO chose this very International Literacy Day to present to Nicaragua, in Paris, the UNESCO headquarters, one of the highest cultural awards to which a victorious people can aspire: the Nadezhda K. Krupskaya Prize, "for carrying out, with singular success, the national literacy crusade," termed by many our second cultural liberation war.

5157
CSO: 3010

MINISTER DISCUSSES PROBLEMS IN HEALTH SECTOR

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 10 Sep 80 pp 1, 9

[Interview with Minister of Health Lea Guido; date and place not given]

[Text] Minister of Health Lea Guido granted the first press interview she has had since she took up her delicate task to EL NUEVO DIARIO. Health is a subject of daily popular comment, and following the literacy crusade, it is the goal given priority by the revolutionary government. The questions and answers were as follows.

1. A month after taking office as minister, what do you think are the main problems your ministry faces in the health sector?

[Answer] This is the first public interview I have granted since I took over the ministry, and I would like to take this opportunity to address a message to the people, their mass organizations, the workers in the health sector, the administrative, paramedical, nursing, medical and maintenance personnel, all of us who work in the health sector.

The problem of health is very complex, and it is necessary both for the workers in the health sector and for all of the people to be aware of the difficulties and to work arduously. In addition to money, initiative and awareness on the part of the workers is needed, as is maturity on the part of the people in order to understand the difficulties we face.

A month after having taken over the Ministry of Health, I think that with the help of the comrades working here I have been able to determine more or less some of the main basic problems in the health sector.

We must recall that when the revolution triumphed, this ministry was in a situation of total destruction and incapacity, similar to that of our national economy.

First of all this was because of what the Ministry of Health had been in the Somoza era. It was a sector managed by a Somoza gang with innumerable problems of corruption and inefficiency, and personnel battling for their trade union interests. We found the premises in ruins, plundered, with a lack of adequate medical attention and deficient hospital facilities. They are really museums because of the type of equipment they had and still have, most of it donated and second-hand, with a whole series of antiquated brands, inadequate instruments, and 24 facilities providing the people with health care in anarchic and chaotic fashion. There were 17 local councils, 1 national council, social security with its clinic and the Ministry of Health with its programs. In other words there was no integral national health care plan. Thus the first titanic task awaited Dr Amador Kuhl and the health ministry team. What there had been was historic chaos and the revolution created the SNUS. I will give you some figures on the resources we have.

There are 4,831 hospital beds, or 18 for every 10,000 inhabitants; 1,371 doctors, or 5.4 for every 10,000 inhabitants, and they are not all working in the SNUS. There are 605 nurses, or 2.3 per 10,000 inhabitants; 3,261 nursing aides, or 12.58 per 10,000 inhabitants. These are distributed throughout the country unequally, and Managua has almost 60 percent of these resources, and also there is a high birth rate and a high rate of infant mortality as well in the country.

With these limited resources, I believe that we can say that good success has been achieved even with the poor medical facilities already noted.

With all of the above there are problems in organization, planning, administration, maintenance of equipment, lack of replacement parts, sometimes because they are not shipped and in others because they have been discontinued, and other program limitations. There has been no census survey to date. These are the great basic problems, and from these innumerable problems of another kind develop, products of those already mentioned, apart from the external problems such as that of medicine supplies, which also depends on proper domestic distribution by the ministry, and by the international companies, on whose part it can be said there has been a concealed boycott. In addition there are the difficulties which some bodies encounter in obtaining the loans they need. Thus we must face all of these problems. Currently one of the first tasks is to deal with the planning of the ministry, since the SNUS is developing, using ever-greater resources to bring health care to our people. This is something which is not achieved overnight, but it is necessary to establish the foundations. The SNUS is the goal. We need to build it and to do so we must overcome these problems. It is also necessary to establish priorities in service, to define policy, evaluation and control lines.

2. Of all these problems, which most urgently require attention?

[Answer] The administrative problem is one of the most urgent, as is maintenance. The two are closely linked. The problems of planning and organization are also urgent. Currently, the steps to be taken are:

Strengthening the planning office on the central level.

Providing the ministry with an organic structure, a stable table of organization with clearly defined functions and communications channels.

Waging a struggle against bureaucracy and ensuring that regionalization functions, while appealing to the conscience and sense of responsibility of the personnel. The maintenance unit must be efficient, to which end we need material resources, and we must see that the Supply Center (CAM) functions flexibly. This really requires simultaneous effort.

3. Are there still individuals with Somoza-era attitudes in the health sector?

[Answer] Obviously, just as there are in society as a whole. Forty-five years of dictatorship is a whole lifetime and it has effects on the minds of men, and in addition there are those with interests. There are people who think that we are not engaged in a revolution here and there are people who are against the revolution and want to slow it or abort it.

There are individuals in the health sector, a minority, who do not identify with the interests of the people, who do not see that to build the SNUS sacrifice, dedication and initiative are necessary, that it is necessary to wage a battle against negligence and corruption. I have visited the same hospital, once officially and the other without prior notice, and I have seen negative attitudes toward the people, by a minority, which shows that there are individuals trying to take advantage of the real difficulties encountered to slow the development of the SNUS. They even defend acts of corruption in order to create a political problem, and they put their individual interests above the individual interests of the people. As was said, it is obvious that there are still individuals with Somoza-era attitudes, individuals who do not understand that despite the difficulties and limitations we have, concern for and relations with the people should not be dehumanized. This approach does not only mean collaboration with Somoza but is an attitude as well.

The health worker must be motivated by a profound love of the people. And really we have a large number of workers, the majority of them, who do indeed understand that the SNUS serves the interests of our people and not individual interests, and in this connection they support the measures and defend the conquests of the revolution. Health tasks can only be carried forward by patriots.

The complaints will continue to exist because the conditions under which we live, which we have in part explained, make it very difficult for us to provide perfect service within a short time. However, as I said earlier, there are Somoza-era attitudes on the part of a minority which give a false picture of the true work being done by many health workers. This is the reason for the political work, the work on consciousness-raising and human relations for the health workers faced with harsh working conditions and sometimes, as we said, by the activities of counterrevolutionary individuals, so that they see their efforts to do the work efficiently threatened.

Lines and delayed appointments cannot yet be eliminated overnight, with the objective material conditions available to us. We do indeed plan measures, such as for example broader publicity for Managua, by health areas, although this will not entirely resolve the problem and we must also realize that all we are discussing pertains to medical aid, to the recovery of health, but we must plan to prevent disease as well, and in this connection we will place stress on preventive medicine.

Within these problems, we are contemplating a plan for care of the workers, not only those who are ensured. For us the priority is the worker. For example the workers in the mines, some of whom are ensured and some not. We have to provide care for all of them.

The problem of the insured worker pertains mainly to the Managua area, and currently we are giving Managua priority to respond to the general problem of aid, not only to the insured worker, but some practical measures for workers as a whole. Moreover, if there is to be effective service to the workers in the future, the INSS must be expanded, where with the SNUS it has a capacity to serve and finance its services.

As to prescriptions, we want to say that there are doctors prescribing medicines with names and brands which are not on the basic list, and thus cannot be found in the pharmacies. Sometimes we have a problem with medicines which some pharmaceutical enterprises simply do not sell us, but there are always medicines which can be substituted, although they come under different names and thus the physicians should use the generic terms in their prescriptions.

We must also admit that the distribution of the basic list to doctors by the Ministry of Health has been deficient.

4. When will an effective health code, with all of the benefits this entails for public health in the country, be a reality in Nicaragua?

[Answer] The health code is one of the things which has been a concern of the Ministry of Health since last year.

Intensive work has been done on drafting a proposal which has already been under revision for 2 months now.

We must note that a health code is not the problem of the ministry and its bodies alone, so that it must be revised and approved by each and every one of the bodies involved. Currently we are making this revision, and now with the suggestions and comments arising therefrom, the proposal is being drafted so that the JGRN can approve it and channel it to the state council.

This is not something which can be done overnight, for which reason we are developing, parallel with this, general health regulations which will meet some of the immediate needs.

5157
CSO: 3010

END

JPRS 76676

22 October 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2205

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76676

22 October 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2205

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Steel Production in Andean Region To Reach 10 Million Tons
(PRESENCIA, 8 Sep 80) 1

Dominican, Venezuelan Presidents Sign Cooperation Program
(Radio Mil Network, 9 Oct 80) 3

Cuban Experts Advise UNAN on Educational Planning
(LA PRENSA, 20 Sep 80) 4

Cuban Delegate Speaks at UN Crime Prevention Congress
(GRANMA, 4 Sep 80) 6

ARGENTINA

Visiting British General Suggests Military Explain Disappearances
(LA PRENSA, 22 Sep 80) 8

'LA PRENSA' Rejects PLO Attempts To Join IMF, World Bank
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 19 Sep 80) 11

British Minister of Agriculture Seeks Closer Cooperation
(LA PRENSA, 21 Sep 80) 13

Drop in Meat Exports Related to Rate Exchange Policy
(CONVICCION, 23 Sep 80) 16

Frondizi Document, Hardening of Junta's Position Discussed
(LA NACION, 28 Sep 80) 18

Writer Severely Criticizes Civic Works, Courts
(LA PRENSA, 27 Sep 80) 21

Saint Jean Speaks on Opening of Political Activity
(LA PRENSA, 26 Sep 80)..... 23

Special Significance Accorded to XXI Unitas Maneuvers
(Martin Olivera; CONVICCION, 20 Sep 80)..... 25

Jujuy Dam To Acquire Turbines Through Bidding
(LA OPINION, 23 Sep 80)..... 28

New Gas Pipeline To Be Completed Next Year
(CLARIN, 22 Sep 80)..... 30

Energy, Fuel Investment Plans for 1980-1989
(EL DIARIO, 10 Sep 80)..... 32

Reportage on Agricultural Developments
(LA NACION, 20 Sep 80; LA PRENSA, 14 Sep 80)..... 34

Corn, Sorghum Sowing Up
Crop Estimates, Exports Cited
Crop Taxes To Decline

Economic Policies Blamed for Chaco Province Agricultural Crisis
(LA PRENSA, 22 Sep 80)..... 41

BOLIVIA

Junta Reportedly Contemplating Legalizing Coca Production
(GRANMA, 29 Aug 80)..... 43

Cuban Journal Reports on 'Repression' by New Regime
(Juan Martin; VERDE OLIVO, 31 Aug 80)..... 44

BRAZIL

Reportage on Trade With USSR, East Europe, PRC, Cuba
(Various sources, various dates)..... 49

Soviet Cement Imports
Brasilinvest Office in Beijing
Cuban Imports
Trade With Eastern Europe
Mission to Eastern Europe
Imports From Poland
Hungarian Trade
Imported Equipment Technology

Galveas: Anti-Inflation Measures Achieving Results
(O GLOBO, 10 Sep 80)..... 55

Langoni Announces Increased Subsidies for Exporters
(O GLOBO, 10 Sep 80)..... 57

PTB Leadership Dispute, PDT Status Surveyed
(VISAO, 1 Sep 80)..... 59

Industrial Production Rises 7.91 Percent in July
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 10 Sep 80)..... 63

Figueiredo Stresses Need To Avert Recession at All Cost
(JORNAL DO BRASIL, 9 Sep 80)..... 65

Fifth ENAEX Opening Session
Text of President's Speech

CUBA

Visiting Ugandan Scores U.S. Military Bases in Somalia
(Havana Domestic Service, 3 Oct 80)..... 70

Machado Ventura Marks Agricultural-Livestock Workers Day
(Havana Domestic Service, 3 Oct 80)..... 71

Guidelines for Selecting Teaching Aids Given
(Gonzalo Curras Lopez; REVISTA CUBANA DE HIGIENE Y EPIDEMIOLOGIA, Jan-Apr 80)..... 72

Briefs
Daily GRANMA Anniversary Commemorated 78
WFTU Honors Lazaro Pena 78
Jose Marti Brigade Honored 78
OCLAE Issues Call 79

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Pena Gomez Says OPEC Decisions Hurt Country
(Jose Francisco Pena Gomez Interview; EL NACIONAL, 17 Sep 80)..... 80

GUADELOUPE

Frequent Terrorist Acts Indicate Growing Radical Nationalism
(Philippe Leymarie; LE MATIN, 19 Sep 80)..... 85

MEXICO

Selected Views on President's Annual Report
(EL DIA, 3 Sep 80)..... 88

Castaneda Sees External Pressures on Presidential Succession
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 10 Sep 80)..... 90

Diaz Serrano Discusses Oil Situation, Political Ambitions
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 17 Sep 80)..... 92

Ibarra Munoz: No Peso Devaluation
(JUEVES DE EXCELSIOR, 11 Sep 80)..... 95

NICARAGUA

Governing Junta Issues Document Confirming Its Legitimacy
(EL NUEVO DIARIO, 16 Sep 80)..... 97

Wheelock Exhorts Volunteer Workers To Fight
(BARRICADA, 22 Sep 80)..... 100

SURINAME

Cooperation Panel Reaches Accord on Dutch Aid
(DE VOLKSKRANT, 23 Sep 80)..... 103

URUGUAY

Paper Applauds Argentine-Brazilian Nuclear Rapprochement
(Editorial; LA MANANA, 26 Aug 80)..... 104

STEEL PRODUCTION IN ANDEAN REGION TO REACH 10 MILLION TONS

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 8 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] There are major investment possibilities for the iron and steel industry of the Andean Group in the coming years which could make those nations leading producers in Latin America, according to an official report by the Cartagena Agreement Board.

A proposal by the Board indicates that by 1985 Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela, the signatories of the Cartagena Agreement, should be able to produce 10.4 million tons of steel, valued at approximately $3 billion.

The proposal has already been submitted to the governments of the five member states for their consideration, says the report. It emphasizes that the proposal was approved by the technical integration organization "after many technical studies, working meetings with experts and consultations with the governments of the Andean area and representatives of the private sector."

According to the Board's forecast, by 1985 Venezuela will be producing 7 million tons of steel; Colombia, 1.5 million; Peru, 1 million; Ecuador, 700,000; and Bolivia, 500,000.

Steel Proposal

The steel proposal for the Andean Group envisions meeting the steel needs of the subregion, rationalizing steel production in order to obtain accelerated development in an efficient way, stimulating the establishment of the iron and steel industry in Bolivia and Ecuador, and making rational use of existing resources in the subregion, while conserving non-renewable natural resources.

"In addition, the Board's proposal includes the establishment of channels for trading products and inputs in this sector among the Andean nations, exportation of iron and steel products from the subregion to foreign markets, promotion of modernization of existing plants, and use of the subregion's capacity in terms of engineering, consultation and equipment manufacture," adds the report.

The document drawn up by the technical organization envisions a series of joint actions by the Andean community to improve development and growth in the iron and steel sector, particularly in Bolivia, where there is not yet any activity in this area, and in Ecuador, where the sector is incipient.

Among the joint actions foreseen in this industrial program is the creation of a Multinational Iron and Steel Technology Enterprise and of a Multinational Iron and Steel Marketing Enterprise.

Among the products to be turned out are pig iron, iron alloys, sponge iron, finished and semi-finished goods such as bars, wire rod, shapes, rails, coils, sheet metal, wire, and pipes.

The steel products will be the main inputs for other industries such as the metalworking and iron and steel industries.

The Cartagena Agreement Board has proposed the following initial steps:

--Exchange information regarding the plans and expansion projects of the most representative industries of the sector.

--Join efforts to coordinate national plans and projects with a view to taking full advantage of the possibilities of the Andean market.

--Adopt joint measures to obtain financing from international credit agencies in order to carry out projects of common interest.

The proposal also includes a series of specific actions to promote iron and steel development in Bolivia and Ecuador.

Andean Group Iron and Steel Production (in tons)

8926
CSO: 3010

DOMINICAN, VENEZUELAN PRESIDENTS SIGN COOPERATION PROGRAM

FL091226 Santo Domingo Radio Mil Network in Spanish 1000 GMT 9 Oct 80

[Text] The presidents of the Dominican Republic and Venezuela last night signed an ambitious program of cooperation between the two countries, including the partial financing of Venezuelan oil sales to this country. The details of the program were released in a joint communique after the signing [of the program] by President Luis Herrera Campins and his Dominican counterpart Antonio Guzman.

The program includes cooperation plans in the fields of energy, mines, trade, agriculture, financing and renewable resources. In the energy and mines sector, Venezuela pledges to send hydrocarbons exploration technicians to this country. By virtue of the agreement signed last night, Venezuela also pledges to undertake a study to determine the possibilities of the Dominican oil refinery adjusting to a larger supply of natural crude oils, especially those resulting from the agreement between Venezuela and Mexico. The study also will cover problems of transportation, storage, marketing and available technological capacities.

Regarding the energy field, the agreement states the following: It is agreed that the same conditions applicable to current supplies will be maintained until the aforementioned commercial agreements are signed and until experts of the two countries determine the necessary technical changes in the installations of the [Dominican] oil refinery.

It is also planned to send a Venezuelan mission to work with the national energy policy committee to draft energy policies and to design mechanisms to interpret the conduct of the Dominican energy system.

CSO: 3010

CUBAN EXPERTS ADVISE UNAN ON EDUCATIONAL PLANNING

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 20 Sep 80 p 5

[Article: "UNAN Asked Cuba For Help"]

[Text] The University Political Committee of UNAN [National Autonomous University of Nicaragua] asked the Cuban Ministry of Higher Education for help in planning our higher education, according to information published in the National Council of Higher Education's (CNES) "Green Book."

Cuba Replies

In reply, a planning team, consisting of five Cuban specialists, came to Nicaragua, looked into various aspects of the national life of the university and the remaining most important educational centers, as well as those relating specifically to:

1. The teaching of medicine; 2. the training of professors; and 3. land and cattle sciences.

The Elaboration of an Immediate Plan for 1980/81

Because of the difficulty in obtaining statistical information and the crisis in the university organization, the Cuban team decided to deal with the immediate priorities that would normalize university activity and that would make it possible to overcome the most serious deficiencies in the educational teaching process. Therefore plans were worked out for 1980/81, but premises to be applied over a longer-term period were also elaborated.

According to a report of the UNAN Office of Planning in Leon, the Cuban planning team proposed a suitable program that included objectives for a university plan and the national aims for socioeconomic growth.

Point of Departure

The UNAN Office of Planning regards the study as a preliminary attempt and a point of departure for the attainment of a true, prospective plan for the development of higher education in Nicaragua, as a function of the revolutionary process which the country is experiencing.

Upon completion of their work, the Cuban officials, members of the planning team, thanked the Nicaraguan leaders, officials, professors, and other persons who in one way or another gave them their most earnest cooperation with respect to the development of their modest work.

Preparations for the First Semester

The two universities and other centers worked feverishly on the Curriculum Change (homework programs, preparation of professors) in accordance with an outline of agreed-upon items.

Professors, students, deans, and rectors worked on the curriculum change programs--all of them guided by orientation and direction from CNES, the Higher National Council, the governing organization for that branch in accordance with its constitutive decree, No 325 of the JGRN [Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction].

Nicaraguan university students will begin their regular curriculum at the beginning of October 1980. A seminar for professors will be given prior to the start of the 1980/81 student curriculum.

8255
CSO: 3010

CUBAN DELEGATE SPEAKS AT UN CRIME PREVENTION CONGRESS

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 4 Sep 80 p 5

/Text/ Caracas, 3 September (PL)--The murders in Bolivia committed by drug dealers given top military ranks were condemned by Cuba at the Fourth UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Criminals being held here.

The president of the Criminal Court of Cuba's Supreme People's Tribunal, Jose Garcia Alvarez, made the proposal to condemn the Bolivian coup plotters when he spoke on "The Crime and Abuse of Power: Crimes and Criminals Outside the Reach of the Law."

The Cuban delegate said that the congress should condemn those governments that commit such misdeeds and allow bands organized and directed by imperialism to torture, kill, threaten and persecute peaceful citizens.

He also stressed "that this congress will not fulfill its duty if it does not denounce the crimes committed by the government junta in El Salvador," and that it will lose "prestige in the eyes of the world if it does not condemn the violations being committed in South Africa, Guatemala and Chile."

He also said that the crime of abuse of economic power, of which the transnational companies are guilty, is one of the methods used by imperialism to impose its will on underdeveloped countries.

Garcia recalled how the transnational companies joined the blockade imposed by the United States against Cuba and the IADB's refusal to grant credit to the democratic government of murdered president Salvador Allende but "granted it to Augusto Pinochet's dictatorship."

"It is necessary," he emphasized, "to prevent the transnational companies in the future from becoming involved in the decisions of the underdeveloped countries to the detriment of their sovereignty, corrupting their officials and grossly violating tariff, fiscal and any other laws of underdeveloped nations."

If the agreements reached by this congress and the work of the other UN agencies prevent a continuation of these actions we will have taken from imperialism one of the powerful means at its disposal to exploit underdeveloped nations, Garcia Alvarez said.

The Cuban delegate added that at this congress and at international forums underdeveloped countries have stated that they will not resign themselves to a position of economic dependence and subordination and they have demanded an end to the exploitation of their national resources by foreign monopolies.

With these statements, he pointed out, underdeveloped nations want to "lay the economic and political base that will prevent the annual death of 5 million children in capitalist countries who die so that 230 million children will not starve in these same countries and eliminate the basic cause of the crimes which affects us."

There are over 1000 delegates, representing 120 countries, organizations and international institutions, attending the Fourth UN Congress on Crime Prevention and Treatment of the Criminal which began on 25 August and will end on 5 September.

8599
CSO: 3010

VISITING BRITISH GENERAL SUGGESTS MILITARY EXPLAIN DISAPPEARANCES

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 22 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] British Gen Richard Clutterbuck, an expert on terrorism and subversion, has stated that "armed action has been very effective in Argentina in defeating 10,000 terrorists between 1975 and 1978." He noted, however, that "it would be a very good idea for the government to try and give as many explanations as possible about missing persons." He felt, nonetheless, that "it would be absolutely impossible to account for every missing person."

The 61-year old Clutterbuck retired from the British Army at 55, earned a doctorate in political science from Cambridge University and is currently teaching the subject at Exeter. He fought on the front in the Second World War and in 1969 began studying the problem of terrorism in the world on the basis of reports and research.

In statements to the press on the second to last day of his visit to Argentina, he said that the crackdown on subversion here "has been really remarkable," pointing out that "the ERP [People's Revolutionary Army] has been destroyed, and the 'Montoneros' are either in hiding or not engaged in terrorist activities."

He clarified that the figure of 10,000 terrorists "included the 4,000 that I think the Armed Forces have slain."

He indicated that among the others "are those in jail, those who have left the country unofficially, those who have gone underground with false documentation and those who are unaccounted for, in other words, those considered missing."

Examples

He said that there were various reasons why "it will be quite difficult to specify names or numbers of missing persons."

He gave the following examples: "During an armed confrontation a vehicle is blown up, bodies fly about and cannot be reconstructed. No one knows who is who then. Some people get around with false documentation inside or outside the country after having gone underground. Some subversives in prison do not want their names revealed because they are afraid that that would jeopardize them. And there are also subversive elements that have been eliminated by their comrades."

"It is absolutely impossible to account for all of the missing persons," the British general noted, but he felt that "it would be a very good idea for the government to try, nonetheless, to give as many explanations as possible in this regard, about as many cases of missing persons as it can, because that would enhance its image overseas."

He pointed out that he was quite familiar with the situation in Argentina and that the "government has acknowledged its responsibility for slayings in armed confrontations with terrorists."

Not All Saints

He noted, nevertheless, that "there are no Armed Forces in the world about which you can say that everyone in them is a saint," adding that "these 'non-saints' could at a given moment have overstepped the bounds of the law and killed individuals outright."

He stressed that "it is impossible to determine how many people have been eliminated in that fashion. Relying on his experience as an army man who fought in the war, he asserted that "it is impossible in any war in our world to determine who killed whom and under exactly what circumstances." He then commented: "Here in Argentina there was a war."

Unique Development

In listing the reasons why, in his judgment, "it will be quite difficult to specify names and numbers of missing persons," Clutterbuck indicated that some of these reasons "are common to several countries," but "what is not so common and instead seems to be a unique development in Argentina, is that all of these reasons have come together."

He said that he began looking into terrorism in Argentina in 1969 as well.

Terrorism

In his judgment, the reason for the upsurge in terrorism in various places around the world in recent years is that "over these years we have seen arrogant leftwing university students who feel frustrated when they discover that they are not getting support to convey their ideas to the working class, and this is heightened because the working class itself does not want to hear about those ideas from them." He stated that "under those circumstances, they engage in infiltration, which does not work for them, and then resort to the violence that we can see all over."

He said that these are the initial manifestations and that "they then resort to terrorism. A person who thinks he knows what a worker might want better than the worker himself is arrogant, and killing would be the supreme arrogance."

When asked for his opinion of Amnesty International, the British general stated that "that would take me a long time, and I am not in a position to voice hasty judgments."

When pressed to at least say whether he thought its activities were positive or negative, he reiterated: "I am not in a position to judge."

8743
CSO: 3010

'LA PRENSA' REJECTS PLO ATTEMPTS TO JOIN IMF, WORLD BANK

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 19 Sep 80 p 8

[Editorial: "The PLO as an 'Observer'"]

[Text] Perhaps encouraged by the obvious political standing it has achieved in international organizations such as the ILO and UNESCO and, in particular, in several European countries, the Palestine Liberation Organization has in recent months intensified its efforts to seek observer status in the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. The first step in this direction was taken at the Belgrade meeting in October 1979 when the group of 77, which consists of 119 developing countries, managed to have a committee set up to consider the matter, even though this organization does not officially represent any nation and is not an international financial institution.

The issue of whether to admit the PLO or not into these institutions should be taken up and resolved by their directors before the annual joint assembly to begin on the 30th of this month in Washington. We do not know, however, whether they will have the backing of an absolute majority of their members, without which binding decisions cannot be made. Moreover, decisions by the boards of directors require the support of two-thirds of the membership and 85 percent of the voting power. Although the Arab nations and the "Third World" countries make up a majority from a numerical standpoint, they do not have the needed voting power.

But aside from the pro forma, procedural matters now under study, which have brought the negotiations to a standstill, what is noteworthy is the absence of a clear-cut attitude toward the endeavor by the PLO, which besides lacking the qualifications to influence or even "observe" international financial transactions, is a political force with undisguisable pro-Soviet leanings and clearly warlike designs in the Middle East. The knowledge that the PLO is a terrorist organization bent on the destruction of Israel, among other things, would presumably suffice to reject in advance its demands for involvement in matters that are the exclusive province of organizations created to strengthen peace among nations and to promote their economic and social progress. But it would seem as if the pressures and oil boycott threats by Arab countries are the only factor worthy of consideration whenever the PLO sets its sights on a new goal, in patent disregard for the norms established in international conventions. It is not hard to explain why under such conditions the terrorist organization has managed to secure observer status in major world bodies, side-by-side with responsable, constitutionally established nations.

As far as the PLO's admission into the IMF and World Bank is concerned, reports from Washington suggest that support will not be widespread for such a move, noting as a positive sign that only three Latin American countries, Nicaragua, Grenada and Panama, are reportedly willing to back its admission. At the same time, the indication is that Mexico, seconding a U.S. proposal, will vote to have the issue "deferred."

We believe that "deferrals" do not resolve problems. The PLO cannot be given a place on the boards of these influential financial institutions, not even as an "observer," because it is not legitimately entitled to one. This is what can and must be stated before the scheduled joint meeting, without waiting for the passage of time to soften frictions and pave the way for votes of acquiescence.

8743
CSO: 3010

BRITISH MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE SEEKS CLOSER COOPERATION

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 21 Sep 80 Sec 3 p 3

[Text] The British minister of agriculture, fisheries and food, Peter Walker, has proposed a substantial increase in agricultural cooperation between his country and Argentina, noting that this "could have an appreciable impact on the economies of the two countries in the 1980's."

Walker arrived in this capital on an offical visit that will last until 25 September and during which he will meet with high-level government officials and representatives of agriculture and the food industry.

At a meeting with newsmen shortly after his arrival, the minister suggested various forms of cooperation, ranging from trade to joint technological research and the formation of joint enterprises.

Walker is convinced of the importance of strengthening ties between the two countries and in his book "Great Britain's Progress" he underscored the opportunities that Great Britain has lost by not having closer links with countries such as Argentina and Venezuela.

Forms of Cooperation

In mentioning various forms of cooperation, Minister Walker pointed out first of all that because of its much different geographic location Argentina could supply Great Britain with specific food items, apples for example, that it could not grow due to seasonal factors.

He added that his country was currently Europe's number one importer of wines and that consumption was on the rise. "We will not be able to produce enough of it, and here is a good opportunity for fine Argentine wines," he noted.

After pointing out that his country had to feed a population of 55 million, he underscored that it had become the largest producer of grains and milk in Europe through an intensive use of its land.

"To achieve this goal we make major investments in research (60 million pounds a year), improving breeding cattle and eradicating diseases," the minister added.

He then pointed out that the results of this research might be of interest to Argentina, and in view of the evidence that this country also does a great deal of research in agricultural technology, he suggested joint research as another form of cooperation.

Processing Companies

Walker mentioned later that Great Britain has the largest food processing companies in Europe, noting that here was another field with numerous opportunities for cooperation.

In this regard, he suggested that these companies could invest in Argentina, that they could undertake joint ventures with Argentine firms and even that Argentine capital could partially or totally acquire British agricultural concerns.

Walker stressed that such a move would afford Argentina more direct access to European markets and would, in exchange, make it easier for British firms to move into Latin America.

"If an Argentine businessman notices that a British firm produces an agricultural input that his country needs, I do not see why he cannot invest in it and even buy it so that he can then sell to Argentina, South America and Europe," he said.

The minister stressed this possibility but he avoided specifying whether his proposal was based on a detailed assessment of available capital in Argentina, saying that it was simply "a suggestion."

Nevertheless, he expressed hope regarding the outcome of the talks that he is scheduled to hold this week with government officials and business leaders of the food processing sector.

He underscored in this regard that he was accompanied by representatives of the major business groups in his country in the field of agro-industry, who will also come into contact with their Argentine counterparts.

Among the firms represented, he said, were England's largest food processor, the largest producer of chocolates and candy, the major manufacturers of farm implements and even the National Dairy Industry Board, which he described as "the largest purchaser, processor and distributor of dairy products in the world."

He again expressed his confidence that agreements might take shape and said that although their impact would not be felt in the immediate future, "they could have an appreciable impact on the economies of the two countries during the 1980's."

Meat and Grains

With regard to meat and grain trade, the British minister said that his country purchased meat in various markets according to the variety, noting that Argentina was one of its main suppliers of beef.

As far as grains are concerned, he pointed out that grain output had expanded a great deal in his country and that it has begun to export some types. "On the other hand, we need high-protein grains like soybeans, which we will have to import in large quantities."

Dairy Goods Surplus in the European Common Market

Walker noted that relations between Great Britain and its partners in the European Common Market in the field of agriculture were currently good, but he came out against subsidies to liquidate surpluses, as is now the case with dairy goods.

He added that for this reason England had opposed a dairy products price increase in the community, noting that they were ultimately boosted by just 2.5 percent over the last 2 years, as compared to a 15 percent rise in costs.

As agriculture minister, Walker represents Great Britain in the EEC negotiations on budgets and concessions, an important job if we bear in mind that 75 percent of the EEC's budget has to do with the common farm policy.

Walker gained prestige in his country in the wake of the negotiations held early this year, which led to a major cut in Britain's contribution to the EEC budget, which had been regarded as too large.

8743
CSO: 3010

DROP IN MEAT EXPORTS RELATED TO RATE EXCHANGE POLICY

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 23 Sep 80 p 15

[Text] During July of this year, Argentine meat exports underwent a marked decline. In comparison with the same period last year, they dropped by 37,000 tons, representing losses of $60 million.

According to the latest report from the National Meat Board, approximately 40,000 tons were marketed abroad, as compared with 77,000 tons, at a total price of $93 million, as compared with $153 million, during the first 7 months of 1980. Thus, the country failed to earn about $116 million, owing to a difference of 172,000 tons.

The most noteworthy reductions for the month were observed in the bovine cattle sector, wherein $48 million in sales was recorded, $40 million less than in July of last year. The beef in quarters dropped from $11 million to $164,000; the beef in cuts declined from $42 million to $25 million; the manufactures, from $10 million to $7 million; the canned beef, from $14 million to $10 million; and the cooked beef, from $7.7 millon to $5.5 million.

Mutton products, in turn, lost $700,000; horsemeat products lost $400,000, and refrigerated sausage meat lost $2 million.

Changes in the Final Destination of the Exports

Similarly, there have been significant changes occurring in the final destination of the exports. The most obvious is the sharp rise of the Soviet Union, which went from purchases of $15.6 million between January and July 1979 to purchases of $110 million, and from 10th place in the "ranking of buyers" to first place, multiplying the 1979 level by six. It is left to the imagination to consider what the status of Argentine meat sales would be if the Eastern nation had not increased its orders in this way.

The United States ranks in second place, with $75 million, or $21 million less than during the previous cycle.

Third place is occupied by the United Kingdom, with $72 million, as compared with $65 million in 1979. Next is the Federal Republic of Germany, with $50 million, in contrast to $61 million last year. For its part Greece, which in 1979 was the fourth-ranking purchaser, is now fifth, with expenditures of $20 million, or $16 million less.

Following these countries, in order, are: The Netherlands, with $13.5 million; Switzerland, with $12.5 million; France, with $12.5 million; Israel, with $11 million; and, finally, Italy, with $10 million.

From the date cited above, one can readily infer that, with the sole exception of the Soviet increase, all the other countries have reduced their purchases. The reason must be sought in the lack of offers on the part of the Argentine meatpacking plants, owing to the fact that the official exchange policy does not allow the recovery in pesos of the internal production costs. At the present time, there is a demand for meat and stable prices on the international market which is combined with the depressed internal exchange rate to intensify even more the crisis in the exporting meatpacking industry.

2909
CSO: 3010

FRONDIZI DOCUMENT, HARDENING OF JUNTA'S POSITION DISCUSSED

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 28 Sep 80 pp 10, 18

[From the column "Political Week": "Issues of Politics and Justice"]

[Excerpts] Regarding Frondizi and Sylvestre Begnis

The development movement members have traditionally been typified by their aptitude for preparing political documents. Hence, it was disappointing that former President Frondizi, in his official interview with the minister of interior, had virtually nothing new to say, nothing that would, as on other occasions, evoke widespread repercussions in the commentary from the nation's public opinion.

On the contrary, this document contains, as an anachronistic vestige of the subjugation, not an evaluation of the economic conditions (always given preferential attention by the development movement), but rather a discussion of what Peronism could or may be willing to do in conjunction with Dr Frondizi and with Mr Frigerio and his adherents.

In brief, the same document which the development movement members could have written during the 1960's or 1970's in connection with Peronism is the one that they have submitted now to the military authorities, through General Harguindeguy; in other words, the second in command of the Grenadiers Regiment when Dr Frondizi was president of the nation. The same subjugation to the real leadership of Peron is the kind expressed now, although on behalf of a leadership that is unquestionably far more formal, when the document opens with statements relating to the treatment that official Peronism is receiving in the dialog policy associated with the government.

The development movement defends itself against this critical statement by saying that there was no other way of doing (or rather, writing) things. It claims that the MID [Integration and Development Movement] is experiencing a phase of sincere tactical alliance with the administration of Mr Bittel, and that it was essential to act accordingly. Time will tell what the results will be.

Concerning the Popular Line

Moreover, we must say that Frondizi's hand was also active, and certainly more successful when addressing the widow of former Governor Carlos Sylvestre Begnis to express condolences at his death. In fact, a politically uncertain situation is beginning in Santa Fe, inasmuch as the Popular Line Movement had an undisputed strong man in Dr Sylvestre Begnis; but there is distrust concerning the strength of the party cadres who have remained armed since his demise.

As an immediate political effect, the death of the former governor has facilitated the understanding between the progressive democrats and the Popular Federalist Force, a group with which the friends of Sylvestre Begnis also maintain strong ties. And, on a longer-term basis, it has given rise to a series of speculations concerning the use that might be made, by both the Radicals and the members of the development movement, and Dr Alende's intransigents, of the forces which for a long time served the one who, at the time of his death, was bade farewell by politicians of different persuasions. The remarkable nature of this coincidence was cited in the funeral oration by Dr Horacio Domingorena.

Official Hardening

Several events warrant the interpretation that the government has decided to harden its action with respect to the development of political activity. It is possible that this is due, in part, to the need to remind everyone that, however great the natural tendency toward the division of power after the election of a new president may be after next week, there is still a government carrying out its functions to completion.

The judicial-police mess of a few weeks ago, when Dr Ricardo Balbin and other Radical leaders were summoned to appear at a police headquarters in this capital, was a first demonstration that the government did not wish to punish anyone, but did want to issue a call to attention of a general nature.

A similar situation occurred with the police summons made a few days ago to the vice president of the Justicialist Party, Mr Deolindo Bittel, following a statement in which he appeared to be complaining of the status of a Peronist youth leader. On that occasion, Bittel was placed in a rather unclear position: Not only did he deny that he had been arrested, as some of his fellow party members had reported, but he had high esteem for the police for the treatment that he had been accorded; and, finally, he ended by admitting that his signature at the conclusion of a document making recriminations about alleged government positions had been unauthentic.

Other Examples

There are also the examples of the Radicals of Cordoba and former Governor Menem of La Rioja. The former were prohibited from holding a political studies seminar, because the government was of the opinion that there had been too much publicity in the organization. Obviously, the matter of excess is a subjective concept, which the government handles according to its own judgment, but not in comparison with the publicity and advertising that it lends to its own activities through the news media at its disposal. In fact, otherwise it could hardly ban anything for being discussed and publicized too much.

As for Mr Menem, he need not say a single word nor perform a single act to have his presence noticed, even in the midst of a crowd of significant size. Only in his case, one cannot assume that he has been confined to one locality in Formosa for exceeding himself in the dissemination of nothing in particular, but rather for some act the content of which the government considered to have exceeded the limit of what is acceptable under the present circumstances.

In any event, both the martial law and the revolutionary powers which the government has assumed, and even the legislation whereby political activities are suspended, are increasingly tools that the government has, as if in hibernation, so long as limits the existence of which italone is in a position to evaluate are not exceeded. Thus, a situation with unique features has taken shape. On the one hand, no one could, with good sense, claim that a dictatorship with classic features is governing in Argentina, because even freedom of the press, despite all the obstacles of various kinds that reappear periodically, is really extensive considering the standby status that exists here. But, on the other hand, by making spasmodic use of the restrictive expedients that it has placed in the service of its objectives, the government conveys at times, as a result of its intervention, a certain sensation of arbitrariness which is by no means in keeping with other types of actions, situations and plans that are carried out and declared among its own members.

2909
CSO: 3010

WRITER SEVERELY CRITICIZES CIVIC WORKS, COURTS

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 27 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] An interview with the author Ernesto Sabato published the day before yesterday, in which the latter made severe criticism of the construction of urban freeways, resulted in a sharp exchange of messages between the writer of "On Heroes and Graves" and the metropolitan intendant, Brig (ret) Osvaldo Cacciatore.

The interview which gave rise to the injunction was reprinted by the morning paper LA NACION, and at the beginning of it the author made a futile attempt to evade the question concerning the matter of the freeways, stating, "I am suffering badly in my nervous system, and the doctors have forbidden me to do anything that will increase tension."

This reference to his state of health prompted Brigadier Cacciatore to send Sabata this brief message released by the press office of the community: "Through your statements to the press on the date in question (the day before yesterday), I learned about your critical state of health and the upset in your nervous system. In response I hasten to wish you a very speedy recovery."

The reply from the author was not long in coming either. It was sent yesterday morning, and stated: "I thank the intendant for his concern about my health, but I can assure him that my nervous system problems in no way prevent me from having the essential enlightenment for judging the serious problems of the country, and of our city in particular, problems which I mentioned in the interview and which you, unfortunately, do not mention in your letter, perhaps because you deemed it irrelevant."

Civic Works Projects

Almost simultaneously, Sabato made further statements to the press, this time to the evening paper LA RAZON, in which he reiterated the criticism already made of the freeways, and added other criticism concerning different areas of government.

In one part of his remarks, Sabato said: "I am told about subversion and its indirect promoters, among who, incidentally, Saint Exupery should be included, because the circulation of 'Le Petit Prince' has been banned."

He continued: "When I am told about those sinister promoters, I think that the main one is being overlooked: those responsible for the fact that the youth of today and even mature adults have succumed to the deepest and most dangerous skepticism, in view of the general corruption in a nation which is apparently being led in such a way that only the financial speculators are finding their paradise."

He subsequently stressed that, "We are told that what has been done about the banks was good, and that it was sound in a way, because it helped to readjust the economy. Well with any more readjustments of this kind we shall be without a country."

In his statements, Sabato praised the divison of the three branches of government, commenting, "Absolutism is based precisely on the liquidation of the three branches of government, to reduce them to just one: all-embracing, omnipotent and without any kind of control."

The Justice System

The reporter asked him: "And what about our justice system?"

He replied: "There have been exceptions, some honest, courageous judges, and some decisions which, in the midst of so much compliance, have at least preserved the principle of the dignity of the justice system."

He added: "That justice system which, in a democracy, could bring down the most powerful president on earth with a mere denunciation from a courageous journalist and an unassuming judge. Can you imagine anything similar that would force Stalin or Hitler from the government?"

Sabato also remarked that he had "traveled widely, and knew that there are people interested in exaggerating the mistakes or crimes that have been committed."

He added: "But I also know that it is essentially our own government which is doing the impossible by offering the worst of images. What can be thought of a civilized country in which 'Le Petit Prince' is banned? Not to mention more serious things."

He then remarked: "No well-bred person could defend the horrible things done by certain criminals of the extreme left in our country similar to those who are currently blowing up hotels, airports or stations in Italy or Spain, killing children or innocent people."

He declared: "However, these crimes do not justify the opposite crimes of government terrorism. Crime cannot be met in the same way, but rather with justice, harsh justice, but justice, very harsh courts, but courts."

2909
CSO: 3010

SAINT JEAN SPEAKS ON OPENING OF POLITICAL ACTIVITY

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 7

[Text] La Plata (Buenos Aires)--"Democracy cannot and must not be deified. It is the most suitable method found thus far to elect a government. But if we do not make public life presentable, we shall not be able to elect young governors thereby." This warning was given by the governor, Gen (ret) Iberico M. Saint Jean, speaking as a guest of the San Miguel Junior Chamber, at the banquet for which that entity recently gathered its members in the Athletic Club in this locality.

The Buenos Aires governor was accompanied by the minister of government, Dr Gualberto Mostajo, and other collaborators, as well as the intendant from General Sarmiento, land surveyor Orlando A. Mussano; and he was introduced to the audience by the president of the inviting chamber, Mr Mario Marchetti.

The Address

In his address, General Saint Jean reiterated the fact that governing is engaging in politics for the common welfare, but that what is sad is that, "owing to the frequency with which ethical and moral rules are disregarded, one has to confront a battle wherein anything goes is the norm;" and this causes a resultant skepticism among the youth.

He maintained that, "This skepticism has led to apathy and to a dissociation from political affairs that is extremely detrimental to the nation's life." Hence he is convinced that it lies with the young people to make public life presentable, lending it a "moral quality and sense" that will pave the way for national greatness.

In this connection, he quoted the trilogy of reason, faith and liberty, which Garcia Venturini established in his book entitled "Spirit of the West noting that they are the foundations underlying the Christian and Western world. And he reiterated the need for reasoning to refute demagogic fallacies.

He added: "The impression is given that the populist governments are sensitive to human suffering and concerned over all the inhabitants, and that military governments are insensitive and unconcerned over the pockets of poverty that exist in the country."

He also reiterated the fact that "poverty is not the offspring of injustice, but rather of underdevelopment," and that to emerge from it the nation must be endowed with the human resources and infrastructure that will enable it to incorporate all the scientific and technological advances.

He was emphatic in stating: "It is not true that the people are never mistaken, or that they are always right. The majority cannot have as a whole what individuals lack, so they are not omniscient. They make mistakes like anyone else, and one need only recall that there was never more insecurity than during recent years when we had a state of law, because we had even lost the security of having the right to our own lives."

He declared that, therefore, "it is really critical that able and capable individuals engage in political life in the future, that channels be opened for participation and that work be done in the community and on behalf of the community."

He also cited "the inefficiency of the state enterprises," and the system of entry into the universities, which "should be limited, because the serious problem is that the professional classes are proletarianized when with their degrees they are thrown onto the market which is not in a position to absorb them." This results in "frustrated individuals," dissatisfied with the society that they have.

2909
CSO: 3010

SPECIAL SIGNIFICANCE ACCORDED TO XXI UNITAS MANEUVERS

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 20 Sep 80 pp 12-13

[Article by Martin Olivera: "The Argentine and United States Navies Create Bilateral Cooperation in XXI Unitas"]

[Text] With the arrival of United States Navy vessels in Puerto Belgrano today, Operation XXI Unitas is virtually initiated, although the exercises will not begin until Monday, and, owing to the special political and strategic circumstances that prevail, it should be assessed in all its dimensions.

Although it is true that this bilateral cooperation between the Argentine and United States Navies is not new, nor are the Unitas operations, the current course of political relations between Washington and Buenos Aires, the degree of training achieved by our Navy and the increasing strategic value of the South Atlantic make XXI Unitas an operation with different characteristics.

The Political Relations and Naval Continuity

It is well known to the public that, during the past 4 years, the dialog between the administration headed by James Carter and the government of the National Reorganization Process has not been optimal, owing particularly to the pressure from certain State Department sectors associated with the more liberal area of the Democratic Party.

This poor relationship had repercussions in the military realm with the application of the terms of the Humphrey-Kennedy amendment, banning the sale to Argentina of weapons and all types of military assistance to countries which, in the view of the United States Congress, are violating human rights.

These evaluations which, generally speaking, have not been shared by the Armed Forces of the United States, have had to be accepted insofar as their consequences are concerned, because of the professionalism that prevails in that country, thereby resulting in a cut in military aid.

But also on the basis of that professionalism, the relations between the Armed Forces of Washington and Buenos Aires have not been upset by the political thrashing from the State Department, and material military assistance has been separated from tactical security relations.

Therefore, the Unitas operation has been held normally in 1979 and 1980, in the framework of the Inter-American Reciprocal Assistance Treaty (TIAR), with the slogan "hemispheric solidarity, hemispheric defense." There is no doubt that the United States Navy realizes that, after all, the Argentine Navy is an ally in the increasingly strategic South Atlantic, where the Kremlin's eyes and ships are turning more and more.

The XXI Unitas Exercises

During 1980, while an improvement took place in the political relations between Washington and Buenos Aires (later hampered by the incidents in Bolivia), the Navy to Navy dialogs became more intensive, their first visible result being the visit paid to Argentina by the U.S. Secretary of the Navy, Edward Hidalgo, and the invitation (fulfilled) for a visit to that country by two Argentine rear admirals, Lombardo and Allara.

Hence, we cannot be surprised at the present of a U.S. Navy contingent of unquestionable military rank, such as that represented by the destroyer "Arthur Radford," the missile destroyer "USS King", the frigate "USS Pharris", the nuclear attack submarine "USS Snook" and the aircraft patrol "P-3 Orion" which will arrive in Puerto Belgrano today.

But this event is also closely linked with the state of operational training attained by the Argentine Navy, which is virtually the only one in Latin America making a real exchange of information with the U.S. Navy within the context of the Unitas operation, and not playing a merely passive role as a recipient of information.

Strangely enough, one of the factors that(directly or indirectly) caused the Argentine Navy to increase its active participation was the Humphrey-Kennedy amendment, which made it necessary to seek replacements for the arms and munitions that had been previously purchased from the United States.

This replacement was made essentially through the West European countries and, although munitions are not items that one buys equally on one side and the other, the Argentine Navy made its operational machinery flexible without losing performance.

This fact has now led to a state of military independence which fosters the holding of Unitas. That is to say, now Argentina can participate in the operation without depending on the United States for supplies. Traditionally, Washington replaces for the Unitas participants the munitions used in the exercises. Now, if it cannot do so in the case of our country for political reasons, this would not result in any great damage.

In any event, XXI Unitas will engage basically in tactical operations involving speed, wherein the consumption of munitions is not large.

The Defense of the South Atlantic

It is undeniable that the crisis in the Persian Gulf, the tension in the Middle East and the tonnage reached by the supertankers have reevaluated from a strategic standpoint the South Atlantic, through which most of the hydrocarbons that the Western world consumes are passing.

As a direct result of this, the South Atlantic has become somewhat more attractive to the Soviet Navy and, as a counterpart, an area of necessary defense for the United States.

Nevertheless, two factors conspire against a total, powerful defense: first, Washington's inability to keep a permanent, powerful fleet in the South Atlantic, owing to its NATO obligations, and the requirements in the Indian Ocean and Persian Gulf; and second, the political incompatibility between Brasilia and Pretoria, which is an obstacle to the possible creation of a South Atlantic Defense Organization.

Confronted with this, there has arisen the alternative of revitalizing the mechanism of the Inter-American Reciprocal Assistance Treaty (TIAR), which includes the Unitas operation, and the bilateral cooperation between the Navies which, at present, is being intensified between Argentina and Brazil (as shown by the recent Fraternal exercise), and between Argentina and the United States.

This is why the exercises to be carried out next week between Puerto Belgrano and Mar del Plata, at a distance of about 180 miles off the coast (depth must be sought for the exercises with submarines), represent far more at the present time than an ordinary operation.

2909
CSO: 3010

JUJUY DAM TO ACQUIRE TURBINES THROUGH BIDDING

Buenos Aires LA OPINION in Spanish 23 Sep 80 p 7

[Text] San Salvador de Jujuy--Officials from the Water and Electric Power entity notified the government of the province that nine companies have appeared with 18 proposals in the bidding held in this province for the purpose of providing the powerhouse for the Las Maderas dam with two turbines.

The Water and Power entity made the pertinent technical and legal study, as well as the analysis of the financing for the bidding conducted at the appropriate time by the state company for the purpose of supplying and putting into operation two 15 Mw hydroelectric turbines.

In order to inform the provincial executive body on the main aspects of the technical, legal and financial reports, Engineer Alvarez, the contracting manager of Water and Power of the Nation, Engineer Zacarias Dawidowski, and the adviser to that management office, Dr Ronald Jordan Lopez, visited the office of the head of the Ministry of Economy, and reported that nine companies had appeared for the bidding, making 18 offers to install machinery of different origins.

The following topics were analyzed in the summarized study: a. implementation of the bidding form; b. financial analysis; c. economic status; d. summary of the basic bids and alternatives; e. technical analysis; f. conduct of the companies with respect to the state; g. origin of the equipment; h. fulfillment of the contract and similar work at a standstill; legal analysis; j. conclusions; and k. recommendations.

The approximate amount of the investment is some $15 million, and the final determination for the awarding of the project will be done by the provincial government which, once all the background information contained in the report provided by the Water and Electric Power Company of the Nation has been analyzed in detail, will make the pertinent decision.

The Las Maderas dam, in Jujuy, is an impressive sight.

2909
CSO: 3010

NEW GAS PIPELINE TO BE COMPLETED NEXT YEAR

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 22 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] Catamarca--A long awaited desire has begun to be fulfilled with the construction of the Recreo-Chumbicha-Catamarca-La Rioja gas pipeline.

Particular importance is attached to this project, because it will foster the development of the Catamarca central valley and of an extensive sector of the northern part of La Rioja.

The arrival of the pipes for the construction of the gas pipeline at the Chumbicha station (in the department of Capayan) was a remarkable event. The material arrived by rail, thereby resuming the service which had been suspended at the end of June 1978.

The governor of this province, Commodore Oscar Barcena, and the minister in charge of the executive branch in La Rioja, Commodore Pablo Favega, met in Chumbicha to receive the material. The arrival of the train was enthusiastically greeted by a large number of inhabitants gathered at the station.

The Work Begins

The under secretary of public works, land surveyor Rene Eduardo Aden, cited the importance of the gas pipeline to a large area and, subsequently, inaugurated the work officially.

Next, the parish priest of the locality, Father Justo Pastor Ontiveros, blessed the material.

It should be noted that the work will be carried out with a contribution from the nation (Regional Development Fund) granted in equal portions to both provinces.

The gas pipeline starts from Recreo (15 kilometers from here) and continues parallel to National Route No 60. At 110 kilometers it arrives at Chumbicha, separating in two sections at La Rioja and northward to Catamarca.

The period of time for completing the work will be a year, and the installation of household gas service in both capitals is planned.

Industrial Park

Moreover, the path parallel to the aforementioned route will make it possible for the gas pipeline to supply a flow to the industrial park which is being constructed at an accelerated rate a few kilometers from the capital of Catamarca.

In this regard, it should be pointed out that the local government has placed stress on the existence of industrial parks, in which major industries have become established.

2909
CSO: 3010

ENERGY, FUEL INVESTMENT PLANS FOR 1980-1989

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 10 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] Buenos Aires, 8 Sep(TELAM)--Over the next 10 years Argentina will invest $120 million in public works projects in a program that includes ambitious energy projects, self-sufficiency in oil, the implementation of a modern system of communications on the national and international levels, the renovation of highways and railroads in order the meet the transportation demands of the constant economic development, and everything relating to the improvement of health, sanitation services and education.

According to official figures, this is the first time Argentina has instituted a 10-year public investment plan that provides for projects for the period between 1980 and 1989. In the case of the energy projects, due to their special characteristics, work will last until the year 2000.

Energy

There will be a 166.3 percent growth in installed potential with an investment of $36.566 million, which will raise generating capacity from 9,340 to 29,820 megawatts.

Among the main projects are plants currently under construction, to be finished sometime during the decade, and others which will be finished after 1989, such as Corpus (which is scheduled to be finished in 1994).

One of the most important undertakings is Yacireta, the binational hydroelectric complex which is being built jointly with Paraguay. When it begins operations in 1989 with 20 turbines working at full capacity, it will generate 17,000 GWH.

Other important projects include the hydroelectric plant at Alicura and the nuclear plant at Rio Tercero, which will bring to three the number of nuclear plants in Argentina.

By 1995 energy sources will be distributed as follows: 23 percent steam-generated, 67 percent hydroelectric and 10 percent nuclear. Right now steam generation accounts for 62 percent, while hydroelectric represents 33 percent and nuclear only 5 percent.

Fuel

In the area of fuels, an investment of $14.669 billion is envisioned for the purpose of increasing crude oil production. Self-sufficiency should be attained by 1982-83, with the drilling of 800 wells a year.

Gas production is also supposed to increase by 87 percent; plans are underway to complement the projects involved in the General Cerri ethane plant and to extend the North San Martin, San Geronimo-Pacheco and Central-West gas pipelines.

In 1979 proven oil reserves amounted to 389.138 billion cubic meters, and those of natural gas were 574 billion cubic meters.

Government Oil Deposits, the national oil enterprise, is currently producing in its six distilleries regular and super gasoline, kerosene, gas oil, diesel oil, fuel oil, aviation gasoline, lubricants, asphalt, propane, butane and jet fuels.

3926
CSO: 3010

REPORTAGE ON AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENTS

Corn, Sorghum Sowing Up

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 20 Sep 80 Sec 3 p 2

[Text] Next month the Secretariat of Agriculture and Livestock will ascertain the estimated coarse grain plantings for the current farming season. Nevertheless, the secretariat is already checking out a number of projections as to their possible size, though giving them the provisional status that such premature estimates warrant.

The general notion, picked up not only by the institutions themselves but also in talks with specific farm sectors, such as the seed nursery owners, is that there will be sizable increases in corn and, above all, sorghum, while sunflowers will decline somewhat, and soybeans will remain the same or drop slightly.

To be somewhat more specific, according to the figures cited by seed producers and dealers, the corn plantings will be up 25 percent from last year with sorghum up between 30 and 40 percent.

The marketing of soybean seeds began a little more than 2 weeks ago, and thus it is too early to give any assessment. Furthermore, two observations are in order in this instance. First, the sowing of the first soybean crop covers between 20 and 30 percent of the total, the remainder being a second crop over wheat stubble; second, problems have been reported regarding the quality of the seeds. With respect to the first point, although it is not proper procedure in conservationist farming that does not resort to artificial nutrients on a mass scale, it is unlikely that growers who planted wheat will not take advantage of the opportunity to plant the second soybean crop over wheat stubble, and this will help maintain the previous planting level, which was close to 2 million hectares.

Regarding the other observation, which could, in fact, keep this year's levels below last year's, official agencies point out that there will be no problems supplying the types of seeds stipulated in the law. Nevertheless, given the difficulties prompted by the abnormal weather conditions last year, growers are being advised to make sure of the germinative capacity of their seeds, which should be at least 80 percent, before planting. In addition, to prevent needless losses of germinative capacity afterwards, the sowing should be delayed as much as possible so that the soil is at the proper temperature and not too cold. Another recommendation to growers is that they sow on the surface and in sufficiently moist soil; most importantly, the seeds should be cured.

We should reiterate that the aforementioned figures on possible increases in acreage just give a rough indication of what is currently going on. In this regard, we should bear in mind that the lack of moisture in several areas, which has been alleviated in some of them by the recent rains, has been delaying grower decisions, which tips the balance further in favor of sorghum, whose price is about the same as corn and which, moreover, tolerates a lack of water better. As far as sunflowers are concerned, the speculation is that expanded wheat plantings in southeastern and southwestern Buenos Aires will reduce the potential in those typical growing areas. Nevertheless, sunflower acreage could later post gains in corn-growing areas if the relative prices are favorable, and in fact in recent months there has been a rising trend in sunflower prices.

With regard to the acreage of fine and coarse grains together, the most widely held idea is that growers will recover the 500,000 hectares that were not cultivated last year, thus returning to a level of 20.3 million hectares, which is about the ceiling for agriculture on the Pampas under current growing conditions. Any further expansion, it is noted, would have to come from inroads into livestock, and the statistics used as indicators do not point in this direction.

Private Sector

Private circles agree with the Agriculture and Livestock Secretariat's preliminary observations as to the increases in sorghum and corn sowings, although the feeling is that in order for corn to be up 25 percent from last year, heavy rainfall is necessary over the next few days.

There is a certain degree of pessimism about sunflowers, the feeling being that the acreage will be down between 30 and 35 percent from 1979. "There is no room for sunflowers," we were told, with the added comment that in the Chaco, for example, where about 250,000 hectares were supposed to be sown, between 40,000 and 50,000 were ultimately planted, with the rest earmarked for sorghum.

In conclusion, our source told us that his personal impression regarding soybeans is that the planting will cover about 80 percent of last season's area.

Crop Estimates, Exports Cited

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 20 Sep 80 Sec 3 p 4

[Text] The Next Harvest

Both the undersecretary of agriculture and the undersecretary of livestock recently discussed the outlook for the next harvest. Mr Camilo Aldao asserted that the wheat harvest would be about 10 million tons, and Mr Gobbee stated on the day he left for Mexico to attend the IICA [Inter-American Institute of Agricultural Sciences] meeting that if the weather conditions marked by recent rains continue, the country could bring in its largest harvest ever. With regard to Mr Aldao's prediction of a 10-million ton wheat harvest, his estimate could be based on multiplying the normal wheat yield of 1,600 to 1,700 kilograms per hectare by the 6 million hectares that have been planted. With regard to Mr Gobbee's statements, which unquestionably are based on information from his own undersecretariat of agrarian economy, we should remember that weather conditions and timely rains [sentence ends]

It is interesting that the United States Department of Agriculture has made similar estimates for our country. Based on its data as of the first of this month, it predicts a wheat harvest of 8.8 million tons, a corn and sorghum crop of 17.1 million tons and an oilseed crop of 6.3 million tons, which gives a total of 32.2 million tons, which would be one of our largest harvests, as Mr Gobbee stated.

This coincides, morever, with an increase in acreage and the cumulative rise in unit yields over the past decade, which comes to a million tons a year.

More cautious though equally authoritative voices point out that crop prospects are very good in terms of acreage, which, no one disputes, is appreciably greater than last year. But the outlook is still uncertain because of the rainfall problem. There is a water shortage in the west, in Cordoba and in Santa Fe, inasmuch as the recent rainfall benefited part of Buenos Aires and, to a small degree, Santa Fe. The wheat is doing well in southern Buenos Aires and is in generally good condition, but having a tough time, in the corn-growing region. Thus, what happens over the next few days is very important. The weather seems to be changing, and we are apparently entering a period of more moisture. "If we get enough rain," we were told, as Mr Gobbee said, "we are going to have a very good crop."

We should add that corn and sorghum planting targets are very good and that this, combined with prior wheat sowing, is the basis for the previous assertions. Officials are also saying that this would indicate improved profit margins, stemming from lower taxes and higher domestic and international prices.

We could mention further that with a harvest of 10 million tons of wheat, the country would have an exportable surplus of 5.5 million, which has been practically sold. China is supposed to buy between 800,000 and 900,000 tons, Iraq between 200,000 and 300,000, Brazil 1 million, Eastern European countries between 2 and 3 million, to which we must add the traditional purchases of Chile and Mexico. Added up, this comes to more than 4.5 million tons in sales commitments, if not firm orders.

The Federal Meat Law

Last Tuesday's meeting at the Interior Ministry to evaluate the ongoing enforcement of the Federal Meat Law was unquestionably useful. In addition to the interior and economy ministers, it was attended by the secretary of agriculture and livestock, the undersecretary of livestock, the president of the National Grain Board, the governors of Buenos Aires, La Pampa and Entre Rios, provincial ministers, advisers and a very important representative, General Crespi, the secretary general of the presidency.

It was made clear once and for all that all of the measures relating to this issue constitute a single package, which includes amending Law 18,811, repealing Emergency Law 19,499 and amending Decree 24, which complements the sanitary code approved by Decree 4238/68.

In particular, the amendments specify the powers of the Federal and provincial governments, with the former having the clear-cut authority to take action through the National Animal Health Service. The current wording that "the Federal Government can take action" to enforce sanitation standards will now read "shall take action," thus replacing a possibility with an obligation. Another major amendment is the one inserted in Decree 24 to clearly establish the slaughtering limits for the various categories of establishments. These changes, worked on over the last 2 years by the Federal Agricultural and Livestock Council, which all of the provinces have a voice on through their agriculture and livestock secretaries, were drawn up with its approval.

In addition, the meeting made it perfectly clear that the Federal Law is basically a sanitation law, not an economic policy tool. The fact that specific conditions are set forth for the operations of slaughtering houses and dressing plants entails greater competition from the standpoint of business honesty, not privileges. If these provisions have an economic impact, that is another issue, but what must be enforced, it was stressed, are the sanitation standards.

The meeting also made it clear that the enforcement of the law would not impair competition in the purchasing of beef cattle or supplies to towns. These two factors will always be taken into account, and it is precisely for this reason that we cannot proceed more rapidly, it was mentioned.

The meeting was also useful in evaluating what the provinces have done so far. In this regard, while some, such as La Pampa and Santa Fe, earned the highest marks, others such as Buenos Aires and Cordoba barely passed, and Entre Rios was practically given a failing grade. This will force it to tackle more enthusiastically and resolutely a problem that the authorities seem determined this time to resolve without haste but without lulls.

Crop Taxes To Decline

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 14 Sep 80 Sec 3 p 3

[Text] According to data from the Secretariat of Agriculture and Livestock, taxes will be cut from 20 to 6 percent in the case of wheat and from 24 to 8.6 percent for corn, as a result of measures announced by Economy Minister Dr Jose Alfredo Martinez de Hoz on 10 July.

A press release from the secretariat noted that this development stems from the elimination of marketing taxes (the only tax remaining is the one on profit-making activities), which were highest for export goods.

The tax burden has been calculated for an average-size farm in a typical growing region for each crop. Included in the estimate were real estate taxes, road taxes, franchise taxes, a calculation as to the current impact of the value added tax on inputs and marketing taxes.

In the case of taxes on the 1980/81 harvest, the same taxes were figured in, except for the marketing taxes. In both instances taxes are measured as a percentage of pre-tax output value at the farm.

Cuts

With regard to specific crops, the taxes on wheat will be cut from 20 to 6 percent, with 1,600 kilos considered an average yield. This means that whereas growers need 320 kilos (20 percent of the 1,600) to pay off taxes at current prices, they will need only 100 kilos to pay them when they market their 1980/81 crops.

Key:

1. The current tax burden and the tax burden in the wake of the measures announced on 10 July 1980 (as a percentage of the value of production at average domestic yields)
2. Current
3. Corn
4. Soybeans
5. Sunflowers
6. Wheat
7. New measures
8. Average domestic yields (kilograms per hectare)

Other Crops

The tax burden on corn will drop from 24 to 8.6 percent, as with a yield of 3000 kilos a hectare, a grower will need 260 kilos, instead of 720, to pay his taxes.

The estimates for soybeans and sunflowers (for which taxes will be cut from 23 to 8.2 percent and from 21 to 6.6 percent, respectively) are that output needs to cover taxes will drop from 460 to 160 kilos and from 210 to 70 kilos, respectively.

8743
CSO: 3010

ECONOMIC POLICIES BLAMED FOR CHACO PROVINCE AGRICULTURAL CRISIS

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 22 Sep 80 p 12

[Text] Resistencia (Chaco)--The Regional Council of the Argentine Agrarian Federation (FAA) blamed the economic leadership for "obstinacy in maintaining an exchange policy" which has led to "the bankruptcy of the regional economies," and warned that "the agricultural crisis in Chaco is sitting on a powder keg."

In a statement released in this city, the FAA's regional entity remarked that agriculture in this area "is continuing an alarming decline unequalled in its history," noting that "the members of the Federation will not be able to reverse the spirit of rebellion that such situations produce."

The local entity also demanded of the central body, headed by Humberto Volando, that the FAA congress, to be held on 25 September in Rosario, petition the national and provincial authorities to declare an agricultural-livestock emergency in Chaco.

The statement, which was approved by the branches, youth centers and entities affiliated with Chaco and northern Santa Fe, observed that "the agricultural crisis in Chaco is sitting on a powder keg, and was caused by a debt that already amounts to several hundred million dollars." It added: "Thanks to the generosity of the creditors, a chain reaction that would have destroyed the regional economy has been avoided."

In giving the grounds for its decision to update again the evidence of the area's agricultural status, the document comments: "At this stage in the rural area crisis, the producers are not forgetting that there is no one more deaf than one who does not want to hear, nor more blind than one who does not want to see."

It then emphasizes that "the status of agriculture in Chaco has not improved" since the FAA held a gathering of producers on 22 May of this year in Saenz Pena, adding: "The warnings given then are being borne out in events every day, wherein one observes that the agriculture in this area is continuing an alarming decline unequalled in its history."

With regard to the opportunities offered by the provincial government's agricultural revitalization plan, known as Tras-Chaco, the FAA's Regional Council is of the opinion that "the debt has not disappeared, and it will not disappear with the consolidations; and it will be impossible to cope with until the income return has been restored to the small farms."

It adds that, in similar cases of financial problems in large business firms, "bank clubs have been set up, or other extraordinary measures have been arranged; but no one has precisely recognized this situation in Chaco, concentrated largely in one banking entity, which will also inevitably suffer the same fate as the rural area, its producers and its institutions."

The council declares: "The producers have a right to be alarmed when certain officials take precautions against the bankrupcy of the cooperatives, which are not geared to the reconversion plan that the provincial government suggests."

It adds: "This situation has become worse in recent weeks owing to the adverse weather conditions, marked by a lengthy drought and heavy frosts, which have hurt the seasonal crops, such as wheat, sunflowers and garden produce."

Obstinacy

The FAA's Regional Council also blames the national economic leadership for "obstinacy in maintaining an exchange policy which is the cornerstone for an unsuccessful policy that has literally led thousands of producers into bankruptcy, accompanied by the bankruptcy of the regional economies."

In addition, it asks: "What clearcut international prices and what open markets are they talking about, if the exchange rules are a real concealed tax on exports?"

It adds: "Although we producers are not experts on the subject, we know very well when an attempt is being made to cause us to mistake a cat for a rabbit."

The document states: "The exodus of youth from the rural areas is a very high price that is being paid for this situation," stressing that, "the members of the FAA will not be able to reverse the spirit of rebellion that such situations produce."

2909
CSO: 3010

JUNTA REPORTEDLY CONTEMPLATING LEGALIZING COCA PRODUCTION

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 29 Aug 80 p 5

/Text/ New York, 28 August (PL)--Officials of the Bolivian military regime raised the possibility of legalizing the large-scale cultivation of coca to earn revenues because of the difficulties it has had in obtaining credits due to its international isolation.

Foreign journalists questioned in La Paz several weeks ago identified Interior Minister Col Luis Arce Gomez as one of the proponents of this proposal, according to the LATIN AMERICAN WEEKLY REPORT.

Remember that Arce Gomez recently warned that the United States "will have to be guided by the consequences" if it continues to withhold assistance to Bolivia to combat the drug traffic.

The obvious participation of known drug traffickers such as Jose Baptista Abraham of Santa Cruz in the preparation and financing of the coup and the important posts they were given in the Bolivian administration as compensation forced Washington to withdraw its assistance.

According to the WEEKLY, the mental stability of the Bolivian minister has been questioned by U.S. diplomats, but no one questions--the WEEKLY states--the support the drug maffia provided the coup plotters on 17 July.

The WEEKLY reports that a drug dealer from Santa Cruz traveled to La Paz shortly after the coup with $70 million to help amortize the foreign debt since a payment needed to be paid immediately. Bolivia's foreign debt is over $3.7 billion and this year alone the nation must pay $160 million to amortize its debt.

The LATIN AMERICAN WEEKLY REPORT points out that the obvious participation by drug traffickers in the Bolivian government has earned it international rejection. Five weeks after the coup, only 17 nations have recognized the junta. Some observers, the WEEKLY states, have labeled the supporters of Garcia Meza as "political lumpen" and it goes on to say that "Garcia Meza unquestionably lacks the support of any significant political force."

8599
CSO: 3010

CUBAN JOURNAL REPORTS ON 'REPRESSION' BY NEW REGIME

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 31 Aug 80 pp 17-18

[Prensa Latina dispatch by Juan Martin]

[Text] The tales, some of them hair-raising, told by those who have managed to escape from what is called the "Bolivian hell" have made it possible to generally reconstruct the terrible situation suffered by the people of that nation, the poorest in South America despite its considerable natural resources.

Paramilitary bands led by Argentine security police make sweeps through La Paz and other cities as well as through mining districts, hunting opponents of Gen Luis Garcia Meza's regime.

The curfew remains in force throughout the country, although it is 2 hours later in some regions. As a result, the managers of the luxury hotels in the capital warn their guests not to lean out of the windows or turn on the lights after 11 p.m.

The gunfire heard night after night demonstrates that the warning is well founded and that resistence to the junta is continuing.

The clandestine press, in turn, has begun to report the atrocities committed by the Army and the paramilitary bands.

It was thus that people learned about the murder, in the Huanuni area, of a young soldier by an officer when he refused to open fire on his home, from whose windows his parents and brothers and sisters were watching the scene.

In the same area, attacked by "rangers" after having been attacked with tanks and aircraft, another young man was cut in two by a burst from a heavy-caliber machine gun for the crime of looking out the doorway of a house to see what was going on.

In the Caracoles district, over 900 miners disappeared after the attack on the area, an action in which dozens of men died, and even the young girls were raped. The dead were decapitated before being loaded into military trucks which then left for an unknown destination.

One of the foreign correspondents who had to flee Bolivia heard a conversation in a La Paz bookstore in which former dictator Hugo Banzer was accused of having been present at the torture of former presidential candidate Marcelo Quiroga Santa Cruz.

The head of Socialist Party One was captured and wounded by gunfire on 17 July when paramilitary bands attacked the Bolivian Labor Federation (COB) office, where a meeting was being held by leaders of the National Council for the Defense of Democracy (CONADE), which is composed of political, workers', peasants', students' and religious organizations.

Quiroga Santa Cruz, who was murdered at armed forces headquarters, was the principal accuser of Banzer in the legislature's proceeding against the latter for embezzlement, treason, violation of human rights and other crimes committed during his dictatorship, from 1971 to 1978.

ALthough the former dictator has tried to disclaim any links with the coup leaders, people in the capital recall that weeks before the last election he made a "private" tour through Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay that was believed related to cocaine trafficking.

Opposition groups now believe that during that trip Banzer sought help for the 17 July coup, invoking the "Viola Agreement," approved by those at the 13th Inter-American Meeting of Army Chiefs of Staff, which took place in Bogota in 1979.

A major statement in the agreement, proposed by the then commander-in-chief of the Argentine Army, Gen Roberto Viola, sets forth the need to install a military regime in Bolivia to safeguard the borders of the Southern Cone's military dictatorships.

The proven presence of Argentines in the paramilitary bands and among the torturers who interrogate prisoners, and a $200 million credit granted by Buenos Aires to the coup leaders, indicate that the request was honored.

At present, Banzer is on another "private" trip, this time to Brazil, which has not given coup leaders real support, although, like the other Southern Cone regimes (except for Chile, with whom Bolivia had no relations), it did recognize Garcia Meza's government.

People in La Paz believe that the former dictator is primarily seeking financial aid and that he will offer Santa Cruz gas and iron from the Mutun deposits in exchange.

At present, Bolivia has a foreign debt of $3,700 million, which represents 85 percent of its gross domestic product.

It is precisely in this regard that international rejection of the junta led by General Garcia Meza has had the strongest impact. Many governments in Europe and other areas of the world have withdrawn credit from it and refuse to recognize it because it ignored the results of the 29 June election and is violating human rights.

Even the United States has adopted that position, although primarily on different grounds. Spokesmen for the U.S. State Department, who also rejected the coup leaders' eternal argument--that they had saved the country from subversion--stressed the close ties between Garcia Meza and his cohorts and international drug traffickers.

Although it is public knowledge that the head of the regime, Air Force Commander-in-Chief Gen Waldo Bernal, the ministers of the interior and education, Col Luis Arce Gomez and Col Ariel Coca, and other top Bolivian officials are engaged in that business, it is no less certain that they have been involved in it for years.

All of them, without exception, held key posts in the Banzer regime, positions which they used for covert involvement in smuggling and drug trafficking. Nonetheless, the United States granted vast amounts of credit to Banzer and maintained close relations with his regime.

Democratically inclined Bolivian groups have suggested that American charges concerning ties between coup leaders and drug traffickers are a sort of lifesaver that they are throwing out so that the former can pretend to launch a campaign for ethical conduct. Once that has taken place, the obstacle to recognition will be gone.

It is noteworthy that Washington is ignoring the daily violation of human rights in Bolivia, which has been denounced by national and international organizations, to focus all its attention on drug trafficking.

The violent repression the Bolivian people are suffering has been denounced by the Archbishop of La Paz himself, Monsignor Jorge Manrique, who has stated that over 2,000 people have been arrested and hundreds murdered since the military coup.

These charges earned him a threat from the minister of the interior, Colonel Arce, who warned that Manrique has not been arrested because of his age and poor health, but that "There's a limit to everything."

Arce, a known drug trafficker, was responsible for the kidnapping, torture and murder last March of the priest Luis Espinal, editor of the weekly AQUI. In its page he had reported the connection between the Army's intelligence agency and the wave of attacks convulsing the entire country as well as the agency's link with smuggling and drug trafficking.

In addition to the shots heard every night in La Paz and international rejection, other problems are troubling the coup leaders.

One of them is the clandestine constitutional government, inaugurated by President-elect Hernan Siles Zuazo on 6 August, the day on which it should actually have been installed, subject to ratification by Congress.

Siles Zuazo, who governed Bolivia from 1960 to 1964, was the presidential candidate of the coalition Democratic and Popular Unity (UDP), composed of the National Revolutionary Movement of the Left (MNRI) and the Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR) and the Communist Party.

The creation of this government has further strengthened the resistance to the junta.

The popular support given the constitutional government has been demonstrated by the fact that since the arrests on the first day of the coup, no other important UDP or CONADE leader has fallen into the military's hands.

Also of great concern to the coup leaders is the increasing friction among top officials, friction that has been evident since the moment the coup took place.

Days after the uprising, the military chief in Cochabamba, Col Mario Vargas Salinas, who supported the move to preserve the unity of the armed forces, was replaced.

An attempt was made to do the same to Gen Hugo Echevarria in Santa Cruz, but, with the support of the II Army Corps, he refused to surrender his command.

In an effort to deal with the increasing friction among top military leaders, Garcia Meza visited the country's main garrisons, but, judging from recent events, he was not entirely successful.

On returning to La Paz, he granted himself a promotion to Division General. Also promoted were Air Force chief Waldo Bernal and the other member of the junta, Rear Adm Ramiro Tarraza.

Immediately after that, he announced that the new promotions and changes in command would not be made public and that the heads of border units would be shifted to the principal cities, and vice versa.

This gambit and those promotions tend to dampen the aspirations of such officers as General Echevarria, a known Santa Cruz drug trafficker, to the highest military posts.

Tales concerning the disputes among the military are heard everywhere.

A few days ago, a grandson of the deposed president, Lidia Gueiler, who had spent weeks with her in the safety of the papal mission in La Paz, spoke of that on arriving in Paris.

Luis Siles brought up the possibility of a counter-coup carried out by younger officers disgusted with the turn of events in the Andean nation.

Measures adopted by the military junta in recent days suggest that his opinion is correct.

Moreover, the refusal to allow Mrs Gueiler to leave the country, on grounds that she made false statements to the press, can be considered a pretext for keeping her in Bolivia with a view to possible political bargaining.

The military leaders clearly recall that last February, when Garcia Meza was placed in charge of the Army, a dictatorship somewhat like that in Uruguay (with a civilian as president) was established.

Finally, whether they try to overcome popular resistance or to carry out other maneuvers, the coup leaders will simply bring about precisely what the Americans are attempting to avoid: radicalization of the impoverished Bolivian masses.

9085
CSO: 3010

REPORTAGE ON TRADE WITH USSR, EAST EUROPE, PRC, CUBA

Soviet Cement Imports

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 p 26

[Text] Brasilia--The Brazilian Government is thinking of importing cement from the Soviet Union to cover the supply deficit in the domestic market this year, which may exceed 500,000 tons. The decision will depend on a joint agreement among the Ministries of Industry and Commerce, Finance, and the Secretariat of Planning of the Presidency.

According to official circles, the prices of cement from the Soviet Union are competitive and the problem of transportation to Brazil can be resolved using ships that return after unloading Brazilian products in that country.

The idea being considered by the government is for the cement to be imported to go exclusively to public enterprises that have large civil projects underway, such as the binational Itaipu project. The option to import from the Soviet Union is due to its prices and the fact that the Soviets are prepared to supply it, besides which the trade balance between the two countries is favorable to Brazil in a ratio of three to one.

Study

Industry and Commerce Minister Joao Camilo Penna has already received a study prepared by the Industrial Development Council (CDI) on the production and consumption of cement in Brazil this year. Although that study has not been revealed, it is known that one of the conclusions is that only in the southern states is the lack of cement real and difficult to resolve.

According to the study, that regional shortage is due to the fact that the construction of the Itaipu hydroelectric plant will consume about 600,000 tons of cement this year and no new factory has been established to take care of that demand.

The study also concludes that the deficit between production and demand for cement in the states of Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro can be supplied with the surplus production in excess of consumption in the state of Minas Gerais.

Brasilinvest Office in Beijing

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 31 Aug 80 p 28

[Text] Brasilinvest has decided to contract WJS International Ind., with headquarters in Washington, to take care of the office that the group will open in Beijing to expand business between Brazil and China.

According to Brasilinvest, the groups office will provide the following services: market research pertaining to the interests of each of the companies; supply technical information and promote the products requested; receive the associated companies when visiting China, giving them the necessary assistance; and coordination so that the Chinese missions that come to Brazil may visit each of the associated companies in whose activities they are interested.

The vice president of WJS International will arrive in September to make contacts with the companies that joined together in Brasilinvest. On that occasion, the market objectives will be defined and the promotion programs for the goods and services that the Brazilian companies are interested in selling to the Chinese market will be planned.

As of now, the following firms are already participating in the Brasilinvest office in Beijing: Atlantica-Boavista Insurance; Brazilian Cocoa Industries Association, Vale do Rio Doce Company; Technical and Commercial Enterprises Corporation; Eximbras Trading; National Lumber; Marcopolo Body and Bus Corporation; Multibras Company, Ltd; Persico Pizzamiglio Industry and Commerce; Themag Engineering; Superintendency of the Free Zone of Manaus; Panambra Industrial and Technical; and Makro Chemical.

Cuban Imports

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 6 Sep 80 p 15

[Text] Sao Paulo--About a month ago, Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro expressed to Brazilian congressmen his country's official interest in establishing trade links with Brazilian companies.

"There is no bar to trading with Brazil and we regret that your country does not have a good relationship with us," Fidel Castro told Marcelo Bairao, the assistant editor of the magazine EXAME, next week's issue of which will carry material on the possibility of Brazilian companies exporting products to Cuba, desired by the Cubans, even though diplomatic relations between the two countries have not yet been reestablished.

According to the publication, Fidel gave "an unmistakable green light to bilaterial trade" with Brazil despite the fact that the Cubans know that the "official reestablishment of trade relations requires a much longer period," but that does not prevent Brazilian companies from seeking to export to Cuba unless an official ban is imposed by the Brazilian Government.

Trade With Eastern Europe

Sao Paul O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 26 Aug 80 p 30

[Text] Brasilia--The ministers of planning, finance, industry and commerce, and mines and energy met yesterday to discuss the resumption of Brazil's trade with the countries of Eastern Europe in 1981 as one of the alternatives to harmonize the shortage of domestic resources with the need to implement some priority projects.

The ministers considered that three years ago, Brazil had one of the most active trade relations with the countries of Communist Europe, to the point that in 1977, our exports were close to $1 billion with the Soviet Union alone, although imports had been reduced that same year to less than $300 million.

Beginning in 1978, the East European partners began to demand a greater counterpart trade on our part: they were not asking for a trade balance but they demanded a reduction of the trade ratio which was approximately 4 to 1 in our favor.

According to the chief of the international department of the Ministry of Planning, Minister Jose Botafogo Goncalves, yesterday's discussions represented only a first broaching of the problem in light of the definition of the import ceilings of the government companies next year and the capability of mustering domestic resources.

If there is a given project to be implemented that is considered important for current strategy of economic policy, it is possible to divide the equipment between national industry and imports. If Brazil has an interest in generating counterpart imports from the countries of Eastern Europe, the alternative chosen is to import that equipment from the countries in that region, considering the technical and financing conditions presented by the councilmen [as published] vis-a-vis the supplies of the other trade areas.

Mission to Eastern Europe

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 31 Aug 80 p 28

[Text] Brasilia--A nine-member trade mission headed by the secretary general of the Ministry of Finance, Eduardo Carvalho, will arrive in Poland tomorrow for the immediate purpose of insuring the supply of 400,000 tons of Polish sulfur annually to Brazil (4 million tons for a 10-year contract).

In the medium term, however, the purpose of the mission is to serve as a basis for increasing Brazil's trade exchange with Eastern Europe, which must necessarily result in increasing Brazilian imports from the countries in that area, despite the protests of various business organizations in recent weeks.

According to the report of the special committee of the Foreign Ministry charged with studying trade between Brazil and the European socialist countries, in the case of Poland, Brazil's constant and growing favorable balance represents the main obstacle to expansion of exports.

Poland has been Brazil's principal trade partner in Eastern Europe since 1976, surpassing the position which the Soviet Union had held until that time. In the period 1975-79, exchange with Poland (the most important exports) increased at an average annual rate of about 25.1 percent compared to only 12.3 percent for overall trade with the whole world, going from $211.8 million to $518.5 million.

In the meantime, exports declined more than imports. Brazilian sales went from a total of $134.3 million in 1975 to $434.1 million last year; that is, an average rate of 34.1 percent annually, making Poland the country's tenth market since 1978.

In exchange, Polish imports developed from $77.5 million in 1975 to only $84.3 million in 1979 (the record was $106.9 million in 1976).

"In a country with a planned economy where the decisions regarding imports are of a governmental nature, it is important that we be able to establish a more permanent trade flow," observed Eduardo Carvalho.

In addition to sulfur, the immediate objectives of the trade mission will be to discuss the financing of $120 million by the Bank of Brazil for the exploitation of mines in Poland and another of $30 million to finance the import of Brazilian products.

Imports From Poland

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 p 16

[Text] Warsaw--A Brazilian Government delegation yesterday began negotiations with Polish officials with a view to reducing the considerable trade imbalance between the two countries. "At the present time," declared the head of the delegation, the secretary general of the Ministry of Finance, Eduardo de Carvalho, "Brazil exports almost five times more to Poland, which last year purchased $80 million worth of Brazilian products."

The main objective of the contacts with the Warsaw government is the purchase of 4 million tons of sulfur at a current price of $400 million. In exchange, Brazil plans to sell $200 million worth of textiles and $60 million worth of other manufactured goods, mainly shoes and leather goods.

The ships that the Gdansk shipyard workers have resumed building this week after the strike that paralyzed the country are one of the items that are also included in the negotiations. With a mutual volume of purchases amounting to approximately $400 million per year, foreign trade with Poland is the largest for Brazil from among all the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, including the Soviet Union.

"We want to encourage the flow of goods to avoid a dangerous situation in the future. An example of that is the 1975 coal agreement under which Brazil commits itself to supplying iron ore to Poland in exchange for metallurgical coal for our steel mills. That contract will remain in effect for the next 10 years and in 1982 we will be buying significant quantities of coal," said Eduardo de Carvalho.

The purchase of sulfur is basic for Brazilian argicultural plans, in which fertilizers play a central role. The phosphate necessary for the composition of fertilizers can only be obtained through special chemical processes in which sulfur is the most important raw material. "At the present time, the world sulfur supply situation is even worse than the oil situation," the head of the Brazilian delegation declared, "because there are only four large suppliers."

Hungarian Trade

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 p 27

[Text] Brasilia--Three main topics will occupy the Brazil-Hungary Joint Commission negotiators who are going to participate in the sixth meeting of that technical organization from 8 to 11 September in Budapest. The topics are the combined transactions for the export of cocoa, coffee and iron ore, against the import of fertilizers and cryollite; the possibility of industrial cooperation in Brazil and the possibility of signing a protocol of intent for the formation of a consortium among Brazilian private companies and Hungarian companies with a view to taking advantage of trade opportunities in third markets.

The Brazilian delegation will be headed by Ambassador Ivan Velloso da Silveira Batalha, president of Coleste, and will be comprised of nine delegates and seven observers, representing the public and private enterprise sectors. Last year, Brazilian trade with Hungary reached $95 million, according to the figures of the Foreign Trade Department of the Bank of Brazil (CACEX): $77.5 million in exports and $17.5 million in exports.

Imported Equipment Technology

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 p 26

[Text] The president of the Brazilian Machine Industry Association (ABIMAQ), Einar Kok, said yesterday at the Second Brasil Transpo, that in the case of the exchange of primary products for equipment from Eastern Europe, Brazil is prepared to reduce the percentage of nationally supplied components provided that it actually assumes full control of the technological package to be imported.

The proposal by national industry, which is already known to the Ministry of Finance, would be of great importance to the country, according to Einar Kok, because while on the one hand "it would lead us to moderately reduce the nationalization percentage from current levels, on the other hand, we would decide what we would import."

According to the president of AMIMAQ, "if the objective of the officials is to reestablish the equilibrium of the trade balance, the government should seek to force the companies that belong to it or over which it holds majority control to divert to Eastern Europe the imports that perhaps cannot be made from hard currency countries such as the United States. If, for example, we had to import equipment from the United States and it was not available in the U.S. market, the purchases should be made in Eastern Europe because the equilibrium of the trade balance could be restored this way."

8711
CSO: 3001

GALVEAS: ANTI-INFLATION MEASURES ACHIEVING RESULTS

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 10 Sep 80 p 19

[Text] Finance Minister Ernane Galveas said yesterday that the decline of the inflation rate from 8.4 percent in July to 6.9 percent in August is the first response to the measures adopted by the government in the monetary and tax areas to check the inflationary spiral. It demonstrates also that the means of payment (on demand deposits in the banks and money in the hands of the public) are beginning to adjust to that process.

Although he admitted that the general price index (inflation rate) remains high "owing to wholesale and civil construction price indices," Galveas regarded that as natural because there were rising pressures during the first half of the year that had not figured in the government's original forecasts.

"One example is oil, which has increased $12 a barrel since the second half of 1979. That exerted strong pressure on the prices of primary goods and forced us to absorb that increase gradually in order not to create greater problems. I believe that inflation is beginning to decline now and that by the end of the year we will have a lower rate than at present."

Ernane Galveas said that there is not the slightest possibility that the government will promote a new maxi-devaluation of the cruzeiro because the monetary authorities are striving to maintain the course of the current exchange policy, "which can be demonstrated by the fact that we have stipulated the target to be reached in June of next year."

According to the finance minister, the advantage of making a prior announcement of exchange devaluations is that it puts the exporters at ease, who can then program their costs in advance. However, he did not discount the possibility of corrections "inasmuch as this year we have already modified the limit from 40 to 50 percent."

He revealed that this year export credits were increased by 99.7 percent, going from 99 billion cruzeiros in 1979 to 195.7 billion, and that, in addition, the advances of exchange contracts are completely free.

government is presently studying the possibility of releasing another 30 million cruzeiros to the sector.

As for the proposal to create a promissory note for exports, Galveas said that the matter will be discussed with the bankers.

The finance minister revealed also that in August there was a drop of $200 million in the exchange reserves "which must now be around $7 billion."

With regard to Planning Minister Delfim Netto's trip to Germany, Galveas said that its purpose was to lend prestige to the issuance of Brazilian Nuclear Corporation (NUCLEBRAS) bonds on the German market. He revealed that it was the German bankers themselves who requested Delfim's presence at the ceremony.

8711
CSO: 3001

LANGONI ANNOUNCES INCREASED SUBSIDIES FOR EXPORTERS

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 10 Sep 80 p 21

[Text] The president of the Central Bank, Carlos Langoni, yesterday told the businessmen present at the Fifth National Exporters Meeting (ENAEX) that in order to compensate for the loss of profitability caused by the current exchange policy, the government is going to expand the subsidized financing granted to the export sector.

"Through subsidized funds," he said, "we will minimize the effects of the disparity between the exchange rate and inflation."

In the opinion of the president of the Central Bank, the difference that exists between the prefixed rates of monetary correction and exchange correction--50 percent this year--and the inflation rate will gradually be eliminated with the decline of inflation.

According to Langoni, the inflation rate in August was a "good result." But due to the adoption of a gradualist policy of fighting inflation in his view, an effective drop in indices will occur only in the course of time and it is not possible to indicate in what month or year that decline will occur most effectively.

More Funds

He explained that the expansion of financing granted for the production of exportable goods and their marketing will be achieved "by remanaging monetary budget funds in such a way as to insure a greater availability of funds for the programs covered by Resolutions 602, 329/330 and 529 of the Financing and Export Fund (FINEX), as well as with the new source of funds covered by Resolution 637, signed last Friday.

With regard to Resolutions 602 and 329/330--the first pertains to financing the working capital of certain products aimed at export, and the second, to credit granted to trading companies--the purpose of the Central Bank is "to make them more automatic and less dependent on bureaucratic restraints. It is also planned to implement Resolution 620, with a long cycle that will adapt itself better to the needs for financing the production of exportable goods."

Langoni revealed also that the products affected most by competition abroad may be given special treatment, through the revision of the rate of financing for export. The Foreign Trade Department of the Bank of Brazil (CACEX) is studying which products should be most favored.

Foreign Funds

Resolution 637, announced by the Central Bank last Friday, permits Brazilian banks, especially those that have branches abroad, to attract foreign funds to finance the importer of Brazilian products (buyer's credit).

"The system is completely automatic and decentralized, using the whole private financing network. CACEX will utilize funds passed through the Central Bank to effect an equalization between the external attraction rate--about 12 percent--and the rate prevailing in financing exports--8 percent.

According to Langoni, the machinery will represent the involvement of the whole private financial system in the export effect, and principally the exports of services and capital goods "the financing factor of which many times is more critical than price in facilitating access to the foreign market."

8711
CSO: 3001

PTB LEADERSHIP DISPUTE, PDT STATUS SURVEYED

Rio De Janeiro VISAO in Portuguese 1 Sep 80 pp 16-18

[Text] Leonel Brizola, who has the Brazilian Labor Party (PTB) charisma, does not have the party label; Ivette Vargas, who has the party label, does not have charisma. For that reason, since political-philosophical content seems to count much less than electoral potential, the assessment that can be made of the state of Getulio Vargas' historical legacy is sad, at a time when we have just commemorated the 26th anniversary of the caudillo's death on the 24th of last month.

One thing is certain: the revolution has not forgiven Brizola. If the judicial verdict that took the PTB label away from him and gratuitously handed it over to Ivette Vargas has not finished off the implementation of his ambitious political plans, it has at least delayed it for an indefinite period. Today, reduced to the support of eight federal deputies (five from Rio Grande do Sul and three from Rio), Brizola still faces the sharp criticism of those who were recently his fellow party members, who indicate him as the only one responsible for the difficulties he faces at the head of the small Democratic Labor Party (PDT).

As a matter of fact, while the irreparable loss of the party label may be attributed in some way to the frequently unfathomable purposes of the government, the fact is that the personalistic intransigence of the former governor of Rio Grande do Sul dispelled any possibility of a compromise with Ivette Vargas. Even on the day she had won in the Superior Electoral Court, the former deputy publicly offered Brizola the prerogative of naming 6 of the 11 members of the provisional party national committee, and even the right to name the chairman. Without consulting any of the deputies who supported him, Brizola rejected the proposal and publicly tore the PTB flag.

The response was not long in coming. In a little while, the former governor saw his parliamentary bloc, which at one time included one senator and more than 30 federal deputies, drain away to other opposition parties and his very name become more and more absent from political reportage. Even old allies from the very beginning, such as Ceara Deputy Antonio

Morais (today in the Popular Party (PP)), resigned themselves to the facts and sought a haven under a party label that would guarantee their political survival.

Broke the Pitcher--Politically recycled by a 15-year exile, Brizola returned to Brazil last year surrounded by the widest expectations of the opposition forces. The plan for reconstruction of the PTB, which he had initiated while still abroad, had all the elements for success; including the interest of the government in the emergence of a new party label with sufficient power to divide the most intransigent opposition forces down the middle. The good prospects of the party of the former Rio Grande do Sul governor could be measured by the success of the popular rallies attended by Brizola, promoted at that time in various parts of the country.

As a matter of fact, Leonel Brizola's march to achieving a prominent position in the Brazilian opposition appeared so irresistible that after a certain time, several sectors of the opposition itself began to fight him, fearing the competition. And while he engaged in innocuous controversies with the leadership of the defunct Brazilian Democratic Movement (MDB)--which sought to resist the abolition of that party label--and expressed confidence in President Joao Figueiredo's political "opening," Brizola caused his personalistic image to grow and, at the same time, underestimated the organizational activities of former Deputy Ivette Vargas.

It seems clear that the former governor's political fate was sealed the moment the government realized that to leave the road wide open to him could be as foolhardy as raising a jaguar in the backyard. That is when chance began to smile on Ivette Vargas in terms of the dispute over the right to the PTB party label. She was certainly helped by the circumstance that she had preceded him in requesting registration of the party label; but that was a circumstance that certainly helped official purposes much more.

In any case, there is a consensus today among Brizola's former allies that he went to the well once too often. "If Ivette had been admitted into the party from the beginning," declared Deputy Carlos Alberto (Rio Grande do Norte), "none of this would have happened and today she would have been reduced to her real proportions." With the authority of someone who was once the deputy leader of the Brizola bloc in the Chamber of Deputies, Carlos Alberto, today a member of the Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMDB), recalls that at the Labor congress held in Rio de Janeiro to decide the fate of the party after the loss of the party label, Brizola decided by the acclamation of the assembly on the course to be followed, disdaining the considerations of his parliamentary bloc.

"In the Northeast, specifically, Brizola is a name with little electoral support. It is even counterproductive. In exorcising the PTB, he not only slighted his parliamentary bloc but overestimated his national leadership," declared Carlos Alberto, who had even established PTB committees in scores of Rio Grande do Norte municipalities and launched his own candidacy for state governor in 1982 under that party label.

Optimism Despite Everything--The politicians who remain faithful to Brizola counter the criticism aimed at him today. Magnus Guimaraes (Rio Grande do Sul), deputy leader of the PDT in the Chamber of Deputies, points out that no less than 6,000 Laborites from all over the country supported their leader's decision at the Rio congress. Another Rio Grande do Sul figure, Alceu Collares, leader of the bloc, argues that Brizola's name has always been so linked with the PTB label that after Ivette gained it in the Superior Electoral Court she continued to be supported by only one federal deputy, Jorge Cury from Rio.

Meanwhile, Deputy Jose Mauricio (PDT for Rio de Janeiro) appears optimistic. In his opinion, the PDT will surprise everybody in the 1982 elections because it is already organized in practically all the states. That is true but it means little when it is known that Ivette Vargas' PTD also succeeded in organizing all over the country, the reason why she has already gained provisional registration in the Superior Electoral Court.

The fact is that Leonel Brizola's party is practically reduced today to two states: Rio de Janeiro and Rio Grande do Sul.

Reconsideration Suggested--In Rio de Janeiro, there is no hostility toward the Brizolists within the PTB and many politicians who have stayed with Ivette Vargas continue trying to convince Brizola to desist from the PDT adventure and vie for the leadership of the PTB with the former deputy at a convention. In addition, new members of the exile group from Lisbon who cooperated actively with the former Rio Grande do Sul governor in the new PTB plan have prepared a document in which they analyze the Brazilian political situation and recommend that Brizola return to the PTB. That document should be in the former governor's hands by now.

In any case, Rio de Janeiro continues to be one of the Brizolist strongholds despite the defections that occurred after the loss of the party label. A few days ago, the only state deputy for the Rio PDT, Jorge Roberto Silveira, son of former Governor Roberto Silveira and elected under the MDB party label by a large margin, decided to swing over to the PTB, joining fellow-members of his deceased father. Former Senator Aarao Steinbruch and former Federal Deputy Paiva Muniz also opted for Ivette Vargas' party a few days ago.

Among the so-called historical PTB members, Brizola retains the loyalty of former Federal Deputies Bocayuva Cunha and Jose Talarico in Rio. Federal Deputies Jose Mauricio and J. G. de Araujo Jorge--both from the MDB--and former Deputy Lysaneas Maciel, whose initial enthusiasm seems to have cooled, also remain with him.

Thus far, the PDT has succeeded in organizing in a little more than 1/5 of the 63 municipalities in the state and the 24 electoral zones in the city of Rio de Janeiro, filling the minimum required by law to request provisional registration. However, most of the party committees are in the urban area of the capital, and both there and in the interior Ivette Vargas' PTB is much better organized.

None of that is enough to kill the optimism of former Deputy Jose Colagrossi, who remains firm on the side of Brizola. In his opinion, "The electoral truth will be reestablished in the 1982 elections."

The South, the Last Stronghold--Notwithstanding the fact that the PDT today has a much smaller parliamentary representation than it would have had if Brizola had not lost the PTB party label, the Rio Grande do Sul Brizolists have not lost hope. "It is a tradition in Brazil to have a parliamentary turnover of around 50 percent in each legislature. In 1982, with 5 opposition parties, the turnover will reach 70 percent," asserted Deputy Romildo Bolzan, deputy leader of the PDT in the Rio Grande do Sul Legislative Assembly.

In Bolzan's opinion, "The PDT represents a plan for a Laborism adapted to the current Brazilian situation aimed at building a democratic socialism and is the most daring plan being veloped in the country today." That is so because "Brizola is the only Brazilian politician who has an idea and carries it out. Because of his past and because of his consistency, Brizola has gained the confidence of the people and has become a national hope."

Although there are those who assert that when all is said and done, Brizola will end up running for governor of Rio Grande do Sul in 1982, other members of the Rio Grande do Sul PDT dispute that with the already announced intention of the former governor to vie for a senate seat for the state of Rio in those elections. That is really the most viable prospect considering that Brizola's objective is the presidency of the republic in 1986. 'To be governor now is risky. The current financial situation of the states is erosive for anyone, whereas the senate represents the possibility of disseminating the work of the PDT throughout Brazil for 4 years in a broad campaign that would take Brizola to Planalto Palace in the future."

At a time when all over the country there are fears for the political future of Leonel Brizola and his small PDT, only in Rio Grande do Sul, the last stronghold of Brizolism could anyone imagine the former governor on the way to Planalto Palace.

8711
CSO: 3001

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION RISES 7.91 PERCENT IN JULY

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 10 Sep 80 p 24

[Text] Industry has again shown a slight reactivation in July, reaching 7.91 percent, while the processing industry grew 7.53 percent from January to July, compared to the same period last year. During the last 12 months, the economic indicators of the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE) show that industry has grown 6.76 percent and the processing industry, 6.37 percent.

The indicator of personnel employed in industrial production shows that employment increased 2.69 percent compared to the January-June period last year. In the last 12 months, personnel employed in industry increased 2.39 percent, with June making the best showing of the year with an increase of 3.91 percent.

The industrial sectors that showed the greatest growth are the following:

Goods	Jan-Jul 80 / Jan-Jul 79	Variation in Indices Principal Products Responsible (2)
Mineral extraction	+17.30	Crude oil - iron ore
Plastic material	+ 7.77	Plastic material articles for home use, pipes, tubing, hoses of plastic material
Mechanical	+ 7.64	Motor-graders
Rubber	+ 4.79	Truck and bus tires
Metallurgical	+ 2.39	Coils and hot plates (up to 4.75 mm) - uncoated - tin cans - steel bars (with high and low carbon content)
Pharmaceutical	+ 0.74	Antispasmodic gastrointestinal and anticolinergic ophthalmological
Food products	+ 0.24	Refined soy oil, frozen or refrigerated beef Demerara sugar

The industrial sectors that showed decreases, according to the IBGE, were the following:

Tobacco	- 8.76	Cigarettes
Transportation material	- 6.35	Station wagons and utility vehicles of less than 100
Clothing	- 6.28	Leather footwear
Nonmetallic minerals	- 4.94	Glass flasks
Chemical	- 4.87	Gasoline
Electrical material	- 4.72	Wire, cable and bare copper conductor transformer from 5 KVA to less than 150 KVA
Beverages	- 1.88	Juices of other fruits
Perfumery	- 1.82	Soap in flakes and powder excluding for shaving--soap for industrial use
Textile	- 1.82	Artificial and synthetic textiles; plume cotton excluding linter
Paper and cardboard	- 1.01	Cigarette paper

8711
CSO: 3001

FIGUEIREDO STRESSES NEED TO AVERT RECESSION AT ALL COST

Fifth ENAEX Opening Session

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 9 Sep 80 p 15

[Text] The need for Brazil at all cost to avert plunging into an economic recession was the principal message President Joao Figueiredo carried to the 1,500 participants in the Fifth National Exporters Meeting (ENAEX). "We must avert the recession as much as possible," he told reporters during the cocktail party given after the opening of the meeting in the Hotel Gloria.

In his speech initiating the proceedings, the president had already said that "We must prevent the ill effects of the recession in other parts of the world from spilling over on us." He was also aware of the role exports will play in that national effort to ward off a recessionary process, and he assured the exporters that "They can count on the support and encouragement of my government," in establishing the goal of $27 billion in exports for 1981.

The opening session of the Fifth ENAEX began with a speech by the president of the Brazilian Exporters Association (AEB), Laerte Setubal. According to him, a government policy "compatible with maintaining the competitiveness of our products" would make it possible for the export sector to commit itself to the new goal, despite warning that this expansion will occur "within a framework of a hostile and highly competitive world market."

President Joao Figueiredo arrived at the Hotel Gloria at 1015 hours accompanied by 10 ministers of state. After quickly touring the 48 stands of the "Fifth ENAEX--Objective 22 Billion" exposition, the president and his retinue went to the auditorium of the Hotel Gloria Convention Center to preside at the opening of the meeting. The stands where the chief of state stopped the longest were that of the Central Bank--which is exhibiting almost 20 kilograms of gold bars and nuggets from Serra Pelada, medals and coins--and those of the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE) and the Vale do Rio Doce Company.

More than 1,000 businessmen attended the opening session of the Fifth ENAEX. However, a group of 20 Sao Paulo and Amazon businessmen was prevented from entering the Hotel Gloria to participate in the event. One of them exclaimed indignantly, "Is this the way the president wants to conduct the political opening?"

In addition to President Figueiredo and the governor of the state of Rio de Janeiro, Chagas Freitas, the following ministers participated in the opening of the Fifth ENAEX: Ernane Galveas, of finance; Murilo Macedo, of labor; Camilo Penna, of industry and commerce; Eliseu Resende, of transportation; Saraiva Guerreiro, of foreign affairs; Eduardo Portella, of education; Said Farhat, of communications; Helio Beltrao, of debureaucratization; in addition to the chief of the Military Household, Danilo Venturini and the minister-chief of the National Intelligence Service (SNI), Otavio Medeiros.

Minister Delfim Netto, who is traveling in Europe, sent the secretary general of planning, Jose Flavio Pecora, as his representative. Also present at the ceremony were the president of the Central Bank, Carlos Langoni; the director of the Foreign Trade Department of the Bank of Brazil (CACEX), Benedito Moreira; the chief of the commercial department of the Foreign Ministry, Paulo de Tarso Flecha de Lima; and businessman Giulite Coutinho.

Text of President's Speech

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 9 Sep 80 p 15

[Text] I have come here to lend my support to the useful activity of the Brazilian Exporters Association. But I have come also to reaffirm the philosophy and policy that govern the thinking and actions of the government in the area of world trade.

Export policy must be a conscious choice. In adopting it, Brazil seeks to achieve various objectives. Externally, the positive effects of economic exchange favor the promotion of a new, more equitable international order. Internally, we want to maintain higher levels of production, broaden the opportunities for employment and improve the national income.

For those and other reasons, we adopted an export strategy characterized by four principles: coordination, simplification and debureaucratization, decentralization, and continuity. In its operational aspects, it translates into specific harmonious and balanced policies: financing, tax, exchange, and transportation policies, both domestic and international.

A fifth policy would be the reduction of our imports. We know, however, that many of our foreign purchases are inflexible, beginning with oil itself. Despite that, we shall continue to fight to reduce our dependence on imported energy, primary goods and services.

We have adopted a new shipbuilding policy aimed at speeding up the completion of the program underway to reduce charters. We are continuing with the program of building and equipping the ports and the export corridors that serve them. We are going to reformulate cargo transportation to priority areas.

As a result, national flag shipping will have its legitimate share of cargo in both directions.

But the real solution lies in increasing exports. Our reasons are simple and clear.

We need to increase them to cover the imports we cannot do without.

To keep the supply of jobs consistent with the 1.5 million youths who join the labor force every year.

To generate sufficient funds for the educational, health and sanitation, medico-social, housing and all the other programs that our people have a right to expect.

Foreign exchange realism as a government policy has a double function. It must permit the attraction of foreign funds and support and increase exports.

In keeping with the national debureaucratization program, the National Foreign Trade Council (CONCEX) has eliminated useless paperwork and consolidated the multitude of resolutions and generic rules that governed foreign trade into a single one. A not unappreciable advance was the replacement, in many cases, of the export permit by a simple declaration by the exporter himself.

Gentlemen:

The coordination of actions between the exporters and the authorities resulted in undeniable successes. In quantitative terms, we went from $6 billion in 1973 to probably more than $20 billion this year. At the same time, there were salutary qualitative changes in our export schedule.

At this time, and certain of the enthusiasm of the Brazilian businessmen, we can establish the goal of $26 billion for 1981, or $27 billion, as proposed by Dr Laerte Setubal.

More than half of that figure will be represented by industrialized products, as is already the case.

It will not be easy. It is going to require understanding and coordination of even greater effort between the government and the private sector. But I believe we can be optimistic about that.

The principal impediments have origins over which we have no control but the consequences of which we must suffer. Let us see some of them:

--Double-digit inflation in countries with a traditionally stable currency;

--Accentuated unemployment rates even among those with the highest levels of consumption;

--Obstacles to recycling of the funds accumulated by the oil exporters;

--New waves of protectionism in the developed countries.

Brazil has been fighting and will continue to fight in the appropriate international forums against every form of neoprotectionism, and against every arbitrary form of division of labor and the reservation of markets. Those measures may possibly respond to local and very-short term objectives and interests, but in fact they are a permanent evil for all countries.

We Brazilians have the authority for that fight.

Positive developments on the internal level, such as the political opening, are strengthening the nation. They make it possible to rally the citizenry around common ideas and programs. They facilitate the adoption of measures aimed at counterbalancing the negative aspects of the international economic situation.

In recent years, promotional activities of penetration and consolidation have opened up and expanded the markets for "Made in Brazil" products.

Brazilian engineering, science and technology are finding new customers almost in competition with more traditional suppliers.

On the political level, we have intensified dialog with fraternal countries in Asia, the Middle East, Africa and Latin America. In one and a half years of my administration, I have visited Venezuela, Paraguay and Argentina. In a few weeks, I will go to Chile. During the same period, we had the pleasure of receiving Presidents Bermudez of Peru, Lopez Portillo of Mexico, Videla of Argentina, Kaunda of Zambia, Toure of Guinea-Conakry, and Cabral of Guinea-Bissau.

Our diplomacy has become capable of serving under the new realities of trade competition. Its skill and seasoned experience are indispensable to meet the change in the structure of economic exchange between Brazil and the other countries: rich, intermediate or poor.

To all, we are trustworthy partners.

We do not demand of any who purchase from or sell to us any other strings, entailments or conditions.

We are a nation identified with the yearnings for development and the affirmation of the other nations.

We recognize that if we have something to offer, we also have much to receive from the know-how and experiences of the developing countries.

We believe in balanced, mutually beneficial relations, based on the realistic concept of solidarity, without paternalism. We have faith in creativity and labor.

We strive to foster the relaxation of international tensions, and in making dialog rather than confrontation prevail.

We maintain the need for disarmament, and not only as a requisite for world peace. From the reduction of expenditures for engines of destruction will naturally flow substantial new funds for development.

For that reason, we are in a position to sell sophisticated goods and services; and along with them also to offer the technology, the experience, the know-how accumulated in our gigantic effort to develop the country.

Everywhere, our friends are discussing fascinating possibilities of cooperation, of bilateral and multilateral projects.

The opportunities for Brazil are immense.

I do not have to emphasize to you the characteristic difficulties and imbalances of international economic relations today. Whether we like it or not, their effects are reflected on the domestic level.

We Brazilians are determined to preserve adequate rates of growth of the national product. We must prevent the ill effects of the recession in other parts of the world from spilling over on us. Among the many actions necessary to achieve that objective, the exporting effort assumes crucial importance.

The government is aware of fulfilling its role in the process, just as you have been fulfilling yours.

For that reason, I wish to urge you to exert the additional effort essential to take advantage of all the opportunities open to the growth of the external sector of our economy.

I know that I can count on you.

Just as you know that you can count on the support and encouragement of my government. Thank you.

8711
CSO: 3001

VISITING UGANDAN SCORES U.S. MILITARY BASES IN SOMALIA

FL031138 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1045 GMT 3 Oct 80

[Text] We share the same agonies of the imperialist aggression against our independence and existence as free and sovereign states, capable of determining our own destinies, Paulo Muwanga, chairman of Uganda's Revolutionary Military Commission, has stated when referring to the similarities existing between his country and Cuba during a press conference he granted at the Jose Marti International Airport, minutes before his departure.

Muwanga said it is needless to state that Cuba and Uganda are and will always be sisters. Immediately afterward, he noted that the Cuban experience is one of the best examples of self-determination and creativity. When referring to his visit to our country, the chairman of the Revolutionary Military Commission ruling Uganda said that during his tour of various parts of Cuba he had been able to observe with great admiration the development attained in the past 20 years.

When asked about the progress of the revolutionary progress in Uganda, Muwanga stated that they had won in a shooting war but had suffered great losses in human and material resources. Now, he said, it is a matter of rebuilding the country starting from nothing because almost everything has been destroyed.

Likewise, he warned about the establishment of U.S. military bases in Somalia, noting that it is a sovereign and independent country but it should respect its continental obligations and take into account that the establishment of such bases will result in greater difficulties for Africa. Finally, Muwanga stated that his visit to Cuba will mark the beginning of a new era of mutual cooperation in the various fields as well as in the development of the two republics.

CSO: 3010

MACHADO VENTURA MARKS AGRICULTURAL-LIVESTOCK WORKERS DAY

FL032224 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2202 GMT 3 Oct 80

[Excerpt] Increases in agricultural production are planned for the next 5-year period [1981-85] and to fulfill them the party and the government place their trust in the workers of the experienced agricultural-livestock sector, party politburo member Jose Ramon Machado Ventura has declared.

Machado Ventura today made the closing remarks at the national observance of argicultural-livestock workers day held at the community of Triunvirato in the livestock breeding farm of Matanzas, an outstanding province in the agricultural sector.

In his speech, the party leader called for continued work on the revolution of high production in agriculture which, he asserted, is far from being consolidated and there are still reserves to be exploited. The party politburo member urged increased tubers and vegetables production which still is insufficient. Regarding the tobacco sector, he emphasized the importance of implementing the technical measures to control and eradicate the blue mold disease.

In his closing remarks at the national commemoration of agricultural-livestock workers day, Jose Ramon Machado Ventura examined the production of rice which requires special efforts. Regarding coffee, he announced that the recovery work done has resulted in modest advances.

Speaking about livestock, the party politburo member stressed the achievements reached to assure livestock feed for the drought season.

Machado Ventura said progress has been made in the organization of work and wages in the agricultural sector. He cited as an example the implementation of pay for completed field and other systems that have been introduced.

He also emphasized the development of the next sugar harvest, stressing the support which agricultural-livestock workers will give to their brothers--the sugarcane agriculture workers.

In his closing remarks on the occasion of agricultural-livestock workers day, party politburo member Jose Ramon Machado Ventura congratulated the sector's vanguards who are participating in the campaign of tribute [as heard] in Matanzas Province.

CSO: 3010

GUIDELINES FOR SELECTING TEACHING AIDS GIVEN

Havana REVISTA CUBANA DE HIGIENE Y EPIDEMIOLOGIA in Spanish Jan-Apr 1980 pp 39-43

[Article by Dr Gonzalo Curras Lopez, epidemiology specialist and teacher-researcher at Epidemiology Department, Institute for Health Development: "Criteria for Selection of Teaching Aids"; original paragraphing not followed]

[Text] Teaching aids are important in the teaching process for those medical professionals who participate in the preparation and training of future specialists. Taking a subject of epidemiological importance as an example, some criteria for selection of the aids used to fulfill the objectives of the education plan are established. The variables of image, color, movement and cost are analyzed in selecting the use of teaching aids.

Introduction

The scientific and technical revolution and the needs of a society like ours make harsh demands on the higher educational institutions and the quality of the training of the different specialists there.[1]

These demands are necessary for the advance of science and technology in which an increasing number of medical professionals are involved. Their participation in the teaching process must no longer be an empirical task. One of the ways to increase our effectiveness is through the proper use of teaching aids.

Our initial training has been affected by information received, a factor which has occasionally limited the use of teaching aids. At other times, enthusiastic and premature propaganda has made these a pedagogical objective.

Some of these factors might be observed:

1. Many teachers do not understand or do not accept the use of these aids within the educational system. This attitude is the result of training in education classes based on information to be memorized. Frequently, we try to continue this since "one teaches as one was taught."

2. The scarcity of audiovisual aids limited their use to a few institutions.

3. Much material, distributed by commercial firms, was not adapted to our needs.

All this isolated and limited their use and eventually they were presented, for example, if "there was too much time" after an education class was over.

Criteria to Select Teaching Aids

Teaching aids are presentation and work aids that are tied to material objects. They support the education process and contribute decisively to the achievement of its objectives.[2]

The aids now available provide the teacher with valuable communication tools. These should be consistent with the type of message, the quantity of information and our expectations of the student; that is, "the objective and the contents are the decisive criteria for selection and use of teaching aids."

For example, if we want the student to repeat the steps of a procedure in the proper order, a book that lists such steps could be enough or they could be written on the blackboard. If we want that procedure done, then we must show the student how it is done. A film or a videotape would be useful under these circumstances.

We should keep in mind that every teaching aid has possibilities and characteristics that determine its selection. For example, if the objective the teacher establishes for his students requires a fixed color image, a slide that serves as an illustration and aid would be useful.

Another criterion for selection of teaching aids refers to the material conditions of use (site, availability of equipment) and to the cost. If a teacher feels that a film would be useful for his class but finds that the institution does not have a projector, he will have to select another aid that helps achieve his objective.

Lastly, we must not forget to mention the specific peculiarities--age, education and previous experience--of the students as decoders of the information in order to choose the most appropriate aids for this school group.

Specific Teaching Aids for a Course

The specific teaching aids for a course depend on the subject of the study plan. They should adequately reflect the objective and be structured so that they help impart and assimilate the topic, influence the process of assimilation and achieve the general objectives of the course. Which aids and how and when they will provide the most effective and efficient experiences for the students must be determined.[3]

Let us see methodologically how to adapt the teaching aids to the objectives and contents of an important topic in epidemiology. We will follow the order below.

I. Learning Objectives

The objective will express what the students are going to be capable of doing at the end of the education cycle, making explicit how they are going to achieve this and what level of precision is needed to fulfill the objective.

The objective of a learning activity must be as follows: pertinent, logical, realizable, observable and measurable.[4]

We can cite the following example of an objective:

"The medical student will differentiate skin lesions from chicken pox and small pox."

II. Specify the Aid

To make the achievement of the objectives presented possible, we must specify what aids are most effective to demonstrate the process of assimilation of the knowledge and to create favorable conditions for the development of abilities, habits and skills.

Based on that didactic function, we can mention the feasibility of choosing the one that permits us to reach the proposed instruction goals and the advantage for the students.

We will adopt the following groups of aids:[5]

1. Aids for transmission of information;

2. Aids for school experimentation;

3. Aids for learning control;

4. Aids for education planning; and

5. Aids for training.

In the example that concerns us, the objective would be achieved through transmission of information.

III. Characteristics of the Aid

Once the aid that helps us achieve the objectives is classified, we must select the material that meets those learning objectives. We can achieve this through:

a) Means of direct perception: objects, models, pictures, photographs and printed material; and

b) Audiovisual means: slides, film strips, transparencies, movies and television.

IV. Selection of the Aid

Let us repeat our objective taken as an example:

"The medical student will differentiate skin lesions from chicken pox and small pox."

We must ask what teaching aid will help us most in its achievement.[5] We must ask the following questions:

1. Do I need images to achieve my objectives?

2. Is movement necessary?

3. Should the images be shown in color or is black and white sufficient?

4. Is the cost justifiable?

Let us analyze these characteristics briefly.

1. Images

They can transmit a great quantity of information. Through them, a reality can be shaped (photography) in a relatively short time or temporarily.

2. Movement

It might be necessary to demonstrate how a psychomotor skill is done or to describe the functioning of a certain organ of the human body.

3. Color

It might be essential for identifying certain images--for example, skin diseases or tissue coloring--and to add another dimension of reality.

4. Cost

This is a critical point in the selection of a teaching aid since efficiency and the desired use must be considered along with minimum expense. A certain aid will be more appropriate when its cost is moderate or low and student exploitation is high.

In the chart, we can see the possibilities of some aids for supplying the qualities indicated above.[6]

Relative Qualities of Teaching Aids for Selection Criteria

Aids	Variables
	Image	Color	Movement	Cost
Unillustrated Workbook	No	------	No	Low
Illustrated Workbook	Yes	Possible	No	High
Slides	Yes	Yes	No	Low
Transparencies	Yes	Possible	Limited (polarization)	Moderate
Movie	Yes	Yes	Yes	High
Television	Yes	Yes	Yes	High

For the objective that we have proposed--"to differentiate lesions from chicken pox and small pox"--a /slide/ [in italics] supplies all the qualities needed to achieve this: image, color and low cost (see chart).

An illustrated workbook might be useful if the pictures were in color but its cost is very high.

If an aid like a movie or television supplied more qualities than needed (movement), it would not be appropriate to make such a costly investment. Therefore, it would not be justified for our objective.

Conclusions

It is appropriate to conclude with the reminder that the definition of the educational objectives and contents should precede and not follow the selection of a teaching aid. Although this observation seems superfluous, it should be kept in mind that teachers who face complex educational problems are frequently susceptible to pressure from the manufacturers of equipment and materials which increase daily in number and complexity.

Teaching aids facilitate learning but are not intended to "entertain" the students.

We hope that the criteria given in this article help our teachers in the appropriate selection of teaching aids.

FOOTNOTES

1. Communist Party of Cuba, "Theses and Resolutions," Revolutionary Orientation Department of Central Committee of Communist Party of Cuba, p 367, Propaganda Means Enterprise, Havana, 1976.

2. L. Klingberg, "Introduccion a la didactica general" [Introduction to General Didactics], Editorial Pueblo y Educacion, Havana, 1978, p 420.

3. L. Klingberg, op. cit., p 42.

4. L. Virchev, "Objectives of Education and Didactic Solutions," K Ojridski University of Sofia, Bulgaria, p 8.

5. F. Penta, "Audiovisual Learning Aids," WHO, 1971, p 1.

6. D. Arellano and J. Islas, "Taller de seleccion de medios de ensenanza" [Workshop for Selection of Teaching Aids], Clates Mexico, 1976, p 42.

7717
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

DAILY GRANMA ANNIVERSARY COMMEMORATED--Commander in Chief Fidel Castro has called the daily GRANMA, which commemorated its 15th anniversary with a history of successes and with the firm determination to continue to improve its daily work, a symbol of our revolutionary belief and our paty. That was the spirit of the ceremony held in this capital to commemorate the anniversary, which was attended by PCC secretariat members Antonio Perez Herrero and Jorge Risquet and Central Committee members Fabio Grobart and Jorge Enrique Mendoza, director of the daily GRANMA. In his closing remarks Jorge Risquet recalled that the PCC official organ is the magnificent result of the symbiosis of the dailies HOY and REVOLUCION and a worthy heir of the Mambi and revolutionary press. [Text] [FL041139 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 4 Oct 80]

WFTU HONORS LAZARO PENA--The World Federation of Trade Unions [WFTU] has bestowed posthumously the 20th Founding Anniversary Gold Medal upon the late Cuban labor leader Lazaro Pena. The medal was presented to Jesus Escandel, executive secretary of the central organization of Cuban trade unions, during the solemn ceremony held in Moscow, the Soviet capital, on the occasion of the anniversary. The gold medal was also bestowed posthumously upon the late Latin American trade union leaders Luis Figueroa of Chile and Vicente Lombordo Toledano of Mexico. [Text] [FL041229 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 4 Oct 80]

JOSE MARTI BRIGADE HONORED--The sixth contingent of the Jose Marti Brigade composed of young people from Western Europe has left for central Cuba after doing productive work in Havana Province. At a ceremony held in the Polyclinic in the city of Bauta, where part of the group had been working since 17 September, (Marga Bordone), the person responsible for the Jose Marti Brigade, said that they will return to their countries with this experience that motivates them to struggle for the construction of a just society. Alfonso Guillen Zelaya, vice president of the Cuban Institute of Friendship with the Peoples, noted the elevated fraternal spirit evident between the brigade members and the Cuban workers. He said that the work done by the young Europeans represented a true aid to Cuba. The leader of the French delegation, (Jan Lamor), said that all the members of the contingent have the obligation to defend Cuba. He condemned the attitude of the Venezuelan government regarding the acquittal of the criminals who destroyed a Cuban plane in Barbados. [Text] [PA060416 Havana International Service in Spanish 0000 GMT 6 Oct 80]

OCLAE ISSUES CALL--On this 13th anniversary of Che's fall in Bolivia, the standing secretariat of the Continental Organization of Latin American Students, OCLAE, calls on the student movement to demonstrate his historic legacy in each of their actions against imperialism. OCLAE emphasizes that the immortal example of Commander Ernesto Guevara is an indestructible symbol that guides and forges present and future generations. The heroic guerrilla, OCLAE emphasizes, confirmed to history the communality of the cause of the peoples' liberation, the unity needed as tactic and strategy for victory, and his internationalist legacy. His ideas and example are banners of combat for Latin American youths and students. In concluding, OCLAE notes that the imperialist enemies failed, as usual, in their attempt to extinguish the ideas of the heroic guerrilla. It further notes that his courageous stance is multiplied in the combatants of America and the world. [Text] [FL081511 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 8 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

PENA GOMEZ SAYS OPEC DECISIONS HURT COUNTRY

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 17 Sep 80 p D2

[Interview with Jose Francisco Pena Gomez, secretary general of the Dominican Revolutionary Party, by Mario Villegas]

[Text] "Every time the OPEC meets, we in the Dominican Republic tremble, for we know the harmful repercussions those meetings have in our country."

The person describing thus the effects of rising petroleum prices on the weak economies of poor countries is Jose Francisco Pena Gomez, secretary general of the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD) and chairman of the Latin-American Committee of the Socialist International, who presided over the second meeting in South America of the Social Democrats, in Caracas.

A few hours before going down to Maiquetia to take the plane that would carry him back to his country, Pena Gomez agreed to discuss a number of issues.

Democratic Government

On 16 August the Dominican Republic entered its second year of democracy, under the presidency of Antonio Guzman, a leader of the PRD, of which Pena Gomez is head.

"This is quite a feat for President Antonio Guzman's government, for most people assumed he had no chance of being sworn in to govern in Santo Domingo or to remain in office in very long."

According to the secretary general of the PRD, "It was believed that the conservative military followers of Balaguer wouldn't permit the survival of a democratically inclined government headed by a party with which they had been at odds for the past 15 years."

"However," he said, "the government succeeded in democratizing the Army, purging it of politically inclined generals, eliminating predatory, repressive elements and establishing a true democratic coexistence."

He pointed out that another positive characteristic of President Guzman's government is its "undeniably democratic" conduct. He asserted that the Dominican Republic is a country where there is great respect for human rights and where constitutional guarantees are actually observed.

Pena Gomez maintained that the practice of democracy in his country is expressed in, among other things, the existence of a broad spectrum of differing political groups. He then began to name them: "The Dominican Revolutionary Party, composed of Social Democrats; the Reformist Party, a powerful party led by former President Balaguer; the Christian Social Revolutionary Party; the Antireelection Democratic Integration Movement, led by Francisco Augusto Lora, former vice president under Balaguer; the National Conciliation Movement, whose leader is Jaime Manuel Fernandez, a conservative group; the Quisqueyan Party, led by former Gen Elias Wessin y Wessin, former head of the armed forces; the Dominican Communist Party, a party of revolutionary intellectuals, very active; the Dominican Popular Movement, which has several pro-Chinese and independent factions; the 14 of June Red Line, a pro-Chinese group; the Communist Party of the Dominican Republic, which is pro-Chinese . . . " Pena Gomez continued working his way through a long list of parties and political groups that seemed endless to us. He left for the end, perhaps through forgetfulness, the Dominican Liberation Party, which is led by former President Juan Bosch.

"What has become of Professor Bosch?" we asked.

"He's still a highly respected man in our country because of his struggle and his reputation as a great writer."

Pena Gomez stated that the political groups he named act with considerable freedom and can express their views through 110 radio stations, 6 television channels and some 8 newspapers. He added an aside that there is a good press in his country. "One of the best on the continent," he said, smiling. "Freedom of the press is guaranteed."

"The Achilles heel of Dominican democracy," he noted, "is that, because of the special circumstances under which the government arose and powerful pressure exerted by the right, which expressed considerable mistrust of the PRD, the government had to assume a conciliatory posture that has had economic and social effects; for it hasn't been possible to make changes. Of course, our electoral strategy didn't include major changes during the first term because that could have been considered a challenge to the conservatives."

Petroleum Prices Causing Imbalance

According to Pena Gomez, the economic situation in the Dominican Republic has worsened "because of the increased prices of hydrocarbons, which have siphoned off most of the funds originally intended for investment in the public sector. This has created a situation of growing imbalance in our balance of payments, and it is pushing up the cost of living, which is a very serious problem."

He said that this deterioration of the economic situation in his country has led to two major strikes by workers "caused by the rise in petroleum prices" in which 10 people died in clashes between strikers and police. Even labor organizations allied with the governing party were involved in these strikes.

"For countries such as Venezuela that have petroleum it's impossible to conceive of the pressure oil price increases exert on our economy. We watch these increases very closely."

It was at this point that Pena Gomez said with great conviction:

"Every time the OPEC meets, we in Santo Domingo tremble, for we know the harmful repercussions those meetings have in our country. The increases not only provoke a corresponding rise in the prices of petroleum products our country buys, but they also markedly reduce the purchasing power of the people's wages."

Pena Gomez said that, moreover, the industrialized countries shift much of the burden of hydrocarbon price increases to the poor countries by means of the manufactured goods those countries buy. "This is a problem of immense importance, and only after we solve it will we be able to stabilize our economy," he added.

"I want to take advantage of the opportunity to thank President Luis Herrera Campins and President Jose Lopez Portillo for the agreement that will allow our countries to receive one-third of the value of our petroleum account for use in carrying out high-priority projects. We would also like this agreement to include a freezing of petroleum prices."

"We can't take any more," he said to the reporter, throwing out his long arms in a gesture of helplessness.

The chief Dominican export product is sugar cane. "All the sugar we produce doesn't cover the cost of our petroleum imports, which is on the order of $550 million. As a result, we have to owe money abroad," the Dominican leader told this reporter.

"What will the effect be on your country of the petroleum-sales agreement signed between Venezuela and Mexico to help the countries in the region?"

"It'll have a favorable effect because it'll enable us to spend a sum ranging between $175 and $180 million. This constitutes preferential treatment that's important to our economy," Pena Gomez noted.

Pena Gomez pursued the subject further, repeating that the factor creating the greatest imbalance in the Dominican economy "is the enormous outlay a country as weak as the Dominican Republic has to make to buy petroleum." He then granted that when sugar prices were far below production costs, Venezuela bought sugar from the Dominican Republic at higher prices.

Armed Forces and Agrarian Reform

The PRD leader stated that the next government in his country will have to be much more audacious in carrying out a program of economic and social transformation. "Of course, the government has initiated an extensive program of recovery of lands that had previously been taken by generals and officials of the preceding government."

What is the armed forces' attitude concerning the democratic process?

"I would say that there are no problems regarding social issues in the armed forces because those types were purged. The primary demand is for agrarian reform, and the armed forces support that. The Dominican Agrarian Institute has had to deal with landowners and has called upon young officers. There has been an awakening in the Army, which began even when Balaguer was in office, concerning progressive legislation calling for agrarian reform. It wasn't widely applied because Balaguer himself got into office with the support of the landowners, and he himself made several generals in landowners. But the law is fairly progressive."

The military is said to have ceased being a problem in his country. "They declared that they'll observe the legally constituted system and respect the civilian government. They don't take part in political affairs or engage in repressive acts, as they used to."

Unemployment and Dependence

When asked his opinion regarding unemployment and other social problems, Pena Gomez said that about 20 percent of the economically active population is unemployed and about the same percentage is underemployed. The two problems together affect approximately 50 percent of the working-age population. This is a result of inflation and insufficient public-sector spending. The cost of living is also at a high level.

"Has dependence on the United States diminished?"

"Yes," he answered emphatically. "In the case, for example, of the firm Gold [as published] and Western, a powerful multinational involved in sugar, hotels, land, citrus industry, livestock and other spheres, which was politically active; now it can't do that because it had held $38 million abroad, and it was sued by the government in Dominican and U.S. courts, and had to return the money to the national treasury. This was a great victory. Another victory was the nationalization last year of the "La Rosario Dominicana" [as published] gold and silver mines. Now the process of recovering the mineral wealth will be completed with the installation of a gold and silver refinery."

The Dominican leader said there are still two multinationals, Falcon Bridge (mining ferronickel) and Alcoa Exploration Company (engaged in mining bauxite), whose nationalization is being demanded by the Revolutionary Party and by other political groups.

9085
CSO: 3010

FREQUENT TERRORIST ACTS INDICATE GROWING RADICAL NATIONALISM

Paris LE MATIN in French 19 Sep 80 p 2

[Article by Philippe Leymarie "Guadeloupe: an atmosphere of hatred and fear"--passages between slantlines originally published in italics]

> [Text] After the explosion of three bombs in Guadeloupe between Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, which resulted in the death of one of the European artificers, damaged an Air France Boeing 727, and caused the destruction of a private yacht and a police launch, the secretary of state for overseas departments and territories, Paul Dijoud, affirmed /"the determination of the government to search out and neutralize those responsible with the utmost vigor."/ He stressed, however, that the situation remains very calm in the department. This series of terrorist acts--the fifth in 6 months--could be the doing of the Armed Liberation Group (GLA), a clandestine organization which claimed responsibility for the previous acts. Paul Dijoud, who is going to Guadeloupe on 24 September, is going to try to establish the real status of an investigation which up to now has yielded no results.

/"At this time we are informing the French forces that our next target will be either a CRS [Republican Security Companies (State Mobile Police)] officer, a policeman, or an officer of the army of occupation."/ In this way, in a communique published last July, the GLA gave advance notice of its [next] victim.

In the same communique, the clandestine organization declared: /"Never again will Guadeloupians accept the insolence and scorn of French masters: there is no place here for nostalgia for the era when the Whites treated the workers as beasts of burden."/ And the mysterious signatory concluded: /"After December 31, 1980, French residing in Guadeloupe will be considered avowed enemies of the Guadeloupian people and treated as such. Those who gamble with the lives of their loved ones will have no one to blame but themselves."/

The Armed Liberation Group claimed responsibility for the 6 March attempted assassination of Raymond Vivies, general counsel for the RPR [Rally for the Republic Party], who received a serious head wound; for the fire that destroyed an FR-3 radio studio at Pointe-a-Pitre; for the shots fired at the director of the New Galleries at Abymes; and finally for the explosion at the police station of the Sainte-Anne commune.

The GLA, which advocates armed struggle and independence, has however been disavowed by the leading pro-independence groups in Guadeloupe: the Union for the Liberation of Guadeloupe (UPLG) and Worker Struggle (Trotskyite), for whom it is more of a /"police provocation."/ The Guadeloupe Communist Party (autonomous) has had a similar reaction.

JOUGWA (Guadeloupian journal), a monthly magazine supporting independence, has itself been the victim of elements considered to be close to this clandestine organization: following the theft of its composing supplies and an attack against two of its editors, it denounced /"the rise to the forefront of the struggle of novice fascists, adventuristic and ambitious."/

This series of terrorist acts shows the rise, in Guadeloupe, of a radical nationalism that does not shrink from portraying problems in racial terms. Already, in February 1979, a pitched battle was fought between European and Antillan students at the Baimbridge secondary school at Pointe-a-Pitre, and--just as in Martinique--metropolitan teachers had been accused of behaving as /"racists"/ or /"bounty hunters."/

The economic crisis--forced emigration of the youth, the ruin of small sugar cane and banana plantations--as well as the refusal of both Antillan and French government notables to make a place for the Creole language, Antillan culture, or surrounding Caribbean sensitivities, explains why part of the youth, who have lost confidence both in the institutions and in the capability of the autonomist opposition to change them, is turning more and more toward the slogans and forms of violent struggle.

Within the secretariat of state for overseas departments and territories, it is believed that small well-trained groups are resolved to obtain by terrorist activity what the Guadeloupian public, /"the great majority of whom are attached to France,"/ rejects at the polls: it is worth noting that the three [parliamentary] deputies elected in 1978 from this overseas department belong to the majority.

The great fear of the protecting authorities is that the increasing violence may discourage investors presently being encouraged to come to Guadeloupe, and they will frighten away the tourists, just a few days from the opening of the season.

Already a tendency toward flight has been observed in recent months among French-born residents. Veterans of Algeria, Morocco, and Indochina may have been involved orginally in establishing of [certain] clandestine organizations: the Armed Defense Group of Guadeloupe (GDAG) and the French Federation of Guadeloupe Resisters (FFRG). The JOURNAL GUADELOUPEEN in its August-September edition announced that /"in certain residential quarters of the outskirts of Pointe-a-Pitre, people are arming themselves, the dogs are being trained..."/

9516
CSO: 3100

SELECTED VIEWS ON PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL REPORT

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 3 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] Various groups and parties have made comments regarding the Fourth Government Report. Communist Unity of the Left [UIC] deemed the president's position progressive and resistant to imperialism; Carlos Cantu Rosas, of the dissident PARM [Authentic Party of the Mexican Revolution] movement, was in agreement with the chief executive's understandable worry over the shortcomings and defects in organization and work; while representatives of the PAN [National Action Party], PCM [Mexican Communist Party] and PDM [Mexican Democratic Party] voiced disagreement with JLP's [Jose Lopez Portillo] statements concerning those who criticize the government's actions.

The national leader of the PCM, Arnoldo Martinez Verdugo, claimed that the terms "rumor-mongers," "Zoroasters" and "destroyers" used yesterday by Lopez Portillo to describe the critics constitute a negative aspect of the report because, he said, the president is attempting to stop criticism, despite the fact that it is a democratic function of the opposition parties. And he noted that, if the left scored the government regarding the communal farms, it was because a presidential adviser, Ugarte, stated that there would be amendments to the 1927 constitutional act that would affect them.

He added that the Communists are not opposed to the country's economic development, but rather to the guidelines being used by the government, favoring minority groups; and he remarked that, even though the president announced measures to curb inflation, he did not specify what they would be.

In a press release, the UIC commented that it is obvious that the government's overall administration during the year covered in the report has shown a positive result for the general interests of the people of Mexico and their development, now dangerously hampered and threatened by the dependence which still exists in the republic, exacerbated from the standpoint of food under the present circumstances.

It also claimed that the essence of real progress in agrarian reform had been shown in the defense of the communal farms, stating that the Law on Agricultural-Livestock Planning and Development should not evade regulations governing the activities of the multinationals in the area.

President's Worry Understandable: Cantu Rosas

The PARM deputy, Carlos Cantu Rosas, in turn, pointed out that the president's worry over the shortcomings and defects in organization and work on the part of those responsible for food production (the Secretariat of Agriculture and CONASUPO [Government Basic Commodities Company]) is understandable; claiming that these flaws also exist, and most particularly, in the railroads, a department which leaves thousands of tons of food in tanks, on ships and in warehouses, spoiling because of the negligence in its shipment.

ACOMAC Analysis Seminar

The Community Action Political Association, Inc. (ACOMAC) held a seminar to analyze the report, at which Arturo Martinez Natera observed that Mexican capitalism has succeeded in recovering, without giving in to the national outcry to change course for the benefit of the workers. Guillermo Perez Velasco claimed that the agricultural failure (which dates back to 1965) has not been surmounted by the Alliance for Production, and that the announced proposal for the Law on Agricultural-Livestock Development will only open a national discussion regarding the collective requirements and priorities in the use of the land.

The President's Statements Were Aggressive: PAN

As a press conference headed by the PAN's national director, Abel Vicencio Tovar, 15 legislators from this party challenged various aspects of the report, such as its references to criticism, the agrarian policy, the right to information and economic policy.

Vicencio Tovar declared that the aggressive statements made by President Lopez Portillo against all those who do not think or feel as he does are not consistent with the appeals for everyone to cooperate on the solutions to the nation's problems regardless of ideology.

Deputy Carlos Amaya, for his part, claimed that the communal farm has been an "outright failure," because it has been used as a weapon for political control, and although expressing virulent opposition to it as a means of holding land, Vicencio Tovar pointed out that the PAN feels that it should be respected, and that what is needed is to put an end to bureacratism and to increase its productive efficiency.

Deputy Carmen Jimenez de Avila and Pablo Emilio Madero criticized the oil policy, and expressed their concern over the lack of determination of what must be supplied to the Central American and Caribbean countries, with an outlay for Mexico "that is virtually a gift to those countries," amounting to 8.059 billion pesos per year.

The Report Progressive: UIC

Communist Unity of the Left, for its part, was of the opinion that the fourth presidential report was progressive and resistant to imperialism, containing many of the advances and accomplishments in the process of democratization which has been initiated in the country, as well as in foreign policy.

2909
CSO: 3010

CASTANEDA SEES EXTERNAL PRESSURES ON PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 10 Sep 80 Sec A pp 1, 12

[Text] Yesterday, the secretary of foreign relations, Jorge Castaneda, did not preclude the possibility of external pressure on Mexico concerning the presidential succession; but he gave assurance that our country is sufficiently mature to prevent any intervention and to demand respect for our sovereignty.

He explained that the pressure might be aimed at influencing the next president to change the policy on our oil platform, but he reiterated that, "such attempts will be fruitless, because anyone who becomes president will have to adapt to the programs already established, since the country so demands."

The foreign secretary spoke at a banquet given for newsmen in the main hall of the Secretariat of Foreign Relations, stating clearly:

"Mexico, as a mature country which now speaks less fearfully in international forums, is aware of what its needs are, and its decisions are firm. It is not impossible that we may undergo pressure in the presidential succession, but it will definitely not continue, because we are in a position to demand respect and nonintervention."

However, Castaneda explained that our country does not seek, nor aspire to the leadership which many nations ascribe to it, repeating: "Our foreign policy has been and will continue to be consistent and independent, within a definite framework of respect and sovereignty."

In commenting on a statement from the armed forces to the effect that they be given more weaponry with which to guarantee the security of our resources, the foreign secretary said that there is no reason for concern, since there are not even any indications of an alleged foreign invasion to seize what belongs to us.

In response to a concrete question, he stated emphatically: "I am not in the political game for the presidential succession."

On the other hand, in commenting on the world energy situation, the official noted that there is a serious crisis owing to the shortage and the inflationary phenomenon affecting energy, because there is a marked waste in many countries which will entail serious consequences if the use thereof is not curtailed.

He also mentioned the risks run by the oil-producing nations if they decide to use the oil as a weapon; and he expressed approval for a policy aimed at maintaining strict control over the use of energy, as President Lopez Portillo has already proposed to the UN.

On another topic, Jorge Castaneda acknowledged the good will of the United States ambassador to Mexico, Julian Nava, although he said that the latter's recent statements had been rather unfortunate for him, but not interventionist.

On the same occasion, he remarked that the developed countries have realized the serious dangers involved if the talks under way in the UN for the North-South dialog and the aid for Third World countries should fail; because, if they prove negative, the results would be catastrophic.

In conclusion, he said that, if the summit meeting for the so-called North-South dialog should be held in Mexico, it would take place in the strictest secrecy, with stiff security measures, and not even the press would have access to this event while it is in progress, owing to its importance to the entire world.

2909
CSO: 3010

DIAZ SERRANO DISCUSSES OIL SITUATION, POLITICAL AMBITIONS

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 17 Sep 80 Sec A pp 1, 10

[Text] The director of PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum], engineer Jorge Diaz Serrano, announced yesterday that the increase in gasoline prices would go into effect at the end of this year.

The official stressed that the gasoline price hike is necessary, owing to the irrational waste of that fuel, but noted that a price would be sought with an impact that would not be inflationary.

Interviewed by EL SOL DE MEXICO at the National Palace while he was observing the military parade marking the 170th anniversary of our independence, he admitted: "Of course, I have political ambitions; I am a citizen up to date with my taxes," expressly referring to the succession for the presidency of the republic.

Moreover, the head of PEMEX stressed that our energy export policy is closely related to the nation's development, that no pressure from abroad would be allowed and that we must avoid an excessive entry of petrodollars, so as to prevent our economy from "becoming overheated."

He added that Mexico's future "will be linked with that of oil for many years and centuries to come," and that therefore this policy must be constantly provided for.

He also reiterated the fact that no act of sabotage has been detected in the accidents that have occurred in the PEMEX installations, and that the Azcapotzalco refinery would remain on its present site, since the pollution and the risks are minimal, and it would be more expensive to build another one oustide of the town.

When it was mentioned to him that the country might possible need an "oil" president, and he was asked whether he had any political ambitions, Diaz Serrano replied, verbatim:

"Of course, I have political ambitions....I am a citizen up to date with my taxes."

At the beginning of the conversation with the official, he explained the results of his visit to Saudi Arabia, noting that, among the concrete results, there is a training agreement. They want Mexico to train that country's employees in the fields of operating refineries, and petrochemicals, and they also want to have exchanges in the areas of geology, information and methods.

With regard to the OPEC meeting in Vienna, he explained that the oil exporting countries are worried not so much over the increased price of the hydrocarbon, but over the unifying of opinions on how and in what way to handle prices in the future.

He disclosed that there is at present a large surplus of crude stored in the world, with something like 5 billion barrels stored and companies which no longer have storage space.

Thus, he explained, the market is behaving inactively, and there is no great demand; therefore, it is not considered wise to talk about prices at present without much attention to the production factor.

As for the increase in gasoline prices in Mexico, he said that PEMEX is now making an in-depth study of the projections in this respect, which will definitely be sent at the end of this month to the Committee on Prices and Rates of the public sector, which will deal with it, and there will be an investigation of the matter, so that a decision may be made by the end of the year.

He emphasized that an attempt is being made to have this gasoline price hike affect inflation as little as possible.

He rejected the notion of a combining of gasolines inasmuch as both are needed on the market.

Among the reasons for this price hike, the PEMEX director noted that, both in Mexico and abroad, they include problems involving costs, storage, replacement of plants and increased programs to insure the supply. He remarked: "We must take into account how much this costs, in comparison with the international prices."

He added that, in the past, prices were kept very low in order to foster the nation's development. "However," he observed,"it may be said that the intrinsic value of the price of fuel has dropped in recent years because, with the costs of other things increasing, our costs and our development are more expensive, because the real value of oil has declined to the point where fuel is being used and possibly wasted."

On the other hand, explaining that the amount exported to the United States would not be increased, Diaz Serrano mentioned the pressure on us to export more.

He said that one could not talk about pressure at present. "There is a real worry about the lack of security in delivery among the various countries which we have visited. So they wanted to be in contact with Mexico and, although they did not need the oil, they wanted only small amounts in order to have an open door to stable energy, such as that from Mexico."

And he noted that, of course, "This is, indeed, pressure, when they are constantly asking Mexican industry whether it can supply them. But that does not meant that it will change our position."

He stressed that the Mexican stance in this regard has been firm, and is related to what the country will export and what it will consume internally.

In this way, he commented, the exports will be linked to the requirements of our development: the construction of ports, infrastructure, machinery and the capital goods that we need, "without going so far as to have surpluses of dollars which would bring about an excessive heating of the economy."

2909
CSO: 3010

IBARRA MUNOZ: NO PESO DEVALUATION

Mexico City JUEVES DE EXCELSIOR in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] The secretary of finance, David Ibarra Munoz, has just announced a beneficial measure for the genuinely popular economy, in stating that, with the consent of President Lopez Portillo, 28 billion pesos (originating from funds subject to budgeting) will be earmarked for the programs of the Mexican Food System for basic products and of Coplamar.

The finance secretary explained that this sum would be added to the 147 billion included in this year's budget for the Mexican Food System (SAM); hence, a total fund amounting to 175 billion pesos is available for the aforementioned programs.

But, in addition to this investment, in order to seek a more equitable distribution of the national wealth, Ibarra Munoz mentioned the presidential proposal aimed at taxes with rates of up to 35 percent on luxury items of conspicuous consumption, such as executive jets, yachts, luxury cars, etc., whereas there would be reductions of up to 65 percent in the taxes currently being paid by workers who earn wages equivalent to twice the minimum wage.

In other words, such a reduction would be equivalent to an actual benefit of 11 billion pesos less in taxes for workers earning low wages.

The official explained: "When our product grows 8 percent and employment between 6 and 7 percent, the soundness of our economy is proven, despite the unfavorable external factors."

He noted that this economic soundness will also be based on a new tax package (announced by the president), which, in addition to the tax exemptions for individuals with low income, includes favorable tax treatment for the construction of public housing, and exemptions from the VAT [value added tax] and the popular consumer basket, representing nearly 90 percent. The same tax will be paid only on items injurious to health.

The finance secretary mentioned other areas of equilibrium, such as the tax measures which will benefit the transformation of production and better distribution of income.

This is the first time since "we went in the hole" that an outlet for it has been indicated, without succumbing to optimism nor flattery.

The tax exemption of up to 65 percent for individuals with low income will increase the purchasing power of wages, as will the announced increase of 27 percent in the latter.

If the popular economy is somewhat strengthened, there will be an option for the law of supply and demand to be established for products which now have an official price (that has been of very little use), and the prices will acquire their equilibrium by themselves, as in the case of meat, for example.

The secretary of finance, David Ibarra Munoz, announced definitely that there would be no devaluation, and that the popular economy would be strengthened with tax exemptions for individuals with low wages.

2909
CSO: 3010

GOVERNING JUNTA ISSUES DOCUMENT CONFIRMING ITS LEGITIMACY

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 16 Sep 80 pp 1, 9

[Text] We have received the following document:

To: The Heroic Country of Nicaragua.

From: The Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction.

With regard to the pronouncements issued by some traditional political groups in the country which are trying to call in question the highest governmental authority of the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction, we address ourselves to the Heroic People of Nicaragua in order to say:

1. That some persons, for their own interests, have recently been attempting to draw a veil of oblivion over the circumstances of the downfall of the Somoza dictatorship and the conquest of power by the people.

2. The destruction of the genocidal and depradatory system that our country endured during the past 50 years occurred as a consequence of a big revolutionary armed struggle, and the violent destruction of the old regime involved not only the disappearance of the Somoza family and their followers, but a radical change in the social and political order of the country. It would seem unnecessary to recall to these sectors and to these persons that we are experiencing a real and profound people's revolutionary process. That is why the same working and exploited people who made possible the revolution with guns are now carrying it forward with their heroic effort at work, together with other patriotic sectors of the country--professionals and honest contractors, intellectuals, technicians, and students, in a climate of political pluralism and mixed economy that impels and endorses the Sandinist People's Revolution.

3. That the Government of National Reconstruction therefore did not emerge from any partisan compromise, from any privileged arrangement, nor from any international mediation or foreign intervention, but from a triumphant armed revolution that expresses an indisputable popular desire for true democracy and for profound social change.

4. That the war process that led to the crushing of the dictatorship and the political conduct of that war were carried forward by a revolutionary and highly popular organization, the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN), whose struggle assumed the character of a historical vanguard of an entire continuing and dynamic revolutionary process.

This included the consistent participation of all social, economic, and political sectors that joined the struggle for national liberation.

5. That the vanguard conduct of a revolutionary process involves not only efficiency in the handling of the affairs of government, but the capacity for leadership in the different aspects that have to do with social peace and the people's capacity to carry out that process, since a revolution's achievements and consequences necessitate a continuation of the armed struggle that generated it.

6. That the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction is a pluralist, collegiate body comprising the personal representation of citizens belonging to different sectors of the national life who were called on by the national directorate of the Sandinist National Liberation Front to form that governmental executive body.

The Sandinist National Liberation Front, the vanguard that won the war and that is conducting the revolutionary process with the support of the great majority of the country, also has a representative from its national directorate in the above mentioned Junta of the Government.

7. That those who because of political confusion or calculation are attempting to create an artificial breach between the Sandinist National Liberation Front, as vanguard of the entire revolutionary process, and the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction, as executive head of the revolutionary state, are forgetting the revolutionary nature of the process of profound change that we Nicaraguans are experiencing.

8. The Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction, heeding the call of the Sandinist Front, assumed the leadership of the Revolutionary Government in order to administer, during the emergency period which is estimated to last until 1985, the programs of the National Reconstruction.

The structural and moral strengthening of the nation during said period is indispensable in order to guarantee the process of popular and democratic deliberation by means of which the citizens will be able to participate more actively in the consolidation of the democratic institutions generated by the revolution and in governmental administration, by indicating the courses that can contribute to consolidation of democracy, social progress, and the independence of Nicaragua.

9. That the decree that sets the beginning of the electoral process for 1984, and the elections for 1985, clearly establishes that there will be no elections of any kind in Nicaragua before 1985, since events of this type would distract the public from the fundamental tasks required by the fatherland in behalf of the Reconstruction.

Managua, 15 September 1980, the 159th year of Independence from Spanish Colonialism and the 124th year of the defeat of the intervention against partisans of anti-Spanish colonialism.

Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction.

Arturo J. Cruz, Daniel Ortega Saavedra, Sergio Ramirez Mercado, Moises Hassan Morales, Rafael Cordova Rivas.

8255
CSO: 3010

WHEELOCK EXHORTS VOLUNTEER WORKERS TO FIGHT

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 22 Sep 80 pp 1, 10

[Text] Commander of the Revolution Jaime Wheelock Roman yesterday urged the new Volunteer Workers Militias to exercise vigilance against absenteeism, bureaucracy, goldbricking, and misuse of government vehicles and other property.

The commander and minister of MIDA [Ministry of Agricultural Development] discussed several points with hundreds of workers at the national meeting of the MOA [Workers Literacy Militias] which took place in the Central American College.

He said that the same vanguard spirit is needed that they applied to the literacy program, in order to be able, through greater sacrifice, to face the difficult battle of the national economy in 1981.

He emphasized that the National Directorate of the FSLN (Sandinist National Liberation Front] does not try to delude its people by showing that everything is fine, because this is not the case. There are labor interests that have not been settled, like salaries, lodgings, etc., but their true interests are essentially being resolved. He said that in the past there was a generation that gave up even their lives for us and that it was necessary to clarify that our sacrifice will be of benefit to the future of our children.

Combat Cronyism

He stated that the present basic task of the workers is to resolve bureaucy, both in private and state administration. He said that "we have been bypassing in state administrations, where chiefs employ their friends and the latter in turn employ others, thus increasing the number of employees, but without improving the quality of work."

MIDA's Firm Hand With Respect to Abuses

Commander Wheelock explained that at MIDA there have been two deaths through accidents per month, which results not only in loss of life, but of material. "Some persons misuse government vehicles, using them to go to the seashore. Others drive them while completely drunk, and the vehicles later appear in ditches," said the commander.

He said that in the face of this situation, it was decided to dismiss anyone who misuses government vehicles and other state property; and that at present, however difficult it may be, procedures have been initiated to dismiss several MIDA workers.

The MIDA minister called on workers to denounce these abuses in state institutions and enterprises, and to help to resolve the bureaucracy, absenteeism, and goldbricking that prevail in those institutions.

In 1981 the MOA's will also be a vanguard detachment upon joining the Volunteer Workers Militias, in order to cooperate with the National Directorate of the FSLN in the fulfilment of tasks leading to the austerity and efficiency required by the country.

This announcement was made yesterday by the secretary of the CST [Sandinist Workers Federation], Comrade Denis Melendez, during the National Meeting of the MOA's, which took place in the Central American College in this capital.

The purpose of this meeting was to indicate the results of the participation of the MOA's in the Literacy Campaign and to plan the tasks to be implemented during 1981, the year of efficiency and austerity. More than 600 comrades of the by now old Literacy Workers Militias of Managua and representative delegations from departments were present at the public function.

The following participated in the event: Commander of the Revolution Jaime Wheelock Roman; Father Fernando Cardenal, head of the CNA; Maria Cecilia Tellez, national head of the Central Command of the "Francisco Meza Rojas" MOA's; Pablo Rostran, a representative of those who have become literate; and Luis Enrique Mejia and Gloria Elena Gadea, who provided music.

The national head of the MOA's expressed the thanks of the CST to the most distinguished activists of the CNA and to the national directorate, represented by Commander Jaime Wheelock.

Foremost among the most distinguished departments of the Literacy Campaign are Chinandega, Matagalpa, and Carazo; others also performed meritorious work.

The Fight Against the Virus of Absenteeism and Goldbricking

In his statement to the MOA, Comrade Denis Melendez said: "We must now be thinking of the tasks for 1981: better discipline in work centers, elimination of absenteeism, goldbricking, and other wrongs. To achieve that, we in the Volunteer Workers Militias are going to organize a one-day march in honor of our hero, Roberto Lopez Perez."

After 60-year-old Comrade Pablo Rostran expressed the thanks of those who have become literate, Father Fernando Cardenal spoke.

He said that just as they overcame illiteracy, organized workers will also be able to prevail over divisive persons among our workers. They will resolve the problems that have been inherited from the past and will contribute to the building of a new Nicaragua, in which many will distinguish themselves as champions of labor.

8255
CSO: 3010

COOPERATION PANEL REACHES ACCORD ON DUTCH AID

LD241529 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 23 Sep 80 p 3

[ANP Report: "Aid for Suriname Agreed"]

[Text] Paramaribo--The Netherlands-Suriname Development Cooperation Commission [CONS] has approved in principle 55 development projects for Suriname involving a total sum of 500 million guilders. This means that most projects (96 percent) which the Suriname Government had submitted to CONS in the framework of the emergency program can be carried out.

The CONS met in Paramaribo last week and avoided the problematical issue of index-linking the aid. Talks between Minister Without Portfolio of Development Aid de Koning and [Suriname] Prime Minister Chin A Sen in the summer were broken off because the Netherlands refused to comply with Suriname's wish for the aid to be made inflation-proof.

Of the 500 million guilders which has now been alloted, around half will be devoted directly or indirectly to the productive sector including agriculture. A sum has been earmarked for the Kabalebo project--the hydroelectric power station with surrounding reservoirs and dams--intended for the development of West Suriname. In addition agreement has been reached on a plan to build 1,000 houses and to improve welfare facilities.

Program

At the end of the 15th CONS meeting Dutch Delegation Chairman Professor F. Van Dam announced that half of the previous projects have not been carried out. The 80 million guilders earmarked for these projects will now be included in the 500 million guilders for implementing the emergency program. However he did not say that the unimplemented projects have been completely shelved.

A large number of those projects will be incorporated into the new government's emergency program. In order to avert the danger of already agreed projects not being implemented a monitoring and control center is now being set up to which Suriname and the Netherlands are each alloting 1 million guilders.

CSO: 3105

PAPER APPLAUDS ARGENTINE-BRAZILIAN NUCLEAR RAPPROCHEMENT

Montevideo LA MANANA in Spanish 26 Aug 80 p 12

[Editorial: "Presidential Meeting and Nuclear Development"]

[Text] Relations between Brazil and Argentina have traditionally been marked by competitive emulation and a drive for regional protectionism which drove a wedge between the two countries and not infrequently gave cause for the type of friction which extends beyond the boundaries of the nations involved. In fact, these frictions were projected to the rest of the area and upset the orderly functioning of multilateral organizations to which both countries belong.

The difficult negotiations which cleared the way for the construction of the huge dams at Itaipu and Corpus constituted a turning point in the relationship and a move toward collaboration and joint action which, last week, reached its highest point with the new meeting between Presidents Videla and Figueiredo. The consensus reached on world and regional politics; the similarity of their strong demands--as developing nations--directed to the highly industrialized countries, when the hamstrung "North-South dialogue" will once again be taken up in the UN; the sensible claim for an integrated plan, open to the pluralistic political regimes of their associates, and the specific reciprocal cooperation agreements, will serve to strengthen the international presence of the two great neighbors and simultaneously of Latin America. Moreover, all this will give a positive turn to the current bonds developing on the continent.

However, there is one item, namely the nuclear counter-concessions stipulated, which have acquired concrete and very special importance on the agenda.

Given the irreversible position of the world oil market, subject to discretionary price increases set by OPEC members and threatened, in any event, by drying up of the wells, the oil-producing countries who are unable to attain even near self-sufficiency levels of output, have no immediate and viable alternative from the industrial scale use, other than to resort to nuclear power. The 24 highly developed OECD countries alone in 1979 produced the nuclear power equivalent of what could be obtained from 130 million tons of oil. Moreover, they have 232 nuclear plants operating and 219 under construction.

For the underdeveloped nations, such forms of energy are vital since the abundant availability of cheap power is a fundamental factor in removing the difficulties from the area. Curiously enough, however, and for fallacious reasons, the most powerful world political and economic centers have sought to block the periphery in its attempts to obtain the most modern and integrated nuclear technology.

In 1979, West Germany undertook to sell Brazil the full nuclear technology circuit, so that by 1990 it would have eight nuclear reactors and the certainty of enough power for development. It must be noted that Brazil imports 60 percent of its oil requirements and encounters considerable difficulty in financing its ambitious program of hydroelectric development.

Earlier, the Argentine Atomic Energy Commission, at a cost of US $5 billion, had planned the installation of four nuclear plants--two of which are already in operation--in addition to a heavy water plant.

As soon as news of the Bonn-Brasilia agreement leaked out, the White House, the U.S. Congress and the American press launched a harsh and flagrant campaign of threats and pressure against both countries, hoping to make them withdraw the pact. A few weeks ago, when Argentine negotiations were progressing favorably with a view to the purchase from Switzerland of a heavy water plant, similar pressures were brought to bear on Bonn with the pretext that "Argentina is about to build the first atomic bomb in Latin America." At the time Videla and Figueiredo were signing their mutual commitments in connection with nuclear power, in Geneva the U.S. and the USSR, invoking the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, joined in a vehement appeal "that efforts should be intensified to prevent new countries from developing atomic arsenals."

However, their exhortations lack sincerity. Despite SALT II and the endless bouquets tossed to disarmament, these two super powers are in the vanguard of an alarming arms' race. In fact on research and development of space devices for hostile purposes alone, the Pentagon spent US $50 billion within a single decade. Current, the United States, the USSR, France, Red China and India have atomic bombs, but by the end of the century, at least 50 nations will have the technological know-how required to produce these weapons, even though they may make no effort to do so. The dissemination of nuclear arms is inevitable although the risks of a confrontation at that level remain limited to the two super powers. When enriched uranium is offered to the underdeveloped countries so that they may feed their reactors, while at the same time refusing them access to processing methodology and the recycling of the fuels, the real aim is to subject them to a new form of dependence and subordination.

7129
CSO: 3010

END

JPRS 76687

24 October 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2206

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76687

24 October 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2206

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

AALAPSO Discusses Imperialist Strategy in Thirld World
(TRICONTINENTAL, No 69-70, 1980)..... 1

Briefs
Mexico Arrests Guatemalan Workers 16

ARGENTINA

Frondizi Issues Document Following Meeting With Harguindeguy
(CLARIN, 24 Sep 80)..... 17

Officials Counter Step-up in Political Activities
(CONVICCION, 24 Sep 80)..... 25

Statement by Former Peronist Governor Leads to Arrest
(CLARIN, 23 Sep 80)..... 28

'LA PRENSA' Questions Appointment of Church Advisers To TV
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 2 Sep 80)..... 30

Middle Parana Project Termed Importance in Regional Balance
(Luis Sartori; CLARIN, 15 Sep 80)..... 33

Peru's Democracy Seen as Imperiled by Ultraleftist Groups
(LA NACION, 16 Sep 80)..... 37

BAHAMAS

Arabs Buy Cape Eleuthera Resort
(THE TRIBUNE, 19 Sep 80)..... 39

BRAZIL

Government 'Unaware' of Alleged Iraqi Arms Requests
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 30 Sep 80)..... 40

Petroleum, Other Business Deals Offered by USSR
(Various sources, various dates)..... 42

Oil Purchases Likely
Soviet Minister To Visit
Deputies To Visit USSR
Netto To Visit Moscow, by Frota Neto

Production, Consumption of Petroleum, Alternative Fuels
(Various sources, various dates)..... 48

Import Costs Rise
Gasoline Consumption Decreases
Garoupa Accident Loss Uninsured
Garoupa Faces 6-Month Shutdown
Government Pricing Policy Discussed, Editorial
SUDECO Promotes Energy Potential
Budget Increase for PROALCOOL
Ethanol From Amazon Wood
COALBRA Installing Ethanol Distillery
Foreign Participation Still Unresolved
Alcohol-Powered Car Production
Restrictions on Foreign Capital

Fundamental Ideas, Future Prospects, Composition of PMDB Analyzed
(O GLOBO, 21 Oct 80)..... 62

Former Communist Leader in Cuba; PCB Accusations
(JORNAL DO BRASIL, various dates)..... 71

Prestes Visiting Cuba
Newspaper Accuses Prestes
PCB Promises New Reply

CHILE

Dissident Youth Groups Discussed, Leaders Interviewed
(Francisco Garay, Victor Contreras Interview; QUE PASA, 18-24 Sep 80)..... 75

Spanish Express Interest in Marketing Coal in Europe
(Alfonso Zuniga Fontecilla; EL MERCURIO, 23 Sep 80).. 80

Briefs
New Copper Deposit Discovered 82
German Investment in Agriculture 82
Oil Drilling Platform Arrives 83

CUBA

National Leadership of Lawyers Union Reorganized
(JUVENTUD REBELDE, 12 Sep 80)..... 84

Illegality of Private Tobacco, Coffee, Cacao Sales Explained
(TRABAJADORES, 30 Aug 80)..... 86

Plant Health Office Stresses Measures To Combat Blue Mold
(JUVENTUD REBELDE, 12 Sep 80)..... 88

DOMINICA

Italian Based Fund To Grant $1.5 Million Loan
(ADVOCATE-NEWS, 20 Sep 80)..... 90

Prime Minister Seen Facing Tough Going Toward Economic Recovery
(Peter Richards; THE ADVOCATE NEWS, 15 Sep 80)..... 91

EL SALVADOR

Three-Party Manifesto Calls for United Struggle
(TRICONTINENTAL, No 69-70, 1980)..... 94

Student Leader Claims New Leftist Political Offensive
(AFP, 4 Oct 80)..... 103

Briefs
FDR Appeal for Support 104
'U.S. Ready To Intervene' 104
Morales Ehrlich Speaks at Seminar 105

GRENADA

Government Announces Major Goal, Economic Advances
(SUNDAY ADVOCATE-NEWS, 21 Sep 80)..... 106

GUATEMALA

Democratic Front Member Describes Activities
(Nora Santos Interview; POLITICA INTERNAZIONALE, Jun 80)..... 108

NICARAGUA

Foreign Minister Discusses Latin American Relations
(EL NUEVO DIARIO, 26 Sep 80)..... 113

UN Ambassador Says Country Follows Nonaligned Policy
(LA PRENSA, 23 Sep 80)..... 116

Teachers Proclaim Solidarity With Salvadoran Counterparts
(Radio Sandino, 8 Oct 80)..... 118

Solidarity Committee Discusses Che Guevara's Example
(Radio Sandino, 7 Oct 80)..... 119

'LA PRENSA' Protests Against Attack on Its Reporting
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 4 Oct 80)..... 121

Briefs
New Radio Station 123
COSEP Spokesman Denies Remarks 123

URUGUAY

Energy Developments, Sources Surveyed
(EL DIA, 9, 7 Sep 80)..... 124

Electricity Use Up
Eucalyptus as Energy Source

First Half Trade Balance Shows $357 Million Deficit
(LA MANANA, 4 Sep 80)..... 127

GDP Up, Inflation Down During First Half of Year
(EL DIA, 7 Sep 80)..... 129

MALAPSO DISCUSSES IMPERIALIST STRATEGY IN THIRD WORLD

Havana TRICONTINENTAL in Spanish No 69-70, 1980 pp 59-76

/TRICONTINENTAL report: "Imperialist Strategy and Action in Africa Latin America and the Middle East"/

/Text/ Introduction

What has made possible these Afro-Latin American meetings in Luanda? The reply is not a difficult one. The solidarity between the people struggling in both continents and, of course, the fact that the People's Republic of Angola is a revolutionary reality on the African continent, are the driving forces behind our meeting.

That is why it is obvious that if that popular struggle in Africa and Latin America is being carried out against the imperialist system in its many forms of expression, the existence of imperialism is the basic cause of our serious problems and, as a result, of our struggle in the last century.

The origins of the conflict waged by our common enemy are older. Although they date back a long time, it is very important for all of us to outline them briefly.

Africa and America came into contact with the dawning of capitalism. The discovery of gold and silver deposits in the Americas, the extermination crusade, the slavery and the burial of the indiginous population in the mines, the start of the conquest and the pillage of the East Indies, the conversion of Africa into a hunting ground for black slaves, all of these events indicate the dawning of the era of capitalist production.

The commercial revolution completely transformed life in Europe between the 16th and 18th Centuries and laid the groundwork for the capitalist industry of the future. Powerful nation-states supported colonial conquests, pillaging and piracy thereby oppressing our regions with systematic looting by manufacturing trade capital. The contribution made by what we call today the Third World to the original accumulation of capital in Europe can be seen in the following figures:

Some 500 million pesos gold, both in silver and gold, were taken to Europe by the Spaniards between 1503 and 1660. Some 600 million florins gold were taken from Indochina by the East India Dutch Company between 1650 and 1780. Some 500 million florins gold were earned from the slave trade by French capitalists during the 18th Century, excluding the value of the work done by the slaves on the West Indies plantations which was more than triple that sum. Some 200 to 300 million pounds sterling were earned from the work done by the slaves in the British West Indies and between 100 and 150 million pounds gold were obtained by the upper class in Great Britain from the pillage of India between 1750 and 1900 alone.

In short, we are talking about a billion pounds gold, a sum greater than all of the capital invested in all European industries in 1800. It was an enormous accumulation of capital which in many instances directly financed manufacturing and factories which furthered the industrial revolution.

The precious metals that were stolen from the Third World flowed to Europe where they multiplied along with the income from slavery and world trade based on unequal trading. In the middle of the cycle, which was the prelude to the European industrial takeoff, the economic and social structures in Latin America, the Caribbean and Africa experienced the beginning of their underdevelopment on all levels in the face of the impetuous advances made by European capitalism in its mercantilist phase.

At the end of the 18th Century, mercantile capitalism and the colonial system created by it began to decline. Industrialization on a large scale appeared in Western Europe with its economic and political campaign to reduce the remainder of the world to a role of exporters of raw materials and markets for European manufactured goods. Industrial capitalism was the beginning of a more aggressive posture and efforts were made to link closely certain underexploited areas with the metropolitan centers. After 1815 one can see Britain's gradual expansion into the world market, entering into competition with the other developing European capitalist countries, and later with the impetuous United States of America. For a time the industrial fortress was able to use efficiently a free trade policy, but during the last quarter of the 19th Century conditions began to change naturally. Under the new order of things, the institution of slavery continued in Spain's and Portugal's American colonies because of the relative historical backwardness of these two nations in comparison with the development achieved in other European countries.

On the African continent European industrialists and their "humanitarian" abolitionists outlawed the slave trade and slavery and replaced it with "legal trade" through a slow process begun by London in 1807 and terminated at the end of the 19th Century on the eve of a new phase: monopoly capitalism or imperialism which was to become a stage in the development of capitalism, a phase of monopolistic capital, monopoly capitalism. Economic penetration would almost always be carried out through wars of conquest, the establishment of spheres of influence and protectorates and annexation. Those outside the system would in the end be divided into colonies, semi-colonies and dependent states.

The Suez and Fachoda incidents as well as the Anglo-Boer Wars indicated that from among the European powers Great Britain and France would be the major ones responsible for implanting the imperialist colonial system in Africa and the Middle East. The Spanish-Cuban-United States war demonstrated that in the New World the dominant monopoly capitalist system would be that of the United States although to accomplish this it would first have to fight Great Britain and even France in the first third of the 20th Century.

From the Anglo Boer Wars would come the racist colonial system of imperialist socio-political intercession throughout South Africa. The radius of this activity expanded rapidly from the Cape to Salisbury and indirectly from Luanda to Lorenzo Marquez from 1910 (proclamation of the Union of South Africa) to the decades of the 60's (Republic of South Africa) until at the end of the 40's and early 50's apartheid was institutionalized.

At the end of the last century, imperialism gave rise to and supported the Zionist movement among European Jews whose transfer to a middle-eastern Palestine would have been unthought of without imperialist sponsorship. Imperialism exacerbated all contradictions which could serve its economic monopolistic expansion purposes over the short or medium term.

The strengthening of the Yankee presence in the Caribbean after 1898 enabled the United States to gradually replace other foreign interests in the area, particularly in South America, bourgeois civilians with petty gorilla tyrants, neocolonize the economy, society, politics, culture and even the indispensable mentality of Latin America. It laid the groundwork so that under later historical circumstances some of those classist dependent blocs attempted to remodel the format of state monopoly capitalism within their unstable societies through the use of that peculiar and much questioned, but always sanguine, method, Latin American fascism.

Characterization of Imperialist Strategy and Action in Africa, Latin America and the Middle East

That is why imperialism, in an effort to maintian its economic positions, has not disregarded any method, no matter how contemptible, in its efforts to subjugate the people of the so-called Third World, to implant regimes obedient to its designs and to halt the spread of liberating processes.

Within the framework of imperialism's global strategy, the Arab region occupies a principal position because it contains the largest oil reserves which supply the capitalist markets. This factor is of special importance for the future of the system, particularly in this time of profound crisis and because of this region's strategic geographic position which serves as a link between Asia, Africa and Europe. This explains imperialism's efforts to dominate and use it as a spearhead against the movements of liberation of the people of Africa and a part of Asia.

That is why the imperialist offensive in the Middle East has always been designed to promote the division of the Arab people to block their liberation and to fan sectarian religious and nationalist conflicts to draw attention away from the basic problems.

This has been the objective behind the creation of states based on sectarian and racist principles, such as the creation of the Zionist state of Israel within the Arab nation which led to the forced expulsion of the Palestinians from their homeland and to Israel's wars of invasion and expansion--which received direct or indirect assistance from the imperialist states--against the Arab nations fighting for their liberation.

Within the context of imperialism's global strategy for the Middle East, we can see imperialism's threats to occupy the oil fields, the mobilization of its fleet in the area and the so-called "security plans" for the Persian Gulf, its threat against Democratic Yemen and its efforts to have unification with the north fail, as well as the military support given by Sadat to Oman and the Sudan and to Morocco against Algeria and the Saharan patriots. In other words, the imperialists try to take advantage of all the conflicts involving the parties opposed to the Camp David Accords so that they will not join efforts.

Imperialism, Israel and Sadat have concentrated their offensive in Lebanon to obtain the second link in the chain of the Camp David Accords. Their objective is to exterminate Palestinian resistance because their resistance is at the core of the Middle East problem and is the main point of contention between imperialism and the Arab nations. At the same time, these groups attack the National Lebanese Movement and their alliance with the Palestinian revolution because they are significant obstacles to the realization of their strategic plans.

Imperialism's regional strategy for the Middle East is closely tied to that directed at South Africa and the South Atlantic. Both areas are part of the so-called petroleum route which after leaving the Arabian Sea goes through the Indian Ocean, around the Cape of Good Hope and from there on to the United States or Western Europe.

Imperialist plans consider South Africa vital to the securing and implementation of a strategy for the southern hemisphere. This is why they have reenforced the military power, especially the naval capability, of the nation supporting apartheid. South Africa claims to have become a center that is vital to western defense as far as military preparedness and communications in the southern oceans are concerned.

South Africa, therefore, is the imperialist policeman of the region and it has extended its domination not only over the African people of South Africa--in a typical case of internal colonialism--but also over Namibia and Zimbabwe.

Present imperialist maneuvers focus on Namibia and Zimbabwe in an effort to arrive by any means at a "solution" that will guarantee its interests in the region.

Following the failure of Namibia's independence plan, imperialism and its puppets blamed the SWAPO /South-West African People's Organization/ for its failure because of its demands over military bases within Namibia and undertook a policy designed to eliminate the national liberation movement and consolidate its control over Namibia.

This policy also calls for a campaign of intimidation against SWAPO and the Front Line nations which has included air attacks, the infiltration of ground sabotage troops or of paratroopers, mass arrests and so forth.

Behind this plan are the governments of Great Britain, the United States, South Africa and West Germany, among others, which have not only financed the recruitment of 20,000 mercenaries to fight for white supremacy and fascism but also demonstrated their support for racism by violating the sanctions imposed on Rhodesia.

As for Latin America, the Pentagon and the Government of the United States consider it to be the nucleus of their global strategy. The United States pursues a total policy in that continent which combines economic, political and military factors. On behalf of its structures, the United States Government questions or sees a threat to its "security" in the steps taken by the people of Latin America and the Caribbean towards economic, political and social self-determination. The planners of imperialism's global strategy describe the American continent as an enormous mass extending from pole to pole anchored between two oceans which constitutes the internal security belt for the United States. On the basis of this the two primary instruments of their much flaunted "Pan-Americanism" were established: the Rio de Janeiro Treaty and the TIAR military treaty on which the Inter-American Defense Council is based.

Imperialism's Direct Responsibility for Colonialism, Neocolonialism and the Installation and Maintenance of Fascist, Zionist and Racist Regimes

The people of Africa and Latin America, joined together by historical and cultural ties, are also united by their true liberation struggle against a common imperialist enemy to whom the people of both continents owe their underdevelopment with its concomitant tragedy of hunger, illiteracy and illness.

Imperialist domination places on the nations of both continents unbearable burdens of plundered resources, ruined national industries, economic distortions, permanent balance of payments deficits, low wages, cronic unemployment, growing inequality, technological backwardness, inadequate food supplies, widespread illiteracy, massive health problems, high mortality rate, social slavery, racial discrimination, political instability, widening class differences and criminal violence as the essence of power.

To illustrate this it is sufficient to review preliminary data that by themselves define the antagonisms within the confrontation between the countries of Latin America and the United States and determine the continued willingness to intervene to prevent by any means the development of the movement of liberation on the continent. Some 20 percent of U.S. foreign investments are in Latin America. While U.S. imperialism takes from Europe between $1 and $2 for every dollar it invests, from Latin America it takes between $3 and $5. Between 50 and 70 percent of Latin America's essential goods are manufactured in the United States. One-third of Latin America's foreign trade is with the United States under unfavorable conditions.

This terrible situation affecting our people is just what the unjust capitalist system needs to stay alive because it could not exist without territory to exploit and steal riches from. Therefore, it trys at all cost to perpetuate neocolonialism by creating and supporting fascist, Zionist and racist regimes which guarantee the subjugation of the people so that the flow of riches from these countries is not interrupted or stopped.

This is precisely why the United States supports the racist regime of South Africa. U. S. monopolist capital is in complete agreement with the policy of apartheid since it is a big shareholder in those companies exploiting valuable South African minerals.

It is well-known that South Africa produces one-third of the capitalist world's production of uranium. Diamonds account for 90 percent of its production, gold accounts for 60 percent followed by the rich deposits of platinum ore, copper, chrome, nickel, titanium, iron, tin, magnesium, antimony, phosphates, coal and so forth.

These figures explain why John Farrel, president of Farrel Lines, said at one time: The United States will never boycott the Republic of South Africa because this country has many friends in North America, especially in business circles. At the same time the president of General Motors said: We have been there (South Africa) for a long time and we intend to stay for over 50 years.

As a result of the exploitation of black workers, who are deprived of any social benefits, the dividends from capital invested in South Africa are two and one-half times greater than in the United States. This is why the convention on the punishment of genocide adopted by the United Nations 30 years ago, the International Agreement on Civil and Political Rights, the International Agreement on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and a host of other similar conventions have not been ratified by the United States. This allows them, on the one hand, to keep thousands of South Africans without rights and exploited in their own country and, on the other, to receive the benefits from the exploitation of the people of Asia, Africa and Latin America through colonialism, neocolonialism, oppression, racism and apartheid.

Puerto Rico is a good example of exploitation through a colonial system. On 25 November 1897 Puerto Rico had an autonomous constitution and 8 months later it becomes a Yankee colony when on 25 July 1898 following a proclamation by General Miles the military occupation of the island is decreed.

Legalizing the colonial status of Puerto Rico became the immediate task of the Yankee governments through the passage of different laws designed to maintain the classic colonial status for a third of the century.

Popular repudiation and demands for an end to this system led in 1947 to giving Puerto Rico the "privilege" of electing its own governor but this in no way changed the actual situation. Nor was there any real change in 1952 following the creation of the Free Associated State which was just a cover for the colonial system because Puerto Rico continues to be a U.S. possession which can be exchanged or sold whenever the Congress in Washington so decrees. Today Puerto Rico is more dependent on the United States than ever before. We are looking at a typical case of foreign military intervention because, as established by Puertorican nationalists, Puerto Rico was not discovered nor conquered nor colonized by the United States. Instead Puerto Rico is a nation under intervention, a colony, a nonautonomous territory as described in Chapter IX of the United Nations Charter.

Since 1900 the United States like all colonial empires has used Puerto Rico as a market for its surplus agricultural products, to invest its surplus capital and to establish military bases.

Colonialism is seen in the economic domination of Puerto Rico as expressed by its compliance with the tariff and trading regulations, the highest in the world, that are under the jurisdiction of the mother country as a means of unilaterally limiting the island's trade. The entire economic structure, industry, banking institutions and trade, as well as the best land are in the hands of the large Yankee monopolies. U.S. penetration of industry, communications and so forth is great and there is an alarming process of concentration and centralization of capital. Customs, the postal service and the court system are in their hands.

The young people, like the general population, were forced into accepting U.S. citizenship and now they are obligated to join the Yankee army. The United States has converted the island into a complex of military bases which include atomic installations with short and long range missiles.

The hallmark of Yankee colonialism in Puerto Rico is expressed by unemployment, exploitation, illness, hunger and illiteracy.

In short it is a classic colony with a people determined to be free. In Puerto Rico persecution has been frequent and tragic and the gag laws have abounded such as the 1948 one to control activities designed to destroy the island government.

The 1964 military coup in Brazil, promoted and backed by the United States (operation Uncle Sam) according to former President Lyndon Johnson's files, became the first fascist government experiment on the American continent. Imperialism planned to use Brazil as a policeman and junior partner in controlling the subcontinent to halt the revolutionary process. The struggle of the people could not be contained. Thus during the early part of the 1970's in a global atmosphere hostile to imperialism--the historical defeat in Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, the fall of fascism in Portugal and Greece and the splintering of Spain--and during a time when the imperialist economic crisis was worsening, the Pentagon and the most reactionary sectors in the United States began a counteroffensive in Latin America using as their supreme weapon the installation of fascist regimes.

They concentrated their efforts on destroying the Popular Unity government in Chile and installing long-term fascist government's in the Southern Cone. Successive coups take place in Bolivia, Uruguay, Chile and Argentina. There is pressure on Peru, conspiracy against the government's of Venezuela, Mexico, Costa Rica and others, maneuvers against Panama's patriotic demands and the resurgence of terror in Paraguay, Guatemala, Nicaragua and Haiti, among others.

The Economic Model Imposed by Imperialism

The fascist regimes in the more developed countries of South America are nothing more than insolent dictatorships of financial capital with ties to the most regressive and powerful sectors of the controlling oligarchies promoted and backed by U.S. imperialism, in particular by the most war-loving and recalcitrant circles headed by the CIA and the Pentagon. It is a fierce effort to settle accounts with the working class, the liberation movements and even with the nationalist, pro-independence or national-reform movements.

Fascism, almost like a fulcrum, although taking into account national peculiarities, attempts to use an "economic model" based on the lucubrations of the "Chicago boys" who have inspired the IMF policy in the region: investments and transfer of foreign monopoly capital; the concentration of national capital--at the expense of the weak--and strengthening of the large landowners at the expense of all society; the redistribution of income to benefit the privileged few at the expense of the vast majority and the workers in particular; the coercive transfer to monopoly capital, either national or foreign, of capital accumulated by national industries and rural businessmen; the raising of financial, technological and commercial dependence on imperialism to odious levels; the establishment in some countries of military-industrial complexes which operate at the direction of or under the jurisdiction of the empire's manufacturers of death; adjustment of national industry to the interests of the transnational companies at the cost of dismanteling, looting and eliminating company structures which diversified production and disturbed the new tyrannical governments.

Repudiated and opposed by the people, isolated internationally, the fascist regimes and the bloody dictatorships of Latin America attempt to "cover their face" with the "cosmetics" of "remodeled or limited democracies" and by holding elections that are tallyed behind the people's back so that with civil, trade union and individual rights curtailed they can modify the political-institutional structures that are designed to perpetuate the control of the powerful economic groups. In their new "constitutional" bills they attempt to institutionalize a "national security doctrine" issued by the United States and adopted by the armies of the fascists nations which bestow on the armed forces the role of protector and authorize them to openly intervene to defend the interests of the economic groups and classes which support fascism.

Economic and institutional models similar to the fascist regimes of Latin America or to Israel and with similar objectives--except for the distance--have been implanted in Zimbabwe, Namibia and South Africa.

Relations Between South Africa, Israel and Latin American Facism

The racist regimes of South Africa and Israel and Latin American facism, genuine expressions of imperialist domination in our times, comprise a united front against the liberation movements and progressive forces of the world. United by their common heritage as imperialist creations, they are also united in their pillage of riches, in their repression of liberation movements and of all forms of expression supporting progress and permanent liberty.

The ties that link them together, some are well-known, others are secret, range from trade to the sale of arms, military training and the exchange of mercenaries.

On the subject of arms sales, Israel is playing a very active role in supplying weapons to Latin America, taking advantage of the fascist dictatorships need--in their fight against the revolutionary movements--to strengthen their control and to fight the local wars which frequently break out. In this role Israel reaps tremendous economic and political profits not to mention the fact that this task of supporting fascist and dictatorial regimes is in keeping with the very nature of Zionism itself. It is not superfluous to point out that Israel was the second government (the United States being the first) to recognize Pinochet's lackey regime in Chile.

In addition, Israel has taken advantage of two other factors (a) its alleged experience in putting down armed rebellion, a knowledge which many bloody Latin American dictatorships need and (b) the countries they supply with arms, especially in Central America and the Caribbean, are small and their requirements for weapons are small also and this allows Israel to satisfy all of their needs.

Cooperation between Israel and South Africa is, if you will, even closer knit. It dates back to the creation of the state of Israel. South African volunteers fought alongside the Zionists after 1947 and South Africa sent medical supplies, food and other supplies to Israel during the 1948 war. The first pilot in the Israeli airforce to fall in combat was a South African "volunteer." During and after the 1947 war, military contacts between the two countries increased. South African support to Israel during the October 1973 war was even more extensive and it marked a new period in the development of relations between the two.

There are numberous instances of military cooperation between Israel and the apartheid regime involving military equipment.

Early in the 60's South Africa obtained a license from a Belgium company to build the Israeli designed Uzi submachine gun. Israel also supplied her with the Gabriel missile. An important element in Israeli-South African cooperation has been the contributions made by experts in counterinsurgency techniques and on sofisticated weaponry.

Tel Aviv is supplying the racists with direct assistance in training saboteurs and spies for activities against African nations. Some time ago the DAILY TELEGRAPH correspondent in Johannesburg reported that Israeli officials were implicated in South Africa's plans to invade Angola. It has also been reported that Israeli mercenaries operate inside South Africa against the SWAPO in Namibia.

Israel's policeman role extends from the Arab nations down to South Africa. Payments of nearly $10 million from the CIA have been made regularly to the Israeli intelligence service to be administered and distributed by theprime minister. In early 1960 CIA funds were used--funneled through Israel--to overthrow Lumumba's legally constituted government. In 1973 INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS magazine noted that without foreign aid Israel could not have armed itself on the scale that it has much less export weapons to other countries.

Since the UN embargo on weapon sales to South Africa and because of the pressure from progressive countries, it has been difficult for developed capitalist nations to openly sell weapons to South Africa. Today, however, they use third countries to distribute weapons and in this respect Israel has played an important role. Thus the arrival of U.S. Bell 205 helicopters in Rhodesia via Israel and Singapore was confirmed on 14 December 1978 by a military spokesman in Salisbury. The Rhodesian attack on refugee camps in Zimbabwe and efforts to assassinate Joshua Nkomo in April of this year were perpetrated by Israeli commandos.

The Israel-Latin American and Israel-South Africa trade in military aid completes a triangle with the South African-Latin American connection.

At the same time that the Latin American fascist regimes launched a counteroffensive against the revolutionary forces, South Africa unleashed a sustained campaign to expand and strengthen its relations with these countries while Israel played the role of arms supplier to the reactionary regimes in exchange for their complicity in the infamous acts of aggression against the Arabs.

This working triangle was established in response to U.S. imperialist plans contained in its global strategy of domination. In Latin America the pro-imperialist alliance hides behind the well-known refrain "defending western and Christian civilization." In its name they drafted a new military treaty of aggression and made it a part of the NATO alliance whose sphere of influence would include the South Atlantic. The treaty was aimed at the people of this region who were fighting for their political, social and economic independence.

Politically and economically Israel has or has established ties with the fascist regimes of Latin America and the racist Africans. Since its creation the Zionist state has directed its efforts to strengthening its economic relations with Africa and Latin America to find broad markets for its products and obtain raw materials for its industries, on the one hand, and to force its existence as a state in the region, on the other.

In 1948, 3 years after the defeat of fascism, the newly created state of Israel decreed the expulsion and extermination of the Palestinians who had lived for centuries in the region. At the same time, in South Africa the fascist Nationalist Party came to power and immediately promulgated legislation that was even more oppressive for the black majority population.

Relations between the minority regimes of South Africa and Israel have deep historical and ideological roots. General Smuts, minister of defense in the union government, was one of the principal architects of the Balfour Declaration on the establishment of a Jewish homeland in Palestine. The National Labor coalition wholeheartedly supported the creation of a Jewish homeland and adopted a resolution to that effect in 1926. In the United Nations South Africa actively supported the division of Palestine and when the Nationalist Party gained power in 1948 one of its first actions was to recognize the newly created state of Israel.

The rapid growth of cooperation between the apartheid regime and the Zionist government reached a peak in 1976 when then South African Prime Minister J.B. Vorster visited Israel and signed a treaty of economic, scientific and industrial cooperation between the two nations.

South Africa is heavily dependent on foreign trade and its trade with Israel has increased to such a point that the Zionist state is one of its main clients. It is estimated that Israeli sales to South Africa in 1981 will exceed a billion rand.

South African and Israeli leaders frequently say that the economies of the two nations are complementary and that each one's potential can best be realized by partnership agreements between the two nations. The Israeli commercial attache in South Africa recently said that South Africa has the cheap labor that Israel needs. In this way Israel, like all other developed capitalist countries, benefits from the extensive exploitation of cheap African labor and is interested in the perpetuation of the system of apartheid.

Recently, Israel has expressed an interest in investing in the Bantu homelands as a means of obtaining an abundant and cheap supply of labor and to promote the model of a Bantu homeland as envisioned by the racist South African regime. An influential Israeli daily has suggested that Israel might help to develop the African preserves by making available its modern agricultural technology and its technology for erosion control. In April 1976 an Israeli delegation attended a symposium held in Umtata, the capital of the Transkei Bantu preserve, sponsored by the African Association of Foreign Affairs.

Israel manufactures semiprocessed goods from South Africa which it then exports to those countries who have imposed an economic boycott of South Africa. For example, South African textiles, chemical products and fertilizers are manufactured in Israel and exported to Africa and other countries.

Economic cooperation between South Africa and Israel prevents the destruction of apartheid and the construction of a democratic society that is free from racism and oppression.

It was in 1973 when Israel concentrated its efforts in Latin America, a step which gave it economic breathing room and politically helped it to break out of its international isolation. However, this does not mean that Israeli activity in Latin America began late since it had been present for many years.

Since that time Israeli activity in Latin America has intensified and reached unprecedented levels in recent years as a result of favorable conditions such as the strong interrelation between Zionism and some U.S. monopolies on this continent.

The representatives of these monopolies hold top posts in Zionist organizations in the United States and they are influential in Latin American trade circles and in the mass communication media.

Thus Zionist activity has rested primarily on U.S. imperialism's total hegemony, both economic and political, over the majority of the nations on the continent and, in addition, it has taken advantage of the existence of Zionist communities in some Latin American countries.

It is necessary to underscore the close relations between Israel and the Chilean fascist junta. Israeli military instructors advised the Chilean military and Chilean officers take classes in Israeli military academies. In October 1976 Israel sold Chile Shafrir air-to-air missiles. In addition, it is well to remember Israel's role as an arms supplier to Somoza's dictatorship in Nicaragua, an attempt to halt the uncontainable struggle of the people led by the Sandinist Front.

At the same time, cooperation between South Africa and the Latin American dictatorships continues to thrive. In citing some of the events which confirm this, we cay say that the South African banking firm of Hill Samuels S.A. recently prepared financial programs for projects in Argentina and other countries and is financing South African capital goods exports to Chile. This company believes that South Africa has barely scratched the surface of its export potential to South America.

Recently the Bolivian daily AQUI described the country as "South Africa's new colony," in referring to the arrival of racist settlers in Bolivia although Bolivia's new government denied their arrival. Other South American countries, either voluntarily or as a result of penetration, still maintain economic, diplomatic, political and military ties with the racist regime.

The Struggle of the People Against Fascism, Apartheid and Zionism

The ties between these countries are in response to the intensification of the people's struggle to free themselves from fascism, Zionism and apartheid. The tyrannical regimes conspire to repress the growing popular struggle.

That is why the people and liberation movements denounce these ties and redouble their efforts. They are aware that the only way to achieve peace, security and progress is to uproot the regimes which discriminate, exploit and oppress with the support of imperialism which has institutionalized them.

In Latin America, for example, while imperialism and its minor partners were able to delay the people's revolutionary and liberating process--which suffered serious blows--the United State's objectives of stopping once and for all the struggles on the subcontinent failed resoundingly and today we see the emergence of a new popular and democratic offensive whose most formidable victory is the victory of the Sandinists in Nicaragua who overthrew Somoza's bloody dictatorship, the oldest tyrannical dynasty in the Americas.

The fascist dictatorships of the Southern Cone, which threatened to spread to the entire continent, today find themselves isolated internationally and their acts of aggression have been essentially neutralized as the people take the offensive. South America has been shaken by the great struggles in Bolivia which, after having assumed different forms, defeated Banzer's regime and today they defend their democratic gains from the attacks of the reactionary forces and imperialism. Brazil, involved in a complex process that is plagued by countless strikes and the mobilization of the workers, is witnessing many changes which have led to the return of thousands of political exiles and to a resumption of civil activities. Workers strikes, demands for liberty, the circulation of clandestine publications, continued pronouncements from all political sectors demanding freedom, the involvement of the church with the people, the spread of the anti-dictatorial protests are all symptoms of the growing mobilization of the people in Chile and Uruguay where, nevertheless, repression is still practiced, an indication of the weakness of the dictatorships which lack the support of the masses and are forced to resort to violence to remain in power.

In recent months other countries in Latin America have been advocates of important gains. Panama achieved sovereignty over the canal although it continues to work for the withdrawal of all U.S. troops from the zone. Grenada shook itself free from the domination of a pro-imperialist tyranny and for the first time the reigns of power are in the hands of the people.

Latin America is the scene of different kinds of battles all designed to throw off the colonial and neocolonial yoke and to attain full sovereignty. The people of El Salvador have engaged in heroic actions against the facist dictatorship and today they pursue a struggle for an authentic popular government. In Guatemala the bloody confrontation with the pro-imperialist dictatorship continues. The workers of Peru and Colombia have mobilized the masses and combined their demands with the defense of freedoms and sovereignty in their platform. In Ecuador the people are determined to establish democracy as the proper forum for making new social and economic gains.

In Puerto Rico pro-independence sentiments are growing as the nation celebrates the recent release of four patriots who spent over 25 years in a U.S. jail but repression continues. The fight against U.S. domination in Puerto Rico has not waned even though there still are efforts to keep the island as a colony so that it can be used as a base of aggression against all the people of the Americas and the Caribbean in particular.

In many parts of Africa, where for centuries the people were nothing more than a product on the imperialist market, encouraging political and socio-economic revolutionary changes are taking place. One after another the people of Africa have risen up in arms against the anachronistic social order imposed on them by international obscurantist and reactionary forces.

Angola, Mozambique, Guinea-Bissau, Ethiopia, the People's Republic of the Congo and Benin, among others, have established revolutionary governments which have taken control of their human and material resources.

The revolutionary climate in South Africa is aimed at the destruction of of facism, neocolonialism and racism. The efforts, sacrifices and convictions of the African fighters and the masses today are having formidable success.

For their part, the oppressed people of South Africa have taken the initiative and are waging a heroic fight against the racist regime on all fronts. There are news reports of workers strikes and demonstrations in various companies and actions by the people against the institutions of oppression.

At the same time, in the Middle East the frontal struggle against imperialism, Zionism and reactionary forces focuses on the defense of the Palestinean cause and on the rejection of the Camp David Accords. In Lebanon it focuses on the position of the masses and the progressive Lebanese movement against the attacks of Zionists and reactionary forces and on the Egyptian people themselves in the face of Sadat's treason.

Conclusions

The struggles in Africa, America and the Middle East had a common origin in colonialism, at present they are being wagaed against a common enemy and, therefore, all revolutionaries are united in the fight against imperialism and reactionary forces which, as we can see, use a common strategy against the masses throughout the world and they are banding together world-wide to strongly resist the growing revolutionary wave which threatens to overwhelm them and drag them down.

We are, therefore, seeing broader solidarity among the people who are fighting for the prevalence of a more just and equitable social order throughout the world.

It is necessary to have unity of action and coordination against this enemy which creates and supports all exploiting, racist and reactionary regimes so that through them it can defend its own interests.

It is necessary to stand united against imperialism.

8599
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

MEXICO ARRESTS GUATEMALAN WORKERS--There is growing concern over the situation of Guatemalans who have illegally crossed the border to seek work abroad, Deputy Labor Minister Carlos Padilla Natareno said yesterday. The deputy minister mentioned the case of 100 Guatemalans arrested in Tapachula, Chiapas State, Mexico, who are about to be deported. Most of them were arrested without proper documentation. These men intended to cross the U.S. border in a similar manner. [Distributed by Inter-Central American Radio Organization] [Excerpt] [PA092348 Guatemala City Radio Mundial in Spanish 1410 GMT 9 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

FRONDIZI ISSUES DOCUMENT FOLLOWING MEETING WITH HARGUINDEGUY

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 24 Sep 80 pp 4, 59

[Text] Former President Dr Arturo Frondizi, head of MID [Integration and Development Movement], yesterday called for "a basic change in policy" in terms of both "economic and social direction" and progress "towards the unrestricted democratic participation of the people."

As he was being received by Interior Minister Maj Gen Albano Eduardo Harguindeguy in another round of the political dialog, Dr Frondizi explained that such a change "will consolidate the peace we have acheived."

A summary of the former president's statement was distributed shortly after the meeting by his secretary, Miss Olga Hechem.

Political Dialog

Dr Frondizi initially pointed out that he had to mention that so far the political dialog had not yielded the desired results. The reasons for this, he added, were the approach of not getting to the bottom of the country's most urgent issues and the policy of excluding a number of people, which has made the discussions less representative than they should be.

"In spite of this," he continued, "I have decided to take part in it precisely for the purpose of helping to alter this situation and so that this constructive call for a dialog can bear fruit."

Frondizi stated that "to this end, it is essential to cease excluding the Peronist Party. This is similar to many other proscriptive approaches that have been tried since 1955 and that have always had negative consequences for the country by heightening divisions and delaying a genuine and definitive political solution. Just as we have condemned antimilitarism, which entails a split in Argentine society, we cannot but condemn anti-Peronism, which also entails a split.

"Peronism," he said, "comprises the overwhelming majority of the Argentine working class, and nothing can be constructed without its input. To this end, an organized dialog with Peronism is unavoidable, and the government should renounce its unsuccessful attempts to divide it or to dispense with it and acknowledge the representativity of its leaders. Only through an across-the-board dialog and a democratic process free from bans will we be able to determine the role that each party and each leader ought to be assigned."

Maneuvering Room

The former president went on to say that "we should bear in mind as a starting point for any analysis that the Armed Forces Government is having serious problems and enjoys appreciably narrower maneuvering room than in March 1976, though it is still considerable. I should also point out that this maneuvering room is based on two elements: a) having restored law and order by eradicating subversion, and b) the nation's continued impression that the Armed Forces are an indispensable ingredient of national unity and that this unity should not be splintered.

"There is universal recognition of the efforts and sacrifices that have been made to eradicate subversion, and the notion that there must be a bridge between the people and the Armed Forces is quite widespread, although there are shades of opinion and opposing views. These views span a wide range, from the very few whose answer to problems is to revert to the anachronistic stands of democratic liberalism and the left wing, which want to separate the people from the Armed Forces, to the many who are beset with doubts as to the feasibility of preserving unity under the conditions of the current power structure and the current political approach. But, I stress, these are two powerful factors, and the government's maneuvering room, though narrower, is not to be underestimated.

"As is always the case in politics, the government's maneuvering room is not unconditional. There is a powerful conditioning factor: the economic policy that is hurting the nation's basic classes and sectors. There is an ever-increasing awareness that the sacrifices that the country is making are not conducive to a resolution of our problems nor to the creation of a solid groundwork for democracy. On the contrary, economic policy is seen and felt as a factor that does material harm to the nation and that simultaneously darkens the prospects for a political solution in keeping with our national destiny.

"This is, in particular, the view of those of us who believe firmly in democracy but who do not idolize its formal requirements," he added, inasmuch as "to us the issue of economic policy is fundamental. This is what at the moment is really jeopardizing democracy and political and social freedom, not to mention the risks that it entails for national conditions.

"The free expression of the will of the people cannot coexist with a national model based on excluding from the market a sizable portion of the population. This represents a deterioration in the living conditions achieved by vast strata of the population over the nation's history, and it locks the country's economy into a circuit in which decisionmaking will be increasingly divorced from the will and the goals of Argentines."

Incompatible Model

Frondizi recalled that on "many occasions I have publicly analyzed the nation's economic policy, with sincerity and with the conviction that I was performing a service for the Armed Forces and for the nation. I will endeavor to summarize those views later, but now the important thing is to underscore the major political implications of this policy.

"As time goes by," he said, "the Armed Forces are becoming committed to an economic model that is incompatible, at the very least, with the existence of 27 million Argentines. This is not the time to assess subjective factors: the way in which the members of the Armed Forces visualize the model, or how they are thought of by those who allow themselves to be won over by a pernicious outbreak of antimilitarism. What matters here is that the Armed Forces are running the government and that their economic policy is objectively and essentially incompatible with the Argentine people."

The head of the MID explained that "the incompatibility that I have just been talking about is from one standpoint a conjecture as to the ultimate failure of the current program, because I take it for granted that the Argentine nation will not allow itself to be placed on the Procrustean bed of that economic model. But in any case, these political consequences are occurring and could occur in an even more complex and troublesome manner. A rejection of the model could be traumatic for the relationship between the Armed Forces and the people, and this could only bring us further anxieties.

"We are the harshest critics of current economic policy," he said, "but we do not want the current process to end up another failure. We want the transition from military to civilian power to ultimately result in a stable democracy and an unblemished relationship between the people and the Armed Forces, but the current economic policy conspires against this.

"Why," Dr Frondizi asks, "is this objectively the case with the current economic policy? This question is answered, in my judgment, in the documents and public statements that we have issued. Nonetheless, I should reiterate here that its shortcomings involve neither details nor implementation; they are fundamental shortcomings, and the key to them is the so-called opening up of the economy, which has been undertaken without first eliminating the structural causes of the crisis and of the weakening of the nation's productive forces.

"Our country's crisis and inflation stem from the fact that our production apparatus, marked by the characteristics of underdevelopment, does not generate the goods and services required by society, while the public sector, as part of this structural distortion, is oversized and skews the functioning of the entire economic chain. By not eliminating these conditioning factors, current economic policy is subjecting our businessmen and workers to impossible competition with imports.

"It is impossible because production costs hinge on variables that are beyond the control of our businessmen and workers. The problem is one of efficiency, but of the economy as a whole, not of our producers, and it is made worse because imports are subsidized by a totally artificial exchange rate. The result, which is the aim of the model, is the drying up of sources of production and jobs and declining living standards for vast segments of the population. The model could not operate without inflicting this damage and without then blunting the country's capacity to react politically."

Failure

Dr Frondizi continued by explaining that "the failure of the current economic policy is becoming obvious in terms of its most immediate goals: inflation is still out of control, although it is kept down statistically by the overstated exchange rate, by politically set rates and by keeping real wages far below the traditional average; the level of economic activity is declining, consistent with the nature of the model; the per capita gross domestic product is below the 1974 level; various production sectors and regions in the interior are particularly hard hit by recession; unemployment is concealed not only in the form of government jobs but also in the form of worker emigration, while many blue-collar workers have left their wage-earning jobs in modern factories and gone out on their own, which is at odds with the principle of overall economic efficiency; joblessness is becoming manifest in the sectors most vulnerable to recession; real wages have fallen to levels that entail social risks and that have triggered drops in the populace's general standard of living, which can be seen in the low rate of school attendance and in symptoms of poor public health; the public sector deficit remains unchanged, since it cannot be altered by changes in accounting methods, and the foreign sector, for which the country created at a high cost a safety cushion of international reserves, is having serious problems with a current account deficit and risky short-term debts."

MID Proposal

The head of the MID said that "the situation created by the current policy is extremely serious and will grow more serious with the recent measures designed to insure its survival beyond March 1981. Nevertheless, if there is a change of policy, not just men, a solution can be found.

"In my judgment," he continued, "such a solution must be based on the following guidelines:

"a) Economic policy must be based on expanding the domestic production and consumption market, while providing an appropriate level of protection;

"b) The exchange rate, prices and rates must be made realistic; wages must be kept current, and labor union contracts must be put into effect again;

"c) The public sector of the economy must be overhauled and streamlined;

"d) A wideranging investment program must be undertaken in key sectors of the economy so that the country can move towards development while soaking up available manpower from the public sector and while taking care of short-term problems."

Frondizi felt that "the key to this policy was that the measures should be adopted simultaneously and in coordinated fashion. Adjusting the exchange rate, prices and rates would complicate the picture if adopted as an isolated measure; moreover, it would be short-lived. Putting the public sector on a sound footing would trigger unemployment without an expansion of economic and the investment program, which in turn means that the state would have to cut down on the amount of funds that it now absorbs. As I said, the situation is difficult, but if a policy like this were pursued consistently and vigorously, it would lift the country out of its crisis and mobilize its enormous potential."

Education Policy

He then said that "this change in basic policy is also indispensable because the current policy affects other extremely important areas of national life. The current education policy is a failure because it is a reflection of the basic policy in the sphere of education. Thus, worsening conditions at the three levels of education, increasing shortages of material resources, the absence of educational guidelines conceived in terms of major national goals, repression and a lack of freedom are consistent with an economic policy that prompts tensions and social discontent."

Foreign Policy

"Foreign policy," Frondizi continued, "also reflects the same basic orientation. On the one hand, it is determined by discontent and weaknesses on the home front and, on the other, it lacks the creativity and attraction needed to make foreign policy a tool for development. Foreign policy is always a projection of domestic policy. Only through a consolidated internal policy will the country be able to turn aside any attempt at external interference in its affairs or at disregarding its territorial sovereignty and make its relations with countries in our region and throughout the world conducive to the national interest."

Courses of Political Action

The former president stated that "in my judgment, courses of political action should be analyzed as they apply to altering the basic orientation. We must act without election-induced haste, which could cause the same basic policy to continue under a different institutional guise, and at the same time without passivity in the face of a deteriorating economic and social situation, which could later push us towards false solutions. I am not in favor of 'phased-in' solutions. I am proposing a change in the basic policy and, at the same time, the startup of the process of restoring democracy and the sovereignty of the people.

"To be more specific, let me say that just as I do not agree that the current economic and social policy should be maintained, neither do I share the idea that the military government must merely administer the crisis and hasten an electoral solution. The underlying issues have to be dealt with simultaneously: a change in economic policy and reinstating a genuine, not pro forma democratic process. It is imperative that basic decisions on a change of course not be delayed."

He went on to state that "these steps must be taken simultaneously because of the issues at stake and because now that the Armed Forces has been victorious in the war against subversion and reestablished law and order, there is no reason why we cannot move towards a full-fledged state of law and a representative democracy, which is an essential part of our constitutional existence. But at the same time, they should be taken simultaneously because this would be conducive to a change of leadership personnel and political practices.

"A discussion of our underlying economic and social problems," he added, "fosters the development of leaders who are truly in touch with the grass roots and their problems, shatters ideological microclimates and breaks up the upper echelons that survive on the basis of electioneering or promises. Such changes are a matter of basic policy; it is a mistake to believe that this can be achieved just through proper laws, a system of ineligibilities or skillful political bargaining."

Trade Union Normalization

Frondizi then asserted that "a change in underlying policy entails a normalization and liberalization of union activity by workers and employers. In the case of union organization, we must reestablish the principle of the unity of the labor movement as a basis for a rational unfolding of labor relations and as one of the underpinnings of national unity.

"This is important because restrictions on union activities and the ability to atomize the labor movement are conducive to the workings of an economic model like the present one. Every safeguard should be taken to insure that the organizations are representative, but they must be given unity and strength. What happened recently in Poland is highly instructive: the Polish Government, which is marked by a heavy concentration of power, has given consideration to worker demands and has allowed them to organize and band together as they see fit. If we want to build a just society that is constantly moving forward, we cannot resort in Argentina to the kind of coercion that Poland has abandoned.

"The social situation in Argentina shows clear-cut signs of reactions in various sectors and regions. The recent protest strike by producers and community leaders in Uco Valley in Mendoza exemplifies this, not just because it was a genuine, articulate protest but also because it was merely the manifestation of a ground swell developing throughout the country. Thus, on top of what I said about labor organizations, the government must pay attention to organizations of industrialists, farmers, merchants and professionals.

"These protests and opinions are to be feared only by those who are committed to the economic model, not the country. As long as they are squelched and repressed, they will not give rise to conflicts impairing national unity. These are legitimate problems, and this is a reaction against an economic and social policy that works against workers, businessmen, professionals and all vital sectors alike. If they are heeded, the truth will triumph and the country will be the winner."

Political Normalization

Frondizi noted that "parallel to this we must normalize party activity and open the political debate. In this regard, it is essential that the country not return to bans. If we want national unity and are willing to change underlying policy, as current conditions advise, we should not fear such a debate. It will be unavoidably beneficial because as I said previously, truly representative leaders will be brought to the fore by the sheer force of events within the context of an overall expansion of society.

"Fear or mistrust of grass root forces must never be the starting point for a political overhaul in Argentina; on the contrary, they embody the strongest defense of the essence of our nationhood," he added.

State of Law

"To round out this move towards major national objectives," he then said, "we have to eliminate all of the emergency measures that were justified in the struggle against subversion and to fully reestablish the guarantees and freedoms of our legal system. The government must clarify the status of detained and missing persons in a way that once and for all heals the wounds that still remain open.

"To this end," he stressed, "we must give everyone the chance to exercise his right of defense and, at the same time, allay the concerns of the family members of missing persons. We must banish the use of repression, which under the current circumstances, instead of consolidating the victory over subversion, would serve only to conceal problems and fuel resentments, encouraging renewed outbreaks of a situation that the country does not wish to experience again.

"In addition," he stated, "the government must order the release of political prisoners who have not had charges filed against them or whose trial has been unjustifiably delayed for political, not legal reasons, such as former President Mrs Maria Estela Martinez de Peron. Rectifying these irregularities will, in addition to administering strict justice, help to pacify the nation."

In-Depth Change

"To summarize," he concluded, "a change in underlying policy will consolidate the peace we have achieved; strengthen Argentina's national condition; open prospects for social well-being, as well as new possibilities for education and the creative freedom of Argentines; enable the country to command prestige and steadily growing influence on the international level, and on an institutional level lend stability and solidity to our democracy. It must not be a partial change; it must comprise, simultaneously, the current economic and social policy along with the full reestablishment of a state of law and progress towards the unrestricted democratic participation of the people in setting the direction for our republic."

8743
CSO: 3010

OFFICIALS COUNTER STEP-UP IN POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 24 Sep 80 p 13

[Text] "I think that the government has indeed toughened its stance," Deolindo Felipe Bittel, the acting head of the National Council of the Peronist Party, told the press upon returning to the Atlantic Hotel, where he is lodged during his stay in Buenos Aires, after having been invited to appear at the Political Order Division of the Federal Police for questioning.

The former governor of Chaco reported that at 0915 hours yesterday a Political Order officer "named Richardone or Ricardone" showed up at the hotel, located in zone 11, and asked Bittel to accompany him to the Central Police Department.

He also related that once there he had to wait a long time for Police Inspector Robles, the head of Political Order, to arrive. During their talk he was asked to clarify what he knew about a press release reporting the arrest and mistreatment of Adrian Farina, a leader of the Peronist Youth of the Argentine Republic (JPRA). Bittel stated that he had learned of the release when he read it last Saturday in the morning paper CLARIN. He also said that he did not know Farina.

Separately, Bittel disclosed that he had received a phone call from Tucuman notifying him that the scheduled activities during a swing that he was preparing to make through Tucuman and Salta had been suspended by police order.

Another interpretation commented on in several political circles linked these episodes with a previous development: the Federal Police communique containing certain juicy details in connection with a declaration signed by Peronist, Radical, Christian Democrat, Unified Socialist, Intransigent, Popular Socialist and Communist leaders, announcing the disappearance of two high-level Paraguayan Communist Party leaders.

The police clarification, which prompted a reply from the parties concerned, and the talk with Bittel documented the Federal Police's and, therefore, the Interior Ministry's decision to prevent a proliferation of unfounded reports that might tarnish the institution's image by attempting to implicate it in nonexistent incidents or incidents with which it has absolutely nothing to do.

In this regard, late that afternoon the Federal Police released a communique that reads: "In light of press reports concerning the detention of political leader Deolindo Felipe Bittel, the Argentine Federal Police wishes to report the following:

"Mr Bittel was at no time being detained. He was summoned only to provide details regarding a so-called detention report attributed to him and published by a morning paper on the 20th of this month.

"With regard to this report, Mr Bittel said that he had no knowledge of anything connected with it."

Former La Rioja Governor in Formosa

Naturally, what happened with Bittel was linked with the detention of former La Rioja Governor Carlos Menem, who was detained several days ago, placed in the custody of the National Executive Branch and transferred to Las Lomitas, Formosa on "parole" status.

Menem, charged under the Institutional Responsibility Act, had been engaged in intensive activities and had made frequent statements to the press that officials allegedly judged incompatible with his legal status. The former La Rioja governor was also the head of the organizing committee of the recently banned National Congress for the Release of Isabel Peron, to whose promotional group Farina has also been linked.

What happened to Menem prompted a habeas corpus petition by attorney Hugo Amilcar Grinberg and a press release signed, according to NA, by a group of "Peronist intellectuals": Jose Maria Rosa, Fermin Chavez, Miguel Unamuno, Jose Maria Castineira de Dios, Luis Alberto Murray and Osvaldo Guglielmino.

Radicals Denied Permit

The "toughened stance" noticed by politicians has also allegedly affected the UCR [Radical Civic Union], because the Cordoba Government decided to revoke the permit that it had granted for a meeting of the provincial UCR scheduled for last weekend in Carlos Paz.

The Cordoba Radicals wanted to take up the wideranging issue of their relations with other sectors. The four items on the agenda consisted of an analysis of UCR relations with the Armed Forces, with other radical parties, with other political parties in general and, lastly, with business and union forces.

The text of the government ban explains that "in light of the wide press coverage given the event" it had decided to revoke authorization because "there are clear indications that it would violate the provisions expressly prohibiting political party activities."

Certain political gatherings speculated last night that recent developments were in one way or another broached during the morning meeting between President Videla and Interior Minister Maj Gen Albano Eduardo Harguindeguy.

Conjectures stem from the fact that the official communique concerning the meeting stated that Harguindeguy had told Videla "about the mounting activities of political party groups, which are endeavoring to hold congresses, meetings, gatherings, etc., in violation of current law."

8743
CSO: 3010

STATEMENT BY FORMER PERONIST GOVERNOR LEADS TO ARREST

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 23 Sep 80 p 8

[Text] The Interior Ministry confirmed yesterday that the former Peronist governor of La Rioja, Carlos Saul Menem, has been under arrest since last Friday, once again in the custody of the National Executive Branch, on parole status.

According to the terse official communique, Menem was transferred last night to Las Lomitas in Formosa Province.

The report specifies that the arrest of Menem, who "is on parole status," was ordered by the National Executive Branch via Decree 1948, pursuant to the powers vested in it by Article 23 of the National Constitution.

Article 23 is concerned with the declaration of martial law and the suspension of constitutional guarantees.

"During such a suspension," one of the paragraphs in the communique states, "the president of the republic cannot convict of his own accord or impose penalties. In the case of individuals, his power is limited to arresting them or transferring them from one location in the country to another, if they prefer not to leave Argentine territory."

The Interior Ministry did not clarify whether Menem would be quartered at a military unit in Las Lomitas or whether he would reside in private housing but subject to a ban on leaving this town in Formosa without prior clearance.

Background

In the wake of 24 March 1976, Menem, along with 34 other officials of the previous government, was arraigned under the Institutional Responsibility Act, which stripped him of political rights and the right to hold public office.

It was also ordered at the time that he could not claim his possessions until he clarified their legitimacy; this situation was resolved in his favor in November 1979 by the National Commission for Patrimonial Responsibility (CONAREPA).

After the fall of the Peronist government, Menem was detained first on the ship "33 Orientales" and then at the Magdalena military jail.

In August 1978 he was put on parole and lived first in Mar del Plata and then in Tandil in Buenos Aires Province.

He was removed from the custody of the National Executive Branch and released on 30 January of this year, although he was still subject to the Institutional Responsibility Act.

This past 22 August, Menem testified in Parana Federal Court in connection with the prosecution of an alleged violation of Law 21,323, which bans political activities throughout the nation.

In an article that appeared in the La Rioja paper EL INDEPENDIENTE on 2 September, Menem said that "we cannot under any circumstances hold a dialog with those who are keeping the head of the Peronist Movement and many of our comrades in arbitrary confinement without charges."

The former governor was arrested last Friday at his home in the Constitucion district.

8743
CSO: 3010

ARGENTINA

'LA PRENSA' QUESTIONS APPOINTMENT OF CHURCH ADVISERS TO TV

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 2 Sep 80 p 10

[Editorial: "Ecclesiastic Advisers for TV"]

[Text] It isn't easy to understand the reasons behind the recent decision made by the Ministry of Public Information requesting the metropolitan archbishopric to appoint church advisors for the four television channels--all official--in the capital city.

According to the information released, this request, which was later formalized, has come about because of "various problems and situations which have arisen about the appearance of church personnel in television programs, and about the contents of some programs which touched on moral and religious issues." The duties of these advisors, who will work with the management of each station, will consist of guiding and advising on religious and moral matters with reference to programs in general, and also supervising all programs which specifically deal with religious issues. They will also give their approval for the appearance of members of the clergy and of religious men and women on television programs, and will periodically inform the archbishop about the work they are doing.

These advisors have been working on a semi-official basis since last June, so what has now been done is simply making their assignments official. We do have a number of reservations about this, which we will now point out.

In the first place, their advisory duties are too broad, since from what we have seen, there is no television program--whether film, television drama, news, interviews, or roundtable discussions--that has no connection with problems of a moral nature. In that way, the advisors appointed would become watchdogs for almost every program televised by the channel at which they work.

In the second place, the specific supervision assigned them in the segments allotted to religious topics entails a sort of possible censorship over these shows, which is incompatible with the freedom of opinion that should prevail in the media. We know only too well the official weight that is brought to bear on television, as a result of the dependency of our television channels on the state. But this evil, which will have to be corrected one day, will be made much worse by subjecting television programming to another factor alien to it, as this church supervision will be, which is to be operated directly by the archbishop through the delegates he chooses to appoint. This new dependency is quite obvious as it arises from the very obligation that these advisors will have to inform the Curia about their activities.

Furthermore, the appearance of members of the clergy on television is a matter that the people involved should decide freely with the television channel that has asked them to appear. If the religious way of life requires that the clergy must request permission to do so, that is a matter that they should settle with their superiors in the church hierarchy. But an ecclesiastical advisor working with the management of the station which wishes to obtain their services should not be involved in this decision at all.

Finally, if any television channel deems it wise to have a church advisor, it is free to do so. What is unacceptable is for it to give up this option--with the decision made by the station management or by the ministry of public information--and agree to have the archbishopric appoint its advisors. Also, and this is an essential point, the intervention of a representative of the Catholic hierarchy will cause apprehension and a lack of confidence in persons who belong to other religions or who lack any religious convictions at all. This may lead to public agitation and to conflicts such as those that caused the break in relations between our government and the Holy See nearly 100 years ago.

"Moral material" is not the exclusive province of the Catholic Church in our constitutional system, even though our system has given it a favored status. But giving it this preferential treatment is alien to the spirit of our institutions. Television is a lay, nonsecular, media, and so it can not be reconciled with the participation of the archbishopric, even though this may be in an advisory and not a decisionmaking capacity, in the creation of its program content. It is certainly bad enough for the state to run television, but it would be much worse if it were to abdicate its powers or to share them improperly.

7679
CSO: 3010

MIDDLE PARANA PROJECT TERMED IMPORTANT IN REGIONAL BALANCE

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 15 Sep 80 pp 4-5

[Article by Luis Sartori]

[Text] Santa Fe -- About 700 people are working here on basic research for the project that will make possible the full development of the southern lock of the middle section of the Parana River. This is a huge project that will affect not just the river shore, but also the rest of the strategic Plata rivershed.

This phase immediately precedes the issuing of invitations for bids for the completion of the dam, to be constructed in the area of the Chapeton islands, 25 kilometers northeast of the Hernandarias tunnel under the river, which joins the cities of Parana and Santa Fe.

This development in the southern area of the river was begun earlier than the northern section, which is named Machuca Cue and is located in Corrientes. Its development was based on the results of the preliminary studies conducted.

The two sections together will supply more hydroelectric power than Salto Grande, Yacyreta, and Corpus combined, with the added bonus that in this case the power produced will be used entirely by Argentina.

When completed, the project is expected to mean an annual savings of 8,000,000 cubic meters of petroleum; it will also make the Parana River navigable for ships with a large draft as far upstream as 600 kilometers north of the capital of Santa Fe province, up to the city of Corrientes.

History of the Project

The starting point for the research on the hydroelectric potential of the Middle Parana came with the decree law of October 1967, which ordered the state enterprise, Water and Electric Power, to schedule "preliminary studies."

This was begun in depth in 1972 and after 4 years the technical and economic feasibility studies were completed.

Starting in 1976, the Water and Electric Power staff began work on plans for the execution of the project, which could be completed by next September, according to the engineer, Mario Beretta, the project director.

The Soviet Union has provided technical assistance, both with the feasibility study and with the present phase of the project, through about 20 experts on water projects, who are employed by the state firm, Technopromexport.

The two firms signed an agreement in November 1978, which covers the consulting work provided for the Chapeton work by the Soviet firm which has experience in hydroelectric generation in large plains or steppe rivers, such as the Parana.

The Situation Today

Last Friday work began on earthworks for the 40-meter tests, along the Santa Fe shore of the Parana.

The purpose of this part of the project is to observe the behavior of the base and the river waters in this section, in order to prepare for the construction on this shore of the lateral lock, which includes the southern development of Chapeton.

This lock will extend over 198.9 kilometers, with an average elevation of 10.5 meters on solid land and 18.5 meters in the island area.

It is important because it will mean that about half a million hectares of land can be reclaimed and used for agriculture; today the area is a flood plain and is almost uninhabited.

On the same day a seismological station was opened in Santa Fe province in Helvecia; this will be part of a vast network of survey and research stations to be located in the area.

Number 1 indicates the southern lock or Chapeton, where the first plant of the Middle Parana complex will operate. Number 2 shows the northern lock or Machuca Cue, the site of the second plant.

Work is now proceeding at 13 camps investigating the geology, ecology, hydrometry, and soil mechanics of the area.

The project has taken 5 million manhours and 25,000 meters of drilling have been done.

'The Most Expensive Energy'

The Middle Parana extends from Paso de los Libres in Corrientes to the imaginary line drawn between Parana and Santa Fe.

In these 630 kilometers the difference in elevation is only 34 meters and the average flow is 16,000 cubic meters per second.

The preceding figures imply a hydroelectric generating potential of 40 billion kilowatts a year, of which 33 billion can be used by the Middle Parana at full operation, through its 6.3 million kilowatts installed at a direct cost (with no financing costs included) that is estimated to be $7 million.

The National Energy Plan for 1993-1994 calls for the start of operation at the first Chapeton turbine, and for 1996-1997, the start of operation at Machuca-Cue.

Faced with the Brazilian pressure in the northeast, with 25 dams on the Upper Parana and the completion by 1982 of 12.6 million kilowatts of installed power at Itaipu, the Argentine plan for the Middle Parana is the only way to achieve a regional balance in the future.

"The most expensive energy is what is not used," the energy specialists often say.

In this case, in addition to this undeniable assertion, Argentina should also mention the need to protect its northeast, which is today without almost any defenses.

7679
CSO: 3010

PERU'S DEMOCRACY SEEN AS IMPERILED BY ULTRALEFTIST GROUPS

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 16 Sep 80 p 8

[Commentary: "Maoist Group in Peru"]

[Text] The name of "Luminous Way," which seems appropriate for an old book of poetry, is in reality the name of an ultraleftist group in Peru that is working to destroy the foundations of the constitutional and democratic government which was recently elected. And yet, rather than an effete affectation, this title reflects certain Chinese expressions--such as the Square of Heavenly Peace or the Abode of Lost Dreams--because this terrorist gang, which styles itself Maoist, certainly follows no "luminous way," but rather a dark course, only illuminated from time to time by the glare of dynamite explosions.

In fact, these inopportune followers of the now-dethroned former master of China seem to rely on the persuasive powers of explosives, and to keep themselves in operation, they recently attacked an arms warehouse from which they took 2,000 cartridges of dynamite. With this supply, they began to carry out a full-scale plan of violence. On their itinerary of crime they made clandestine visits to a number of cities in the Andean region where no one could fail to hear their deafening message of terror.

This series of violent deeds seems to be the prelude to activities on a more vast scale, to be conducted in alternation or at the same time in other Latin American countries, the sort of activities from which our nation recently suffered from and has now overcome. But it is not necessary to venture into the area of conjectures to observe the purpose of the many attacks committed by the Peruvian commandos, for they recently distributed thousands of fliers announcing the start of a "peoples' war." Once more we watch the entry on the stage of the everlasting authors of chaos, who want to destroy institutions and create the conditions favoring the coming of a totalitarian regime whose strings will be pulled from Havana and which will be strictly supervised by Moscow. Unfortunately, the disruptive activities of the group have generated a temporary disagreement between part of the government and some of the police forces.

That is how terrorism works to undermine democracy, by making use of the protection of democratic freedoms.

7679
CSO: 3010

ARABS BUY CAPE ELEUTHERA RESORT

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 19 Sep 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Cape Eleuthera resort at south Eleuthera has been sold to a group of Arab investors for an undisclosed sum.

The new owners are Sheik Abudal-Razzq Bougary, Mohammed Redha Alaywan and Dr Marius E. Araktingi of Saudi Arabia. They are represented by Anjie Smith of Anjean International, an investment company based in Houston, Texas.

Mr Smith has been appointed managing director of the hotel and Bahamian Tyrone Thurston, presently general manager at the Balmoral Beach Hotel, will become Director of Hotel Operations at Cape Eleuthera on October 1.

Cape Eleuthera was owned and operated since 1970 by the GAC Corporation, a land development firm based in Coral Gables, Florida. The hotel was sold to the Saudi group in August, the new owners buying a majority of shares in what was known as GAC Eleuthera Ltd. The company is now called Cape Eleuthera Ltd and the hotel will be known as the Cape Eleuthera Resort and Yacht Club.

The property consists of 5,000 acres of land on the southern tip of the island of Eleuthera, with an 18-hole championship golf course, a 6,500-foot airstrip, a marina which can berth yachts up to 200 feet, six tennis courts (two lighted) and a swimming pool. There are 128 suites in the hotel.

A $5 million expansion approval is planned for next year subject to government approval. The expansion will add 64 suites to the hotel.

All of the hotel staff, with the exception of manager Earl Hall, have been retained by the new owners. Captain Dennis Knowles of Nassau will be in charge of aviation at the resort.

GAC Corporation had owned 75 per cent of GAC Eleuthera Ltd. "We found it not in our corporate best interest to retain those shares," a company spokesman said. Lawyers for the sale of Cape Eleuthera were Seligman, Maynard & Co.

CSO: 3020

GOVERNMENT 'UNAWARE' OF ALLEGED IRAQI ARMS REQUESTS

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 30 Sep 80 p 9

[Text] Itamaraty and the army said yesterday that they were unaware of any urgent request from Iraq for the purchase of nationally manufactured weapons. Sources linked to the ENGESA [Specialized Engineers, Inc.] management--main Brazilian suppliers of military equipment to Iraq--in turn refused to comment on the report that the government of Iraq had entered into contracts for the purchase for quick delivery of an unknown number of light, wheeled armored vehicles of the Cascavel and Urutu models. According to Engineer Ricardo Fischa, all the company had to say on the subject was "no comment."

In Brasilia, the office of the minister of foreign affairs yesterday afternoon denied that the Iraqi government had made an urgent request for the purchase of weapons through its embassy in that capital. According to the office spokesman, the report that circulated "could even be true but if such a request was made, it is still in the hands of the Iraqi ambassador, who has not yet delivered it to the minister of foreign affairs."

Army

"You have just given me some very good news, the news that the war is winding down. I hope this comes true because war is a scourge for humanity and it brings no good to anyone."

This was the reply made by the chief of the Army War Materiel Department, Gen Benedicto Maia Pinto de Almeida, to a reporter of O ESTADO when queried about the report published by international news agencies that the war between Iraq and Iran is ending because of a shortage of weapons and that Iraq had entered into contact with Brazil to make orders of an emergency nature. General Benedicto said that he has no information on the report disseminated by the agencies and said that the War Materiel Department does not participate in negotiations for the sale of weapons.

Despite the attitude of the sources linked to ENGESA, who refused to comment on the subject, in official sectors the hypothesis of a quick delivery of national armored vehicles to Iraq is viewed as "very possible." According to an official of the sector at the federal level, "prior negotiations conducted at the level of government had already foreseen such a situation."

Regular Stocks

Military sources of Sao Jose dos Campos, who have free access to the war materiel industries located in the municipality, declared they are unaware of the request from Iraq that Brazil supply new weapons to that country. However, a high-ranking officer disclosed that in case the request is confirmed, the war materiel industry located in the country is in a position to supply it immediately since regular stocks are maintained "precisely to attend to unexpected orders such as that."

That officer revealed that "in a war situation there is a transfer," which means that another country not involved in the conflict is considered a "friend" of one of the belligerents and it transfers its weapons "generally with their prices marked on the scale of new ones." According to the source, various governments have an interest in that type of an arrangement because "weapons have a short useful life period since new techniques and more modern and sophisticated equipment are always appearing." Questioned as to whether the Brazilian Government itself would be in a position to transfer its military equipment to Iraq, the office declared it is "although it does not believe in that type of operation," due mainly to the distance between the two continents.

8908
CSO: 3001

PETROLEUM, OTHER BUSINESS DEALS OFFERED BY USSR

Oil Purchases Likely

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 30 Sep 80 p 10

[Text] Minister of Planning Delfim Netto yesterday described the hypothesis that Brazil could purchase petroleum from the Soviet Union to replace Iraqui oil, whose imports have been cut off due to the war between Iraq and Iran, as "a not impossible occurrence." Before accepting the hypothesis, the minister, crushed among the hundreds of people who were attending the swearing in of General Costa Cavalcanti as president of ELETROBRAS [Brazilian Electric Power Companies, Inc.] in Rio, said that PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporations] "with long experience in the field of oil imports," will know what to do in that hour of crisis. Later, as he left the site, Delfim declared categorically: "There will be no rationing."

PETROBRAS President Shigeaki Ueki already stated that during the meeting of the National Energy Commission [CNE] several measures were adopted aimed at "rationalizing" consumption of petroleum byproducts. He explained that he had not participated in the CNE meeting and that those results were sent to him by Minister of Mines and Energy Cesar Cals. He, in turn, although pressed by newsmen, refused to comment on the prospects of a crisis for Brazil resulting from the war between Iraq and Iran. Ueki said that measures as to how the "rationalization" will be handled will be announced. These measures are aimed at substantially reducing the demand for petroleum byproducts.

In Brasilia, the minister of foreign affairs yesterday confirmed that Brazilian Ambassador to Moscow Sizinio Pontes de Nogueira received an offer from the government of the Soviet Union to supply 300,000 tons of petroleum, the equivalent of 21,000 barrels daily, which would be sold on the basis of approximately $33 per barrel. According to the spokesman of the minister's office, the proposal was made more or less a week before the beginning of the war between Iran and Iraq and Itamaraty immediately forwarded it to PETROBRAS, which will have the final word. Unofficially it was said in Itamaraty that at the time the offer did not make much of an impression but with the beginning of the war between the two petroleum exporters, it is almost certain that now the subject will be viewed from a different angle.

Collaboration

"There is no reason for haste nor is there the need to slow down the economy," declared Minister of Industry and Commerce Joao Camilo Penna in Belo Horizonte yesterday, warning, however, that "if Brazilian society does not cooperate with the effort to reduce consumption of petroleum, the government will have to move toward rationing sooner."

Camilo Penna said that the war between Iran and Iraq "did not catch Brazil napping but very active in substituting for petroleum byproducts." He added that measures already adopted will lead the country to the "rationalization and national production of energy supplies," providing that society joins in "a deliberate, determined, and mature way in the process of containing consumption."

The board of directors of PETROBRAS is going to meet again today to make an evaluation of the Middle East situation. Yesterday, while the press office reported that the company received offers of advance shipments of petroleum by suppliers in Africa and Latin America, those responsible for the area of negotiations were unaware of the alleged offers. They explained that at this time the market is characterized by "a general wait and see attitude."

Soviet Minister To Visit

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 3 Oct 80 p 18

[Text] Belo Horizonte--The vice minister for Iron and Steel of the Soviet Union, N. A. Tulin, will arrive in the country at the end of the week at the head of a scientific mission for a visit of 3 days to industrial installations and the site of the Brazilian Mining and Metallurgy Company [CBMM] of the Moreira Salles Group in Araxa. That ministry and the company signed an agreement of scientific and technological cooperation.

The agreement is part of the program for the development of niobium, which CBMM has been developing since 1975 and which has already reached 39 countries. It is aimed at encouraging the use and applications of niobium. According to the company, the coming of the Soviet delegation is significant "since the USSR is the greatest producer of steel in the world today and its iron and steel industry continues to expand."

The Charles Hatchett prize, created by the CBMM and awarded annually during the annual meeting of the Metals Society to the authors of the work considered important in the field of niobium production and the use of steels using that alloy, was awarded this year to Phillippe Maitrepierre and three other authors doing the same research. He will receive the niobium medal on 14 October in Belo Horizonte and will visit installations of the company in Araxa.

Produced in the country since the decade of the 60's, niobium is today the second greatest Brazilian mining-metallurgical export product. The CBMM is responsible for more than .5 percent of all foreign sales made by the country. Its deposits in Araxa contain reserves of more than 460 million tons of pyrochlore.

At this time the installed capacity for the production of the metal and its alloys is already sufficient for supplying more than 65 percent of the world demand for niobium.

Deputies to Visit USSR

Brasilia CORREIO BRAZILIENSE in Portuguese 3 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] The president of the Chamber of Deputies, Flavio Marcilo, yesterday confirmed his visit to Moscow on 7 December with Soviet Ambassador Dimitri Jukov, to reciprocate for a visit made by a delegation of the Soviet Supreme headed by Deputy Eduard A. Abevarnadze to Brazil at his invitation in April.

At that time Jukov gave Marcilio the text of an appeal made by parliamentarians and parliaments of Europe and the world during the meeting of representatives of the parliaments of the Warsaw Treaty member countries for a strengthening of world peace and security and the elimination of the possibilities of a new war, asking him that he subsequently express his opinion on the subject.

Netto to Visit Moscow

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 28 Sep 80 p 29

[Article by Frota Neto: "Delfim Goes To Moscow to Intensify Deals"]

[Text] Brasilia--Delfim Netto is going to Moscow. The time now is next November but it could be postponed until March 1981. The trip by the minister of planning is the first visit by a minister of state to the Soviet Union the performance of his duties. Bilateral deals are the reason for the trip. And the mission in itself makes possible that which has been speculated for some time: Before ending his term in office, President Figueiredo may make a visit to East Europe.

Greater exports, even manufactured goods, financed imports, including turbines for hydroelectric powerplants, are the reason for the trip being prepared. Two of Delfim's principal advisers are discussing the subject with different parties. Minister Jose Botafoggo Goncalves, secretary of Economic Coordination and International Technical Information (SUBIN), who has already served more than 2 years in the Brazilian embassy in Moscow and who worked with Delfim in the embassy in Paris, is one of them. Akihiro Ikeda, his principal economic adviser and special secretary for economic affirs, is the other.

However, clearing the horizon, taking the path and completing the agenda is only part of the preliminary decisions to be made for the trip by the minister. Another part, as important as this is the removal of possible obstacles of "political prejudgements," to the increase in commercial relations between the two countries. Delfim does not merely want to make a trip. He will only sign the agenda after all initial contacts point to sure indications that the results of the mission will be at a level and degree that will justify and require the presence of the most important minister in the Brazilian economic area in Moscow.

Reasons For Going

According to well-placed sources, the ministers of planning, finance and foreign affairs have been working on this subject for some time. The main aspect opened by the worsening of the trade balance (a growing deficit) and, therefore, of the balance of payments, is that of generating imports linked to financing, not to speak of auxiliary lines of credit as well as "matched operations" of Brazilian exports.

With the trip to Japan in November practically confirmed, the first estimates of Delfim Netto's voyage takes him to Paris on his return. There he should conclude negotiations for financing of equipment for PETROBRAS. A week in Tokyo plus 2 more days in Paris should be enough because the minister of planning "is not accustomed" to very prolonged absences from the country.

Instead of taking advantage of the itinerary to Tokyo for "a sidetrip" to Moscow, Delfim could make a special trip to the Soviet Union. There he would count on support located in France itself. The most important foreign bank in Paris (Commerce Bank of Northern Europe) is Soviet controlled and is headed by the "Red Baron." It should be through that establishment that financing operations may be realized.

Committed to continuous and accelerated foreign sales, the government discovers that the markets of East Europe have been disdained because of "political prejudgements" and by the fact that many of those markets deal only in "barter." That is no longer the case with the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and Romania. Tied in with this panorama is the fact that this month Minister of Mines and Energy Cesar Cals was in Czechoslovakia, after having completed a work agenda in Romania and Poland.

During the first half of the coming month of [illegible], an important national presence is scheduled: it will be the Brazilian Consumer Goods Exposition in Warsaw. Those same national exhibitors, around 2[illegible] of them, will go to Moscow next November. They will serve as a thermometer, a sort of "reconnaisance troop for Delfim," to check the possibilities for complementary business in an agenda, which is intended to be of large-scale economic-financial agreements.

Hydroelectric Powerplants, The Main Item

As it stands, this trip by Delfim to Moscow is scheduled for November. The replacement of Mauricio Schulmann by Costa Cavalcanti as president of ELETROBRAS could, however, affect the timetable. The reason for this is that Delfim must take for negotiation with the Soviets the "packages" having to do with the construction of the hydroelectric powerplants of Xingo and Ilha Grande. Studies being made by ELETROBRAS with the aid of the Special State Company Oversight Secretariat (SEST), are aimed at defining financing and limits of the negotiations linked to them.

If by that time the studies have not been completed, the trip must be postponed until the beginning of the Russian spring thaw (March 1981 more or less). Businessmen of the sector have already been consulted by the government on national participation in both undertakings and on the total participation of Soviet materials and resources. The hydroelectric plant of Ilha Grande will be located on the Parana River, on the line between Parana and Mato Grosso do Sul. The future hydroelectric plant of Xingo (with delayed studies) will be located 40 miles downstream from the Paulo Afonso Dam in the state of Alagoas.

However, while the hydroelectric plants are the principal item, they do not encompass all the potential of the business deals. On the Brazilian side, sales could go beyond the traditional goods such as coffee, cocoa and sometimes soybeans and sugar. An attempt will be made to place manufactured goods on the market, particularly shoes and textiles, while electrical appliances are not completely discounted.

In addition to financed imports of turbines and complementary parts for hydroelectric plants (copper wire and metal sheets), Brazil could buy cement for those projects from the Soviet Union. And, as was pointed out by a source "It would be good if Brazil had the chance to buy some petroleum also."

A balance of trade relations between the two countries during the last 6 years reveals the following position, which favors Brazil with surpluses:

Trade Exchange
Brazil-USSR ($1,000)

Year	Exports	Imports	Surplus
1974	135,380	67,122	68,258
1975	397,311	24,725	372,559
1976	411,068	21,501	389,567
1977	277,564	9,251	268,313
1978	178,943	20,109	158,834
1979	226,065	41,635	184,430

8908
CSO: 3001

PRODUCTION, CONSUMPTION OF PETROLEUM, ALTERNATIVE FUELS

Import Costs Rise

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 15 Sep 80 p 16

[Text] Brasilia--Imports of petroleum and derivatives from January through July of this year were about $5.9 billion, or 46 percent of total Brazilian import costs for the period. This disturbs economic authorities, since the nation's expenditures for petroleum in 7 months are nearly as much as those for all of 1979, when they were $6.263 billion, or 34.9 percent of total Brazilian imports of $17.9 billion.

Despite this increased expenditure for petroleum and derivatives, in reality Brazil imported a smaller quantity from January through July of this year than in the comparable period last year. Thus, in 7 months of 1980, Brazil imported 30.2 million tons of petroleum and derivatives, which is 4.2 percent less than in the same 1979 period, while spending 87 percent more than it did from January through July last year.

Petroleum's share in the nation's total imports has been increasing steadily since 1973. In 1972, before the petroleum price increase imposed by the producing countries, the share of petroleum purchases in total Brazilian imports was 8.1 percent. It went to 9.8 percent in 1973, but jumped to 19.7 percent in 1974. Since then the nation has been spending more and more foreign exchange on petroleum and derivatives, so that in 1979, when total Brazilian imports were $17.9 billion, purchase of petroleum derivatives amounted to $6.2 billion, or 34.9 percent of the total.

In analyzing import trends this year, government experts note that by the end of the first 6 months, when imports totaled $11.2 billion, this already represented an increase of 50 percent over the first 6 months of 1979. Although the rates of increase for the 12-month period ending with each of the first 6 months have been rising, 1980 cumulative total imports through each month of this year compared to the same period of 1979 show a growth peak in the January-February cumulative total of 157 percent (1980 compared to 1979); they then fell to 150 percent for the January-through-May and January-through-June periods (1980 as compared to 1979).

According to foreign-trade experts, this trend is confirmed by the growth rates of imports during the year, taking January 1980 as a base. After the peak of 108.4 percent, these fell to 97.7 percent in May and 96.1 percent in June. They further assert that the disparity between the growth rates of 1980 and those resulting from comparing 1980 cumulative totals with the corresponding 1979 figures is in large part due to petroleum prices, which have doubled from 1979 to 1980.

Planning Ministry analysts think the growth of imports is due mainly to petroleum prices and to a mixture of prices and quantity for other goods. As to petroleum prices, these analysts say that OPEC intentions to index crude-oil prices could further aggravate the foreign impact on our trade balance. But in view of the trend to recession and deceleration in the world economy, this outcome does not seem likely. Everything else remaining constant, petroleum prices should be relatively stable until the end of the year. Such an event, together with an ample amount of domestic stocks and expansion--even limited--of domestic production, should help restrain expansion of petroleum imports.

Share of Petroleum in Total Brazilian Imports, 1972-80

Year	Petroleum (millions of dollars)	Total (millions of dollars)	Petroleum As Percent of Total
1972	341	4,232	8.1
1973	605	6,192	9.8
1974	2,495	12,641	19.7
1975	2,748	12,210	22.5
1976	3,701	12,347	30.0
1977	3,663	12,023	30.5
1978	4,089	13,683	30.0
1979	6,263	17,961	34.9
1980*	5,953	13,070	46.0

*Through July
Source: Ministry of Mines and Energy

Gasoline Consumption Decreases

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 12 Sep 80 p 22

[Text] Rio de Janeiro--Consumption of regular gasoline (without addition of anhydrous alcohol) was 774.2 million liters in August, representing a 39 percent decrease from the same month last year, when it was 1.27 billion liters, PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] reported yesterday, in publishing statistics on domestic consumption of petroleum derivatives.

Overall consumption of petroleum derivatives in August fell 9.3 percent compared to August 1979, with a total of 5.255 million liters. From January through August fuel consumption nationally fell 1.1 percdnt from the same period last year.

Fuel oil also showed a decline of 6.7 percent in consumption, comparing August this year (1.568 million cubic meters) with August 1979 (1.68 million cubic meters). In the first 8 months of the year consumption of fuel oil fell 4.6 percent, with a total of 12.116 million cubic meters, compared to consumption of 12.704 million cubic meters in the same period last year.

Among other petroleum derivatives, diesel fuel continued its rising trend in August, with consumption of 1.664 million liters, an increase of 9.4 percent over August 1979. Through August the increase was 8 percent (12.179 million liters) over the same period last year, when it totaled 11.276 million liters.

Risk Contracts

"PETROBRAS has reached the upper limit of attractions offered foreign companies to participate in petroleum exploration through risk contracts," geologist Lauro Vieira asserted yesterday. He is superintendent of SUPEX (PETROBRAS Superintendency of Exploration Contracts), the agency responsible for making and supervising risk contracts. Vieira thus confirmed statements made by Carlos Santana, PETROBRAS marketing director.

Superintendent Lauro Vieira believes the terms of the contract are not the main factor responsible for greater interest by petroleum companies in the contracts: "In the first place, there is the role of the nation's geology itself and its more or less favorable conditionsfor petroleum accumulation. In the second place, there is the political stability of national institutions, serving to assure foreign companies that 'the rules of the game' will not change."

Lauro Vieira, who has headed SUPEX since its founding in 1976 to implement risk-contract policy, said PETROBRAS has introduced since then a number of innovations to facilitate the work of companies sharing the risk of exploring for petroleum in Brazil. The most recent, approved after the fourth bidding round, was to supply information to bidders about an entire geological basin rather than only about the tracts bid. Such an arrangement, according to Vieira, allows companies a choice of exploration options with a broader view of the area in which they are to work.

Since 1976, 58 risk contracts have been signed with petroleum coumpanies from here and abroad (mostly abroad). Five more contracts will be signed this month, according to SUPEX. They correspond to a total of 63 tracts in onshore and offshore sedimentary basins.

Garoupa Accident Loss Uninsured

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 11 Sep 80 p 18

[Text] Carlos Sant'Anna, commercial director and acting president of PETROBRAS, said yesterday that the company did not insure the equipment for the Garoupa provisional system because "the insurance would have been very expensive, as it would cover a $230 million system. He explained that PETROBRAS, rather than placing insurance with outsiders, insured itself, "that is, it set up reserves for accidents."

Carlos Sant'Anna did not wish to reveal, however, the amount reserved by PETROBRAS for this type of insurance--which in fact is really not insurance--arguing that "not all financial information should be revealed." The Garoupa provisional system's processing tower, which collapsed Sunday, in the Campos Basin, cost the company $9 million, a loss that will be increased by 300 million cruzeiros a month, which represents the lost production of 39,000 barrels a day.

Nothing to Worry About?

The PETROBRAS commercial director made a point of stressing that "the important thing is that the assets were safeguarded and the stockholders don't have to worry. PETROBRAS has the highest regard for its stockholders." He said further that petroleum consumption will not be affected by the loss of 39,000 barrels from the 203,000 barrels a day that were being produced domestically and again guaranteed that there need not be any increase in imports.

Mr Carlos Sant'Anna remarked that "petroleum supplies will last for as much as 8 months and, besides, consumption is decreasing." Meanwhile, however, statistical data published by the company show that supply is not all that ample (see table below). This is because PETROBRAS management has asserted that supplies increased after January when, besides the usual supply from Iraq of 400,000 barrels daily, 230,000 barrels were shipped as reimbursement for BRASPETRO [PETROBRAS International, Inc] expenditures in the Majnoon Field.

PETROBRAS management insists that only 2 months will be needed to repair the damage from the accident that occurred in the Campos Basin. But Mr Sant'Anna already admits that this "is the minimum" period and explains that "we are still recovering from the impact of the accident."

The PETROBRAS commercial director was also quite reticent about saying what the company is doing to discover the causes of the accident, which he himself agrees had no apparent basis. "We don't want to say anything just now, because several groups are studying the matter," he asserted. Only after much insistence was he persuaded to say that construction of the tower was certified by Lloyd's Register and experts from the construction firm and the project designer, Chicago Bridge and Iron Company, are arriving in Rio de Janeiro today to join PETROBRAS in analyzing the cause of the accident. The ship "Presidente Prudente" also arrives in Rio de Janeiro today for investigations.

Month	Imports Per Day	Imports Plus Domestic Production Per Day	Consumption Per Day(*)	Balance Per Day
January	875,933	1,06[illegible],223	[illegible],091,822	- 28,599
February	839,389	1,026,147	[illegible]	- 59,854
March	999,501	1,177,242	1,125,098	+ [illegible],144
April	1,079,154	1,269,954	1,080,202	+189,752
May	946,543	1,137,672	1,160,403	- 22,731
June	877,874	1,075,174	1,160,085	- 84,911
July	774,278	974,342	1[illegible],911	-207,369

(*)Consumption includes 43,100 barrels a day of anhydrous (added to gasoline) and hydrous alcohol.

Garoupa Faces 6-Month Shutdown

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 10 Sep 80 p 25

[Text] Rio de Janeiro--Contrary to what PETROBRAS announced officially yesterday, petroleum production of the Garoupa provisional system will be interrupted not for 60 days but for at least 180 days, which will represent a loss of 7.02 million barrels of domestic output during the period. This information was transmitted yesterday by PETROBRAS management to Mines and Energy Minister Cesar Cals shortly before he left for Caracas, where he will participate in a meeting with representatives of Latin American petroleum producing countries.

Cals demanded a realistic assessment by PETROBRAS management of the accident that caused one of the operating towers of the Garoupa provisional system to collapse, so that the Mines and Energy Ministry can restudy the need for foreign supplies of crude oil in view of the system's breakdown. It had been producing about 39,000 barrels of crude oil daily.

The period of 6 months was estimated as "the minimum," as until yesterday PETROBRAS management was not in a position to determine exactly how long the system's eight wells would not be pumping oil in the Campos Basin.

PETROBRAS specialists expressed the opinion that haste in accelerating production from the Campos Basin oil fields at any cost was the main reason for the series of accidents that characterized installation of the Garoupa provisional production system. This decision was made directly by the then minister of mines and energy, Shigeaki Ueki, now president of the state enterprise, in the first months following discovery of the Garoupa field, which occurred in December 1974.

PETROBRAS production experts point out that the system as conceived was entirely new on the international market and its use in deep water was a challenge to Brazilian engineering. At the time, these experts recall, it was useless to argue that, given the depth of the area and the fact that Brazil was going to produce petroleum for the first time in deep water, the proper technique would be based upon a study of the definitive system after evaluating the oil-bearing potential of the deposit. The then Minister Ueki managed to impose the provisional system solution on the PETROBRAS technical staff so that in any event within 2 years Brazil could count upon the Campos Basin petroleum.

The series of problems that later occurred in the production area led to a management crisis at PETROBRAS, however, causing dismissal of the production director, engineer Haroldo Ramos da Silva (now in BRASPETRO), the DEXPRO [expansion unknown] superintendent, engineer Francisco de Paula Medeiros (who became the assistant head of the PETROBRAS office in London) and the engineer responsible for creating the provisional system, Paulo Vasconcellos, also later transferred abroad.

Government Pricing Policy Discussed

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 31 Aug 80 p 10

[Editorial: "Word To Be Kept"]

[Text] We are finally beginning to take more decisive steps toward an energy policy to quickly replace petroleum derivatives. Except for the alcohol program, which is shaping up as an undertaking very close to maturity--the public's acceptance of alcohol-powered vehicles and the government's decision to study massive foreign participation in its production and export--compared to the other substitutes, we are proceeding with a bureaucratic lethargy that is combined with the perplexity of one who has not yet assimilated the acceleration in petroleum prices, especially in the last 12 months.

At the last meeting of the National Energy Commission, the relationship that is to prevail in setting prices of substitutes for petroleum derivatives was worked out. Alcohol is not to cost more than 65 percent as much as gasoline and coal is not to cost more than 70 percent as much as fuel oil. Furthermore, diesel fuel prices are to increase at a faster rate than those for gasoline until the subsidy currently granted diesel fuel is eliminated.

If these ratios are maintained in such proportions for a reasonable length of time--that is to say, for a really long time (a remark that is all the more necessary when one recalls how changeable and unstable decisions about the rules of the economic game are in this country)--we will be starting to head in the right direction.

Without knowing what prices will prevail for long, producers and consumers of petroleum-derivative substitutes are unable to organize, to make plans or even to make decisions. This was the major obstacle that existed, for example, for coal miners if they were deciding whether to invest more, in order to produce more, and for coal users, who intended to use it to replace fuel oil but did not know for certain whether they were taking the most efficient step.

It has always been said that the battle to replace petroleum in Brazil depended upon two apparently simple points: that private initiative play the preponderant role in production and marketing petroleum-derivative substitutes; and that ratios that were to govern prices of substitutes in relation to derivatives be established as soon as possible--and with some stability.

One point was intimately linked to the other. Private initiative cannot operate without knowing whether or not it will make money--that is, what the rules of the game are in setting prices. The only one who can embark upon an entrepreneurial undertaking without having the least idea of its profitably, as is known, is state enterprise.

The longer uncertainty about prices continued, the less were the chances that private initiative would participate effectively in the energy battle--and the greater were the chances that state enterprise would once again intervene. And, in such a case, the risks are frightening. Rather than there being only one PETROBRAS--and one is already enough--there would be a coal PETROBRAS, an alcohol PETROBRAS, an oilpalm PETROBRAS and even a cassava PETROBRAS, which it has already attempted in Minas Gerais, with its accustomed inefficiency.

Now, the government has but to keep its own word and maintain this price policy. Provide the necessary infrastructure--which is particularly decisive in relation to coal--and let the economy function. In a country where the govenrment is accustomed to believe that the economy cannot function without it, the battle for petroleum substitution could be a fine demonstration that the market (as an English prophet named Adam Smith, so disrespected in Brazil, has already said) generally does a good job.

SUDECO Promotes Energy Potential

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 5 Sep 80 p 17

[Text] Brasilia--Rational development of the Center-West's energy potential requires extension of the industrial-development axis to the region, Rene Pompeo de Pina, superintendent of the Center-West Development Superintendency (SUDECO), asserted yesterday.

In his opinion, rather than transport energy from the Center-West to other consuming centers, new industrial facilities should be directed to the region as a way of developing it and avoiding spending money for transporting energy.

With a hydroelectric potential estimated at 30 million kilowatts and ample land with outstanding climatic conditions for developing energy based upon biomass, the Center-West region, according to the SUDECO superintendent, has excellent qualifications for providing an industrial base.

Rene Pompeo de Pina said that establishing a continuous line of credit consistent with the region's characteristics is indespensable for attracting industrial investments to the Center-West.

The Center-West is an option for economic development, whereas the Northeast, for example, is an option for social development, he asserted.

Of the total of about 30 million kilowatts of hydroelectric potential in the Center-West, only 525,500 are installed, of which 449,000 are in Goias; 31,900 are in Mato Grosso do Sul; 18,600 are in Mato Grosso; and 26,000 kilowatts are in the Federal District.

Babassu

Data gathered by SUDECO indicate that the Center-West region has about 5 million hectares covered with babassu, providing an output of 15 million tons of nuts a year.

If this output were used entirely, it would provide 1.2 billion liters of alcohol, 2.2 million tons of charcoal, 750,000 tons of tar, 2.5 billion cubic meters of fuel gas and 600,000 tons of oil.

To initiate full utilization of the babassu nut, SUDECO is preparing three projects for pioneer plants that would be set up within 4 years and that would function as a demonstration to private initiative and as a laboratory for improvement of existing technology.

The three projects, which would be set up in the states of Goias, Rondonia and Mato Grosso, are budgeted at 300 million cruzeiros and would have financial assistance from the Ministry of Mines and Energy.

The units are being planned to process 40,000 tons of nuts a year. Each of them would produce 10,000 liters of alcohol a day, 5,000 tons of charcoal, 2,000 tons of tar, 1,600 tons of oil and 800 tons of high-protein meal to be used in making animal rations.

SUDECO's purpose in setting up the three pioneering units is to demonstrate to businessmen the technical and economic feasibility of completely utilizing the babassu, which is still virtually unexploited. According to an expert in the sector, any utilization of the babassu, if only use of the seed to produce oil, is already economically feasible. The venture will become more profitable to the extent that all the possible byproducts based on the nut are taken advantage of.

Ministry of Industry and Commerce sources already agree that projects for full utilization of the babassu nut can be approved by the Executive Commission on Alcohol (CENAL) and receive financing from PROALCOOL [National Alcohol Program], provided they are shown to be technically and economically feasible.

In an industrial plant for complete utilization of the babassu nut, the alcohol-producing unit represents about 70 percent of the total investment and, according to the source, virtually assures the venture's feasibility, which accounts for its inclusion in PROALCOOL, even though the project has the purpose of obtaining various other products.

Rene Pompeo de Pina promises that SUDECO will encourage each and every entrepreneurial initiative in utilization of babassu or any other alternative energy source, "as the Center-West region is in the best position to develop this sector,"

In establishing as a standard model units to process 40,000 tons of nuts annually, SUDECO had in mind enabling regional entreppeneurs, usually small or medium in size, to be in a position to carry out the projects.

The three pioneering units that are to be installed will be turned over to private initiative as soon as they fulfill their purpose, which is to demonstrate their technical and economic feasibility to the private sector. According to SUDECO experts, several businessmen of the region have consulted the agency about complete utilization of the babassu nut, which opens ample prospects for use of this raw material as an important energy source for the nation.

Wood

The region's wood potential is virtually inexhaustible, provided it is developed rationally, suggesting ample possibilities for producing charcoal, a natural substitute for fuel oil in boilers or even to generate electrical energy.

SUDECO has been making a detailed study aimed at utilizing the wood existing in the area that will be flooded by the reservoir of the Samuel Hydroelectric Station on the Jamari River in Rondonia.

The project provides for production of charcoal, fuel gas and tar. The last two byproducts can be used in producing electrical energy and the charcoal can be exported to the South-Central region or even to the foreign market. SUDECO's intention is that this project be carried out by private enterprise.

Rene Pompeo de Pina also pointed out the region's great potential for producing alcohol from sugar cane and cassava and for producing vegetable oils from grain crops. There is plenty of land and climatic conditions are excellent, he asserted.

Option

Cuiba--"The Center-West is the option for the most rapid return on investment," the SUDECO superintendent, Rene Pompeo de Pina, said yesterday in speaking to a group of business and political figures at an informal meeting in the office of the acting governor of Mato Grosso, Jose Vilanova Torres. The SUDECO superintendent came to Cuiba to hold meetings with businessmen of the region about the Seminar for Development of the Center-West, which will be held 19 and 20 September in Brasilia, with participation by Mato Grosso, Goias and the Federal District. All the common problems of the two large states of the Center-West region will be discussed at the seminar.

Budget Increase for PROALCOOL

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 5 Sep 80 p 24

[Text] Industry and Commerce Minister Camilo Penna said yesterday in Sao Jose dos Campos that "contrary to what was announced in some newspapers," his ministry's budget for 1981 will be 115 percent greater than this year's. He also revealed that the National Alcohol Program will receive about 60 billion cruzeiros next year, "the largest allocation for a specific sector granted in the federal government's budget for 1981," adding that SIDERBRAS [Brazilian Iron and Steel Corporation] will have its capital increased by about 15 billion cruzeiros.

The cabinet minister also asserted that state enterprises "are not the cause of Brazil's ills," pointing out that they have played a preponderant role in the nation's economy and in the last decade provided enormous infrastructure services. "For this reason I believe their continuity is very important to the national economy and they cannot be used as the scapegoats for our problems," he said.

Penna said that for these reasons he has been urging that the budgets of state enterprises not be cut, "and I have the satisfaction of reporting that Planning Minister Delfim Netto and President Figueiredo have been receptive to my arguments."

According to the industry and commerce minister, only the budget for the National Economic Development Bank(BNDE) remains to be settled by Planning Minister Delfim Netto. But negotiations are coming to a close and next week he will be able to report the "news."

STI Priority

Continued development of the project for constructing a motor with completely domestic technology, powered exclusively by alcohol, using up to 30 percent less fuel and intended for urban transportation is the priority of the Industrial Technology Secretariat (STI).

In providing this information yesterday, Minister Camilo Penna added that "we are studying the possibility of a Brazilian industrial firm being able to take on the project."

Ethanol From Amazon Wood

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 10 Sep 80 p 19

[Text] Exports of alcohol based upon wood taken from the Amazon forest may reach $16 billion a year if a project of the SUFRAMA (Superintendency of the Manaus Free Trade Zone) superintendent, economist Rui Lins, is approved. In his opinion sugarcane alcohol will be insufficient to meet demand and production of ethanol based upon cellulose may become the best solution for replacing gasoline.

"In the Amazon region, timber is being cleared, not devastated. Of the 5 million square kilometers in the Amazon forest on Brazilian territory, only 1.3 percent has been cleared. I also am concerned about settlement of the Amazon region, about preserving its resources; but we can no longer continue lying in a splendid cradle: it is urgent to transform the Amazon region into the largest producing and exporting source of 'green petroleum' in the world," the SUFRAMA superintendent said.

Mr Rui Lins went on to say that each barrel of alcohol exported by Brazil provides enough foreign exchange to import two barrels of petroleum. And in order to take advantage of that market SUFRAMA is proposing to the government creation of "renewable energy matrices," which means utilization of the forest to produce ethanol--alcohol from wood--with intensive reforestation. Besides alcohol, lignin, furfural, ammonium sulfate, animal rations, methane gas and carbon dioxide would be produced.

"If we set the goal of producing for export 500,000 barrels of alcohol a day, we would need 440,000 tons of wood per day, which would represent about 20 million hectares or 200,000 square kilometers of renewable energy matrices, equivalent to 5 percent of the total area of the Amazon region, entirely renewable every 5 years. The resulting foreign-exchange receipts would be about $16 billion a year," the SUFRAMA study of the subject says.

In Sao Paulo, the director of SOPRAL (Society of Sugar and Alcohol Producers), Fernando Reis, said yesterday that the government should stimulate alcohol exports, since the nation has a reasonable supply of gasoline. "Today," he pointed out, "gasoline is exported at a price of $15 FOB per hectoliter, whereas alcohol is $32. Profit from exporting alcohol is greater, and the government should be burning the available gasoline, since its price is less on the foreign market."

According to Mr Fernando Reis, alcohol exports "have come to a complete halt due to the fear of producers that there may be a shortage in the domestic market. But there is no possibility of that happening, since the quota allocated to the state of Sao Paulo alone is enough to supply the domestic market."

COALBRA Installing Ethanol Distillery

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 10 Sep 80 p 18

[Text] Campo Grande--The president of COALBRA (Wood Coke and Alcohol, Inc), the company's management and Brazilian Forestry Development Institute [IBDF] experts, at a meeting to be held this afternoon in the Campo Grande Municipal Palace, will discuss installation of an ethanol distillery on the axis between this state capital and the city of Tres Lagoas for utilizing 125,000 hectares of wood of cutting age and production of 100,000 liters daily. The discussion is sponsored by the Association of Mato Grosso do Sul Reforestation Enterprises.

According to information from Manoel Resende, director of the Reforestation Association, 2 pilot plants, each with a capacity to produce 100,000 liters of ethanol a day, will be installed at the same time in Mato Grosso do Sul and in the Minas Triangle. According to calculations by IBDF experts, between $25 million and $32 million is to be invested in each of them. The specialists believe that by utilizing wood byproducts in processing for ethanol production they will be able to reduce the level of investment to the minimum established.

COALBRA specialists went to Mato Grosso do Sul to gather information about conditions in the region, availability of energy, regional infrastructure, manpower availability and raw-material sources for producing ethanol. It was concluded that the region's reforestation areas attain a level of output above the average, reaching 35 to 40 cubic meters of wood a year. Availability of raw material is large, as the state has already planted 415,210 hectares with eucalyptus and pine on the axis between Tres Lagoas and Campo Grande. Of this planted area, 125,000 hectares are ready for immediate cutting. The region's major difficulty is in infrastructure.

COALBRA, whose president is businessman Sergio Roberto Vieira da Mota, is a mixed-capital company, with 51 percent of the stock owned by the Brazilian Forestry Development Institute and the remaining 49 percent by entrepreneurs in the reforestation and capital goods sectors. Location options for the Mato Grosso do Sul plant are either the municipality of Tres Lagoas, which has better infrastructure but has already committed part of its forests to methanol and charcoal production, or Ribas do Rio Pardo, which has nearly 70,000 hectares of forests ready to be cut but has deficient infrastructure. New reforestation investments in the state provide for planting another 47,000 hectares by next year. According to early expectations, the ethanol mill using wood will begin operating as of January 1982 with technology acquired from Switzerland.

Foreign Participation Still Unresolved

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 9 Sep 80 p 17

[Text] Brasilia--Mines and Energy Minister Cesar Cals supports the idea of leasing new agricultural areas to foreign enterprises for periods of 15 to 20 years within an alcohol-producing program parallel to PROALCOOL, exclusively for export. He acknowledged that other government sectors see no harm in simply selling the areas to foreign capital in association with domestic capital.

According to Cesar Cals, his idea sprang from a conference he had with INTERBRAS [PETROBRAS International Trade, Inc], which has received several proposals to this effect from companies and governments of other nations. He then sent a memorandum to Planning Minister Delfim Netto conveying the proposals. On 18 August he received a reply from the planning minister saying what the premises would be for a program of this nature.

The basic premises are that the parallel program not interfere in any way with the current PROALCOOL, although the CNP (National Petroleum Council) may requisition alcohol for domestic use should it be needed; also, the agricultural areas must be new, so as not to interfere with either production of sugar cane for PROALCOOL or production of food.

Minister Cesar Cals explained that the idea is not yet being discussed at the implementation level but that he felt CENAL (National Executive Commission for Alcohol), the IAA [Sugar and Alcohol Institute] and the CNP should stay out of the matter for the present. He thinks the matter should be settled between him and the ministers of planning, agriculture, finance and industry and commerce.

Alcohol-Powered Car Production

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 13 Aug 80 p 23

[Text] Brasilia--The president of the National Association of Autovehicle Manufacturers (ANFAVEA), Mario Garnero, said in Brasilia yesterday that the automobile industry will devote about 45 percent of its production during the second half of this year to vehicles powered exclusively by hydrous alcohol. The forecast for the sector's total production during the period is 500,000 units. Garnero also warned that continued increase of domestic costs could jeopardize competitiveness of Brazilian vehicles, adding that it has not yet become serious only because cars are produced at a lower cost in Brazil than in other countries.

Garnero reported that 40,000 alcohol-powered vehicles were produced during the first 6 months of this year and the expectation is that between 200,000 and 250,000 new cars will be produced from July through December. The agreement signed between the government and the automobile sector provides for production of 250,000 alcohol-powered vehicles this year.

The ANFAVEA president explained, however, that the 80,000 units authorized by the government for converting gasoline motors to alcohol use may not be reached. Should that happen, he said, the quota can be filled by new vehicles and that is why the automobile assembly industry may produce as many as 250,000 vehicles during the final 6 months of the year.

Yesterday Garnero met with Industry and Commerce Minister Joao Camilo Penna to talk about production of vehicles and development of PROALCOOL. On that occasion he repeated the request by administrators of automobile-buying consortia that the installment period for such purchase of alcohol-powered cars be lengthened from 30 to 50 months, as a way of encouraging purchase of that type of vehicle.

Exports

Garnero asserted that the combined effect of the higher inflation rate and pre-established exchange devaluation reduced profits on the sector's exports but will not prevent the automobile industry's foreign sales from reaching about $2.5 billion by December, representing an increase of 35 percent over last year despite the 41-day production halt in April and May due to the ABC [refers to industrial sections of Santo Andre, Sao Bernardo do Campo and Sao Caetano do Sul] strike.

In regard to the domestic market, Mario Garnero said that after a period of low sales there is a definite pickup, suggesting greater activity in coming months, stimulated mainly by introduction of 1981 models, which will come out early in October.

Restrictions on Foreign Capital

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 11 Sep 80 p 19

[Text] Brasilia--Foreign groups wanting to set up alcohol complexes in new agricultural regions of the North and Northeast exclusively for exporting fuel alcohol in a program paralel to PROALCOOL will have to buy their sugar cane from domestic producers. Furthermore, they will not be permitted to form joint ventures with Brazilian firms so as not to jeopardize entry of additional entrepreneurs into PROALCOOL, and will have to acquire all consulting and basic-engineering services here.

In Belo Horizonte, the chairman of the National Energy Commission [CNE], Aureliano Chaves, said yesterday that entry of multinational companies in the alcohol program, although a subject that is being explored in the press, has not yet been put on the CNE agenda.

He pointed out, however, that there is no predisposition against foreign capital, "provided that its activities are properly restricted in such a way that it really responds to the national interest and not to other interests."

Approval yesterday of 5 more PROALCOOL projects totaling 516,702,000 cruzeiros raised to 24 the number of requests for financing approved by the BNDE (National Economic Development Bank) for PROALCOOL, which now represent funds of 4.567 billion cruzeiros.

The funds allocated by BNDE to PROALCOOL are for distilleries in several states, with total production capacity of 2.05 million liters of fuel alcohol daily. Another 38 projects, with requests worth 12.12 billion cruzeiros and producing about 7.9 million liters a day, are now being analyzed.

8834
CSO: 3001

FUNDAMENTAL IDEAS, FUTURE PROSPECTS, COMPOSITION OF PMDB ANALYZED

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 21 Oct 80 p 8

[Text] Brasilia--Is the Party of the Brazilian Democratic Movement (PMDB) a party or a front? It is a party to the extent that it is a program underwritten by many persons who, before underwriting it, approved it. And it is a front insofar as it has within it persons and groups with different positions, coexisting democratically, seeking to win approval for their views by means of the vote and tactically and tacitly accepting the alternation of hegemonic control.

It is difficult, therefore, to define a single profile for the PMDB, since a number of profiles coexist within it, different in political formation, diverging in practice, and having come to the party in such dissimilar ways as the popular vote, amnesty, recovery of political rights, change of party or tactical penetration.

Throughout the entire week O GLOBO talked with the main leaders of this group, establishing the intentions of each of them within the party and establishing guidelines for the definition of an outline of the main Brazilian opposition party on the basis of the definitions heard.

The meeting of regional leaders in Brasilia this week provided a clear example of the political practice of this party-front. For 48 hours in Brasilia, Miguel Arraes, Ulysses Guimaraes, Severo Gomes, Jarbas Vasconcellos, Mario Covas, Almino Afonso, Francisco Pinto, Marcelo Cerqueira, Aurelio Peres, Paulo Brossard, Freitas Nobre and many others who, on the national or regional level, are trying to organize the party, held talks and discussions.

Party or front, what does the PMDB propose?

"To aid in the organization of the people, without sponsoring any social movement," says Odacir Klein, of Rio Grande do Sul, vice leader in the Chamber, in whose view the PMDB "is a party of the masses." This identification with the popular movement, as well as the need to orient the party toward social questions, is accepted by all. The subtle differences come where the methods to be used to achieve the final goal are concerned.

At 26 years of age, Deputy Heitor Alencar Furtado, the youngest in the party and a member of the "Popular Trend," the only formally defined faction within the PMDB, identifies in his party "sectors struggling simply for the legal reorganization of society; they have limitations, and as they want change, they are not conservative, but they do not go beyond institutional issues."

Paulo Brossard, of Rio Grande do Sul, the Senate leader, admits:

"There are a thousand and one discrepancies in what seems to me incidental, in the method of operation, in the stress or this or that suggestion."

He believes that his party "is a human, social group, which rejects abuse, violence, arbitrary reaction, and does so "because it has some consistency, or it would not reject these things."

This consistency, according to Brossard, "comes from a link based on fundamental ideas, which can be summarized in three points: 1) institutional normalization, with the elimination of all the detritus of arbitrary action; 2) increasing concerns of a social nature; and 3) a profound re-examination in the political-economic realm."

Can the PMDB become a great party in the future?

Jarbas Vasconcellos of Pernambuco has no doubt:

"It is the embryo of the great popular democratic party of the future."

He says that the present group "retains characteristics of the old MDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement] with liberals from whom it would be hard to demand greater ideological clarity, but who know how to reconcile it with identification with the most authentic social movements in the country."

There are proposals and proposals, at a faster or slower pace, with or without a defined ideological bent. All however reflect the main goal of the party: to win power.

"The main point in unity is opposition to the regime, which is our greatest enemy, and until it has been destroyed we will not have the conditions for constructing our political projects," says Aurelio Peres of Sao Paulo, the only worker with a parliamentary mandate in the PMDB.

Deputy Audalio Dantas, who also represents Sao Paulo, believes that his party, "although lacking somewhat in articulation, is in the best position to win power, but its fate to date has been to play a thankless role in the scenes staged by a dictatorship in disguise."

"The PMDB is a party which wants to serve the nation rather than be served by it," says Marcelo Cerqueira, of Rio de Janeiro, in whose view the PMDB "is a party, not a front."

"The PMDB is a party," Cerqueira goes on to say, "which is the heir to the traditions of struggle of the MDB, and as such, it is already identified with large public-opinion sectors. It is a party which in alliance with the other opposition parties and sectors of society, whether organized or not, which will serve as an element in its unification for the transition to a democratic regime. But it will not stop there: It will lead the country along the path of substantive social justice."

The largest Brazilian opposition party, it should be said, did not spend its 2 days of meetings seeking a conceptual definition which the militants can repeat throughout the country. What was discussed were the basic lines of conduct and the practical aspects of the party work, already announced, such as the sponsoring of political courses or the publication of a national newspaper.

There are two major reasons why the PMDB members did not spend much time seeking a single definition. The first is the program, a complex of ideas already accepted by all. The second, as Mario Covas of Sao Paulo explained, is based on the belief that "a political party is not an expression of a single will, but on the other hand, it is necessary to work toward a healthy and democratic internal debate, toward a single will, a corollary resulting from these processes of internal discussion."

The PMDB, in Covas' opinion, "will be a party not only oriented toward popular interests, but above all established on the basis of these interests, because it believes that it is much more important than speaking for the people to pave the way so that the people can make their own voice heard."

Identification with the popular movement, as can be seen, involves small doctrinary nuances. For example the concept of "conducting" and "not sponsoring," used by opposition leaders in relation to the social and popular demand movements, do not have the same meaning.

"We do not want to control any popular movement. We want a continuing dialog with the people and to organize with them what the Brazil of tomorrow will be," says former Governor Miguel Arraes.

"I believe it would be very bad for the party if instead of a faction a rigidly organized group were to assume hegemonic control. This would destroy the compromise solution which exists today," Rio Grande do Sul Deputy Joao Gilberto says.

"In truth," says Francisco Pinto of Bahia, "what there is in the PMDB is an organization of diversified thinking, ranging from the liberals to the democratic left, with regard to the program, which is intended to be definitive, adapting itself obviously to the new national realities arising through the popular movement."

On one point, however, there is a consensus among the various factions existing in the PMDB today. The party being organized is better, much better, than the old MDB. The transfer of former MDB members to the government PDS [Social Democratic Party] or their adhesion to other parties such as the PP, PT, PDT or PTB [Brazilian Labor Party] are regarded as qualitative gains, determining factors in the ideological perfecting of the PMDB and greater homogeneity in the political proposals.

In the view of former Minister Severo Gomes, now a founder of the new party, "the groups which were government enclaves within the party have left and there has been a great improvement in quality." Joao Gilberto and Odacir Klein of Rio Grande do Sul agree with him. Both say that "without a doubt the PMDB is much more homogeneous than the MDB was."

The new party, according to Jarbas Vasconcellos of Pernambuco, "experienced a purge to the right, eliminating the 'physiologists.' From this point of view it is better than the other was, representing an advance." Aurelio Peres of Sao Paulo still finds the PMDB "a heavy burden, a little slow, but lighter than the old MDB." Even although he does not agree with the party reform being carried out in the country, he admits it offered one advantage, providing an opportunity for the die-hard supporters of the status quo to find another niche.

"Those who have something more than personal ambitions remain. The individualists left, providing greater space for those who have more contributions to make," assures Euclides Scalco of Parana.

But to demonstrate that not everyone has the same opinion, Aurelio Peres of Sao Paulo warns that it is necessary for some party leaders to abandon the individual interests they are pursuing, giving priority to party interests, which they sometimes do not do.

It is even common knowledge that these sectors, had they had any faith in the authenticity of the party reform proposal of the government, would have remained in the new party, because with the current composition, they could perhaps have continued efficiently to play the role of a moderating force within the group.

In the view of Joao Gilberto of Rio Grande do Sul, "the practical establishment of the party represents a tremendous policy leap in comparison to the MDB. This leap should yield political and ideological benefits not as yet seen."

These "fruits" which the party should produce represent another point of concern for those who are organizing the PMDB. The questions of publishing a national newspaper, organizing a foundation for political studies, reaching the popular base levels and organizing them, with or without sponsorship, are accepted in principle. But there are differences. After all, between wanting to be a mass party and being one there is considerable distance.

Almino Afonso explains that "between the statutory definition and the reality there is a wide gap, which we would like to fill with an effective democratic membership, to make this effort truly to reach the base levels a reality."

"We must pursue scheduled talks in order to transform the popular questions and demands into proposals," Odacir Klein of Rio Grande do Sul says. In his view, "this practice should be adopted as soon as we complete the first phase, which is the organization of the party."

According to former Governor Miguel Arraes, the party, "contrary to what others claim, will not be a traditional party, but will penetrate society in all strata."

Therefore he believes that his group "should be made more flexible, with the activation of the tools it already has, and the need to train cadres."

Different or not, more or less identified with the ideological line, formerly organized on the internal level in the party or in search of such formalization, the PMDB members are entirely in agreement, at least for the time being, on one concept: nothing is healthier than internal differences and democracy. This consensus may perhaps provide the best definition of the PMDB: a group in which many trends coexist without any of them enjoying hegemonic control.

The following are some of the beliefs of party members as to the coexistence of various factions in a single group:

"There are no parties without internal factions. Even the Marxist parties, with a clearly defined theoretical field, have their factions. The important thing is to have full right to debate and submission to democratically approved decisions." (Almiro Afonso, Sao Paulo.)

"Internal political differences are common to all political groups, whatever their ideological positions may be. Unity in the PMDB comes about through its statement and its program and respect for its bylaws."
(Marcelo Cerqueira, deputy, Rio de Janeiro.)

"I view differences as natural. If it is a front it must incorporate factions. What should not be allowed is the existence of hegemonic control by any one of them." (Jarbas Vasconcellos, Pernambuco.)

"The best political project for the moment is precisely that seeking to rally within the PMDB all those sectors of society which have the democratizing of the country as their primary goal. Democratic coexistence within the party leads it to advance as a whole." (Heitor Alencar Furtado, deputy, Parana.)

"There are those who call it a party, seeking more offensive political action, and this is positive. And there are those who only want to hold and defend political space, awaiting other stages, and that is negative." (Audalio Dantas, deputy, Sao Paulo.)

Deputy Jose Freitas Nobre, from Sao Paulo, 59 years of age, a lawyer, journalist and professor, is the leader of the PMDB in the Chamber. He views his party in terms of the larger definition set forth in the program: a group "of the masses, defending the predominance of labor over capital," a concept which he regards as "profoundly contemporary."

Although he identifies separate elements in the program for putting this main concept into practice, Freitas Nobre says that "no overall proposal has been defined as yet because this would clash with the principle according to which all of this should be the result and function of a national constituent assembly."

This assembly, the leader feels, should be "free in its convocation and sovereign in its decisions. The constituent assembly we defend will have the task of formalizing a text measuring up to the desires of the majority with the interpretation of the various factions making up the Brazilian social spectrum."

He knows that his party has different opinions internally, but he sees no major difficulty in this.

"Although there are some factions within the party, they are moving together today toward certain central points, including the struggle to resume the democratic process, the defense of human rights and public freedoms and the campaign for the constituent assembly," he says.

"We have no difficulties coexisting," he went on to say, "because we have reached basic agreement on wanting a democratic organization which will facilitate the organization of all the contemporary political, doctrinary and philosophical factions, as occurs in all the truly democratic countries throughout the world."

The leader of the PMDB defends the legalization of the Communist Party, the Socialist Party and others, among these factions.

Paulo Brossard, of Rio Grande do Sul, 56 years of age, a lawyer, university professor and cattle rancher, is the PMDB leader. In his view the "PMDB is a group which resists. It rejects abuses, violence, arbitrary action, the suspension of exponential individuals, men of broad political scope and, finally, it resists its own destruction, which was decreed by the government."

This group has resisted and today it is united in the PMDB, a party which, in the view of the Senate leader, can win power.

"The prospects for power are imminent, while the government never tires of imposing obstacles to prevent us from reaching our goal," he says.

Senator Paulo Brossard also regards internal differences as natural. He recalls:

"The MDB began with a larger number of differences than points of agreement and, with the passage of time, as is natural, the homogeneous aspects prevailed over the heterogeneous. We are today a more homogeneous party than at the beginning."

He believes that "the party is an expression of society. In a country like Brazil, only the government party is homogeneous. How can we expect individuals to be the same in Rio Grande do Sul and in Amazonas? The dissimilarities must be reflected in the party. This which may seem the weak point of the country represents its authenticity, for it could not be otherwise. These are elements which coexist and which will always coexist."

Paulo Brossard does not see then that the differences in his party are so great, and he warns:

"One should not exaggerate what is natural. Differences of opinion are natural in any part of the world."

The leader of the PMDB in the Senate does not agree with efforts to define the group of which he is a member in classic terms.

"This makes no sense. It is obvious that the PMDB is not a conservative party," he asserts.

The president of the Party of the Brazilian Democratic Movément, Deputy Ulysses Guimaraes, is the politician with the longest career in his group. He is completing his eighth parliamentary term, after having served as state deputy, minister of industry and commerce and in the parliamentary cabinet. A member of the former PSD, that origin has earned him criticism within the party.

This week, Deputy Ulysses Guimaraes said once again, in establishing a definition:

"An opposition is inevitable, because error is inevitable in any government."

Similarly, he gave his concept of the party and the main task the group has set itself: "The PMDB is a party with a memory. It has not forgotten its past, nor is it ashamed of its name. The PMDB wants a national constituent assembly to elect and change. To elect, in addition to the present electors, the president of the republic, the governors, all the senators and all the prefects."

In the party program, he stresses the thought which places labor above capital and quotes the Bible in support of it, saying that "God created labor, but man invented capital." The president of the party does not condemn the existence of factions within the PMDB. Rather he defends the right of each line of thought, each opinion, to expression, because he believes that "above all, democracy must exist and be practiced."

The organization of the PMDB in the country is proceeding in an atmosphere of enthusiasm and acceptance of its message by the public.

This statement was made by the secretary general of the party, Deputy Algo Fagundes, who was secretary of the MDB and today is in charge of the organization of the largest opposition party in the country, which now has 109 federal deputies and 21 senators, "but which may grow still further in the coming weeks," according to Aldo Fagundes.

Of the 109 PMDB [illegible]uties, 59 are serving their 1st parliamentary term, 21 their 2nd, 12 their 3rd, 3 are in the Chamber for the 4th time and 4 have served 5 or more terms. The senior parliamentarian, although not the oldest, is Deputy Ulysses Guimaraes, serving his 8th parliamentary term. The oldest is Carlos Santos, of Rio Grando do Sul, who will be 76 in December of this year. The youngest is Heitor Alencar Furtado, of Parana, who is 26.

The majority had earlier political experience: 52 were state deputies, 43 were aldermen, 18 served as municipal prefect or vice prefect, 6 were secretaries of state and 1--again Ulysses Guimaraes--was minister of industry and commerce in the first parliamentary cabinet in 1960.

Professionally, lawyers have a broad majority: 76 parliamentarians read law, 10 are journalists, 6 are civil servants, 5 are economists and 5 are doctors.

Among the PMDB parliamentarians, 49 have 2 or more professions, and 60 have only 1. Of those with more than 1, 22 have been professors and another 22 have engaged in activities in trade, industry, agriculture or livestock breeding.

Two-thirds of the party representatives in the Chamber are between 26 and 49 years of age; 47 are between 40 and 49; 29 are between 30 and 39; and 1 is 26. The PMDB has 22 deputies between the ages of 50 and 59, 9 between 60 and 69, and 1 76 years old.

The southern region has contributed the most representatives to the PMDB bench in the Chamber--51 deputies, of whom 22 are from Sao Paulo, the largest state representation in the party, 12 are from Parana, 12 from Rio Grande do Sul and 5 from Santa Catarina.

The Center-West and Southeast have contributed 30 deputies--10 from Rio de Janeiro, 7 from Minas Gerais, 5 from Espirito Santo, 5 from Goias, 2 from Mato Grosso and 1 from Mato Grosso do Sul.

The Northeast is represented by 21 deputies: 7 from Bahia, 6 from Pernambuco, 2 from Paraiba, 2 from Ceara, 2 from Alagoas, 1 from Rio Grande do Norte and 1 from Sergipe.

The North has seven representatives, six from the four states and one from the territory of Rondonia, Deputy Jeronimo Santana. Acre has the largest representation among the states, with three deputies. Amazonas, Para and Maranhao have one each.

The PMDB has 21 representatives in the Senate. It has 20 until last week. The increase resulted from the return to the party of Parana Senator Leite Chaves, who intended to join the PCB if that party designation was granted to former Governor Leonel Brizola.

Of the 21 senators, 17 are between 40 and 59 years of age, and 4 are over 60. In greater detail, 8 are between 40 and 49 years of age, 9 between 50 and 59, 2 between 60 and 69, and 2 are over 70.

5157
CSO: 3001

FORMER COMMUNIST LEADER IN CUBA; PCB ACCUSATIONS

Prestes Visiting Cuba

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 23 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] Sao Paulo--Followers of the line of the former secretary general of the outlawed Brazilian Communist Party (PCB) Central Committee, Luis Carlos Prestes, reported yesterday in this capital that he has been in Havana since last Friday on the invitation of Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro. Prestes went to Cuba via Lisbon.

Followers of Luis Carlos Prestes could not report on the reasons for the visit, the subjects he will discuss in Havana, with whom he will make contact and how long he will remain in Cuba. Present leaders of the Brazilian Communist Party in Sao Paulo were unaware of the trip up to yesterday.

For the first time since the dismissal of Luis Carlos Prestes from the general secretariat of the PCB, leaders of the party admitted that in his visits abroad he has been seeking the support of other communist parties so as to found a new party in Brazil.

They declared, however, that the efforts by Luis Carlos Prestes have been unsuccessful and that he finds himself totally isolated and not a single communist party abroad supports his positions. According to PCB leaders, all communist parties have preferred to have relations with the new secretary general, Giocondo Dias, and with the new executive of the central committee, to whose positions they give complete support.

The communist leaders admitted yesterday that when Luis Carlos Prestes was dismissed from the secretariat general, they took a "calculated risk" and that at that time they even feared that the former secretary "would steal the party and manage to remain with the initials PCB for his membership."

According to them, it did not happen and Luis Carlos Prestes did not even provoke a dissidence within the party. In the interpretation of the communist leaders, there is no "division" in the PCB but simply "an estrangement" caused by the Sixth Congress, the last one held by the party in 1976.

In the opinion of those leaders, Luis Carlos Prestes, despite having announced that he has the support of five regional PCB Regional Committees, is not followed by any state section of the party. According to them, if he had that support, the former secretary general would be the first one interested in naming the state committees loyal to him.

They also said that even the Rio Grande do Sul Regional Committee, considered the bastion of Luis Carlos Prestes, allied itself with the new PCB leadership. The leaders yesterday accused Prestes once more of being a "coupist" because he did not accept a constituent assembly with President Joao Figueiredo.

They said that Luis Carlos Prestes believes that the constituent assembly should be convoked after the government is overthrown and when the working class assumes control of the economic, political and social process. The new leaders argue that when that stage advocated by Prestes is reached, "there will no longer be the need for a constituent assembly."

Newspaper Accuses Prestes

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 29 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] Sao Paulo--In reply to the interview he granted to the weekly HORA DO POVO, the communist newspaper VOZ DA UNIDADE, which circulated this weekend, accused Luiz Carlos Prestes of seeking "to create a new organization to make the revolution of which he always dreamed and in the way he always wanted." The article is signed by Mario Patti and it accuses Prestes of having generated a "native Stalinism" in the country.

The newspaper, spokesman for the new PCB Central Committee, accuses the former secretary general of "openly carrying out a policy with the objective of dividing and weakening the party so as to dissolve it subsequently into "a front of all the communists and Marxist-Leninists." Luis Carlos Prestes is in Cuba at the invitation of Fidel Castro.

Excommunication

In the article-reply, the communist newspaper acknowledges the "undeniable" revolutionary past of Prestes and says that his name "is directly linked to glorious moments of the history of the Brazilian people and the struggles for the emancipation of the working class and socialism."

Without attempting to "excommunicate him or mark him with expressions as well known as 'agent of imperialism," and 'fascist traitor,' " the newspaper says: "What we should do is to try to evaluate the roots of his political behavior and the causes which led him now to seek a new path, to build a new organization to carry out the revolution of which he always dreamed and in the way he always wanted it to be." The article has the title: "The Party Prestes Wants Is Ours."

The writer accuses Luiz Carlos Prestes of "staging a coup" by reissuing the newspaper VOZ OPERARIA and he added: "Prestes leaves the party under the pretext of saving the party. But which party? This of the majority of the central committee, which despite everything and Prestes himself has been built throughout the years, reconciling itself with reality, seeking to create a new more collective, more democratic way of being, inside and out (who fears democracy?), or that one he considered for years to be his party?

VOZ DE UNIDADE makes another type of charge against Luiz Carlos Prestes: "He leaves the party to make revolution. Which revolution? That which reality should bring about or the one which is in his head? How was ours in 1935, how did we want it to be in 1950? How did we think it would be possible in 1964? These are the questions that the departure of Prestes poses to all communists. What is important today is not to know whether the divorce between the two (Prestes and the PCB) after almost 50 years of marriage is a tragedy or not. It is a concrete fact imposed by life. The path taken by Prestes and by us to reach where we want to go is not the same. Ours was already being traced after the detour of 1956 and it is a national, original and democratic path to socialism."

PCB Promises New Reply

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 3 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Sao Paulo--In a note published in the newspaper VOZ DA UNIDADE, which reached newstands today, the national executive committee of the central committee of the PCB announces that the new leadership of the party will respond at the proper time to the criticisms it is receiving from former secretary general Luis Carlos Prestes. In the note, the PCB leadership absolves itself from any responsibility for the republication of the newspaper VOZ OPERARIA.

"We address ourselves to the communists to say that the new attacks on our leadership, on the Leninist principles of organization and on our political line by Comrade Luis Carlos Prestes will be answered at the proper time. As of now, however, we make it clear to all the people, to our friends, sympathizers and allies, that the communists and their leaders are not responsible for the orientation of parallel organizations and of a supposed principal PCB newspaper which presents itself usurping the name of our glorious VOZ OPERARIA," says the note from the PCB leadership.

Only Path

Signed by Secretary General Giocondo Dias and four other members of the national executive committee: Salomao Malina, Luis Tenorio de Lima, Teodoro Melo and Givaldo Siqueira, the note also emphasizes to the communists that "our unity can only be achieved by the struggle for the application of the line approved by the Sixth Congress and by respect for the Leninist principles of organization."

The note published by VOZ DA UNIDADE, the unofficial spokesman of the PCB leadership, concludes: "This is the only path capable of defending us from factionalism and attempts at liquidating us and capable of leading the internal struggle to strengthen us and make it possible to resolve existing differences in the Seventh Congress. The intransigent defense of that path is therefore an unavoidable duty of every consistent communist revolutionary."

8908
CSO: 3001

DISSIDENT YOUTH GROUPS DISCUSSED, LEADERS INTERVIEWED

Santiago QUE PASA in Spanish 18-24 Sep 80 pp 14-15

[Interview with Francisco Garay, secretary of national relations of CODEJU, and Victor Contreras, president of the Student Center of the University of Chile School of Musical Arts and Sciences, and member of the board of directors of CORREME, by M. Eugenia de la Jara, time and place not given]

[Text] CODEJU, CORREME, ANCECUJ, UEM, UOE, ACU, ATA. These and other acronyms of other youth movements that oppose the current government, appeared on countless last-minute declarations that were signed, expressing disagreement with the plebiscite on 11 September and advocating that people vote no. These declarations were distributed at university centers, in the streets of Santiago, and in the various mass media.

Although all the groups appeared to be united in a single front against the plebiscite, led by the National Commission for Youth Rights (CODEJU), actually each one of these organizations was created or born in response to opposition to the present government, within each one's sphere of influence. None of them has been in existence for more than 3 years, and their common characteristic is the youth of their members and of those who belong to their sphere of influence.

"Our work is aimed at youths," explains Francisco Garay, secretary of national relations of CODEJU, "because we feel that it is among them that our work can bear the most fruit and ensure that future generations will be democratic."

CODEJU has taken the theme of human rights as its battle standard, and according to Garay its efforts are geared toward the defense, promotion and education about those rights. Usually it is engaged in campaigns in favor of youths and students who have been banished or sanctioned by the universities; national and international denunciations of these events, and solidarity with the people involved, principally in the form of legal assistance.

Future Political Parties?

[Question] You complain about the lack of freedom, but you publish documents, send denunciations to the mass media, and meet periodically at a permanent headquarters that is known to authorities, who allow this to take place. . .

[Garay] The fact that we exist is no generous concession by the government. We know that we will last as long as the government pleases, and if we are allowed to exist it is to show that there is alleged freedom.

[Question] Why alleged, if there are so many dissident groups?

[Garay] Because even though we have become organized and continue to exist, in practice, when we ask permission to hold a meeting, soldiers prevent us from doing so under the pretext that we are not a lawful organization. When our leaders or members participate in an event expressing opposition, they are arrested, sanctioned, and thrown out of the university. If these groups have managed to develop, it is undoubtedly due to the fact that not even the authorities have been able to stop them.

CODEJU, under the presidency of Christian Democratic leader Guillermo Yungue, has a board of directors that, according to Garay, is made up of people from all walks of political and religious life, "united by the effort to take joint action in defense of human rights among youths." In this plurality of ideas, our interviewee recognizes that there are no youths who support the current regime, but he assures us that there are many independents.

[Question] Do you think that CODEJU's actions would inspire more respect and credibility if its leaders didn't come out in favor of contingent politics?

[Garay] We were a small group and we have grown, because civilian groups have seen that our work is objective. We try to take on the real substance of the commitment we have made, the defense of human rights; the authorities have had to respond to our criticism, although they have tried to minimize those responsible.

[Question] But you said no to the plebiscite publicly and profusely. Is that also defending human rights?

[Garay] We said it publicly, but few found out about it because anything that smacks of dissidence is not published by the information media. We said no to the plebiscite because we believe that, starting with a positive desire to call together the citizenry, the government's measure was not democratic; the call was made in the context of generalized repression. We said no because that repression violates human rights and comes from the authorities.

[Question] Don't you think that with your actions you are replacing the traditional political parties?

[Garay] Impossible, because our objectives are very specific, while those of the parties are much more general. CODEJU has been able to bring together people from many different groups, because it has said no to militant partisanship, although there are loyal party members within our organization.

[Question] But don't you get financing and doctrinal support from the parties that oppose the government?

[Garay] We operate at 1584 Alameda, the headquarters of the National Human Rights Commission. That organization lends us some offices. The parties do not give us money or participate in our activities, although some leaders have encouraged us to keep going. We have nothing to do with the parties.

[Question] Where do you get the money to issue declarations and distribute them or to provide legal counsel?

[Garay] From private donations and with the help of young professionals. Our expenses are minimal, and all of us who work at CODEJU do so ad honorem.

Rights of University Students

The Committee to Restructure the Chilean University Student Movement (CORREME), emerged in 1978 as an alternative to student leaders who were supported by university authorities. It includes the Dissident Student Centers, groups that have been formed parallel to those recognized by deans and rectors, and finally anyone who is willing to oppose current university policy.

Victor Contreras was elected last year as president of the Student Center of the University of Chile School of Musical Arts and Sciences, and is also a member of the board of directors of CORREME. In May of this year his registration was cancelled, and according to him, his appeals have been for nought. "I am one of nearly 100 students who were sanctioned this year or arrested and later expelled for participating in activities in opposition to intervention," says Contreras, "because the role of the authorities is to repress all dissidents who oppose the university model that they are trying to impose."

He adds that CORREME is "a movement that has not emerged as a parallel alternative, but as a response to official inefficiency. The authorities have tried to break up student organizations, but they have been unable to stop a movement that is becoming more and more articulate and strong in the defense of its rights."

[Question] What are the rights of university students?

[Contreras] To think and to freely express our thoughts, without being sanctioned or expelled as a result. We want to have democratic channels of participation, as there always have been at the university. We have the right to ask the state to provide economic support for the universities, and for that reason we are opposed to self-financing by universities.

[Question] The right to think and to express ideas includes political ideas. We all know about the excesses that took place in this regard. Do you think that youths want to see the university become a parliament, or a center of higher learning?

[Contreras] The university exists within a national context that is political, and the government also practices politics. We believe that all students have the right to express themselves politically as well, and we are concerned that the authorities are reacting against the dissidents, when those who are supporters of the government can express their ideas without fear or repression.

[Question] Don't you believe that the constant debate of contingent national politics can lead once again to the politicization of the universities?

[Contreras] We do not agree with the political debates either. We feel that is what FECHEN [expansion unknown] is doing now, because it does not offer the students real alternatives for participation.

[Question] As a result of the plebiscite, university campuses were visited by speakers opposing and favoring the government who expressed their thoughts before the students.

[Contreras] Yes, but in the majority of cases, the opponents were attacked by the officialist students themselves, or they were not allowed to hold meetings and they had to meet in the gardens or off campus.

[Question] Wouldn't this reaction demonstrate, then, the risks of excessive political activity in the universities?

[Contreras] What was demonstrated was the attitude of university authorities against permitting the opinion of the advocates of voting no on the plebiscite to be known. But an example that we students can debate important and lofty political ideas was provided at the forum that was organized at the School of Engineering, in which Javier Leturia and Ricardo Hormazabal participated. There the two positions were listened to respectfully, and there was no disorder. We know we have to correct excesses and defects of the past, and we ask that we be allowed to do so.

Some Already Have Acronyms

CODEJU: National Commission for Youth Rights
CORREME: Committee to Restructure the Chilean University Student Movement
CNS: Youth Department, National Union Coordinating Committee
ANCECUJ: National Association of Youth Culture Centers
UEM: Union of Mid-level Education Students*
Southern Zone Mid-level Education Coordinating Committee

*Perhaps the oldest, in existence since 1973
Still has no acronym (we suggest CODEMEZOSU)

UOE: Union of Student Organizations of the Technical University Center for Democratic Students of Catholic University
ACU: University Culture Group
ATA: Academic Workshop Group
Santa Marta Culture Group

Still has no acronym

8926
CSC: 3010

SPANISH EXPRESS INTEREST IN MARKETING COAL IN EUROPE

Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 23 Sep 80 p C-8

[Article by Alfonso Zuniga Fontecilla]

[Text] Temuco--Representatives of a Spanish financial firm who traveled especially to this area to look into the situation, told Roberto Gesche, regional secretary of mining, that they are interested in selling coal produced in Huimpil, a Galvarino commune 70 kilometers northwest of that city, on European markets.

"The visit was strictly informative," said Gesche, "but the representatives showed a great deal of interest and asked that the Regional Intendancy be informed of their desires. They also requested complete technical information."

Jose Luis Diaz, a Spanish businessman, and Marcelo Marti, a Chilean geologist of the Disputada Mining Company of Las Condes, asserted that "within the next 2 weeks there will be news in this regard."

Potential

According to the information provided by the commission that visited the area, there is a vast potential for Chilean coal on the European market, with an annual demand greater than 25 million tons.

The estimated potential of Huimpil is 5.3 million tons, from an area measuring approximately 140 square kilometers with layers thicker than 50 centimeters.

"The heating power of this coal is more than 8,000 calories per gram, which is much higher than the Lota coal's 6,000 calories per gram," the regional mining secretary told EL MERCURIO.

The Huimpil coal is semi-anthracite, with a low volatility. This is an indication of its age as a high fixed carbon coal. It is the only coal of this quality found to date in this country and in South America.

This richness has great potential for use as metallurgical coal in the manufacture of electrodes and in coking. It is also an excellent raw material for direct combustion.

Considering its use only as metallurgical coal, the deposit has been valued at $198 million. Studies to quantify its potential indicate that an investment of 5 million pesos would be required.

Other Minerals

In addition to coal, which is once again gaining in importance, the Fourth Region is also working on prospecting for other minerals, among which figures copper, a major source of non-traditional resources.

"Until now, there has been only one high-grade copper mine in this area, although preliminary reports indicate that its grade is lower than that of Chuqui," stated Gesche.

This mineral, discovered in the foothill region of Lonquimay near Lake Galletue, only 22 kilometers from the border, corresponds to a series of geological faults which begin in Rancagua and end across from Valdivia.

"Similar possibilities have been explored near Talca and Linares," said Gesche.

Loose rocks have also been found that have a high copper content, 40 kilometers north of Lake Galletue, along the same fault.

The latter metal, found in Galletue, is combined with larger quantities of molibdenum than in Chuquicamata or El Salvador. The deposit belongs to the regional government, which received it from the Biobio-Malleco-Cautin Development Board, an organization which made a timely mining declaration.

The prospecting has been carried out by the Chilean Institute of Geological Research and the Japan Mining Agency, which is to submit its final report in November.

It is expected that this month, when Mining Minister Carlos Quinones visits the area, more news will be forthcoming about the sector, to the effect that aid will be given to the Ninth Region in solving its problem of extreme rural poverty and its current industrial deficit.

8926
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

NEW COPPER DEPOSIT DISCOVERED--Copiapo--A copper deposit, considered to be the second most important in the nation, after El Salvador, was recently discovered by the Compania Minera de Chanaral y Taltal (CHATAL) in the mining district of Inca de Oro, 5 kilometers from the place bearing the same name. A study of the area revealed that the mine will yield more than 30 million tons of ore, which in turn will yield more than 750 tons of fine copper ore. The deposit, called "Brecha Pipe," also has between 12 and 15 percent high grade gold. The general manager of CHATAL, Jorge Barcelo Sarrat, pointed out that the Brecha Pipe development project, known as "Delirio," includes the construction in 3 years of a material processing plant with a daily capacity of 4,000 tons. The investment required will be $30 million. He stated that the facilities will be similar to those at Mantos Blancos in Antofagasta. The executive also indicated that the completion and opening of an interior road from Copiapo to Inca de Oro, going through Paipote and Diego de Almagro (formerly Pueblo Hundido), will save 100 kilometers of travel and will thereby facilitate the transportation of the ore. Now there is only the Longitudinal Road, which runs parallel to the coast and makes the trip much longer. In addition, the Intendancy of the Third Region will soon provide potable water for Inca de Oro, which will facilitate the development of Brecha Pipe. [Text] [Santiago LA NACION in Spanish 24 Sep 80 p 1] 8926

GERMAN INVESTMENT IN AGRICULTURE--The German private sector has expressed a definite interest in investing in Chile, according to a report by the Pro-Chile Trade Office in the Federal Republic of Germany. In that center, requests are received from German businessmen wanting lists of agricultural, forestry, sawmill properties and others in the forestry and agriculture sector that are for sale or up for auction or bidding. Information about such property should be sent to the Trade Office in Hamburg, whose telex is 214067 CHIL W-D. Among the companies that have shown an interest in operating in this country is the SCHORHUBER-BETEI LINGUS-AMBH firm, which makes doors and windows, wooden toys, prefabricated houses, veneer strips and other products. Its annual sales volume is 240 million West German marks. This company, for example, was interested in the auction of the Nuble-Rupanco and San Lorenzo Haciendas. It also wants to purchase a share in the Panguipulli lumber complex if that complex is turned over to the private sector. Another West German firm that has expressed an interest in acquiring any kind of property in

Chile is LIEBHERR-HOLDING GMBH; and another interested party is Werner Gohner, an individual who would like to purchase agricultural property in the area near Temuco for the purpose of engaging in meat production and agriculture. [Text] [Santiago LA NACION in Spanish 23 Sep 80 p 12B] 8926

OIL DRILLING PLATFORM ARRIVES--Valparaiso--At 0800 today the oil drilling and exploration platform "Ocean Bounty" will arrive here in this port. The platform flies a Panamanian flag and belongs to the Ocean Drilling and Exploration Company. It is a self-propelled platform which is accompanied by the tugboat "Smith Rotterdam," and displaces 17,716 tons. It is on its way to the Atlantic, where it will operate, from Vancouver, Canada. Its stop-over in Valparaiso along with other platforms is for picking up fuel and food supplies, for the platform itself as well as for the tugboat. The "Ocean Bounty" will be anchored near Universidad Santa Maria, where the water is 50 to 60 meters deep. That will guarantee its safety and prevent interference with navigation. The platform is 39 meters high, has a gross tonnage of 5,790 tons, is 107 meters long and 81 meters wide. It was built in 1975. [Text] [Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 23 Sep 80 p C-8] 8926

CSO: 3010

NATIONAL LEADERSHIP OF LAWYERS UNION REORGANIZED

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] The national council of the Cuban National Lawyers Union (UNJC) decided in its most recent session to reorganize its national executive bureau and fill the vacancies which have occurred within it due to various causes.

The new bureau was organized in the following fashion: president, Dr Francisco Varona Duque de Estrada; vice president, Dr Juan Vega Vega; secretary, Jose R. Giraudy Garcia; and vice secretary, Dr Marta Jimenez Zamalea.

Dr Miguel A. Duque de Estrada, president of the UNJC up to the present, was released from his duties in order to be able to meet the increasing requirements of his responsibilities as legal director of the State Finance Committee and secretary-general of the American Lawyers' Association.

At the meeting, which was attended by Felix Perez, head of the state and judicial bodies department of the Central Committee of the party, the official invitation for the "History Will Absolve Me" competition for this year was issued.

Invitation

The Cuban National Lawyers' Union announces the "History Will Absolve Me" competition, an analysis of its 1980 juridical and political theses, which this year, in view of the commemoration of the 20th anniversary of the nationalization of the large foreign and domestic enterprises, will have as its sole theme the overwhelming importance of this measure in the fulfillment of the Moncada program, and its effects on and importance in the process of economic transformation of the country.

The rules are the following:

All lawyers who so desire may participate, submitting works drafted individually or collectively.

Works will be submitted in an original with two copies, typewritten, double-spaced, on one side only of standard sheets of paper (8.5 x 11), numbered and stapled together. The minimal length will be 20 pages and the maximum 80.

Each work must show, along with the title, the name, private address, telephone number and labor center of the author.

Works may have been published in part, but not in their entirety.

The deadline for the submission of works to the national executive bureau is 15 November of this year. The jury will select the prize work and as many honorable mentions as it deems desirable. On 2 December, the anniversary of the historic landing of the Granma and our revolutionary armed forces, the decision of the jury will be made known.

The author of the prize-winning work will be presented with a certificate and an award and his work will be published in the REVISTA CUBANA DE DERECHO. Such works as the jury deems worthy will be awarded honorable mentions. In addition, the publication in whole or in part of any work may be recommended, even though it did not win a prize.

Works which are not awarded a prize will be returned to their authors in the 30 days subsequent to the announcement of the decision.

5157
CSO: 3010

ILLEGALITY OF PRIVATE TOBACCO, COFFEE, CACAO SALES EXPLAINED

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 30 Aug 80 p 4

[Text] Peasants who have farms and the members of their families who work on them are authorized to transport tobacco, coffee and cacao in the quantities necessary to satisfy family consumption needs if their homes are at a distance from the location of the farms.

Can the pound of coffee and the pound of tobacco authorized by Resolution No 129 still be transported? What quantity of cacao is it currently legal to transport?

Because these products are not included on those which can be sold on the free peasant market, is the purchase and transportation of any quantity prohibited?

These were the questions posed by Dr Manuel Carcases, president of the criminal chamber of the Cienfuegos people's court, to the government council of the supreme people's court, which immediately resolved these questions by means of Opinion No 105.

The text of the opinion says that with the prohibition, by the provisions of Article 13 of Decree No 66 of the Council of Ministers dated 3 April 1980, of tobacco and coffee, among other products, from the items which can be sold on the free peasant market, their transportation is implicitly prohibited, and in this connection Resolution No 129 of 1973 of the National Institute for Agrarian Reform must tacitly be presumed to be amended.

The transportation of any quantity of coffee or tobacco deriving from the operation mentioned could therefore constitute the crime described in Article 274, Paragraph b, of the penal code.

Where cacao is concerned, its transportation could constitute that same crime for the same reason.

The above is not true, however, for products, in this case coffee and tobacco, which peasants owning farms and the members of their families working with them there are authorized to transport in the amounts deemed necessary for the satisfaction of family consumption needs, if they reside at a distance from the location of these farms, in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 4 of the above-mentioned Resolution No 129 of the former National Institute for Agrarian Reform.

5157
CSO: 3010

PLANT HEALTH OFFICE STRESSES MEASURES TO COMBAT BLUE MOLD

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] The general plant health office has reiterated the requirement that all tobacco enterprises and producers implement the provisions of the instruction on the control and prevention of blue mold in tobacco.

This notification was issued in connection with the beginning of the planting season for this crop.

The body warned that the planting phase is the first and decisive one in the tobacco season, and that the success in a quality harvest of the volume required, after 2 years in which production has been affected by blue mold, depends on these seedlings.

Plant protection measures for the seedlings are essential, because they are directly related to achieving the volume needed to fulfill the sowing program, and in addition determine whether the plants will be strong and healthy or not.

Work with seedlings should also guarantee that the plants are in place in time to meet the sowing schedule, since one of the basic goals this year is to complete it early.

On the other hand, this will guarantee that harvesting can be finished in the first 4 or 5 months of next year.

The office also warned that all seedling areas must be equipped with disinfecting boxes for the footwear of arriving and departing personnel, and such personnel should be reduced to a minimum for the functions of inspection and other tasks.

It was reiterated that facilities should be ready for the disinfecting of equipment which must enter and leave the seedling areas for similar purposes.

Quarantine measures should be linked with those directly related to the application of fungicides which prevent the mold.

In this connection, it is vital that the schedule for application and the officially established dosages be strictly observed.

In conclusion, the plant health office noted that it is important to establish conditions now so that once the first 4 or 5 days of irrigation of the seedling areas has been completed, the first soil treatment can be carried out.

5157
CSO: 3010

ITALIAN BASED FUND TO GRANT $1.5 MILLION LOAN

Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 20 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Rome, Friday (CANA-Reuter)--The tiny Caribbean island of Dominica is to receive a loan of US $1.5 million from the Rome-based International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD).

The loan, announced today, will be used to bolster food production in the mountainous former British Colony which has an agriculture-oriented economy.

IFAD said it would be used by small farmers and fishermen.

Dominica suffered severely from the effects of Hurricanes David and Allen during the past 13 months.

IFAD today announced loans worth $90 million to help Dominica and six other countries produce more food.

The scheme stipulates $22.5 million for farming projects in Bangladesh, $12 million for rural projects in the northwest cameroon, $10 million for irrigation projects in Mauritania, $15 million for research of rain-fed field crops in Thailand, $14 million for rural projects in the Yemen Arab Republic and $15 million for maize production in eastern Zaire.

CSO: 3020

PRIME MINISTER SEEN FACING TOUGH GOING TOWARD ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Bridgetown THE ADVOCATE NEWS in English 15 Sep 80 p 4

[Article by Peter Richards]

[Text]

ROSEAU, Dominica, (CANA) — The Government of Prime Minister Eugenia Charles is finding the going tough as it sets about the task of reviving Dominica's economy, ailing at the best of time, but severely battered by two hurricanes within a year and prevailing world economic conditions.

The government braced Dominicans for hard days ahead when hours after being elected in office last July 21, it told Dominicans not to expect miracles, claiming that the treasury was empty.

Said Miss Charles, whose performance as the Caribbean's first woman Prime Minister, is being closely watched: "Dominica is at present like a long running machine in great need of an overhaul and servicing, there are parts of the machine which will need replacing, parts which will require new inputs of energy, others which will need streamlining."

The 305-square mile island one of the most backward in the region, is being almost completely rebuilt following massive destruction of houses and agriculture by Hurricane David in August 1979 and Hurricane Allen early last month.

Before Miss Charles could settle down to her task, she was faced with an immediate setback, — a United States claim for compensation for thousands of galvanise sheets used as election booty by the Government of the last regime led by Oliver Seraphine.

Failing compensation for the sheets which formed part of a U.S. administered relief programme in the wake of David, the Americans threatened to stop all housing aid.

Mr. Seraphine seized the building materials just before the July 21 poll claiming that they were not reaching genuinely poor people fast enough. But opposition parties quickly denounced the move as a vote-catching measure. The U.S. also sent a strong protest to Roseau.

"With open hands," but stressing that it would not allow outside governments to have a say in its internal affairs, Miss Charles' freedom Party Government has embarked upon a "save the country" campaign seeking help from major Western donor countries for its reconstruction exercise.

The government, although promising public workers that the Ec$11 million owed them in backpay would be met within the fiscal year 1980-81, has called on their bargaining agents, the Civil Service Association, to discuss a compromise over the payment.

When she presented a record EC $107.3 million Budget to Parliament, Miss Charles might have been overlooking for understanding from Government employees when she said "when I took over....I found a treasury empty of funds, a sizeable public debt amounting to EC $88 million including guarantees to statutory bodies totalling $22 million.

With major donor countries having their own economic problems, Dominica's chance of receiving much foreign aid could be affected and Miss Charles has described the problem as "a serious setback for Dominica at a time when the need for foreign aid has been so intensified by recent unfortunate incidents."

With its plan to diversity the islands export earnings gained mainly from the banana industry, the government has been meeting with various regional and international aid agencies for help in setting up a profitable crop diversification programme, and at the same time developing an agro-industry.

Agriculture Minister Heskieth Alexander is now in Rome seeking assistance from the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) to help develop food crop, livestock and fishing facilities.

"In general the project will enable government to support a five-year lending programme of the aid bank subsidiary here for financing on farm investments for food crop production, and livestock, fishing activities and related agro processing enterprises," Mr Alexander said before leaving.

Miss Charles is keen to avoid any of the allegations of corruption that marred the preceeding regimes of Patrick John and Seraphine.

In a move aimed in this direction, a committee has been appointed to look into the affairs of the Seraphine Administration.

When he announced the composition of the inquiry, Attorney General Ronald Davis charged that the previous government of Mr. Seraphine had received over EC $175 million in cash and kind from aid donors following David's rampage, but that the new government was unable to trace the money.

Miss Charles took the allegations much further by stating that there was much squandermania during the term of office of Seraphine. Several items were bought by the government which were of no immediate or long-term use to the government at the time, she said.

The committee will also look at the galvanised sheets scandal and the distribution of Organisation of American States (OAS) funded outboard engines.

When in opposition the Freedom Party had been claiming that Seraphine was selling the engines to fishermen, and had decided upon such an action unilaterally.

Seraphine, claiming no wrongdoing, sees the committee as a plan by Miss Charles to satisfy her supporters "thirst for blood." But Miss Charles counters that there will be no witch-hunting by her administration, and the police will be allowed to carry out their work without interference.

In the meantime, the government is busy putting together another Budget which will more adequately reflect the direction in which it will carry Dominica.

When she presented her first Budget, Miss Charles said that a supplementary Budget in December "will truly reflect my government's objectives and priorities."

One matter which has nagged the government is the appointment of a Leader of the Opposition.

Under the constitution, the Leader of the Opposition is appointed by the President who determines the Parliamentarian likely to command majority support on the Opposition benches.

After the General Elections the Opposition comprised two members each of the Democratic Labour Party and two independents.

The four Opposition seats were thus split down the middle, and a fight for the post of Opposition Leader began between former Acting President Jenner Armour and ex-Finance Minister Michael Douglas of the DLP.

Mr Douglas, saying that as the next largest party in Parliament, the DLP should form the Opposition.

Mr Armour reacted saying that Douglas was only interested in the post to ensure that his brother, Marxist political activist Rosie Douglas, re-entered Parliament despite his defeat during the elections.

Miss Charles has said she is at pains to know why there is so much fuss over such an appointment when over the past 12 months Parliament functioned well without an Opposition Leader.

Mr Douglas countered that it was not possible for the new administration to compare its life in office to that of Mr Seraphine's – a clear reference to the unity government Seraphine headed following the June 1979 downfall of Patrick John, a government which Miss Charles had a hand in forming.

M. DOUGLAS

SERAPHINE

MISS EUGENIA CHARLES

CSO: 3020

THREE-PARTY MANIFESTO CALLS FOR UNITED STRUGGLE

Havana TRICONTINENTAL in Spanish No 69-70, 1980 pp 39-50

[Text] Manifesto of the Communist Party of El Salvador, the Farabundo Marti Popular Liberation Forces and the National Resistance addressed to the people of El Salvador, Central America and the world.

Revolutionary Unity, Conquest of our Heroic People

The National Resistance (RN), the Farabundo Marti Popular Liberation Forces (FPL) and the Communist Party of El Salvador (PCS), fully aware of our historic responsibility and of the fact that unity is an indispensable step for the triumph of the popular struggle, have agreed to establish a body for revolutionary coordination among our national leadership, and we have pledged to launch a process of increasing coordination of the policy and struggle of our three organizations.

This agreement is designed gradually to achieve the highest levels of unity and is open to membership for the other revolutionary organizations in our country.

We are firmly persuaded that the people of El Salvador need to unite all their forces to liberate themselves. They need the combative unity of their revolutionary forces, their democratic forces, all their patriotic, honest and progressive men and women.

The establishment of this coordination body is a decisive step, a determining contribution for rescuing the fatherland from oppression, injustice and imperialist domination, to win liberty, social justice, true national independence, popular liberation and peace.

The unity of our organization will multiply the power of our people, assert their patriotic calling, bring the moment of their liberation closer. It is for this reason that we have joined in this agreement, meeting a yearning of the people of El Salvador and Central America and the demand of ever-broader sectors.

II. Historic Roots of Our Struggle

The heroic struggle the people of El Salvador are waging today has deep historic roots. The hard and glorious campaigns of our people date back to the periods of stubborn resistance against the Spanish colonial yoke, and the battles the people have waged for independence, for their right to land, bread and education, for democratic freedoms, against domination by Yankee imperialism and for the final triumph of their revolutionary aspirations are innumerable.

The struggle for independence from Spain and against the annexation of Central America by the Iturbide empire; the Nonualco rebellion, headed by Anastasio Aquino, to win equality and an end to the barbarous exploitation by the estate-owners; the enthusiastic enlistment in the glorious Morazan Army, to defeat the domination of the conservative reactionaries and unite Central America under a liberal and democratic flag; the participation, along with the brotherly peoples of the isthsmus in the war against William Walker, the mercenary with Yankee expansionist and slave-owning ambitions who sought to become master of Central America; the peasant resistance against the plundering of communal and public lands--these are the main landmarks in the history of the popular struggle of the last century.

On the basis of these democratic traditions, the Salvadoran people have faced up in this present century to the plundering 14-year government of the Melendez Quinones; its best sons, headed by Agustin Farabundo Marti, joined in the glorious struggle of the General of Free Men, Augusto Cesar Sandino, against the North American invaders, and rose up in the worker-peasant rebellion of 1932, drowned in the blood of 30,000 workers. The military and popular rebellion and the general strike in April and May of 1944 led to the overthrow of the Martinez tyranny; the battles on the planes of Ahuachapan against the tyrant Osmin Aguirre in December of 1944; the combative mobilizations which put an end to the tyrannical government of Colonel Lemus; the continuing and heroic struggles of the workers, peasants, teachers, office workers and students demanding their rights, have faced up and are facing up successfully to the bloody and repressive campaigns mounted by the military dictatorship. These facts reflect the never-ceasing battle of our people and summarize their combat traditions.

In recent decades the list of the heroic revolutionaries who have fallen in the struggle has become interminable: Saul Santiago Contreras, Jose Dimas Alas, Felipe Pena, Clara Elizabeth Ramirez, Lyl Milagros Ramirez, Manuel Rivera, Rafael Arce Zablah, Rafael Aguinada, Victor Manuel Sanchez and so many others, some known, others anonymous, who have offered up their exemplary lives for the just cause of popular liberation, whose sacrifice will enable millions of Salvadorans and future generations to enjoy a just society, without exploitation or poverty.

Our organizations are the heirs to these patriotic, democratic and revolutionary traditions of our people. We were born and we have grown up under the constant blows of the most merciless enemies. We have lived in close and inseparable contact with the vast majority; we have grown and we have strengthened with their moral and material support. It is for this reason that they have not been able nor will they be able to destroy us. We rally the most determined and conscientious defenders of the interests of the fatherland and the people, and with the other popular organizations, we are the fruit of this long historic battle.

Thus we come to this decisive moment in national history stronger, more experienced, more determined and better trained to organize and direct the struggle of the Salvadoran people toward final victory.

III. Blocking the Peaceful Path, the Oligarchy Demands Violence of the People

In the past 25 years, since the end of the 1960's in particular, the struggle of the people of El Salvador has been becoming more continuous, systematic and organized, more conscious and combative.

In the course of this intensive period, our people turned first to peaceful methods, seeking to make use of the paths apparently offered by the constitution to transform society to the benefit of the great majority. Turning to elections, the response with which the people met was fraud, imposition and repression. The oligarchy, its agents and military and political tools, closed off this peaceful path, closed off the opportunity for the people of El Salvador to achieve their historical desires and goals without spilling blood.

This historic experience was not in vain. The vast majorities served their apprenticeship in this way in the irreplaceable school of harsh personal struggle, and they realized that the transformation of the country, freedom and social justice could only be won by wresting power from the insatiable handful of great exploiters, hangmen and traitors, and that to achieve this goal it is necessary to wage a battle weapons in hand, exercising the most legitimate and supreme right of all people--the right to rebellion.

The people of El Salvador did not seek violence, but it was imposed on them by the oligarchy and its obedient and criminal military tyranny. To the violence of the system in power concemning the workers to hunger, to poverty, to illiteracy and unemployment, killing our children with malnutrition and denying our people the most basic rights, the continuing military aggression against the defenseless people, on the part of the security bodies in particular (remember for example the cases of Chinamequita, La Cayetana and Tres Calles in 1974) was added. Carrying forward what they called the "counterinsurgency war," they have tried to drown all the dreams and struggles of the great majorities in blood.

This made our people aware that there remains no other choice for them but to arm themselves, to organize in order to repel this aggression and thus defend their struggles, their gains and their right to transform society.

In this way, the armed struggle became linked generally and inseparably with the struggle for the satisfaction of demands and the political struggle. The revolutionary guerrilla force was established and multiplied, and the self-defense bodies of the masses multiplied on a vast scale until the militia was established and the organization of the people's army was underway. Now revolutionary violence in all its aspects is a right won and never to be renounced by the people of El Salvador.

The oligarchy and its puppets are hypocritically demanding "peace" today. They want our people to resign themselves and bow down to their cruel domination, to accept the selling-out and the plundering of the fatherland without protest.

They want to impose this "peace" by slaughter, disappearance, imprisonment and exile; it is the peace of the cemetery. We in the FPL, RN and PCS are waging battle with the people for peace with justice, independence and freedom and thus solid and enduring. Along with all of the people we will win in the battle for this just peace.

IV. The Profound National Crisis Cannot Be Resolved by Partial Remedies or Massacres

The present Salvadoran society is structured so that a few can live opulently, so that the imperialist powers can plunder us in tranquility, so that a few can establish their merciless domination. But these socio-economic structures are in profound crisis today.

Ownership and production relations and the distribution of the wealth are in crisis, as are the commercial, financial and technological dependence on imperialism, and the exploitation of the international companies established in our country. The economic crisis the entire capitalist world is experiencing today aggravates the domestic crisis.

The military dictatorship which has oppressed us throughout 48 years, established as the guardian of the oligarchy and imperialism, is also in hopeless crisis. For a long time now the people have rejected continued domination by this bloody military dictatorship. The political crisis is aggravating the economic crisis, accelerating the flight of capital and leading to stagnation and even regression in the national economy.

The traditional juridical and ideological tools with which the dominant classes influence and subject the working masses have been destroyed. The sign of our times is the growing popular rebellion.

For all of these reasons the ranks of the dominant classes themselves and their military apparatus have cracked.

The heroism of the popular resistance and battle have frustrated the outcome to the crisis the bourgeoisie thought to impose with a fascist or fascist-oriented model of domination, based on repression and bloody extermination of the revolutionary organizations and militants.

The efforts to establish a so-called third historical alternative, reformism, have been frustrated. The events we have experienced throughout the situation created by the 15 October 1979 coup d'etat have made it obvious that the crisis cannot be resolved by this means, as some imperialist, bourgeois and middle-class sectors claim.

The efforts being made to rescue the reformist proposal, relying now on the most determined support of the United States government, are condemned to failure.

The most reactionary sectors of the oligarchy and imperialism, the supporters of counterrevolution, do not want to support the reformist project and are trying to impose a genocidal war on the country, to carry out the slaughter of tens of thousands of workers and intellectuals, humble people of the masses. While we are voicing this cry of alarm, we assert that the counter-revolution cannot destroy the revolutionary and popular movement and it will be defeated by the implacable fist of the people united and in arms.

V. Popular Revolution, the Only True Solution

Let no one deceive himself: the only true and effective alternative for resolving the national crisis to the benefit of the people is armed popular revolution, the forces of which are speedily maturing within the people.

This revolution will not be an act of vengeance but one of justice and liberating change. It will guarantee democratic rights and freedoms for all the people, and will thus establish a true democracy. It will give the land to the vast majorities in the rural sector, who are those who in reality work it and make it produce. It will win true national independence, recovering for our people the right freely to decide on their destiny. With these and other basic changes, it will guarantee worthy material and cultural living conditions for the working people.

These great tasks can only be carried out if the revolution triumphs first, in other words if it wins power, destroys the disgraceful, corrupt and bloody apparatus of the military tyranny and establishes a revolutionary, democratic and anti-imperialist government on the basis of popular power.

These are the strategic goals of the revolution for which our organizations are fighting, along with the most advanced sectors of the people.

It is in order to pursue this revolution to victory that we have decided to launch, in accordance with our common agreement, a process of unifying all of the revolutionary forces and uniting them with the civilian and military, religious and lay democratic forces.

Revolutionary forces and democratic forces--these are the two great torrents engendered by the struggle of the Salvadoran people. Uniting these two torrents means uniting the people, allowing them to realize their full potential and capacity and to win the greatest international solidarity in order to isolate and defeat the powerful and cruel enemy.

The union of revolutionary and democratic forces is an urgent necessity, an indispensable premise for the liberation of the people of El Salvador, and it must be achieved soon.

We address ourselves to the progressive sectors of the Church and the military, the opposition parties, the independent, labor and trade-union organizations in general, to those democratic intellectuals and individuals, with or without party affiliation, to the large sectors of small and average businessmen who are today concerned about finding a patriotic solution to the crisis, and who are viewing with ever-increasing fear the demands by the oligarchy that they follow it, its vehicle of exploitation and slaughter. And we say to them that independent of the ideological and political differences which exist between us and you, we recognize the merits of your effort to achieve democracy and social justice for our people and we urge you to contribute to their unity to make their struggle to liberate themselves effective. We propose that you join actively in the great process of unity which is advancing, contributing your ideas, which we respect and will respect, your capacity and talent, your influence and your devotion to freedom to it.

This noble union of the Salvadoran people will accelerate and make less difficult and painful your liberating triumph, which cannot be prevented by anything or anyone, although it may require great sacrifices.

The Salvadoran people, heroic, combative and noble, will never resign themselves to live on their knees. Their time has come and they will free themselves, led by their revolutionary organizations. They will break the chains of half a century of reactionary military dictatorship and destroy it forever.

VI. The Honorable Military Should Join in the People's Struggle

Honest military sectors with patriotic and democratic aspirations have written important pages in the history of the struggle of our people.

The Salvadoran army itself began, under the command of its founder, Manuel Jose Arce, by challenging the annexationist ambitions of Iturbide's Mexican empire in 1822. The unity campaign of Gen Gerardo Barrios embodied the firm readiness to defend the sovereignty of the peoples of Central America and the will of the Salvadoran army for reform in 1850-1960.

In the unhappy and convulsive development of the young state which emerged after independence, the army fell under the hegemony of the worst reactionary forces of the estate-owners; the corruption and venality of a minority of leaders allowed the liberal and democratic ideals of the founders of the army to be betrayed. This process culminated in the establishment of military tyranny in 1932. The function of the army was reduced to protecting those who subjugated and sold out the fatherland and the daily repression of our people, thus establishing the bitter opposition between the army and the people from which it sprang.

The army was transformed into a party of the oligarchy of the great capitalists and estate-owners, but in each generation of the military, there have always been those who remained patriots, who rebelled and who took the side of the people against their enemies. This was evidenced in the glorious chapter written by many officers on 2 April 1944 when they rebelled against Martinez, offering up their lives. The participation of young military men in the Ahuachapan battle against Osorio Aguirre, the uprising against Lemus in October 1960, the frustrated rebellion of 25 March 1972--these are other examples showing that not all the military resign themselves to the sad role of hangmen imposed upon them.

The willingness to unite with the people has been evidenced in recent months by a large number of young officers, in a demonstration that the legacy of these patriotic traditions lives among them. The oligarchy and the reactionaries have undertaken to frustrate their transforming efforts again.

The honorable military personnel do not want a clash between the armed forces and the people in arms. We share this feeling and we are confident that, due to their honesty and patriotism, because they are a part of the people, these military sectors will play the role which falls to them along with us in building a new society. It is the rank and file and the noncommissioned officers in the army who best understand the struggle of the people, for they themselves are workers and the children of workers and their place in the people's army is assured. Together we will build a society in which the army will be the true armed branch of the people, the defender of their freedom and of justice, a firm guarantee of the sovereignty which is being frustrated today and the independence which is now being trampled underfoot.

VII. We Support the Revolutionary Struggles and Democratic Causes of All Peoples and Learn From Them

The heroic struggle of the Nicaraguan people, victoriously led by the Sandinist National Liberation Front, is yet another source of inspiration for our unity and readiness to battle to victory.

The Sandinist victory has opened up an era of revolution on the Central American isthsmus, and we will be enriched by its experience and will know how to utilize it, adapting it to our situation and problems.

Just as we opposed the intervention of the CONDECA [Central American Defense Council] and the Yankee imperialists in the struggle against Somoza, we condemn any effort to intervene to frustrate the desires of our people for liberation.

We conceive of the revolution in El Salvador as a part of the revolution in Central America and as a particular contribution of our people to the struggle of all the peoples on the continent for liberation. We support the democratic positions which ever more numerous Latin American peoples and governments are adopting and promoting. We value most highly the anti-imperialist positions and the defense of democratic advances and international peace pursued by the peoples and governments of Panama, Mexico and Costa Rica, the countries of the Andean Pact and the Caribbean. We support the struggle of the peoples of Puerto Rico, Belize and Panama to win the right to control their own destiny and to establish sovereignty throughout their territory.

We yearn for Central American unity, but we deny that it can be built on the basis of foreign intervention and the subjugation of our people. We propose to strengthen the bonds with all the Central American countries. We want to establish friendly and fraternal relations with all the peoples in the world, on the basis of self-determination.

We condemn all forms of colonialism. We support the struggle of the peoples of the world against foreign oppression and against racism, in particular the struggle of the Palestinian people against Zionism and that of the peoples of Africa against racism and apartheid.

We support all the points in the agreements of the Sixth Summit Meeting of the Movement of Nonalined Countries, held in Havana. We seek the establishment of a new international economic order and we are determined partisans of detente, disarmament and the safeguarding of world peace.

VIII. Unity of the People Through Final Victory

The overwhelming importance of our coordination and unity agreement turns a new page in national history, pointing toward the winning of definitive liberation for our people.

Workers, peasants, students, teachers, office employees, progressive intellectuals, slumdwellers, owners of small and medium-sized businesses, progressive clergy, democratic sectors in general, patriotic soldiers and officers, men and women of our people, let us all join in great unity until definitive popular liberation is won.

The moment has come for supreme effort for the triumph of the revolution!

The stages will be hard and painful, but triumph is inevitable. The blood shed by thousands and thousands of patriots since the last century, the aspirations and the blood of our beloved comrades who have fallen in recent years, will bear luminous fruit today in the unity of our people on the march toward final victory.

Long live the firm and broad unity of the Salvadoran people!

Long live the worker-peasant alliance!

For the revolutionary popular government!

Long live the international solidarity of the peoples!

With the unity of the people to final victory!

El Salvador, Central America, 10 January 1980.

5157
CSO: 3010

STUDENT LEADER CLAIMS NEW LEFTIST POLITICAL OFFENSIVE

PA041733 Paris AFP in Spanish 1607 GMT 4 Oct 80

[Excerpt] San Jose, 3 Oct (AFP)--Salvadoran opposition organizations have begun a political offensive to complement military actions, a leader of the General Association of Salvadoran University Students (AGEUS) named Flores revealed here today.

According to the student leader, the initiative is based on a "people's platform of demands," which includes labor, peasant and student demands as well as those of other sectors of the national life.

According to Flores, the military struggle has been intensified in El Salvador, where the clashes between rebel groups and army forces allegedly take place daily throughout the country.

"Four guerrilla general staffs have been organized in the country," he affirmed. They operate in the north, in the east, in the west and in the central region.

"This," Flores added, "enables the Salvadoran political-military organizations to hit all fronts simultaneously, something that did not occur in the past."

What is needed now, he stressed, is an intensification of the political struggle at the mass level, which is why a platform of demands has been announced.

The document demands 50 percent wage increases for city workers, the right to strike, the demilitarization of work centers, the release of captured unionists and the rehiring of those dismissed during previous strikes.

It also demands an end to military invasions of peasant communities, respect for the university's autonomy, improvements for slum residents and salary increases for public employees.

CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

FDR APPEAL FOR SUPPORT--El Salvador's Revolutionary Democratic Front [FDR] last night again appealed to all of the nation's officials and moderates to join the revolutionary struggle. In its appeal to officials, the FDR said that there is still time for them to make their contribution to the people, whom they swore to defend and to protect in joy and in sadness in a statement issued on 15 October 1979. The FDR stresses that it is impossible to belong to an army in which there is interference by Washington; it stresses that there is direct intervention in the leadership and ranks of El Salvador's armed forces. The FDR also scores the criminal government junta of El Salvador and the fascist military officers for having just received a cargo of weapons, which arrived a few days ago from the port of (?Oakland), California. The document adds that these weapons will only be used to commit new crimes against the Salvadoran people. In its statement, the FDR adds that the defense of human rights in the United States is mere hypocrisy since blood is shed every day in El Salvador thanks to the U.S. Government's support for the Christian Democratic junta. [Text] [PA042333 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1800 GMT 4 Oct 80]

'U.S. READY TO INTERVENE'--Mexico City, 6 Oct (AFP)--A U.S. aircraft carrier, which can carry 60 planes; 5 other ships; and 2,000 Marines are ready to intervene in El Salvador to support the military which is governing that country, Lilian Jimenez, a prominent Salvadoran political analyst, charged here today. In a lecture held during a series of conferences called "Imperialism, Balkanization and Revolution in Central America and the Caribbean," Jimenez charged that "U.S. veterans from the Vietnam war are participating in the repression in El Salvador." She said that the United States is using "its satellites--Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica--to support the military in power in El Salvador." She added that units used to neutralize the guerrillas in Vietnam through Operation Phoenix, are now in El Salvador, "a delicate spot for U.S. imperialism." [Text] [PA062031 Paris AFP in Spanish 1837 GMT 6 Oct 80]

MORALES EHRLICH SPEAKS AT SEMINAR--Dr Jose Antonio Morales Ehrlich, member of the revolutionary government junta yesterday said: We are going through a difficult moment when blood is still being spilled because this situation cannot be prevented by a decree. However, he added, this should strengthen our resolve to carry out changes and to go forward for the sake of peace and social justice. Morales made these statements in opening a municipal seminar: Touristic El Salvador. He regretted the murder of Christian Democratic Party member Dr Melvin Orellana. There are irrational extreme left and extreme right groups in all sectors of our society that are bleeding our fatherland. As our reforms are consolidated, however, those sectors will be completely left out of our society, Dr Morales noted. He added that the death of Dr Orellana, a worthy man of the Salvadoran society, must make us double our efforts to unite all Salvadorans to work against violence and cooperate with the changes that the revolutionary regime has been promoting for the well-being of all Salvadorans without discrimination. [Text] [PA120124 San Salvador Radio Cadena YSKL in Spanish 1743 GMT 11 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES MAJOR GOAL, ECONOMIC ADVANCES

Bridgetown SUNDAY ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 21 Sep 80 p 3

[Text]

ST. GEORGE's, Grenada, Saturday (CANA) —

EIGHTEEN months after seizing power, the People's Revolutionary Government (PRG) in Grenada has announced major progress in the country's social and economic development.

In a statement outlining its achievements, the left-leaning PRG said it has been able to reduce the cost of some commodities increase educational opportunities for Grenadians, stimulate the weak agricultural sector and improve the country's health services.

The Government also talks of having reduced unemployment by creating thousands of jobs, having assisted home owners and improved community centres and the services they rendered.

On the external situation the statement said there had been a new thrust in foreign policy, taking on a more positive line from one previously preoccupied with unidentified flying objects (UFOS).

The new thrust is seen in Grenada's membership of the Non-Aligned Movement, and the country's subsequent election to the movement's co-ordinating bureau in the first year of membership, the statement noted.

The PRG took power in an early morning coup on March 13 last year, deposing the administration of Sir Eric Gairy, now exiled in the United States.

The new government of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop said its main priorities on the economic front were to reduce the high cost of living and create jobs.

Mr. Bishop said then that the main pillars of the economy — agriculture and agro-industry, tourism and fisheries — would be stimulated. These measures, one Government Minister noted, were being taken as a result of the chaos the new government inherited.

The national debt stood at $57 million, unemployment was running at over 40 per cent, and tourism earnings were down.

In addition, the new government charged that Grenadian students were finding difficulties in entering the University of the West Indies (UWI) as the country was not meeting its annual contributions to the maintenance of the regional institution. Furthermore, agriculture was at a standstill as tracts of lands remained idle while the country's food import bill continued to rise.

But with a record $103 million Budget the PRG has set about to rebuild the country.

In tourism, the Government has pointed to the recently launched construction of a new international airport costing US$50 million, the training of 70 people at a new hotel training school and who have since found jobs in the industry, and the resurfacing of the airstrip at Carriacou, a nearby island.

According to the statement, there have also been the reduction of school fees, award of more scholarships, creation of 2 500 new jobs, the abandoning of all anti-worker legislation, provision of two new water treatment plants and a 30 per cent exemption of the population from income tax.

In listing other achievements the statement said:

— Twenty people trained in art, ceramics weaving, woodcraft and macrame at the Government Handicraft Training Centre and are now employed in the handicraft department.

— Over 400 poor workers receive house repair materials through the national house repair programme.

— Three community centres opened, others being built.

— Twenty two youth trained as community leaders under the Youth for Reconstruction Programme.

— Numerous communities cleaned up and improved by voluntary work brigades.

— 50 000 Grenadians treated by members of the Cuban medical workers team in Grenada.

— Forty people are treated daily by eye specialists at the eye clinic.

— Hospitals have more and better equipment, medicines and supplies.

— Resident nurse and visiting doctor in Petit Martinique.

— Primary health care project being developed.

— National Nutrition Council formed to improve the quality of food and nutrition in the country.

— Grenadian doctors, nurses and health professionals returning home to serve their people.

— Free milk distributed to all children under five years.

— Primary school children under five years.

— Prrimary school children receive free milk and cheap meals.

— Recognition for Grenada abroad as a serious, progressive, honest and dynamic country vigoriously seeking after social justice.

8 multi-lateral assistance of about US$25 million from the United Nations International Monetary Fund (IMF), European Economic Community (EEC), Organisation of American States (OAS), Pan American Development Fund (PADF), Caribbean Development Bank (CDB) and Caribbean Community (CARICOM).

— Bi-lateral assistance of an estimated US$20 million received in the form of grants, soft loans, material and technical support from a variety of countries including some in the Caribbean, Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

— In July this year Grenada was chosen to represent the Caribbean countries on the Bureau of Ambassadors of the African, Caribbean and Pacific States (ACP).

— Grenada is now a full member of Socialist International.

CSO: 3020

DEMOCRATIC FRONT MEMBER DESCRIBES ACTIVITIES

Rome POLITICA INTERNAZIONALE in Italian Jun 80 pp 126-128

[Interview with Nora Santos, a Guatemalan intellectual and member of the Democratic Front Against Repression, by S. Pietrantonio, of POLITICA INTERNAZIONALE, in Italy; date not given]

[Text] Violence in Guatemala.

In a world by now accustomed to violence, the news of blood and of death that comes from remote countries of the Third World no longer succeeds in stirring the public to that indignation and that mobilization that on other occasions and in other periods similar events had produced, at least in our country. Violence and terrorism have become daily facts of life, events that have tragically marked these dark years of our history, causing grave damage to the democratic fabric of the country. Included in the great amount of damage, in addition to indifference and inurement in the face of violence, there is a tendency to assimilate the Italian situation with that of other countries where ruthless dictatorships are in power, where there is no guarantee of democracy, where violence and terrorism are practiced by the government and its separate organs, where political opposition has no means to defend itself other than to resort to armed struggle.

This is the case with Guatemala, where for more than 10 years there has been a systematic campaign of annihilation, not only against guerrilla movements and the most radical forces of the left, but also against democratic-bourgeois opposition, intellectuals, priests, and the religious who disagree with the methods of the regime or who support the struggle of the "Indians" and the "peasants." As a matter of fact, the Guatemalan dictatorship pursues its own economic plan, one that expropriates and confiscates small plots of land in the northern part of the country, rich in petroleum, and expels the "Indians" who have worked this land from which they derived their sustenance. If someone protests, even peacefully, he is systematically annihilated. All will remember the chilling episode in February of the 40 "peasants" of the Quitche ethnic group who were burned alive in the Spanish embassy in Guatemala City, which they had peacefully occupied in order to denounce the repression of which they were victims. On that occasion there was an indignant reaction in the face of the seriousness of the occurrence. The Spanish government broke off diplomatic relations, the UN issued a mild condemnation, the Department of State "deplored" it. Then everything returned to normal.

Amnesty International, which proclaimed 1980 as "human rights year in Guatemala," estimates that in 10 years 70,000 persons have been murdered or have disappeared. Since the advent of General Romeo Lucas Garcia to power,"elected" in 1978 thanks to massive intimidation and verified electoral corruption, repression has been intensified and the terrorist activities of the various death squadrons have increased. It is impossible for even an organization like Amnesty International to keep track of the number of the dead and of those who have disappeared. In this connection, in one of the most recent reports of the humanitarian organization one reads: "There are no political prisoners in Guatemala. The security forces and the death squadrons have killed them all." Among the most noted personages who were killed in recent years one recalls former Minister of Foreign Affairs Alberto Fuentes Mohr and former Mayor of the capital Manuel Colon Argueta, both members of parties of the legal opposition and both candidates for the 1982 presidential elections.

Recently a delegation of the Democratic Front Against Repression arrived in Italy. This organization groups the democratic parties of Guatemala and came to Italy to meet with political and labor personalities and to ask for help and solidarity. The delegation was accompanied by Nora Santos, a Guatemalan intellectual and a militant in a rank and file Christian community, which for years has been denouncing the crimes that have been committed in Guatemala, in the midst of indifference and silence on the part of the putlic. We asked her a few questions.

[Question] What is the current political situation in your country?

[Answer] Terrible. Just consider that on 1 May 31 persons were killed and many other democratic persons were arrested. A few hours later, they were said to have disappeared. The political opposition nevertheless is not allowing itself to be intimidated by this ruthless repression and is not giving up the struggle. It is a unitary struggle of the political and labor union left against an unprecedented fascism. Since Manuel Colon Argueta's funeral in 1979 every other funeral has been the occasion for a political meeting of from 20 to 50 thousand persons. The masses have united in a plan to overthrow Garcia, even though Christian democracy continues to say that a dialog is possible. There is revolutionary fervor among the workers, students, housewives, priests, and teachers.

[Question] What is the historical path of this opposition?

[Answer] To fully understand the situation that has led to armed struggle in Guatemala, it is necessary to remember that the opposition movement had its origin in the democratic-bourgeois period of the history of our country up to the reformist government of Jacopo Arbenz, who was overthrown by the CIA. During this period the CTG (Confederation of Guatemalan Workers), the FSG (Guatemalan Trade Union Federation), and the FRCT (Regional Federation of Central American Workers) united and in 1946 formed the CNUS (National Committee for Trade Union Unification). This committee was a temporary one, because on 1 May 1951 the CGTG (General Confederation of Workers of Guatemala) was constituted and the National Confederation of Farmers immediately joined it. Through Arbenz's agrarian reform, 400,000 hectares were distributed to 100,000 peasant families in 1 and 1/2 years. This directly affected the interests of the United Fruit Co., which caused the counterrevolution of Castillo Armas, who destroyed the entire peasant, worker, and student organization. But the struggle was resumed in 1955 with the first big student demonstrations in the capital, to the accompaniment of bombs. In 1958-62 the labor movement began to be reconstituted: railroad and banking trade unions were formed. In 1962 there was the well-known "Guatemalan May," with armed conflicts, barriers, and general strikes; the first guerrilla warfare emerged. In 1963 armed movement was organized with focal points in the mountain range. The most important was the FAR (Rebel Armed Forces), the result of a union of various tendencies, which included the PGT (Guatemalan Labor Party) and the 12 April Movement. From 1966 to 1970, there was intense counterguerrilla warfare that resulted in hundreds of deaths in universities, factories, and in the fields. Alfonso Beauer Pais, former minister of economy, and Adolfo Mihangos, christian democratic deputy who had denounced the exploitation of nickel by foreign companies, died. The period from 1973 to 1978 saw the emergence of various movements that denouced repression, the Ixtauacan workers' marches, the growth of settlers' movements that sprang up after the 1976 earthquake that caused the death of 20,000 persons and left more than 1 million persons without homes in the city. During this period the CUC (Farmers Unification Committee) was formed. It denounced repression on farms and defended farmers with weapons. The Committee for Justice and Peace came into being, through the work of intellectuals, laymen, and the religious, both Protestant and Catholic--all united against the prevailing fascism. But the key point in the unification of the masses was 1979 with the funeral of Argueta, which marked a qualitative and quantitative growth in the opposition movement which, going beyond the sometimes spontaneous nature of the struggles, took on a unitary structure and an intermediate- and long-term political plan.

[Question] Are the middle and lower middle classes assimilated into this process or are they in a somewhat vague position?

[Answer] The bourgeoisie is divided. At this moment the army is engaging in ruthless competition with the traditional bourgeoisie, by occupying the lands that are richest in petroleum, nickel, cobalt, and tungsten, in the northern part of the country and, parallely, it is organizing everything that it finds necessary for itself. The true bourgeoisie calls the army the "bureaucratic bourgeoisie." Today the military has its own bank, its own means of communication, its own schools and university throughout Guatemala. All of this creates division in the middle and lower-middle classes.

[Question] But is there a certain amount of conflict within the dominant classes or are they all in agreement with Garcia's government?

[Answer] There may be a card that the U.S. is trying to play, a spare card. In practice it would mean supporting an "enlightened" government (please note the quotation marks) constituted by the DC and by the vice president of the Kramer republic. These contradictions, however, are subordinate to the policy of the U.S. The entire game is yet to be played, because what has occurred, and is occurring, in Salvador did not yield the hoped-for fruit. Nevertheless, this card cannot by any means be discarded.

[Question] Are you afraid of a direct intervention by the mercenaries who "are bivouacking" in Central America?

[Answer]. Yes. In the first place, one must realize that Guatemala is the most important country, both economically and politically, in Central America. Then, there is a concentration on our land of nuclei of the Somoza national guard, ready to invade Salvador in case of necessity. It is also known that Guatemalan forces are being trained on big farms in the eastern zone and that they, too, are ready to invade Salvador. Then there are the paramilitary groups, like the MIN (National Liberation Movement), those of the "White Hand" of the fascist extreme right, and other similar organizations which, with the complicity of the police and the army, sow terror in the country. We also know that if in Guatemala things should precipitate these forces, now controlled by the army, they would have the support of the Cuban "gusanos," of South Vietnamese and Korean mercenaries , of Somoza forces, and perhaps--we are checking this--of some sectors of the Honduran government.

[Question] How is the resistance organized?

[Answer] It is clandestine, at several levels. At this moment military-type claims are closely connected to large-scale social ones. The large-scale support is very important. Guerrilla warfare in the country is no longer focalized. It is closely tied in with the masses, who are arming and are advancing the line of armed self-defense.

[Question] Is it true that there is an alliance between you and some Chilean, Argentine, and Uruguayan groups, supporters of armed struggle in their countries?

[Answer] It is not true. The clandestine organizations that now exist in Guatemala, that is, the PGT (Communist Party), the EGP (People's Guerrilla Army), which emerged in 1975 and which supports the protracted people's guerrilla and which is influential in the southern and eastern coast among the "Indians", the FAR (Rebel Armed Forces), which emerged in 1963, and the ORPA (Revolutionary Organization of the Armed People), which emerged in 1979, fight only with their own forces. The EGP and the ORPA have recently been carrying out various military actions (occupation of villages, executions of spies and of torturers); in addition, the EGP killed General Staff Commander D. Cancinos, who, in a helicopter, personally directed the assassination of Argueta.

[Question] Where do your weapons come from? Do you, as the Sandinists did, acquire them on the U.S. black market?

[Answer] The U.S. army has traditionally supplied weapons to my country. Garcia now buys Galils, bombs, airplanes, and ammunition from Israel. But the guerrillas also have Galils. Weapons are merely taken from the enemy!

[Question] What do you think of U.S.maneuvers in the Caribbean and Cuba?

[Answer] These maneuvers tend to intimidate the resistance of Guatemala and of the other countries of Central America, and primarily that of the entire Sandinist revolution. In addition, an attempt is being made to strike at the support that Cuba can give these countries, especially to young Nicaragua. Cuba is a socialist country; it is a guide for all Latin Americans,especially for Central Americans.

[Question] What is your international strategy?

[Answer] We are seeking relations with all the countries, with all the parties, that can help the cause of the Guatemalan people, without conditions, but fraternally and civilly. We are not accepting conditions from anyone; we would only want disinterested help, without anything being demanded of us. Garcia's dictatorship, which kills from 8 to 13 persons a day, must stop as soon as possible.

We need solidarity at all levels, from everyone.

8255
CSO: 3104

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES LATIN AMERICAN RELATIONS

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 9

[Text] Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto told EL NUEVO DIARIO that Honduras and Nicaragua have studied the possibility of undertaking a joint operation with their armies to clean up the border area and eliminate the Somozist elements that are trying to cause friction between the two countries.

The minister made these statements Wednesday evening at his home, when talking with editors of this newspaper who attended a reception given for Father James Noonan, superior of the Maryknoll Order, at D'Escoto's residence.

Father D'Escoto, who did not go into more detail about the matter, indicated that talks have begun "to get the operation going as soon as possible."

The minister added that Honduras has shown good intentions to do away with the problem, and that the Nicaraguan Government hopes it lives up to its word.

Colombia Does Not Argue

With regard to Colombia's "white book," the foreign minister indicated that "now it is clearer than ever that Colombia has no convincing argument for its claims to the islands of San Andres and Providencia and the keys of Roncador, Quitasueno and Serrana."

D'Escoto stated this yesterday after Luis Pasos Arguello said that a white book published by the Colombian Foreign Ministry last month was "a Godsend." In that report, "Nicaragua's rights to those territories are recognized."

Another White Book

Minister D'Escoto stated yesterday that Nicaragua will soon issue another white book that will be "much more extensive and complete than the one issued when the treaty was declared null and void."

"It is not an answer to Colombia's white book, which has become an argument in our favor," said D'Escoto, "but its purpose is to inform international and Nicaraguan public opinion."

"It will prove once again," he indicated, "that the Colombian allegations have no basis in fact."

With regard to relations with Colombia, the foreign minister explained that the Nicaraguan Government has never blamed the government or people of Colombia for the unjust situation that exists in those territories that are actually part of Nicaraguan sovereignty, and said it is possible to maintain friendly and cordial relations. But that does not imply that we are going to forget the defense of our territorial integrity, he claimed.

Countercoup in Bolivia

Concerning Bolivia, he claimed to have knowledge of "the possibility of a countercoup."

D'Escoto stated that the movement against the government of Gen Luis Garcia Meza, which was installed by a coup, is reportedly backed by Gen Hugo Banzer, according to reports obtained here.

Commenting on the current status of Nicaragua's efforts at the Organization of American States to discuss the Bolivian coup, D'Escoto admitted that no major progress had been made.

"But it is undeniable," he asserted, "that the work of the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry contributed to the fact that the most conscientious countries of the world did not establish diplomatic ties with Bolivia."

"For this reason, the Bolivian Government broke off relations with our government," said D'Escoto.

"The Bolivian Government," added the foreign minister, "is now in such a touchy situation that it would be very difficult for it to stay in power for 2 more months."

Referring to the possibility of a countercoup in Bolivia, D'Escoto pointed out that "given this situation, we hope that the countries which have condemned the coup will remain firm in defense of the Bolivian people's right to self-determination."

"Siles Suazo is the constitutional president, having won an overwhelming majority," indicated D'Escoto, adding that "we hope there is no countercoup, but we are aware that one is in the works. . ."

Paraguay

Concerning the Paraguayan threats to break off relations with Nicaragua, Foreign Minister D'Escoto stated that we must recall that Nicaragua has no diplomatic representation in that country, and that Nicaraguan affairs are handled by the Mexican Embassy.

D'Escoto claimed to have no official information about such desires, and stated that in any case any Paraguayan initiative in that regard should be forwarded to the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry through the Mexican delegation in Asuncion.

"We have learned from press reports that irresponsible officials of the Paraguayan Government have tried to implicate Nicaragua in the death of Somoza," said D'Escoto.

"It seems that they made that assumption because of the joy expressed by the Nicaraguan Government at the tyrant's death. That joy was felt not only in Nicaragua, but also in other Latin American countries and all over the world."

"Somoza's death," he stated, "was celebrated in all parts of the world where there is love for democracy, liberty and justice."

Iraq-Iran War

Regarding the war between Iran and Iraq, the foreign minister indicated that "it does not help anyone's interests but those of the imperialists in the area of conflict."

"We hope an expeditious solution can be reached."

The foreign minister gave this interview to EL NUEVO DIARIO last Wednesday at his residence in southern Managua during a visit by Father James Noonan, superior of the Maryknoll Order to which he belongs.

8926
CSO: 3010

UN AMBASSADOR SAYS COUNTRY FOLLOWS NONALIGNED POLICY

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 23 Sep 80 p 7

[Text] Nicaraguan Ambassador to the United Nations Victor Hugo Tinoco gave a press conference in which he covered various important issues relating to Nicaragua's position in the prestigious world forum, its achievements and the new approach the Sandinist People's Revolution is taking with regard to world politics.

Tinoco briefly went into the important role of the United Nations in world peacekeeping efforts and the consequent accomplishments of humanity based on mutual respect, within a framework of harmony and progress.

"We have recently kept a position of nonalignment, anti-imperialism, anti-colonialism (due to the situation recently suffered by Nicaragua), anti-racism and antiapartheid. Our actions are based on this policy, which was defined by the Governing Board at the Chiefs of State Conference of the Sixth Summit of Nonaligned Countries in Havana," said Tinoco.

According to a curriculum vitae distributed by the Foreign Ministry, in his youth Tinoco was an active student leader. He was president of his school at the Autonomous National University of Nicaragua and vice president of the University Center there in 1975, and secretary general and adviser at the Center the following year. He was commissioned by the Sandinist Liberation Front (FSLN) to help form the People United movement, of whose General Secretariat he was a member.

Later the FSLN assigned him to be a rural guerrilla, and as such he was responsible for a column for 6 months in the border area of the departments of Leon and Estelí. Afterwards he fought in Jinotega, where he was surprised by the triumph of the Revolution. From that department he went on to become ambassador to the United Nations.

Tinoco mentioned the "abysmal" difference between the former and present Nicaraguan delegations to the United Nations. Before, the delegation was 100 percent obedient to the decisions made by the United States' policy makers.

Nicaraguan support for the American position was automatic. Now, Nicaragua is a nonaligned country, a country with its own policy and sovereignty, he asserted.

Referring to the current problem in Afghanistan, Tinoco said that the Nicaraguan delegation had taken a "defining" stand regarding the independent nature of our foreign policy: "Algeria, India and other countries took the same attitude as Nicaragua," he stated.

When asked specifically what is the official position of the Nicaraguan Government in the United Nations on this problem, Tinoco answered: "We believe that there is a whole counter-revolutionary movement in Afghanistan that is coming in massively from Pakistan. We're not the only ones who say so; the Department of State has said as much through its spokesman. We are not going to condemn a situation in which a revolutionary government requests help in defending itself from a counterrevolutionary movement financed by the United States, because we would be hurting ourselves."

"We have good reason to believe that the counterrevolution is being financed by our enemies. Our position is not one of condemning the efforts of a revolutionary regime that requests aid. Although we have not approved of the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan, neither are we going to play into the hands of the Americans who are financing the counterrevolution. We have abstained from taking sides in this case."

At the same press conference, Tinoco explained the serious problems that threaten world peace, such as the Palestinian issue, Israeli indifference to the criticism motivated by constant violations of the territories of various Arab countries, and the problems of the countries south of China such as Kampuchea, Thailand, Laos and the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic.

8926
CSO: 3010

TEACHERS PROCLAIM SOLIDARITY WITH SALVADORAN COUNTERPARTS

PA091333 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0300 GMT 8 Oct 80

[Text] From: The teachers of the Nicaraguan colleges of education

To: Companero teachers and people of El Salvador

All our Latin American peoples, who have been [?subjected] to U.S. imperialism, are currently committed to becoming more conscientious in order to achieve their identity, their freedom, their nationality and all political, social and economic goals.

This struggle against gorillaism, the oligarchy and fascism, all of which are supported by U.S. imperialism, continues (?being staged) by our Salvadoran brothers who can already see the sun of freedom of their new dawn.

Therefore, the teachers of all Nicaraguan colleges of education, waging an authentic revolution, [words indistinct] the repression and death of Salvadoran teachers and brothers and admire the bravery and heroism of that people, who are following in our track. For this reason,

1. We express our solidarity with the just causes and demands made by the brothers, companeros, teachers and people of El Salvador.

2. We strongly condemn the massacre to which the Salvadoran brothers, teachers and people are being subjected, while struggling to rid themselves of the gorilla-fascist junta.

3. We reject any interventionist maneuver by U.S. imperialism in the liberatarian process currently underway in El Salvador.

[Signed] The teachers of the Nicaraguan colleges of education. If Nicaragua was victorious, El Salvador will be victorious. Free fatherland or death!

CSO: 3010

SOLIDARITY COMMITTEE DISCUSSES CHE GUEVARA'S EXAMPLE

PA081930 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1800 GMT / Oct 80

[Communique of the Nicaraguan Committee of Solidarity With Peoples; date not specified--read by announcer]

[Text] To the Nicaraguan people and the people of the world:

Ernesto Che Guevara is the greatest epitome of internationalism in practice. A revolutionary is an individual who rids himself of all the superfluities of bourgeois society and totally devotes himself to the struggle of the proletariat. The working class is one. It has no borders and where there is an oppressed people, the revolutionaries will be there.

Che honored the meaning of being a revolutionary. The most beautiful quality of a revolutionary is to deeply feel any injustice against anyone anywhere in the world. Commander Guevara's determination to struggle was always evident. It was directly focused against the Yankees, enemies of mankind. To struggle against imperialism wherever it may be comforts and cures any laceration. He expressed his internationalist attitude and his willingness to fight until the final victory when he said: Other lands of the world demand the contribution of my modest efforts.

Internationalism cannot be separated from a consistently revolutionary attitude. Che viewed the armed struggle as a strategy of struggle. He was completely convinced that armed struggle is the best strategy against Yankee imperialism. Therefore, it is the way to liberate the oppressed peoples. He who says he is a revolutionary and does not practice internationalism is not a revolutionary. Internationalism is the essence of being a revolutionary.

The heroic deeds of Che in his struggle for the liberation of oppressed peoples shows his great revolutionary spirit. Argentine born, Che fought and struggled for the Cuban people's cause against the Batista dictatorship. He then fought alongside the Bolivian people who had been oppressed by military dictatorships. He died in this struggle on 8 October 1969.

Che is the example of an authentic revolutionary. He taught us with his example and he lives in us in each internationalist act.

On this glorious date, the Nicaraguan Committee of Solidarity With Peoples once again expresses solidarity with the struggle of all oppressed people and raises its voice against the genocide being committed against our brother people of Latin America and the world.

Long live the shining example of Che! Long live revolutionary internationalism!

CSO: 3010

'LA PRENSA' PROTESTS AGAINST ATTACK ON ITS REPORTING

PA121911 Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 4 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial: "LA PRENSA's Protests"]

[Text] We have signed a protest against the restrictive new application of decrees 511 and 512, not so much because of its terms as because of the ambiguity of its interpretations (an ambiguous freedom is a freedom with unrest), and above all because of the manner in which LA PRENSA's job of informing continues to be treated.

We protest because at all the demonstrations, the junta and the Front [Sandinist National Liberation Front] have tried to implicate the newspaper in the events it reports. In other words, they blame us for events (most of which we oppose), because we have reported them.

This system of attack has very serious implications for freedom of information because it constricts one, as a result of fear and threats, into keeping an irresponsible and harmful silence with regard to events in the country.

It is absurd and it is of injurious bad faith to suggest or openly accuse LA PRENSA of being linked to or involved in the events in Bluefields simply because, as a newspaper, it objectively reported the information on events that it received from that city. LA PRENSA's report contained no encouragements, no assessments, not even any adjectival comments on the situation or the events. That is why it is a threat to freedom for the simple fulfillment of a newspaper's duty of informing to become almost a crime, at least in official interpretations or veiled accusations.

Even our editorial urging tact in handling this delicate situation--an editorial which we wrote with the best intentions of promoting understanding and the solution of the problem--was described as a maneuver to give "philosophical" support to agitation. The young leaders who misrepresent us may have a very short range view from the government, but we approach the problem from the viewpoint of history, because we have a long-time knowledge of the vicissitudes of that region and the dangers they imply in view of our geographic situation and given the type of interests that besiege our sovereignty.

It is this spirit of complete mistrust for everything that has not emanated from official spheres, this spirit of hostility toward the freedom to hold other points of view, that we object to. We protest against the spirit of considering freedom to be opposition, of considering divergence to be counterrevolution.

If one proclaims pluralism in the abstract, it is absurd and counterproductive to consider it subversion in practice.

We protest against this tendency, increasingly evident and increasingly intolerant and incomprehensible, to place LA PRENSA in the position of the "enemy" just because it is an independent newspaper.

The result of this tendency is to declare, through LA PRENSA, that freedom is: guilty!

CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

NEW RADIO STATION--Radio 13 de Octubre will be officially opened today as part of the activities scheduled to commemorate the attack on the San Carlos Garrison on 13 October 1977. The radio station will be a member of the Sandinist Communications Media System and will be located on the San Carlos departmental highway. It will serve to further one of the revolutionary government's strategic missions. This radio station represents one more effort by the government to counter the propaganda of foreign radio stations which often distort the process underway in Nicaragua. Companero Jesus Miguel Blandon, director of Radio Sandino and official in charge of the radio stations of the Sandinist communications system, explains the efforts made to establish this radio station and its functions within the framework of the revolution. [Begin recording] It was necessary to establish this radio station in order to help the communications with San Carlos Department, since at present San Carlos can be reached only by airplane because the highway is in very bad shape and it takes anywhere from 19 to 24 hours to make the trip by launch. [end recording] [Excerpts] [PA131616 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1200 GMT 13 Oct 80]

COSEP SPOKESMAN DENIES REMARKS--Carlos (Caguar), executive secretary of the Higher Council of Private Enterprise [COSEP], denied to one of our newsmen that he had spoken badly of the revolution during a trip to Lima, Peru. A news dispatch published several days ago in the press quoted the COSEP delegation as saying that human rights are violated in Nicaragua and that there are obstacles to industrial development. (Caguar) told Radio Sandino he is unfamiliar with the dispatch and with the request allegedly presented to COSEP by the State Council. I have made no statement regarding the violation of human rights. I did say that it has not been possible to reactivate industry, but not that there are obstacles to its development, he said. I would like to see this dispatch in order to clarify matters. I feel there has been a misrepresentation. We support the government junta's plan and the mixed economy plan, Carlos (Caguar) said in conclusion. [Text] [PA071659 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0300 GMT 7 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

ENERGY DEVELOPMENTS, SOURCES SURVEYED

Electricity Use Up

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 9 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] Although the maximum electric power load for July is an all-time record for the UTE [General Administration of State Electric Power and Telephones], surpassing the 1979 maximum by 21.6 percent, it represents a rise of just 12.6 percent over the July 1978 level.

As expected, the July statistics supplied by the Energy Bulletin of the National Energy Board point to disproportionate growth over last year, when there were major cutbacks in consumption, due to well-known reasons.

Total cumulative data for the first 7 months of the year indicate a 13.6 percent increase over the same period in 1979 in terms of the power generated in the national hydrothermal system.

Hydrocarbons Use Up

There was a general upswing in the demand for all hydrocarbon fuels in July, with the exception of UTE consumption.

Thus, there has been an overall decline of 13.5 percent so far this year in comparison to last year. If supplies furnished to the UTE are excluded, there has been a five percent drop in overall demand from 1979.

With regard to the consumption of gas distributed through the Montevideo system, the July 1980 figure posted a significant seven percent rise over the July 1979 level; thus, the cumulative total for January to July is up two percent from the 1979 level.

Eucalyptus as Energy Source

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 7 Sep 80 p 13

[Text] Our country has traditionally been a producer and exporter of agricultural and livestock products and an importer of forest products. We spend about $20 million a year to import wood products that could be produced domestically, with the resulting foreign exchange savings.

Our forest acreage is also the lowest in Latin America, 598,683 hectares or 3.39 percent of the country's surface area, which also makes us one of the most sparsely wooded nations in the world. Nonetheless, our country has 1,929,973 hectares of potential woodlands, 10.95 percent of its surface area.

Prompt Action Necessary

In just 50 years, by utilizing fossil fuels (coal, oil and natural gas), man has advanced his civilization at a dizzying pace through unprecedented industrial development.

These nonrenewable natural resources, however, will barely last until the beginning of the 21st century. Future generations will have to come up with new fuels and utilize renewable natural resources as sources that cannot be depleted.

The scarcity of petroleum is the main cause of the current energy crisis. Producers are pursuing a policy of cutting back on output to conserve a resource that they realize is nonrenewable. Scarcity is the result: supply does not keep pace with demand, and prices continue to rise.

Uruguay is particularly susceptible to this situation because it depends totally on imports to meet its needs.

The remaining fossil fuels will not be able to resolve our problem of import dependency, and nuclear power cannot provide short- and medium-term solutions.

At present, 70 percent of the country's energy consumption is accounted for by oil, of which we import about 2 million cubic meters a year.

This figure gives us an idea of the impact that an alternative source could have on our energy expenditures.

For political and national security reasons, Uruguay must become independent of energy sources linked to other countries or outside circumstances.

About 1.3 million tons of firewood a year are currently consumed for energy, industrial and household purposes. Inasmuch as logging is currently experiencing a major boom and the use of fuel wood is on the rise, the country is in danger of depleting its resources. We must, therefore, promote forestation efforts for energy purposes.

In a way, the energy from crops is a variation of solar power, because crops transform solar energy and store it in biomasse.

The value of woodlands is ecological, not just economic. Forests preserve the soil, regulate the seasonal distribution of precipitation and help to safeguard fauna. Forests are like green lungs, and green areas are not just for recreation; they also combat environmental pollution.

Planting Trees To Beat the Crisis

For various reasons, eucalyptus seems to be the most appropriate variety of tree for the production of energy.

Although all types of trees can be used for energy purposes, some grow more quickly and have greater heat-producing potential.

There are many advantages to wood, perhaps the main one being that it does not have to be harvested at any specific time. This can be done during any season of the year, and weather is not a problem.

Moreover, the longer a tree is left standing, the more valuable it becomes; it can be kept as a resource.

In addition, tree crops are grown in soil that would be considered marginal for farming and livestock-raising, and thus they do not compete with food production. It is also much less expensive to grow trees than to grow farm crops.

In addition, the tree varieties that we are promoting regenerate; in other words, after they are cut, they naturally begin to grow again. This means that no new investment is needed to obtain further production. In fact, growth is faster after the initial felling, and the development phase is thus shorter. In the case of eucalyptus, from 7 to 10 experimental harvest cuttings have been done in our country without the need for replanting.

All of these reasons lead us to the conclusion that forestation is a constructive alternative for Uruguay.

Wood can be burnt as a fuel in its original state or it can be chemically processed into substitutes for petroleum derivatives.

We are thus moving slowly from petrochemicals to wood-based chemicals.

8743
CSO: 3010

FIRST HALF TRADE BALANCE SHOWS $357 MILLION DEFICIT

Montevideo LA MANANA in Spanish 4 Sep 80 p 11

[Text] The country's first half trade balance shows a deficit of $357.425 million, according to information from the Central Bank. One of the main reasons for the deficit was the expenditure for petroleum, which was up more than 120 percent this year over last.

The nation's foreign trade totaled $1.207 billion, with exports accounting for $424.790 and imports hitting $782.215 million; the deficit is thus 29.61 percent of the total.

Exports rose from $366.834 million to $424.790 million from last year to this year, with the increase showing a remarkable balance between traditional and nontraditional items.

Nontraditional items accounted for 56.69 percent of total overseas sales during the first half of the year, whereas in 1979 they stood at slightly above 60 percent.

As far as imports are concerned, there has been a major imbalance due to oil purchases, which totaled $261 million this year, as compared to $118 million in 1979, a jump of 121 percent.

There was also a major rise, 60 percent, in imports of machinery and electrical supplies and equipment. Imports of vehicles were up almost double as well.

1979 a Good Year: Chamber of Commerce

In general, 1979 can be regarded as a good year because of the exceptional rise in output, the budget surplus, the streamlining of the tax and indirect tax [paratributario] system and the drop in unemployment. To an extent these developments have offset the negative aspects: a rise in inflation and the uncertainties in pursuing the current farm and tariff policies.

This assessment is contained in the preface to the National Chamber of Commerce's report on the domestic picture in 1979. Today we begin a series of articles summarizing the information in the report.

GDP Growth

For the first time in decades the country has achieved exceptional economic growth levels. The rise in the gross domestic product is remarkable not only in comparison to our lengthy period of stagnation but also in relation to the economic growth phase that began in 1974. To illustrate, growth totaled 4.4 percent in 1975; 2.6 percent in 1976; 3.4 percent in 1977; 3.9 percent in 1978 and 8.4 percent in 1979.

The rise in the gross domestic product during the period in question was made possible partly by national and international developments of a cyclical nature.

Argentine demand unquestionably had a heavy impact on the level of activity in 1979. Tourism, exports to Argentina and Argentine investment in real estate spurred the pace of Uruguayan output.

Domestically, growth was helped by a reallocation of resources. Farm investment during much of 1979 meant increased domestic demand, which sparked a number of production subsectors.

The renewed outbreak of high inflation over the first few months of 1979 heightened inflationary expectations. Together with the anticipated fixed exchange rate for the dollar, this meant that dollar debts could be contracted at negative interest rates. There then occurred a strong move towards the purchase of tangible goods, especially real estate, land and half-finished construction projects, which represented a major stimulus for the construction industry.

Furthermore, the negative interest rate in terms of anticipated inflation was a very powerful cyclical factor in the level of activity, a factor that cannot, in turn, be divorced from the broad-based rise in prices that the country has experienced.

The quickened pace of inflation, together with a real rise in demand, obviously prompted a time lag between prices and costs. Not only did this spark business by boosting the pace of activity, but it also prompted a rise in profits (albeit temporary) that must be regarded as a logical upshot of the combined impact of the aforementioned factors.

8743
CSO: 3010

GDP UP, INFLATION DOWN DURING FIRST HALF OF YEAR

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 7 Sep 80 p 18

[Text] The gross domestic product for the first half of the year recorded a 6.5 percent gain over the same period last year.

The Central Bank report indicates that there has been a slowdown from last year, but even so the rise is higher than in previous years.

Comparing first half and first quarter statistics, we can see that overall, first half performance was better. The GDP had risen by six percent from January to March.

As far as the sectors are concerned, agriculture kept up its growth rate; fishing and industry were down, and construction, trade, transportation and energy were up.

The following table shows the estimated growth rates by sectors of the gross domestic product for the first 6 months of 1980.

Sector	Rate	Share in Total
Agriculture and livestock	+11.5	1.4
Fishing	+ 1.9	--
Manufacturing	+ 3.3	0.8
Construction	+15.3	1.0
Trade	+12.4	1.9
Transportation and storage	+ 7.2	0.5
Electricity, gas, water	+ 6.6	0.2
Others	+ 2.3	0.7
Total GDP	+ 6.5	6.5

Inflation Slowdown From January to June

Falling livestock sector prices, changes in the pattern of consumer price increases and a slowing of inflation were the three major factors in price developments from January to June. A COMCORDE [Coordinating Committee for Economic Development] report summarizes the main movements during this period and their immediate background.

Consumer prices rose 21.3 percent during the first half of 1980, appreciably slower than during the same period in 1979. The breakdown was 10.3 percent in the first quarter and 10 percent in the second.

This confirms the slowdown in the inflation rate that had begun to emerge at the cost of living level in January of this year.

By looking at the percentages for each of the preceding 12 months, we can draw interesting conclusions regarding inflation trends.

Percentage Increase Over the Same Month the Previous Year

	1979	1980
January	52.4	79.7
February	55.4	79.2
March	55.2	78.1
April	54.2	74.7
May	60.8	68.7
June	62.9	67.8
July	62.9
August	72.5
September	73.4
October	72.8
November	82.3
December	83.1

First, this confirms the slowdown in price increases as of January 1980.

Second, with regard to this downward trend, we can see that annual rates diminished least in the months in which wages, mainly, were boosted. We saw a similar, though upward, development in 1979, when the biggest rises were in May, August and November.

In conclusion, projecting the first half trend out through the entire year, we would get a price rise of somewhat less than 50 percent.

As we can see, the first half of this year presents features completely different from those of the same period last year. In 1979, the biggest increases were for food items and clothing, the latter due to second quarter developments. This year, the largest increases have been in housing and miscellaneous; this is due to first quarter price developments, because from March to June the trends in the various categories were remarkably alike.

With regard to housing, the category with the steepest price rises, there has been a 35.4 percent increase in rents and taxes and a 26.4 percent jump in maintenance costs.

Within the miscellaneous category there has been a 56.1 percent rise in education expenses (10.9 percent in June alone), with above average rises in recreation and cigarets (27.8 percent) and domestic help (27.7 percent) as well. Particularly noteworthy have been the price increases for regular gasoline (33.3 percent), telephone service (41.4 percent), mutual health care (23.2 percent) and electricity (16.4 percent).

There have also been interesting developments in food prices, broken down into their main subcategories. While there have been steep rises in the prices of fruits and vegetables (45.6 percent, 10.3 percent in June alone), grains and by-products (27.5 percent, 7.7 percent in June) and other, miscellaneous food items (33.3 percent), there has been a major drop in the price of meat and sausages (down 14.6 percent), which is even more important since these are major items in the family food basket. The biggest drop was in the price of red meat, 9.6 percent in the case of roasts and as much as 22.7 percent for shoulder sections.

With regard to clothing, the prices of which were up 15.2 percent, the only subcategory that was significantly different from the average was household linen and shoe repair (8.8 percent). Men's clothing was up 14 percent, women's 17.4 percent, and children's 15.8 percent (10.2 percent in June alone).

In general, this category, which recorded the slowest price rises over the first half, shows a trend that contrasts sharply with the steep rises in 1979 resulting from heavy demand.

Wholesale Prices

The wholesale price index for domestic goods rose 10.4 percent in the first half of 1980. This is much lower than during the same period last year (39.1 percent) and also lower than the other price indices dealt with in this article.

The slowdown in wholesale price increases has been in evidence since the second half of 1979 and still is, in fact. However, given the levels that it has reached, this trend will probably be reversed as of next quarter.

Wholesale Prices

	1979	1980
First Quarter	15.1	5.8
April	6.3	2.0
May	9.5	0.5
June	3.8	1.8
Second Quarter	20.9	4.4
First Half	39.1	10.4

The following were the trends by sectors for the first quarter:

Percentage Changes

	First Half 1979	First Half 1980
Overall index	39.1	10.4
Manufacturing	37.7	14.5
Agriculture and Livestock	42.8	-0.8
Agriculture	60.9	-15.1
Livestock	13.1	29.0

We can see a slowdown in the rise of industrial prices and a slight drop in agricultural and livestock prices. Thus, the rise in the overall index was due to developments in the manufacturing sector.

With respect to agriculture and livestock, which had recorded the highest price increases in 1979, developments were dictated by the livestock subsector, because farm prices rose steeply. Livestock prices, which had jumped 100.9 percent between January and September 1979, began to drop during the last quarter of that year, owing to the fall in beef cattle prices; the trend continued over the first half of this year. The following are the statistics on recent quarters:

Livestock Prices

Fourth Quarter 1979	-11.4 percent
First Quarter 1980	-7.3 percent
Second Quarter 1980	-8.4 percent

Wholesale Import Prices

The wholesale price index for imported goods rose 25.9 percent from January to June of this year.

This rise, which is higher than in the cost of living and domestic wholesale price indices, is smaller than during the same period last year.

END

8743
CSO: 3010

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76698

27 October 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2207

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Socialist International Proceedings Reported
(EL UNIVERSAL, 12 Sep 80, EL NACIONAL, 13, 14 Sep 80) 1

Thirty Delegates Attend
Manley Interviewed, Michael Manley Interview
Carlos Andres Perez Scores Europeans
CAP To Chair Dialog, Carlos Andres Perez Interview
Final Document Issued

Swedish SDP Reaffirms Support of Left in Central America
(Pierre Schori Interview; EL NUEVO DIARIO, 26 Aug 80) 11

Briefs
Organizations Fear Expulsion 14
Chileans in Argentina 14

BRAZIL

Bishops Protest Expulsion of Italian Priest
(AFP, 16 Oct 80) 15

Briefs
Critical Period for Education 16
Public School Teachers Strike 16

CHILE

Government Bans Reentry of PDC President Zaldivar
(AFP, 16, 17 Oct 80) 17

Reentry Banned
Statement on Denial

COLOMBIA

Turbay Attacks Amnesty International
(EL SIGLO, 16 Sep 80) 19

Defense Minister Discusses Guerrilla Groups
(EL ESPECTADOR, 14 Sep 80) 20

Four M-19 Leaders Captured by Army
(EL TIEMPO, 25 Sep 80) 23

Columnist Discusses Regime's Weaknesses
(Carlos Villalba Bustillo; EL ESPECTADOR, 21 Sep 80) 27

EL SALVADOR

Government Officials Discuss Social and Economic Reforms
(Mario Antonio Solano Ramirez, Jorge Hasfura Interview; EL NACIONAL, 28 Aug 80) 31

Briefs
Guerrillas Blamed for Violence 36

HONDURAS

Briefs
Assembly President Denies Conflict 37

NICARAGUA

COSEP Demands Greater Freedom of Speech
(LA PRENSA, 8 Oct 80) 38

Nicaraguan Workers March Ends, Ortega Urges Greater Unity
(Radio Sandino, 11 Oct 80) 40

Youth Participating in Literacy Campaign Hailed
(EL NUEVO DIARIO, 24 Aug 80, LA PRENSA,
23, 25 Aug 80) 41

Youth, Parents Praised, by Sebastian Briceno
Important Historical Event
Rare, Unique Experience, by Joaquin Gonzalez

Literacy Campaign Seen as Turning Point in Revolution
(BARRICADA, 25 Aug 80, EL NUEVO DIARIO,
25 Aug 80) 45

FSLN Plays Vanguard Role
National Unity, International Solidarity

Mexican Bishop Praises Literacy Campaign
(Sergio Mendez Arceo; BARRICADA, 25 Aug 80) 49

Significance, Results of Literacy Campaign Discussed
(EL NUEVO DIARIO, 24 Aug 80) 55

URUGUAY

PCU First Secretary Discusses Party's Achievements, Struggle
(Rodney Arismendi Interview; HORIZONT, No 37, 1980) 59

VENEZUELA

Yamani Seen as Threat to OPEC Unity, Future
(Erwin Arrieta Valera; RESUMEN, 12 Oct 80) 63

Editorial Condemns CAP Role in Cuban Sabotage Case
(Editorial; RESUMEN, 12 Oct 80) 66

CORPOVEN Training Program for 1980 Outlined
(EL UNIVERSAL, 22 Aug 80) 74

Alfonzo Ravard Discusses PDVSA Financial Picture
(EL UNIVERSAL, 24 Aug 80) 76

Briefs
Exploratory Drilling in Zulia 79
Cardon Refinery Production 79
Anti-Castro Congress 79

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL PROCEEDINGS REPORTED

Thirty Delegates Attend

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Today at 0900 the meeting of the Latin American and Caribbean Committee of the Socialist International will begin; during this meeting the participants will explore various topics of interest to the region, especially those dealing with the aspirations of third world nations to a new economic world order and the resurgence of dictatorial regimes in the area.

This meeting will be attended by about 30 delegates, including: Jose Francisco Pena, secretary general of the Dominican Revolutionary Party, the chairman of the committee; Anselmo Sule from the Radical Party of Chile; Michael Manley, the prime minister of Jamaica; Armando Villanueva, former presidential candidate of the APRA [American Revolutionary Popular Alliance] of Peru; there will also be delegates from El Salvador, Barbados, Nicaragua, Guatemala, and Argentina.

Among the special guests attending will be: Bern Carlssom, secretary of the Socialist International; and the personal representative of Willy Brandt and the leader of the SPD [Social Democratic Party of Germany] of Germany, Karl Lindemberg.

Manley Interviewed

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 13 Sep 80 p D-16

[Report on interview with Michael Manley, prime minister of Jamaica, at the meeting of the Latin American and Caribbean Committee of the Socialist International in Caracas on 12 September 1980]

[Text] The prime minister of Jamaica, Michael Manley, called statements that his government is acting as part of a pro-Soviet movement in the Caribbean an "idiotic remark."

He gave EL NACIONAL's reporter this exclusive interview shortly before the start of the meeting of the Latin American Committee of the Socialist International which the Jamaican statesman is attending.

Manley, who only attended yesterday's session, and who will not be attending the closing session, since he was to return to his country yesterday, was asked about the importance of this meeting for political relations in Latin America and the Caribbean.

[Answer] I think that this is a very important opportunity to reemphasize the importance of working toward the victory of the democratic process in Latin America, and to consider the things that we can do and that will help us to attain this objective. This is also a very important opportunity to examine the status of the North-South dialogue and to consider what strategies we need to explore and develop in order to move toward the creation of the new international economic order.

[Question] Do you think that democracy has been advancing or retreating in Latin America? (We asked this through the Jamaican interpreter).

[Answer] I think there has been tremendous progress in Nicaragua and a terrible retreat in Bolivia. We will have to wait to see what happens in El Salvador in order to determine the final results.

[Question] What is your opinion of the situation in Bolivia?

[Answer] It's disgusting! (The interpreter translated literally).

When we asked his opinion about the support of Salvadorean Christian Democracy for the government junta of that country, Michael Manley smiled and said he did not want to discuss that.

[Question] What are your relations with the government of Commander Fidel Castro?

[Answer] We have very good relations based on the principles of mutual respect, sovereignty, and cooperation, with shared objectives, such as the liberation struggle in South Africa, and work toward a new international economic order.

[Question] Your government has been mentioned, along with some others, as the arm of a presumed Soviet escalation in the Caribbean. What do you say about that?

[Answer] That is an idiotic remark that is used as constant propaganda to try to isolate regimes that are working for change in the interests of their peoples, and that are fighting to change the world's economic system.

The Jamaican prime minister later spoke at the plenary session of the Latin American Socialist International. During his speech Manley termed "historic" the role that Venezuela has played within OPEC for the benefit of the third world nations, whose economies are being strangled while the industrialized countries have surpluses that they can not use because of inflation.

He called for a North-South dialogue to take place in harmony; he said this is a courageous act, and the South must develop the political powers that will enable it to negotiate with the North.

"The North," he said, "should recognize that social justice must accompany the systems it has implemented in the economic exploitation of the Southern nations and that the stability of the North itself will depend on international social justice."

"It is my opinion," he said, "that we in the South must work with determination to develop our own internal economic relations as a means to establish bases for our independent struggle, because if we negotiate from our position, we will quickly achieve change."

He pointed out that those Third World countries which have financial surpluses from oil "have a special obligation to the process by which we can achieve this independent, functioning economic force."

"I don't believe that humanity can develop if the minority, the developed countries, does not cooperate; in that case they will not enjoy their own prosperity and peace," said prime minister Manley, after pointing out that the third world encompasses two-thirds of the world's population.

Carlos Andres Perez Scores Europeans

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 14 Sep 80 p D-1

[Text] The former president of Venezuela, Carlos Andres Perez, during his speech yesterday at the closing session of the Socialist International, said that it is Europe's fault that we are facing the danger that Latin America may become an area equipped with nuclear weapons.

In the final plenary session, after discussing the problems of the North-South dialogue, agriculture and food, energy and the transfer of resources, former president Perez spoke to the socialist parties and the observers present about the arms race.

He said that "the European nations, and what is even worse, the European governments, have helped to facilitate and stimulate the arms buildup in Latin America, and some of the countries which have done this are governments with a social democratic orientation."

The former Venezuelan president said that "this is a situation that we must analyze frankly so that beyond assessing the blame for the situation, which is of little interest, we may all seek, within the Socialist International, to find ways on which there will be absolute, sincere, and authentic agreement, of opposing the arms race."

Perez said that "I don't want to go any further in my comments, which could go on endlessly because of the numerous examples we have."

Nonetheless, referring to the arms race, he said that "this is a vital issue, a life or death issue, for the industrialized nations."

He emphasized that "I think that here we can have a great opportunity to reach agreement between the nations of the Socialist International from the developing world and from the developed world."

In speaking of the international economic order, "which will certainly oblige us to make great concessions, we realize that it can not be achieved overnight, but we must establish the essential principles on which the creation of this new international economic order can be proclaimed in the medium and long term."

He concluded his remarks by saying that "we must be optimistic, we have to realize that here lies the true challenge of ideologies, here what is really at stake is the survival of the planet."

CAP To Chair Dialog

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 14 Sep 80 p D-14

[Interview with former Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez at the closing session of the meeting of the Latin American and Caribbean Committee of the Socialist International in Caracas, Venezuela, on 13 September]

[Text] "The second meeting of the Latin American Committee of the Socialist International was both productive and very important," said the former president of Venezuela, Carlos Andres Perez, in closing the meeting.

He said that the final statement includes a very important synthesis "of what we discussed and decided in this meeting."

There is also an internal agreement, which is of exceptional importance. This is the unification of Latin American viewpoints to be submitted to the congress of the Socialist International that will be held in Madrid in November. There we are going to present a coordinated and serious front that will give us greater leverage in the meeting of the world's social democratic parties."

[Question] You will make a very important proposal on the North-South dialogue and on the arms race?

[Answer] Today I heard from the secretary general of the Socialist International, Bernt Carlsson who, along with our comrade Willy Brandt, decided that I would act as chairman for the North-South dialogue in the Madrid conference.

[Question] What are the options for confronting the so-called "Armaments International"?

[Answer] Well, you see our position in the final statement. Now this is going to entail a resolved, coordinated, and permanent action to slow down the offensive that has been unleashed against the south by this "Armaments International." We believe that the start of this offensive was the coup in Bolivia, which can not be portrayed just as a simple act by reactionary military leaders of the Bolivian Army. We can also point to a new dangerous and crafty move against Latin America and against the armed forces. In Bolivia this led to a conspiracy between the military reactionaries who led the coup with the forces of crime, and with drug dealers. This introduces a new and highly pernicious element into the future of our Latin America.

[Question] What counterweight could the democratic governments of Latin America bring to bear against this situation?

[Answer] I think it will be enough. What has been done in Ecuador at the proposal of President Roldos, and approved by the Andean Pact nations, is a Code of Conduct that states the supranationality of human rights. This is a very important step because it simply means that demanding respect for human rights in each nation of Latin America is not an act of intervention.

It is unfortunate that only the Andean Pact nations are signing it. I think that this alliance should expand beyond the Andean Pact and that the other democratic nations, such as Costa Rica, Jamaica, Granada, and others which escape me right now, and which do not belong to the Andean Pact, should also sign it. This should become a permanent alliance among all the Latin American countries to confront the onslaught of dictatorships. I don't think that the Andean Pact will become a political body, but I do believe that the democratic countries of the Andean Pact will take the initiative to unite in a single frontal attack all the democratic nations of Latin America.

[Question] What is the position of social democracy in Latin America?

[Answer] That is a very important question. It was my responsibility to analyze this situation. We are going to take our report to the Madrid congress.

Final Document Issued

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 14 Sep 80 p D-29

[Text] The Latin American and Caribbean Committee of the Socialist International yesterday approved in its closing session the proposed resolution that will be presented to the resolutions committee of the Socialist International congress to be held in Madrid in November.

During the meeting the participants also approved a body of agreements on various sectors, establishing their position on different situations and problems of relevance in the political, social, and economic environment of Latin America.

In so doing, the committee repudiated the plebiscite held in Chile by the dictator Pinochet and offered all its moral and material solidarity to the Chilean democratic forces in this new unitary phase of their struggle. The committee further agreed to contact the democratic governments of the Americas and and to ask them to denounce in the OAS and the UN this masquerade which is just one more violation of human rights, rights which have been recognized by the international community, and an offense to the conscience of the peoples of the continent.

Other resolutions dealt with the following topics:

To devote special attention to the evolution of the dictatorial situation that the Haitian people have been suffering under for so many years; and to reject all regional and institutional policies that in one way or another are supporting the survival of the Duvalier family in power.

To condemn the military dictatorship of Gen Alfredo Stroessner for its repressive, despotic, and antidemocratic nature; to condemn the Paraguayan military dictatorship for having prohibited the holding of this committee meeting in Asuncion; and to demand from the Paraguayan regime the immediate release of Roa and Antonio Maidana.

To appoint a special subcommittee to monitor until 30 November the evolution of the plebiscite proposal of the Uruguayan dictatorship and to coordinate with the Democratic Convergence of Uruguay group any actions the committee may take in solidarity with the Uruguayan people. The members of this subcommittee are: Daniel Oduber (Costa Rica); Carlos Andres Perez (Venezuela); Anselmo Sule (Chile); Michael Manley (Jamaica); and Juan Francisco Pena (Dominican Republic).

To give its support and backing to the ICFTUO [International Conference of Free Trade Union Organizations] and ORIT [Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers] commission that is traveling to Bolivia and Chile, which consists of the following members: Juan Jose del Pino (secretary general of the ORIT); Enzo Friso, Latin American representative of the ICFTUO; Ulf Asp, from Sweden; Luigi Cal, from Italy; J. Harker, from Canada; R. Arazi, from Israel; M. Simon, from Spain; and T. Alberti, from Venezuela.

To accept the proposal made by Francisco Vargas Munoz, agrarian secretary of AD [Democratic Action of Venezuela] and Stormy Reinoso, in the name of the agrarian department of the Dominican Revolutionary Party, to establish an agrarian department within the Latin American Committee of the Socialist International. Furthermore, to present this proposal to the Socialist International in Madrid so that the International itself may establish an agrarian department.

Support for Michael Manley

The Latin American Committee of the Socialist International, meeting in Caracas, states the following:

I The struggle for peoples' liberation and progress is a demanding task, which requires that all sorts of resistance, both open and concealed, on the part of the class with wealth and power, be overcome.

II The above-listed circumstances are even worse in the Caribbean area, given its location which is strategic for the center of imperialism.

III Convincing proofs of this are offered by the problems that the prime minister of Jamaica, our comrade Michael Manley, has had to face and overcome. He is the champion of the new international economic order, the cause of the third world, and the leader of the progress and liberation of his Jamaican people.

IV Comrade Manley is today leading a region that until now did not control its own destiny, but was subject to the exploitation and oppression of colonialism and multinational capitalism; now, under his leadership, and because of it, the region is writing its own independent history.

V The Committee rejects all the attempts made by the reactionaries to destabilize the government of comrade Manley, and it urges all parties of the Socialist International to express their effective and direct solidarity, through their respective governments, with the Jamaican process and its leader, Comrade Michael Manley.

VI The Committee expresses its full support for Comrade Manley and his People's National Party, and its wishes for his success in the forthcoming election.

Final Document

The final document drafted by the Socialist International Committee meeting in Caracas includes a warning about the military escalation in Latin America, which was revealed by the coup in Bolivia and the support given this coup by the most reactionary and darkest forces on our continent.

The document also covers the following points:

The case of El Salvador is not the case of a junta which is fighting the extreme right and left, but rather it is a military dictatorship with the support of Christian democracy which is governing against the will of the people.

The Revolutionary Democratic Front is the legitimate representative of the people of El Salvador and the Salvadorean people have our full support and solidarity.

We are appealing to all democratic Salvadorean political organizations to use dialogue and understanding as a basis for seeking reasonable formulas so that a democracy may be established there, a democracy which will benefit all the inhabitants of El Salvador and put an end to the bloody civil war.

Guatemala is going through a critical period in which the arrogant military dictatorship is taking so-called anti-interventionist positions in order to conceal or refuse any explanations for the growing number of both massive and selective assassinations.

After celebrating the first anniversary of the Sandinist Revolution and the overthrow of the Gairy dictatorship in Granada, the Caribbean has again become an area of international tensions with imponderable world repercussions, not only because of the gravity of the crisis in Central America due to the criminal aggression of the dictatorships in Guatemala and El Salvador, and the insistent rumors of intervention in El Salvador, but also because of the actions taken to destabilize the legitimate and democratic government headed by our comrade Michael Manley and his People's National Party. The attitude of the International Monetary Fund, a covert form of intervention, should be thoroughly changed, in line with the report of the Brandt Commission, or it should be denounced as an instrument of the interests of the multinational companies and of economic imperialism.

In the case of Puerto Rico, we state our concern about what appears to be an imminent call for a plebiscite to follow the U.S. presidential elections in order to decide the definitive status of this fraternal Latin American nation.

As we are firm supporters and advocates of a people's right to self-determination and independence, we state that the formalities surrounding the expression of the people's will are not adequate to guarantee the authentic legitimacy of such a plebiscite if it is conducted under conditions which only appear to be free from coercion.

We reassert our support for nonintervention in the internal affairs of other countries, while we at the same time support the Code of Conduct that was signed in Ecuador at the proposal of President Jaime Roldos, which states that human rights are supranational.

We warn the democratic world about the ideas of Ronald Reagan, the Republican candidate for the U.S.presidency, ideas which bode ill for Latin America, as they include the intervention of U.S. troops to settle internal conflicts in our countries; furthermore, his ideas are a veiled threat to the validity of the Torrijos-Carter treaties, which return to Panama its sovereignty over the Canal Zone. In addition, we reject his threats to world peace.

Once again, the reactionary forces in Latin America are turning to the pretext of the threat of communism to justify persecutions and attacks on authority. In Latin America, the danger has been and still is a threat coming from the far right, and we therefore reject the attempts to discredit plans for social change in Latin America and the Caribbean by using the specious arguments of "anticommunism" that have been raised as a byproduct of the cold war, a cold war which threatens the progress of world detente, heightens warlike tensions, and stimulates the activities of the most reactionary sectors of our continent.

We denounce any form of terrorism, which always implies a brutal violation of human rights. We defend the right of peoples to resort to armed insurrection when peaceful means are denied them, in order to achieve their liberty and the full and authentic application of human rights.

7679
CSO: 3010

SWEDISH SDP REAFFIRMS SUPPORT OF LEFT IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 26 Aug 80 p 2

[Interview with Pierre Schori, secretary of international relations of the Swedish Social Democratic Party; date and place not given]

[Text] Pierre Schori, secretary of international relations of the Swedish Social Democratic Party [SDP] and leader of the Socialist International, has visited us for the third time in 1 year. We interviewed him a few hours before his return to Scandinavia.

[Question] How do they see us in Europe, Comrade Schori?

[Answer] There is deep solidarity with Nicaragua in Sweden an in other European countries. In our country there is no room for a defamation campaign against you because the people have a solid knowledge of your revolution. My party prepared a special, illustrated and very educational pamphlet which won you the sympathy of our public opinion.

[Question] What have been the results of your visits, beyond their obvious political importance?

[Answer] After my first trip, made in August 1979 as part of a Socialist International mission, we obtained $5 million in immediate aid from the Swedish Government. Later, with the support of the party, the labor unions and the cooperatives carried out a campaign to buy 50,000 gasoline lamps for the literacy campaign. This also let us buy some 400,000 notebooks, without affecting a donation of $1 million in cash. That is the contribution of the Swedish labor movement. In addition to that, our party gave the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] National Directorate an ambulance and our Women's Association donated $17,800.

At the time of my second visit on the occasion of the first anniversary, we arranged for other types of cooperation. On this last trip I came with Comrade Sigurdsen, former deputy and former minister of cooperation under the Olaf Palme government, with whom we have promoted "courses to increase technical training for health workers of the AMNLAE [Luisa Amanda Espinoza Women's Association]" and a workshop on "popular communication." In addition the decision of the Swedish city Kalmar to declare itself a "sister city" with Matagalpa was formalized. The city will present Matagalpa soon with a drinking water fountain. We hope that based on our new reports and proposals, the Swedish parliament and the government will arrange for new assistance soon.

[Question] What is your opinion regarding Latin American unitary organizations which have recently emerged. For example, the COPAL, the Conference of Socialist Parties, the Commission on Human Rights headed by C. A. Perez and Bishop Helder Camara?

[Answer] From the outside looking in, I believe the time has come to form fronts against the dictatorships, as fronts were formed against the NAZI occupation during World War II. There are some already in El Salvador, Guatemala and Uruguay; there were some here in Nicaragua. That is essential; there have to be antidictatorial forces where there is no room for sectarianism or maximalism. The unity of all the antidictatorial forces is essential to confront imperialism and the reactionaries, who are very strong. I see differences in the specific situation in each country, but that is the general perspective. In addition, it is easier in Europe to achieve concrete solidarity with those unitary fronts; with the resistance in Boliva for example, a country where the election cards have all been played and the struggle must be carried out by other means....

[Question] What can you tell us about the Bolivian situation...?

[Answer] The Bolivian coup has been strongly repudiated in Europe. You know that Siles Suazo and Jaime Paz were at the Congress of the Social Democratic Party of Sweden and we supported their electoral campaign. Bolivia teaches us that other means to fight the military must be found now. The democratic forces tried several times to participate in the elections and now, if they need to develop other ways to struggle, they will receive our support.

The electoral process in that country was not useless. In fact, it was essential because the electoral campaign helped to raise the people's consciousness in a broad way. In modern times it is as important to win in the media as in the mountains. Using television, radio or the press to inform the people, you can make an electoral process as revolutionary as a guerrilla cell.

[Question] How do you assess those armed struggles, especially in Central America?

[Answer] The Socialist International has a clear position: concrete support for the Revolutionary Democratic Front in El Salvador and the Democratic Front Against Repression in Guatemala.

We stated it first at our regional meeting for Latin America and the Caribbean held in Santo Domingo in March 1980. There was adverse reaction from the United States and it started a diplomatic offensive aimed at our fraternal parties in Europe, explaining its position and our "mistake" in "supporting the communists."

But in June we confirmed our position in Norway before the guest delegations from the fronts of El Salvador and Guatemala, and at the same time we demanded that the White House abandon its position. Our party has been the pioneer in that line and we have given both fronts not only concrete solidarity in words but also financial solidarity. Besides, by distributing information and promoting their cause in Europe, we are politically creating a "second front."

[Question] And faced with this, what is the implication of the election of Reagan or Carter in the United States?

[Answer] Carter's policy has been very ambiguous and has repeated, more or less, the mistakes regarding Nicaragua in El Salvador. We--the progressive Europeans--have given our firm support to the Revolutionary Democratic Front in El Salvador and that has been a sign for the United States. That has shown the United States that it is not a matter of "communist" fronts, and that these fronts have the support of Europe's democratic forces. The inevitable defeat of both dictatorships can be brought more emphatically to the notice of the United States if we--the Social Democratic parties of Europe and the Socialist International--support those fronts.

But Carter's policies have also meant--perhaps--a certain neutrality which we have been able to use in the democratic struggle. With Reagan it would be quite the opposite and that is very dangerous. He has come out definitely against the Sandinists and other popular forces in Latin America. There is a difference.

But what really counts for us in Europe is to put ourselves very firmly on the side of the revolutionary forces, and to also support the more moderate sectors within the American "establishment." The United States must understand that Latin America now is more than its "back yard." In addition, we have relations of close and concrete collaboration with many fraternal parties in Latin America and Africa and of course, we support the national liberation movements....

9341
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

ORGANIZATIONS FEAR EXPULSION--Costa Rican political and religious organizations expressed their concern over the possible expulsion of Father Benito Tovar, representative of the [Salvadoran] Revolutionary Democratic Front, from the country. In a letter sent to the Costa Rican government, priests, pastors and deputies recalled the traditional hospitality of this nation with political refugees. We have discovered that there are strong pressures from the government to have Father Tovar expelled. This would be a tremendous injustice and we do not want to remain indifferent to it. Father Tovar sought refuge in Costa Rica because of the political and social conflict in El Salvador and has become the best spokesman of support for the best interests of the Salvadoran masses. [Text] [PA120100 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0300 GMT 11 Oct 80]

CHILEANS IN ARGENTINA--Relatives of Chileans that have been residing in Argentina for many years have reported to EL MERCURIO that they are experiencing a new atmosphere of hostility against them, particularly those that are living in Bahia Blanca and Bariloche where military authorities have imposed "a state of emergency" surrounding those sectors where the Chilean community reside after they return from work. In an interview held on the Argentine-Chilean border, the international highway in Puyehue, the sources expressed their concern at the atmosphere of unrest that they have been experiencing in the past few weeks. They reported that Chileans who live in Bahia Blanca and who make up 30 percent of the local population are only allowed to leave the neighborhood called "little Chile" during work hours, that is from 0800 to 1800. They said that they are not allowed to leave this area after the established time because military troops surround the area to control them. Those Chileans that live in Bariloche, located 300 km from Bahia Blanca, are experiencing a similar situation. About 20,000 Chileans live in Bariloche where they work in hotels or are hired as fruit pickers in the Neuquen Valley. [Eugenio Cacagno Freire] [Excerpts] [PY161931 Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 3 Oct 80 p C9]

CSO: 3010

BISHOPS PROTEST EXPULSION OF ITALIAN PRIEST

PY170058 Paris AFP in Spanish 0314 GMT 16 Oct 80

[Excerpts] Brasilia, 15 Oct (AFP)--The National Conference of Brazilian Bishops [CNBB] condemned here tonight the Brazilian government's decision to expel Italian Priest Vito Miracapillo from the country.

In an official note released 2 hours after the announcement of the expulsion of the Italian priest through a presidential decree, the CNBB called the nation's attention to the ambiguous content and the arbitrary use of the foreigners' statute, which makes it possible to take this type of action.

The expulsion decree of Father Miracapillo states that the Italian priest was considered a harmful, undesirable person because of his refusal to celebrate a thanksgiving mass on 7 September to celebrate the 158th Brazilian independence anniversary by arguing that in this country there is no effective independence of the people, who are reduced to the status of beggars and are deprived of their rights.

The official note of the CNBB, which is made up of 330 bishops in Brazil, states that the expulsion of the Italian priest is not linked to Brazilian independence, but to the situation of dependency endured by the poor people of Ribeirao and of the whole country.

It also states that Father Miracapillo was slandered and that his statements were distorted because of his work in defense of the peasants who work in the Pernambuco sugarcane fields.

The note stresses that the expulsion of the Italian priest is going to undermine the Brazilian image abroad and it will only serve interested groups, by silencing the church of God in its evangelical work in favor of the poor of this country.

It concludes by stating that the Brazilian church does not accept the charges made against Father Miracapillo, whom the church thanks for his pastoral work in our country.

CSO: 3001

BRIEFS

CRITICAL PERIOD FOR EDUCATION--Brasilia--Education Minister Eduardo Portella feels that this is the most serious period in the history of Brazilian education and that the crisis of the university is essentially financial. Regarding the situation of the university professors, who are calling a new strike scheduled for next week, he feels that the professors must not lose hope, "but within the economic climate we are experiencing now, with some unexpected contributions such as the Iranian-Iraqi conflict, all measures which represent expenses for the government have been momentarily at least, postponed." For the minister, this is the worst moment for Brazilian education "because a number of things which have been taking place for 20 years has been consolidated at this moment. Twenty years have been necessary for Frankenstein to acquire all his physiognomic features. Then, a political opening regine was necessary so that many things could come to the surface and be seen in the daylight, in the uncomfortable and healthful clarity of daylight." [Excerpt] [PY152243 Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 9 Oct 80 p 16]

PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHERS STRIKE--Public school teachers of Parana State yesterday called a strike and, according to the leadership of the teachers association, paralyzed nearly 70 percent of the schools in the state. Meanwhile, Parana Education Secretary Edson Machado de Souza reported, through his aides, that the strike was "only partial, having affected approximately 30 percent of the schools, especially in the major cities." The strike leaders have reported that the movement will spread in the next few days, especially if the following demands are not met: pay adjustments every 6 months irrespective of whether these benefits are extended to all other governments employees; a base salary equivalent to the three highest minimum wages in force in the country; raise level 1 to 2, thus benefiting graduates of teachers schools who have completed the probational period; and full enforcement of the teachers statute. [Excerpt] [PY142340 Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 9 Oct 80 p 16]

CSO: 3001

GOVERNMENT BANS REENTRY OF PDC PRESIDENT ZALDIVAR

Reentry Banned

PA170025 Paris AFP in Spanish 2253 GMT 16 Oct 80

[Text] Santiago, Chile, 16 Oct (AFP)--The Chilean military government today banned the reentry to the country of Andres Zaldivar, president of the dissolved Christian Democratic Party [PDC], it was reported here officially.

The former finance minister, under former President Eduardo Frei's administration (1964-1970), has been accused of violating provisions of the internal state security law in recent statements which he made abroad, it was indicated here.

Zaldivar told the Mexican newspaper UNO MAS UNO that "if the government of President Augusto Pinochet maintains its authoritarian position, anything could happen in the future, including a civil war."

Statement on Denial

PA170115 Paris AFP in Spanish 0015 GMT 17 Oct 80

[Text] Santiago, 16 Oct (AFP)--The Chilean military government today banned the reentry into the country of Andres Zaldivar, president of the disbanded Christian Democratic Party, it was officially reported here.

The former finance minister under president Eduardo Frei's administration (1964-1970) has been accused of breaking the internal state security law in a recent statement abroad, it was noted here.

Zaldivar told the Mexican daily newspaper UNO MAS UNO that "if President Augusto Pinochet's regime maintains its authoritarian position, anything can happen in the future, even civil war."

An Interior Ministry statement accuses Zaldivar of being intent on a systematic campaign to undermine Chile internationally, "mar the prestige of the institutional system that the Chilean people have set up and smear our most treasured institutions."

The state secretariat stated that it is public knowledge that Zaldivar makes constant trips abroad with such objectives and that he constantly makes similar statements which are published internationally.

"He also wants," the note says, "to promote abroad his view that a government with military participation but different from the incumbent one might be set up in Chile. This means he contends that our armed forces and police will become divided, a reckless hope which is made worse by the circumstances spelled out further on."

The Interior Ministry stated that in a statement published in a Mexican daily newspaper Zaldivar admits having taken steps to achieve that goal. In fact, regarding the names of the military who might be in the "civilian-military government" which is being suggested, he says textually:

"I think there are many. The problem is they cannot speak up because of the system in which we are living. We have been labeled subversive for getting in touch with them and it has been said that we are trying to divide the armed forces and police. What we are doing and will continue to do is to offer a peaceful transition toward democracy. I am certain that there are soldiers with democratic ideals."

The official statement says that this "entails the intent of promoting not just division within the said institutions but also their rebellion against the upper echelons which make up the government junta."

"This attitude presupposes noncompliance with the current legal system and the new one approved in the new constitution by calling the armed forces and carabineros to join subversion. This would be an outright challenge to the legitimacy of the current government and a call to rebel against its authority."

The Chilean Government stated that such actions are among the causes set forth by law to ban his reentry into the country "because they are actions which Chilean law rates as crimes against internal state security, they are clearly opposed to Chile's interests and they make their author a threat against state security."

"The government expects its opponents to react to the extremist stands into which some fanatical political leaders want to drag them and to understand that only working within the approved institutional framework will it be possible to strengthen reasonable and peaceful coexistence so that the new democracy that Chile wants can be consolidated," the statement ends.

CSO: 3010

TURBAY ATTACKS AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL

Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 16 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] "Colombia has nothing to thank Amnesty International for, and only deplores the fact that an institution which might have been clearly entitled to international gratitude, in the case of Colombia, has put itself in the service of the terrorists," declared President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala, in a message sent to Thomas Hammarberg, secretary general of that organization, through the ambassador in London.

The text of the message is as follows:

"The only comment that I wish to make on the complete report which you sent to Ambassador Balcazar on 28 August is that, in my opinion, the performance of Amnesty International in the case of Colombia is considered to be totally biased and inspired by purposes that are not identified with the sincere defense of human rights.

"Colombia, not because it heeded insinuations from Amnesty International, but in compliance with its own conviction, has implemented a policy of defense of the legitimate interests of the Indians and of improvements in the conditions of the prison population. Moreover, it has continued the investigation and punishment of cases of abuse of authority that have been reported to the responsible officials. The government has submitted for the consideration of the chambers an amnesty bill for the armed rebels, not to ingratiate itself with that organization; for I clearly recall that your hasty April report had no purpose other than to attempt to impede the solution unanimously upheld by the entire world which was applied to the seizure of the Dominican Republic's embassy in Bogota.

"My country certainly has nothing to thank Amnesty International for, and only deplores the fact that an institution which might have been clearly entitled to international gratitude, in the case of Colombia, has put itself in the service of the terrorists. I have no other comment to make on your report, and I express the hope that, in the future, the activities of Amnesty International will be worthy of respect for their objectivity and unsuspecting spirit. Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala, President of Colombia."
2909
CSO: 3010

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES GUERRILLA GROUPS

Bogota EL ESPECTADOR in Spanish 14 Sep 80 Sec A pp 1, 9

[Text] A total of 1,812 Colombians associated with six armed groups would be the beneficiaries of the amnesty bill submitted by the government to Congress, which will start to be debated this week.

In response to a questionnaire from this newspaper, the minister of national defense, Gen Luis Carlos Camacho Leyva, disclosed the latest information obtained on the sphere of influence, weapons and number of individuals comprising the guerrillas operating in the country.

As informed sources have explained, the amnesty consists of "forgetting" that one or more political crimes have been committed, and hence it cannot take into account the behavior of the beneficiary in subsequent crimes that he might commit. A pardon, which is only the exemption from the penalty that can be imposed, is something different.

The bill submitted by the government has evoked widespread controversy, to the point where one of the most organized armed groups, M-19 [19 April Movement], became divided when the time came to express an opinion on the bill.

The Conservatives, or at least the Alvarists, have decided to remain aloof from the debate, because they consider amnesty to be a Liberal problem. And the Liberal sectors in Congress are confronted with an extensive, total amnesty, without any type of restriction, while the government sector backs the proposal of President Turbay Ayala.

In order to obtain a relative point of reference for what the consequences of the amnesty might be, in the event that the bill is passed by Congress, the defense minister was asked about the leading statistics that might be relevant in the discussion.

Among the data supplied by the head of the Defense Ministry, it should be stressed that acknowledgment is given of the existence of six armed groups, and the notorious Army of National Liberation, with only 38 members and 36 weapons.

In all, according to that ministry, the guerrillas have only 1,000 weapons, nearly two men for each weapon. The urban support systems are not included.

What There Is To Forget

In addition to the strikes made by the armed groups, of great significance in most instances, such as the "seizure" of towns, and bank robberies, which have reached a considerable level in recent years, there have also been incidents such as the theft of weapons from the military armory which, even in the event that the bill is passed as it was submitted by the government, would be covered by the amnesty, because the limitation applies to those who are "deprived of their liberty," or the occupation of the Embassy of the Dominican Republic. All these acts would have to remain in legal oblivion.

If the government's bill were passed, for example, it would benefit the two members of the M-19 Superior Command who escaped from the La Picota penitentiary. So long as there is a warrant for their arrest, they are not "deprived of their liberty." And the same thing would apply if, for example, Jaime Bateman or Carlos Toledo Plata were arrested now. Those who are not, or have not been arrested prior to June 1980 could claim amnesty, because, in addition, the bill is already in effect if one considers the fact that it says that political crimes committed since last June will not be punished.

By way of a "sampling," Minister Camacho Leyva was asked about the number of members of the Armed Forces who were murdered by the subversive groups between 1978 and 1979: "During the period between 1978 and 1979, 37 members of the military forces and 13 of the National Police were murdered by those affiliated with the subversives.

"During the same period, the subversives murdered 167 citizens in various parts of the country."

On the other hand, the defense minister also reported, during the same period "80 members of the subversive groups were killed in confrontations with the troops and National Police."

The Subversive Groups

According to the Ministry of National Defense, there are six subversive groups in the country: "Communist Revolutionary Armed Forces" (sic), FARC; 19 April Movement, M-19; Workers' Self-Defense Movement, ADO; Popular Liberation Army, EPL; Commando Pedro Leon Arboleda Popular Liberation Army, EPL-PLA; and Army of National Liberation, ELN.

The so-called "sphere of influence" of each of the subversive groups operating in the country has been determined by the Defense Ministry as follows:

"Communist Revolutionary Armed Forces" (sic): I Front (Caqueta-Meta); II Front (Huila-Tolima); III Front (Caqueta); IV Front (Magdalena Medio); V Front (Uraba); VI Front (Cauca-Valle); VII Front (Meta-Huila).

19 April Movement (M-19): It operates basically in Cundinamarca, Boyaca, Atlantico, Magdalena, Valle, Cauca, Antioquia, Santander, Tolima, Meta, Quindio, Risaralda, Caldas, Huila and Caqueta.

Workers' Self-Defense Movement, ADO: It operates basically in Bogota.

Popular Liberation Army, EPL: It operates in Antioquia and Cordoba.

EPL-PLA Group: It consists of a group deviating from the traditional EPL, and is engaged basically in urban terrorism in the cities of Bogota, Tunja, Barranquilla, Cali, Ibague, Armenia, Pereira and Girardot.

Army of National Liberation, ELN: It operates in northeastern Antioquia and northern Santander del Norte.

Members and Weapons

According to the defense minister, Gen Luis Carlos Camacho Leyva, the status of the groups insofar as numbers of members and weapons are concerned, is as follows:

"FARC, 773 members and 408 weapons; M-19, 531 members and 288 weapons; ADO, 20 members and 15 weapons; EPL, 60 members and 50 weapons; EPL-PLA, 390 members and 220 weapons; ELN, 38 members and 36 weapons.

"This list does not include the number of individuals comprising urban support systems in each of the subversive groups."

Such is the approximate status of the subversive groups in Colombia, if one believes the military forces' intelligence services.

2909
CSO: 3010

FOUR M-19 LEADERS CAPTURED BY ARMY

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 25 Sep 80 Sec A pp 1, 7

[Text] Four staff members of M-19 [19 April Movement] who were convicted as criminals in absentia by the court martial in the La Picota prison were captured by the Army during the operation carried out last week in Tocaima, where the subversive movement was going to hold a "summit" meeting.

They are Jose Yamel Riano who, according to an organizational chart published by the military authorities last year, is a member of M-19's finance section; Antonio Jose Navarro Wolf, from the same section; Isidro A. Merchan, member of the printing and propaganda section subordinate to the intelligence group; and Luis Francisco Otero Cifuentes, who held a high-ranking position in the national leadership.

Captured along with the aforementioned were another nine subversives, who were placed under the orders of the 10th Brigade, with headquarters in Tolemaida.

The latter were identified as Ricardo Leon Vargas, Diego Canarte Velez, Ricardo Lopez Hernandez, Diana M. Morales, William Ramirez, Rodrigo Restrepo Valencia, Rafael Navarro Wolf, Laureano Rodriguez Diaz and Luis Emilio Roa.

As the public was informed, the capture of the guerrillas took place last weekend between the departments of Cundinamarca and Tolima, after the Army's secret service forestalled the meeting of the subversive group that was due to be held on Friday at the Potosi bathing resort in Tocaima.

All the leaders of the sectional commands had been summoned to the meeting of M-19's Regional National Plenum, which was to be instituted by the supreme heads of the organization, Jaime Bateman Cayon and Carlos Toledo Plata.

The presence of the subversives had been discovered the day before (Thursday) by four B-2 agents, who at first took the customers at the bathing resort for university students spending the weekend at that recreational area.

However, a mistake on the part of one of the detectives thwarted the aspirations of the authorities to capture the two most wanted M-19 leaders in the country.

In fact, one of the guerrillas who was preparing to institute the regional plenum discovered some of the secret agents, and sounded the general alarm.

Immediately, all those attending the "summit" began fleeing in several vehicles, while others dove into the water of the Bogota River and managed to escape.

There was an exchange of gunfire between the four detectives and the occupants of two vehicles, which left a toll of two wounded: a guerrilla fighter, Isidro Merchan, and an agent.

According to statements from official sources, in addition to Bateman Cayon and Toledo Plata, the Eighth Regional National Plenum was to be attended by Ivan Marino Ospina and Elmer Marin, who made a spectacular escape from the La Picota jail.

The four members of the M-19 staff captured in operation Tocaima were taken to Bogota yesterday, and placed at the disposal of the chairman of the verbal court martial, Col Rafael Martin Prieto, to be tried immediately.

Description of the Staff

Jose Yamel Riano, alias "Manuel" or "Diego," born on 1 November 1943 in Girardot, son of Vitencia, height 1.80, pasty complexion; an active member of M-19 since 1975. According to the authorities, he has taken part in most of the conferences held by the terrorist group.

In charge of handling the organization's finances on the national level, an activity that he carried out in Bogota. At present he is being tried as a criminal in absentia by the verbal court martial under way in La Picota. He is considered the leading contact of Jaime Bateman Cayon, alias Pablo Garcia.

Antonio Jose Navarro Wolf, alias "Mario," Adan" or "El Mono," born on 9 July 1948 in Pasto. Married to Ruth Amparo Erazo Caicedo; a sanitary engineer by profession.

An active member of M-19 with the rank of major. Responsible for the Cauca mobile command; headed the "seizure" of El Caleno.

He took part in the guerrilla school organized in the department of Cauca and headed by Ivan Marino Ospina in 1978. He was being tried as a criminal in absentia at La Picota. He was accused of being a member of the Marcos Zambrano command which occupied the Dominican Embassy in Bogota.

Luis Francisco Otero Cifuentes, alias "Rafael," born on 15 September 1944 in Bogota; ranks as one of the founders of M-19.

In February 1978, he planned the kidnapping of former Ambassador Miguel de German Ribon, whom he took to a "people's jail." He was responsible for the negotiations with Afranio Parra Guzman, who is being tried in a court martial. In April 1978, he planned and directed the seizure of the Jorge Eliecer Gaitan Museum, in Bogota. He was in charge of transporting the weapons stolen from the Northern Armory, and the one who ordered Jaime Barrero Cruz, alias "Antonio," to construct a hideaway in the northern sector in which to keep the weapons that had been stolen. He holds the rank of superior officer and chief of one of the columns of the Bogota regional entity.

Isidro Merchan, member of the M-19 intelligence section; he was responsible for preparing and disseminating subversive propaganda.

Antonio José Navarro Wolff

Antonio Jose Navarro Wolf

Luis Francisco Otero Cifuentes

Luis Francisco Otero Cifuentes

Isidro Antonio Merchán

José Yamel Riaño

2909
CSO: 3010

COLUMNIST DISCUSSES REGIME'S WEAKNESSES

Bogota EL ESPECTADOR in Spanish 21 Sep 80 Sec A p 16

[Article by Carlos Villalba Bustillo: "Weaknesses Which Debilitate the Regime"]

[Text] In Plato's "Georgics," the concept of politics transcends the concept of action. Therefore, he puts in the mouth of Socrates, his teacher, the statement that this activity is to the soul what gymnastics is to the body: in other words, a purifying occupation for kings and politicians. Aristotle, perhaps influenced by the Macedonian peace which marked his era, scored the rulers who did not gear social life to virtue and who, having passed very good laws, lacked people "accustomed to and practiced in the use of good government." In these two original sources of political theory, there was no conception of laxity, nor was conspiratorial tolerance possible. The desires and purposes of a state which needed to shape civilizations or destroy institutions on the basis of an ethic adjusted to each situation, came later. It all depended on the historical perspective from which events were viewed. Machiavellianism was one of the ecumenical dimensions of that new reality which believed, or pretended to believe, that politics and morality are mutually exclusive because they are at odds. Its legacy still influences palaces and parliaments, almost always with forgetfulness of people, and behind huge veils of egoism and lies. Hence today, both the one and the other, are closer to "The Prince" than to "The Republic" and "Politics." The ends are justifying the means.

From Word to Deed...

During his campaign, President Turbay encouraged Colombians and gave them great hope when he said that he would govern "with the most capable and honest individuals;" and later, in his inaugural speech, he gave notice that his administration would make a very clear distinction between the various types of penalties incurred by the actions of his officials. The president was not mistaken, because the penalty for crimes should be one thing, the disciplining for administrative irregularities should be another, and the morality imposed for immorality should be still another. And in public service, particularly in the handling of complicated situations, the requirements placed on the upper echelons should leave no room for doubt, and even more so if the action charged owes its seriousness to the nature of their functions and the importance of their position. Therefore, it is a sophism of oversight to expect, with the flagrant conduct of certain administrators which appears obviously and prominently crooked, that the prosecutor or penal judge will penalize and sentence the wicked, malicious public servant. Unfortunately, President Turbay came to power filled with commitments, and his feelings of friendship and gratitude toward those who gave him their votes forced him, contrary to his good faith and sincere desires, to be less relentless than was to be expected of him.

The nation was told that the "positive" part of the Security Statute, in which the prosecution of the drug traffic was to be established, was written for the purpose of eradicating that scourge from the areas struck by it. However, even within the government itself, there were some who were very skeptical about the potential results of the pertinent provisions; and, with concern but without shock, we Colombians must record its complete inoperativeness in the column of losses and gains. In fact, all the native or foreign individuals captured with drug shipments were subjected to the procedure called for in Legislative Decree 2144 of 1978, the text of which cited, at least ostensibly, the stringency with which penalties must be imposed on those using aircraft and oceangoing vessels to engage in that business which is punishable and punished by law.

It was not difficult for the employees responsible for implementing the decree in question to convert it into an additional, profitable "modus lucrandi" [means of making money], which also caused the humor of national geniuses to think up jokes about the surreptitious and evil mechanisms whereby bribery and extortion were given leeway. Pilots and crews were more fearful of the amount given to the greedy inspector from the administration than of the fine, imprisonment and confiscation of the aircraft and vessels. Did the lofty government do anything to apply a lasting solution to that moral gap in the administration? Can we recall any decision setting an example against those who made the remedy worse than the disease? Did the Office of the Attorney General of the Nation, perchance, attempt to do so, since that is its responsibility?

That third part of the body of laws on public order and security, with its inconsistent binding quality, was no less unfortunate than the third part of Decree 1923, with the aggravating factor that it was more humane and proper to come from the intermediate authority corrupt than to torture the jailed subversive. When this situation is reviewed briefly, the comments of Salust become dramatically current: "Authority has ceased to be the practice of justice, and it is applied as if wrongdoing were the exercise of power."

The State and the Monopolies

If, as Thomas More observed, politics had become separated from morality, and that separation moved the latter even farther away from economics, we must be convinced that, upon examining the state's relations with the monopolies in Colombia, the creator of Utopia was correct. To be sure, the situations here in no way resemble Britain's revolt against Spain, nor the politicians' rebellion against the League, nor that of the Tudor princes against Charles V, events which were the result of three different concepts: the Roman, that of the decline, the Christian and the feudal. But in our time and our country, the political course of the ruling class is charted by an artificial truth in which it alone believes; while the common social phenomena at the base are poverty, illiteracy and alcoholism, and, in the superstructure, the concentration of capital, waste and the economy of monopoly, with all their consequences. It all takes place in that untouchable, defying and sinister atmosphere, although nothing is known, and the articles of the Constitution which establish and regulate intervention are not even invoked by the meek guardians of the collective interest who, whether willingly or unwillingly, are docile parts of a machine which works for some things and which for others of greater importance is obliged to stop and remain silent. The law, in its atmosphere, is a "jellyfish" entity subject to manipulation, a kind of liberated woman whom no amorous tactic can fail.

The old idea that the liberal Party would put a stop to the improper concentration of wealth, originating under the old Lopez, has disappeared from the minds of thinking Liberals, those who are frightened of the nation's uncertain future, those chagrined by the tumultuous tide of political patronage, those who cannot conceive of a government of mere maintenance, those who do not accept political democracy without economic democracy, those who expect of their leaders more candor in speech and proposals, and those who believe that government control can halt the "crescendo" of privileges filling the investment groups with profits.

In the present state of imbalance besetting the country, a point of convergence for the various sectors of the society might be the adoption of a strategy against the concentration and multiplication of uncontrolled wealth. Do not let them tell us that passing antimonopolistic laws means persecuting free enterprise and attacking the capitalist structure; because the industrialized countries with market economies have started countering the economic and social gaps produced by the system since the end of the last century. It is not that we want the government, or governments, to put an end to the entrepreneurial class without reason, but rather, based on constitutional and legal instruments, to force it, for example, to lend property its social function, to pay taxes on excessive profits, to give the worker a share in the company's profits and to reduce the inflationary process by placing a ceiling on prices.

The question is posed again: Has the government, which knows the procedures of the concentrators of capital and the monopolistic groups, done anything to replace them within a just and harmonious economic context? Has it been concerned with investigating what is being done with the people's savings that are deposited at very low interest? It actually has done something, but in a different direction and with different purposes. The director of one of those groups was named to open an embassy in the bewitching, mysterious East. For another, there was created a sumptuous, tentacular agency to regulate certain types of investments. The young politician from another industrial empire was transferred, with a brief interregnum, from a vice ministry to a governorship. And, according to a report broadcast by radio from Todelar, the director of civil aeronautics requested one of the congressional committees to relieve the impoverished Avianca of a tax burden which is not allowing it to breathe.

Reciprocal obligations result from that bond with the administration: The Government is committed to avoiding shocks, and the businessmen who are appointed must reinforce it and sprinkle it with perfume and praise; because several of them have, among their branches, splendid and well endowed newspapers with wide regional circulation. But the time has come to apply to the large concentrations of capital a measure such as the one ordered in San Andres to the hot money; to be applied to public officials and former public officials who, under the protection of their authority, have committed at least improprieties in the negotiations of agencies for which they were responsible, many of which are known to the public.

Self-Praise and Promises

The present regime has found it necessary to sing, each week and in different parts of the country, praise and more praise for the works projects that it opens: electric plants, government buildings, telephone exchanges, police stations, bridges and schools. It is a means of relieving the anxiety caused it by the inability to respond to the great national necessities. Now then, the tropical frequency with which it takes to the public square to deliver emotional speeches leaves, on the one hand, the impression that there is still a candidate campaigning, and, on the other, the impression that, with what is considered to be done and accomplished, the government's word has been broken. This has just happened in the case of the coast's position in the PIN [National Integration Plan]: The president stated at La Guajira that this region of the country is benefiting from the plan; and yet, in its two volumes, the amount of the planned investment does not appear. We hope that there was an oversight on the part of the editor, so that the president will make amends with the large number of voters who enabled him, on 5 June 1978, to recover the dream that he could not achieve the day before. No less noteworthy was the versatility that the regime showed with the controversial fer lizer plant, shifted from one side to the other, and almost in the same direction in which the presidential party was moving. With less nomadism greater stability might be achieved in the government's program, not to mention such international exaggerations as those relating to the disarmament of the Andean Group and the outlet to the sea which Dr Turbay offered the Bolivians at Riobamba.

The foregoing are weaknesses which debilitate the regime.

2909

CSO: 3010

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS DISCUSS SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC REFORMS

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 28 Aug 80 p D-15

[Report on interviews with Salvadoran Justice Minister Dr Mario Antonio Solano Ramirez and Salvadoran ambassador to Venezuela Jorge Hasfura, by Nestor Mora at the Salvadoran embassy in Caracas on 27 August 1980]

[Text] Today El Salvador is one of the nerve centers of continental politics, due to the influence that the unfolding of the present crisis will have, one way or the other, on Latin America's revolutionary process.

Seeking the opinion of one of the young men of the present government regarding events in that country, yesterday we interviewed that country's minister of justice, Dr. Mario Antonio Solano Ramirez, at the embassy.

The conversation began with his observation that the situation in El Salvador has to be viewed from two standpoints:

"In the first place, one has to recognize that the government has an interest in transforming the country's economic and social structures, which it is doing."

And he noted that he was referring particularly to the government whose term began in January of this year, and which already had the participation of the Christian Democrats. He then added the proviso that the reference to the Christian Democrats did not originate from any sympathies for them on his part because he does not belong to that ideological persuasion.

Next he enumerated and explained three fundamental aspects of the transformation that is taking place in the country: the agrarian reform, the nationalization of the banks and the nationalization of exports.

According to him, the agrarian reform which was initiated with the application of a basic law, has begun its first phase with the expropriation of all the plantations covering more than 500 hectares. In the second phase it will proceed with the expropriation of all estates between 100 and 500 hectares.

To whom is the land being given? "To agrarian cooperatives composed," he said, "of the farmers who work on it, with attention being given to what has been a claim for many years in Latin America: the land should belong to those who work it.

"To complement this action a decree law was promulgated and has begun to be applied which calls for doing away with the system of sharecropping and leased lands."

He added: "Another one of the fundamental decisions adopted has been the rationalization of the banks, which had been in the hands of the landlords of the estates. This nationalization was achieved through the purchase of shares at their nominal value. The feature of this measure is that those who previously owned 100 percent of the shares now have only 1 percent.

"What was achieved with this?" the minister of justice asks. "In addition to the benefits it will have in itself, by applying it oligarchic power has been reduced."

He then went on to explain to us the scope of the other measure: nationalization of foreign trade which comprises the foreign trade of the country's basic export products--cotton, sugar and coffee.

"What happened to this trade under the previous regimes? Those products were sold abroad and the proceeds from the sale were deposited in foreign banks.

"Due to nationalization distribution of the proceeds from the sales of those products, in hard cash, is compulsory," he added.

"This," he commented, "is the reality of the changing process that the present government is offering to the country."

The Accusations Made Against Carlos Andres Perez

The accusations made by Social Christian leader Luis Hidalgo against former President Carlos Andres Perez charging him with being the most visible head of the Social Democrats who support the "Marxist assault upon my country," appeared in yesterday's newspapers.

"Mr. Hidalgo's statements," the minister said, "are a politician's statements. He belongs to a political party and he must have had some reason to make them. Therefore, in my position as a government official, I can make no comment concerning the charges being made against Venezuela's former president."

To conclude the interview, Minister Solano Ramirez confirmed that at present preparations are being made for a proposed new constitution and work is being done to convene a national constitutional assembly, with the purpose of legitimizing and humanizing the government's struggle.

Taking advantage of this opportunity, the Salvadoran ambassador [to Venezuela], Mr. Jorge Hasfura, who was present at the interview, categorically denied that his government had recognized the Bolivian military junta, as has been reported.

The Oligarchy's Power Has Been Reduced

Replying thereafter to a question from the reporter regarding the causes of the opposition to the current government by an important sector of Christian Democrats, while other sectors support it, the minister told us:

"What really happened at the party's inner level cannot be reported by me; to be sure, I know some of the dissidents and it seems to me that they are very progressive persons and that probably they are not very much in agreement with the alliance which their party has established with the Armed Forces."

We reminded him at this point about recent statements by former Foreign Minister Consalvi in which he maintained that the influence and power of the famous 14 families who for years have dominated El Salvador remain in force.

"If that is a political judgement," he replied, "it is subject to debate; however, in order to analyze my country's objective reality, you have to go there, to see for yourself what the decrees have produced.

"The first reply to this statement would be as follows: while previously the oligarchy concentrated all the land in its hands, now it no longer owns it; while previously the oligarchy owned 100 percent of the banks' shares, now it only possesses 1 percent; while previously it controlled all exports, now it no longer controls foreign trade. We have to admit--regardless what ideological position we take--that oligarchic power has been reduced.

"I believe," he added, "that not even the most complete revolution, not even the most violent revolution can put an end, from one day to the next, to the former regime's power structure.

"Therefore, I think that one should have an understanding of El Salvadore and one cannot ask that the ruling class, which during 150 years of 'independent' life controlled the country, disappear overnight."

There Has Been No Intervention by Venezuela

Upon referring once again to the charges being made by the opposition, especially the Revolutionary Front, regarding the existence of intervention by the government of Venezuela in El Salvador, he said:

"I would not call it intervention nor meddling in my country's internal affairs, but rather an expression of solidarity on the part of the government of Venezuela so that El Salvador may solve its problems, and this solidarity is required at this time at which the country is a victim of aggression."

[Question] By whom?

[Answer] We consider that it is external, but we would not dare to point out where it comes from.

[Question] Promoted by the right or the left?

[Answer] I would not want to qualify it as coming from the right or the left, but rather as coming from opponents of the regime that was established on the 15th of October of last year.

"Could it be said," we persisted, "that a bitter dispute is developing in El Salvador between the Christian Democrats and the Social Democrats to obtain definite influence in the area?"

"Political systems," he replied, "tend to internationalize themselves; so do doctrines. And politicians want their influence to spread beyond their own borders.

"Nevertheless," he went on, "what interests me is not ideological influence, but the act of solidarity on the part of one country toward another, and specifically, of one government toward another."

Human Pettiness

Returning to the topic of reforms, we asked the minister to what he attributed the fact that the Social Democrats are opposed to the junta if, according to what follows from what he said, reforms are taking place in El Salvador which that faction has not succeeded in bringing about in countries where it has been or is in power.

"I would dare to say," he replied, "that there is more to it than matters of politics or ideology; what is happening right now is the result of human pettiness which influences individuals and especially the politicians.

"It goes something like this," he explained. "If the good things were not done by me, they are bad, and so long as I do not bring them about they will continue to be bad.

[Question] That statement could be accepted with regard to internal affairs. Does the minister believe that it applies to international affairs?

"Probably," was his reply. "El Salvador's revolutionary process does not correspond to the theoretical schemes that they have suggested. Therefore, they are no longer interested in making an in-depth analysis of things. Because I believe that, to form a judgment about what is happening in El Salvador, one would have to visit El Salvador to see the phenomenon directly."

He likewise reitereated that El Salvador's people are dedicated to work, as they demonstrated at the recent strike decreed by the Revolutionary Front for 13, 14 and 15 August when everybody went to work.

"This," he asserted, "gives me the impression that the people of El Salvador are giving their support to the process of pacification and change.

"I can assert," he added, "that the working people support the process of pacification and change and opposition has to be seen as a sign that to foment opposition is a business matter, since only persons who are unemployed are promoting opposition."

9661
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

GUERRILLAS BLAMED FOR VIOLENCE--San Salvador, 11 Oct (LATIN)--Pedro Arnoldo Aparicio y Quintanilla, bishop of the nearby city of San Vicente, reported today that Costa Rican, Panamanian, Cuban, Mexican and Nicaraguan guerrillas have gone into action in this country that is beset by political violence. He said that these foreign guerrillas, the number of which he did not reveal, come down from the mountains daily "to rob, murder and kidnap and to set fire to buses and private or state property." Speaking to parishioners from the pulpit of the San Vicente Cathedral, the prelate said: "All the violence generated in the past months, the extraordinary force, rancor and hatred, come from abroad. It could not be otherwise." Jose Napoleon Duarte, member of the government junta, recently reported the presence of foreign guerrillas, mostly Cubans, Panamanians and Nicaraguans. [Text] [PA120052 Buenos Aires LATIN in Spanish 1839 GMT 11 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

ASSEMBLY PRESIDENT DENIES CONFLICT--There is no conflict between the legislative and executive branches. On the contrary the executive has all the support of the National Constituent Assembly, Roberto Plaza Cordoba, president of the legislative chamber, and top liberal leader, said during his first official meeting at the Government House with President of the Republic Brig Gen Policarpo Paz Garcia. Plaza Cordoba was accompanied by lawyer [name indistinct] general assistant to the assembly president. During the courtesy visit we spoke at length about national problems and we have reaffirmed to the provisional president that we are against the campaign tending to create the impression a conflict exists between the National Constitutent Assembly and the executive power. There are persons interested in creating the belief that such a conflict exists. It does not and I am leaving pleased after having spoken at length with General Paz Garcia and shall pay another visit soon, Plaza Cordoba said. [Text] [PA100437 Tegucigalpa La Voz de Honduras in Spanish 0750 GMT 9 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

COSEP DEMANDS GREATER FREEDOM OF SPEECH

PA121841 Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 8 Oct 80 pp 1, 12

[Text] The Higher Council of Private Enterprise [COSEP] yesterday asked for more information about the truth behind the recent events in Bluefields and other cities on the Atlantic Coast.

The COSEP alleges that the government, on the basis of Decrees No 511 and No 512 issued in September of this year and extensive interpretations thereof, has blocked detailed information from reaching the citizens, thus violating the nation's basic laws establishing unlimited respect for freedom of the press.

The COSEP points out that this lack of information keeps broad sectors of the population from having sufficient elements of judgment to contribute solutions to the nation's problems.

The COSEP therefore voices its deep concern over the limitations imposed by Decrees 511 and 512 and their interpretations and invites the government of national reconstruction to seek better solutions to the problems that arose on the Atlantic Coast in line with the interests of that sector of the population.

Following is the text of the COSEP communique:

The COSEP informs the citizens of the following:

1. That the citizens have no knowledge of the real magnitude and cause of the events which occurred in Bluefields and other cities of the Atlantic Coast. This area is part of the nation's territory and its events without doubt are a part of the nation's problems.

2. That the government, based on Decrees No 511 and No 512 published in September of this year and on recent interpretation of these decrees, has released only terse reports, without going into detail about the events, consequently limiting the citizen's ability to be properly informed, thus violating the nation's basic laws which establish unlimited respect for freedom of the press.

3. That the lack of information regarding these events keeps broad sectors of public opinion from having sufficient elements of judgment to contribute solutions to the nation's problems.

4. By virtue of the above, the COSEP voices its deep concern over these decrees and their recent interpretations, which limit the media's information capacity. COSEP also invites the government of national reconstruction to seek solutions to the problems that arose on the Atlantic Coast in line with the interests of that sector of the nation.

[Signed] /COSEP/ [word in slantlines published in boldface] Nicaraguan Development Institute, Nicaraguan Chamber of Commerce, Confederation of Nicaraguan Chambers of Commerce [Confederacion de Camaras de Comercio de Nicaragua], Nicaraguan Chamber of Construction, Nicaraguan Chamber of Industries, Union of Agriculture and Livestock Producers of Nicaragua [Union de Productores Agropecuarios de Nicaragua], Confederation of Nicaraguan Professional Associations.

[Dated] Managua, 7 October 1980.

CSO: 3010

NICARAGUAN WORKERS MARCH ENDS, ORTEGA URGES GREATER UNITY

PA120420 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 2226 GMT 11 Oct 80

[Text] The ceremony to close the Great March of the Workers for Unity and Solidarity and to support the junta of the government of national reconstruction concluded a few minutes ago.

As we have reported, this march was promoted by the Sandinist Workers Federation [CST]. CST Secretary General Ivan Garcia and commander of the revolution Daniel Ortega, as a member of the junta of the government of national reconstruction, spoke at the ceremony.

Companero Garcia noted the importance of the unity of the workers. This importance has been evident in the past. It made possible the victory of the national literacy campaign, the social achievements of the workers and unity, which is also important for the future tasks that the workers will be facing, next year, a year that has been called the year of austerity and efficiency.

Cmdr Daniel Ortega noted that a few hours ago the Inter-American Human Rights Commission that visited us for a few days left the country. He noted that the revolution has nothing to hide on human rights and that if there are limitations, it is because of the terrible situation in which the revolution found the national economy.

Commander Ortega noted that additional evidence of the generosity of the revolution is the decree issued yesterday. This decree releases and pardons more than 90 prisoners serving sentences because of crimes committed against the people during the Somozist dictatorship.

Commander Ortega also noted the workers must achieve a greater cohesion and unity to face the tasks of the popular Sandinist revolution.

CSO: 3010

YOUTH PARTICIPATING IN LITERACY CAMPAIGN HAILED

Youth, Parents Praised

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 24 Aug 80 p 2

[Article by Sebastian Briceno]

[Text] All Nicaraguans, with tears in their eyes, have attended some huge, unprecedented and awesome parades in the last week, their eyes wet with gratitude and admiration.

The occasion was the return to their homes of some strange, and at the same time well-known, warriors.

Hundreds of vehicles of all kinds, each caravan 3 and even 4 km long, crossed the country in all directions. The people saw them pass and acclaimed them in amazement--in spite of the fact that we all knew what was happening--expressing with gestures and voices the emotion they felt in their hearts.

Nobody, not even those who did not tell their children because they did not have any or who, having them, did not want to expose them to the dangers presented by the great campaign, could remain indifferent to the magnitude of this event, perhaps unique in the history of America. Nobody, except those who are antipatriotic, could fail to be moved by the spectacle of youths returning by thousands upon thousands from inhospitable places, from the farthest recesses of dense mountains, from sad, ignored huts, all with their heads held high, smiles lighting their faces and their joy translated into eloquent words and gestures.

Nicaragua has for an entire week been witness to this unprecedented victory. And it has taken to the streets and highways to render to that youth its tribute of admiration and gratitude.

But we have also had foreign witnesses. Present in this hour of national glory have been representatives of friendly countries which so generously made their valuable contribution to the Literacy Campaign. And they will--we are sure--tell the world how in Nicaragua a new history is being written which looks to the future, which is filling the morning with bright promises, which will soon ripen into the new fruits of peace and prosperity. And they can also say, surely, that only a profound, human and humanistic revolution was capable of lighting in the soul of these youths that enthusiasm vibrant with brotherhood, quick in its decision to fight, frank and open in its patriotic intentions, with which for 5 months they devoted themselves to the revolutionary task of teaching the ignorant and of bringing them, with their first letters and numbers, the certain hope of a better future.

We are proud of our youth, and we are also proud of the parents of those young people, because all of them, each from his own position in the struggle, displayed the highest spirit of sacrifice for our brothers who have been ignored and exploited for centuries. Because all of them made possible the marvel of light, of true light destroying the darkness, illuminating minds, opening routes to the spirit of our peasant people. Today, thanks to them, we can shout to the world:

"This is how the new Nicaragua, the Nicaragua of Augusto Cesar Sandino and Carlos Fonseca Amador works, sings and moves!"

Important Historical Event

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 23 Aug 80 p 2

[Text] Rarely does history produce events which succeed in rallying around them unanimous support. Nicaragua has achieved this, outwardly and inwardly, with its exemplary and victorious Literacy Crusade, the quixotic undertaking of a people who had just finished an extenuating war, whose economy was in a shambles, and who were hungry and in need of many things. But the call went out, and the tired, bleeding country stood up; everyone responded, the older generations giving what they loved most--their sons--and the younger generation giving the best of themselves--their idealism, their enthusiasm and their generosity.

And this is the jubilant hour in which an entire people cry out to their heroes and to their history: "Mission accomplished!"

The most important and beautiful collective, patriotic action in the history of Nicaragua has been achieved. The cleanest (because of its youth and its distinterest). The most brotherly (because it was civilian and antiwar). And the most fruitful (because it was a labor of love and of culture).

The Crusade has borne direct fruits of incalculable cultural value: more than a half million people have been taught to read and write.

But, with all its sociological and cultural value, this is not the most important result. The greatest teachers were the pupils. In this agrarian republic, our Nicaraguan youths have received a course in the Nicaraguan character of our peasants; that is to say, of those who live most directly in communion with nature and the land and who, having been the most excluded, possess a wisdom of the heart and a deep humanism which are the root and sap of our Nicaraguan identity.

The generous sacrifice of the young literacy worker in contact and communion with this teaching force of the peasant heart must produce--and it has already produced--a new and very deep vision of what Nicaragua is and must be. A vision from the soul which will continue to develop and, when the shouts of victory are no longer heard, will go on growing and return consciously in the thoughts and actions which will be the history of our tomorrow.

These young people who are returning know they have a hand in history. They have done something great, which had never been achieved before: they have gone beyond their own years. They are the protagonists of a campaign of peace and brotherly love which, it is to be hoped, will never be misappropriated by politics nor by ambitions of power, so that it will mean, in all its magnitude and force, what it must mean: the conquest of our future.

If what they have done is not sidetracked, if what they have done is not spoiled, if what united them continues to unite the Nicaraguan people, the crusade means our victory over the future. That is, we have opened a definite path to the indefinite.

And this is due (and we must emphasize this basic and important point) to the national and patriotic spirit which encouraged the crusade. Its success is due to the fact that everything was added and nothing taken away. Its triumph, like that of the war for liberation, was the fruit of a solidarity with no exclusions. Let not this lesson be forgotten! The most beautiful and fruitful success of our revolution was not achieved by an ideology, a party, a class or a government--it was done by all the people; it was done by the united youth of an entire people. It was done by love and not by hate. It was done by adding and not subtracting. The Sadinist Front contributed its leadership and organization. All the heads of families (from all regions, classes and sectors) not only contributed their generosity and their moral support, but also made economic sacrifices, undertaking to pay the expenses (sometimes of heroic proportions) for food and medicines for their children and the peasants entrusted to them. The churches contributed. The Catholic Church contributed, and Catholic people made a great human, moral and material contribution--national and international--such as has never been seen in any religious campaign. The mass organizations contributed. The self-denying teachers contributed. Workers and employees contributed their wages. And the peasant gave the most noble contribution from his poverty: that love, that generosity that gives everything, that thanks full of affection of which the returning youth spoke and continue to speak among themselves.

Whenever there is an ideal capable of uniting as the Literacy Crusade united; whenever there is a call to that brotherly spirit of nationhood which abounds in the hearts of the Nicaraguan people; whenever patriotism has that sincerity --without party hollowness, without hatred, without sly self-interest, without the imposition or manipulation of power--one can construct a fatherland and a people.

And let us not forget, in closing this lesson which the youth have taught the Nicaragua of today and tomorrow--let us not forget the dead. They symbolize with the supreme gesture of their sacrifice the lack of self-interest, the love and the deep Christian and Nicaraguan humanism which made this crusade possible.

Honor to the young returning heroes!

Rare, Unique Experience

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 25 Aug 80 p 2

[Article by Joaquin Gonzalez]

[Text] Now that the brigade members of the Great Literacy Crusade are returning to their homes and to the city, they will arrive with a set of experiences which they probably will never forget. To have shared their lives with the peasants is a completely unique experience. They will not be able to forget the great heart of that man who, not having enough for his family and himself to eat, nevertheless gave of whatever he had. This act of love is seen particularly among the poor, those who are the poor of the Gospel. They will also have shared the peasant culture: those customs, attitudes and behaviors which are peculiar to the peasants--their beliefs, for example, in the mythical, the irrational, the fantastic. They will have shared their fiestas, their joys and their sorrows.

And above all, the brigade members will have had that great experience of God which our peasants have. That simplicity and humility; that outspoken faith, that great spirit of brotherhood. And probably many brigade members shared that faith with them, through discussion of the Word, prayers, etc.

When they return to the city, to the megalopolis, where relations are more impersonal, where the contractual, the utilitarian, the functional and the secular are so widely diffused, those values and experiences they shared with the peasants--if they have been well impregnated in the brigade members--will fight to be revived.

Many are the satisfactions of the brigade member who has completed his mission: to have taught the ignorant, to have become aware of the social reality of the peasants and to have shared peasant life for a few months, which many wish could have been longer. It is for this reason that many brigade members expressed the desire not to return to their studies or to their jobs in the city.

The brigade members deserve all our thanks because they have brought the light of knowledge to so many workers and peasants and because they underwent so many privations for this mission. For many brigade members their vision of the world will have been influenced by this teaching experience, and many will never be the same again.

8735
CSO: 3010

LITERACY CAMPAIGN SEEN AS TURNING POINT IN REVOLUTION

FSLN Plays Vanguard Role

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 25 Aug 80 p 3

[Text] August 23d, the Day of National Literacy, will go down in history not only as the date that marks the peak of the victory of Sandino's people against illiteracy, but also as a reference point in the process of strengthening the Nicaraguan revolution. We have frequently stated that "in Nicaragua nothing will be the same after the literacy campaign" and that "the revolution is irreversible and never retreats." Surely on 23 August both things became reality because we had never seen in Nicaragua so much concentrated revolutionary energy, so many "new men" incarnated in the brigade members and those who have just learned to read and write. Their enthusiasm grew when they learned of the new measures to strengthen the revolutionary process announced by our National Directorate and the government junta.

But above everything else we must stress the central element that makes it possible for great and transcendental things such as this to happen in Nicaragua. That element is the existence of a revolutionary government headed by the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] and based on the full hegemony of the people. Only those who are against history, those who still live on past dreams, refuse to recognize the Sandinist leadership as the unquestionable vanguard of all the nation. And this is not because they do not know that the FSLN took power on 19 July and installed at that time a government junta to promote government management of the country, but rather because they want to put before that government of the people a scheme responsive to imperialist interests and the interests of the ruling classes which were displaced by the revolution. For this reason they cynically propose that the FSLN become a "party" like those they have formed, that it "auction off" power, and that it stop playing its role of vanguard of all the nation. But they will never succeed because the revolution was fought to build the people's government which will permit the creation of a new society.

The demonstration on 23 August was without any doubt a ratification of a Sandinist hegemony in which the vanguard, through our National Directorate, set new tasks for our people while confirming the general guidelines of the Sandinist revolution.

Specifically, the statement of our National Directorate stands out: It points out that the process of national reconstruction will be completed in the year 1985 and that at that time elections will be called "to elect the government program and the country's best men who, in charge of the government, will continue to promote the work of the revolution."

With that, our vanguard confirms the current members of the government junta as the heads of our government and precisely defines the temporary character of their term of government. At the same time it ratifies the National Directorate's political authority to set the guidelines to lead the Sandinist revolution and puts an end to the campaign of some minority sectors to artifically create an electoral climate. The rules of the game have already been defined.

In addition, our National Directorate's position on the matter of democracy, defining it as the "intervention of the masses in all aspects of social life," lays down a definitive guideline to strengthen the democratic process in our country. The literacy campaign has been the most obvious example of what the involvement of the masses in the country's social affairs means and the results are evident everywhere. The joint action of the people organized and led by a revolutionary vanguard has been, up to now, the key factor in the two great victories obtained by the Nicaraguan people (in the war against the dictatorship and against illiteracy). And experience tells us that this is the same path we must follow to tackle the problems of the economy, of national defense, of improving political democracy and of solving the social problems we still face.

The path is set, and by rallying all the nation around the unity of the people and the FSLN we will keep strengthening the Sandinist revolution.

National Unity, International Solidarity

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 25 Aug 80 p 2

[Text] The closing of the great national Literacy Crusade suggests--because of its cultural and political importance, because of the majestic closing ceremony at the 19 July Plaza, and because of the relevance of the announcements made by the government junta and the FSLN National Directorate--many diverse comments and analyses, which it would be impossible to cover in a single editorial.

Thus, these editorial comments barely cover those aspects which, at the moment of writing them, seem most significant.

Timetable for Reconstruction, Stability of National Unity

The announcement that, given the destruction of our economy and the lengthy and intense effort that its reconstruction demands, the timetable for national reconstruction--and consequently for the government junta--is being extended until 1985, the year in which elections will be held to constitute a new government, is especially significant and has important consequences.

The most important is that the period of national reconstruction has a timetable, and since the government program for national reconstruction has been ratified, the national unity of workers, peasants, students, professionals and progressive employers--which is needed for that reconstruction effort--acquires greater stability. There is, then, already a timetable on which we can count that leaves no place for any more fears and distrust.

The second one is that the revolution has ratified its commitment to a direct popular consultation--and that is the generic term for elections--as the means for generating and renovating the government.

The 4 and 1/2 years between now and 1985 will--with the development of schools and adult education, the improvement of our people's living conditions, and in short, with creation of cultural and economic conditions that increase freedom of thought and individual freedom to make decisions--make those elections a more loyal expression of the people's will than in any other country and, of course, that in any previous age in our country.

Let us note to conclude these comments that the general framework established for the elections--to improve the revolution's program, to choose its best men--does not discriminate against anybody since all, without exception, are called upon to participate in the revolutionary change of our society.

International Solidarity and Its Recognition

A special place was accorded in the closing cermony of the crusade to broad international solidarity. There was no political or ideological discrimination; everyone who helped was recognized. This is definite proof of political honesty and national independence.

This is proof that this country wishes to maintain the broadest and friendliest relations with all the countries in the world, within a framework of mutual respect.

We point this out because not only did the speakers at the crusade closing ceremony express thanks to those who helped it the crusade, but also a list has been published with the names of all the donors and the amount of their assistance.

In that list the American Government stands out. And despite the anti-imperialist stand of the Sandinist revolution, there is enough firmness and revolutionary honesty not to hide this, because when there is political-ideological strength, there is not fear of the truth.

However, a local newspaper has not understood this. It is using the figures on international aid published by the revolutionary government--in which the superiority of nonsocialist assistance is evident--to subtly claim: "Can you imagine," they seem to say between the lines," the capitalist countries are helping the most...."

The above is obviously not a naive remark. Basically they are trying to present international solidarity as the buying and selling of our national sovereignty.

They are doing this instead of seeing the maturity of our international relations; instead of seeing that with the revolution we conquered the right to have relations with all and receive assistance from all without bending our head, without handing over our sovereignty, the mines, the banks and the railroads. The Adolfo Diaz' of today--imposing on the prestige that said newspaper achieved by fighting against dictatorship and intervention--are trying to draw petty and sectarian political conclusions.

It is a small favor for the United States, since those who identify themselves as its local allies, are trying to draw petty, stale and fatherland-selling conclusions from a mature act which we are celebrating.

9341
CSO: 3010

MEXICAN BISHOP PRAISES LITERACY CAMPAIGN

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 25 Aug 80 p 3

[Speech by Mexican Bishop Sergio Mendez Arceo at the Literacy Campaign celebrations; date not specified]

[Text] Comrades: I was touched when I received this invitation, but I did not expect this presentation, which I attribute to the friendship of Commander Tomas Borge.

I spoke my first public words in Nicaragua on 13 November 1979, during the eucharistic celebration held in memory of the revolutionary martyr, Gaspar Garcia Laviana, in his parish church at Tola.

I have come to Nicaragua, I said then, on a pilgrimage as I would come to a sanctuary, to a meeting of the Liberating God with his people. With that inspiration, moved by the spirit, I have participated since 1978 in this great struggle for the liberation of the Nicaraguan people, although in a clandestine manner, from Cuernavaca, while carrying out my episcopal mission, with conflict and suffering in proportion. To what extent the complex but clear events in Nicaragua may be evangelizing is shown by the fact that in some of the popular neighborhoods of Cuernavaca, all the envelopes distributed for the Latin American collection, specifically for the churches of Nicaragua, on 17 August, were returned with the Christian solidarity of the poor.

I want to say that the involvement of the Catholic hierarchy in the National Literacy Commission was an important factor in my decision to accept the friendly invitation of the Sandinist government to speak here.

I am in communion with the Nicaraguan bishops. And yet, I make no claim to be acting in their stead or to be representing them. I will make use of this stirring occasion to salute them, and to render to them the praise that they deserve, because the Nicaraguan Church in general has joined in the revolution against the tyrant, and the Christian people, discovering the political teachings of the gospels, have swollen the ranks of the Sandinist National Liberation Front, and have given the revolution and the reconstruction process a nuance that is unique and exemplary throughout the world.

Supporting the Bishops

The fact that the Christian people have spurred on the clergy, and together they have supported the bishops, removing any shadow of legitimacy from the hypocritical Catholicism of Somoza, culminated with the Christian commitment for a new Nicaragua, a commitment contained in the splendid pastoral letter sent by the Nicaraguan bishops. This marked an enthralling milestone in the universal teachings of the Catholic Church. Its display of invaluable perseverance reached my country in a copy still fresh from the printers on 17 November and from its reading on Sunday, 18 November, in all the Catholic masses celebrated in Nicaragua.

In Mexico I had it printed, discussed it, and celebrated it as a confirmation of my statements and my criticisms.

I recalled then, as I shall do once again now, a statement made by a great friend of mine in his last years; this was Gen Lazaro Cardenas; his words were repeated on thousands of lips months before his death: "If the Church said: Converting yourselves will not transform Mexico, we will not make this transformation, because we are very closely bound together."

You Have Experienced a Conversion

Popular Literacy Workers and members of the Popular Literacy Army who are here present: in your electrifying experience, you have already had your own conversion, and you have experienced the conversion of the people you have taught, by transforming the darkness into light.

You have already known these bonds, and you will get to know them even better in the days to come. Paulo Freire, in "Pedagogy of the Oppressed," says that sectarianism is always destructive because of the fanaticism in which it breeds. But radicalization, on the contrary, is always creative, because of the criticism that feeds it. While fanaticism is mystical and therefore alienating, radicalization is critical and for that reason liberating, since while helping people to settle in the option they have chosen, it involves a growing commitment to a specific and objective reality.

Revolutionaries who fall into sectarianism become reactionaries, and Christians become even more reactionary. The Nicaraguan bishops in their pastoral letter, basing their position on the evangelical motivation of its second part, became radical and bold in stating the fundamental truth in our Christian faith which we are, the letter says, rediscovering and recovering as a central tenet in the present situation in our nation and in the orientation of the process of revolutionary change.

Commitment to the Poor

They briefly explained the announcement of the kingdom of God, the heart of the message brought by Jesus, and the evangelical commitment in the preference given to the poor, as a form of liberation in Jesus Christ, by stating, in the final part of the letter, the responsibility and challenge of the present times.

In the radical nature of this preference for the poor, taken from the spirit of Medellin and proclaimed in Puebla by the Latin American bishops, we Christians can not forget that this preference for the poor is the first among the Beatitudes.

We cannot ignore that the intercession of sociopolitical analyses and the methods for their application in real societies are still largely untested. So we see, for example now in the Literacy Campaign, that for the Christian this means changing an inorganic and miserable multitude into a people.

This means, an organized multitude which may be an active subject in the kingdom of God on earth, since it means giving the poor control over their language. Lack of such control had been the main inferiority of the oppressed class in relation to the ruling class.

Greater Capacity for Living

Words will give the poor a greater capacity for living, for transforming and constructing, because the God of Jesus Christ chose to communicate with men by means of words, words which were interpreted and gave meaning to the historic events in the Bible. This was made explicit by topic number 22 in the short synthesis of our current Latin American theology.

I attended the first meeting of Christians for Socialism in 1972, and there I told the Christians participating in the Sunday celebration at a "Momia" /Christian Democratic/ parish in Santiago, Chile: Revolution is made with or against the Church, but not simply without the Church.

The task of the revolutionary leaders and of all those in charge is to create the revolution with the Church, or better yet, with the churches, for the good of the majority of the Nicaraguan people.

Circumstances Have Been Given

The circumstances have been given to us, as Commander Fidel Castro said in his Ciego de Avila speech on 26 July after his historic visit to Nicaragua, the second free land in the Americas, to celebrate the first anniversary of the triumph of the revolution.

I have come on pilgrimage to Nicaragua to witness the encounter of the Liberating God with his people. And here I will explain why God is present at every truly liberating revolution.

The president of Mexico, Jose Lopez Portillo, analyzed the recent major Latin American revolutions in the following way.

The Mexican revolution in 1910, in order to preserve liberty, he said, lessened justice. In the Cuban revolution, to achieve justice, he said, liberty was diminished.

It is now up to the Nicaraguan revolution to have both liberty and justice. I told Salvador Allende, the leader of the once liberated Chile: "You must travel the paths of both justice and liberty."

The Church, Only a Sacrament

I do not support the schema without any reservations, but I could do no less than point out the generosity of this commitment to the Nicaraguan revolutionary process. This schema also expresses in a secular and approximate way the Christian ideal of the kingdom of God, founded on Jesus Christ, for whom the Church is only a sacrament, and not an exclusive boundary.

Pope John Paul II encouraged the members of the government junta and the Nicaraguan bishops to continue to seek agreement along the way they had begun, and he used special words to express this encouragement. He gave special consideration, he said, to an important aspect of the present situation in Nicaragua.

I am referring, he said, to the Literacy Campaign, to which so much energy is being devoted.

Almost in closing, let me now read you what I read to the Christians of Cuernavaca on Sunday, 10 August.

It sums up, to some extent, my thoughts, and it was written without the pressure caused by this stirring multitude now present here.

We have, his statement said, to announce a prayer of solidarity and a collection for the churches of Nicaragua. You should know that a general collection throughout all of Latin America has been scheduled for the 15th of this month, with the proceeds of the collection to be used as aid for the Church of Nicaragua. The money collected will be sent directly to the bishops of Nicaragua.

Priority Given to Nicaragua

The needs are great in El Salvador, in Guatemala, in Bolivia, and in Honduras. But we consider aid to Nicaragua a priority, because the process of reconstruction and organization will have an immediate political impact throughout the entire region of Central America, and even throughout Latin America.

Aid to the Nicaraguan church is urgent. Of course, it will not be used for projects paralleling those conducted by the National Reconstruction Government, but it will be used for evangelizing work within the specific context of the revolution.

It is up to us, he said, and to all who want to aid these churches, to enable these churches to provide an admirable and exemplary Christian touch to the revolution, as has never before been done.

We can not give them economic aid and tie it to conditions of particular models and ideologies, or even outside pastoral models.

A Determining Relation

Along with this economic aid, there must be information and understanding. We can not forget the pastoral letter from the Nicaraguan bishops dated 17 November, nor can we forget the conclusions of the religious men and women who met in Managua from 23 to 25 July of this year.

Nicaragua is vital to both the economics and politics of the region, just as the relation between the Church as an institution with the government is essential; these relations will be determining in the search for new courses for our nations.

Finally, because of my background, my presence here, and in particular my participation in the closing of the Literacy Campaign, I am asking you to include me as one of the popular literacy workers and if possible, as a member of the Popular Literacy Army, even if only in an honorary capacity.

7679
CSO: 3010

SIGNIFICANCE, RESULTS OF LITERACY CAMPAIGN DISCUSSED

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 24 Aug 80 ρ 10

[Text] The minister of education, Carlos Tunnermann, yesterday announced new battles in the field of education, during a meeting with EL NUEVO DIARIO.

He reported that a group has been finalizing the last preparations for the organization of the proposed vice ministry of popular lifetime education, which will begin to function in October.

Another of the tasks in this new battle is the phase of providing support for the CNA [Literacy Campaign] so that those who have just learned to read may continue to read simple educational materials provided through the CEPS [Sandinist Popular Education Collectives], and may then move on to accelerated primary studies, but not in the traditional format.

Anyone May Teach

We have realized the great importance of informal education and for that reason we will continue to maintain a close relationship with our brothers who have just learned to read; perhaps the "Raised Fist" program will continue.

Experience has shown us that anyone can become a popular teacher and teaching can be conducted anywhere, said the minister Carlos Tunnermann, in speaking of his own experiences with the Crusade.

I Wanted To Be a Literacy Teacher

"I wanted to be a literacy teacher, but my time did not allow me to do so. I did, however, have the satisfaction of supervising the UAS [Sandinist Literacy Education Units] within the ministry of education, where a group of employees taught 21 of their comrades to read.

"For me the Literacy Crusade meant that an old dream was coming true. When I was a university student and Andres Garcia was minister of education, I began to realize the great importance of a literacy campaign.

"I always believed that when the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] came to power this dream would become a reality. I began to experience this reality when the FSLN leaders called me in San Jose, Costa Rica, to begin to work on the grandiose project of literacy education in Nicaragua within the National Reconstruction Government. So it was actually in Costa Rica that the vast project of the CNA began to take shape."

Solidarity

"Another thing I take great pride in is that we began the CNA project almost without any money, and now our spending ranges between 100 and 120 million cordobas. We can be sure we will manage this fairly well because of the great solidarity and aid received from friendly peoples, such as the people of Mexico who sent us six helicopters to use for several months.

"We will use these helicopters to send the needed educational materials and the final literacy tests to the most remote places touched by the Crusade.

"In many cases economic aid was furnished just after simple conversations, and another factor that helped us is the ability of our technicians and the international advisory assistance we received. The secretary general of UNESCO, Amaduo Matheu Blow, after a very serious evaluation of our program, approved it, and issued an appeal to all of the nations of the world to help us."

Assurance and Confidence

"The UNESCO secretary, in his visit to Nicaragua, before we began the Crusade, closely examined all the Crusade project leaders; they answered him with confidence and thus passed the test. I remember the questions asked of Luis Aleman Robleto, Francisco Lacayo, Catarina Grisby, Roberto Saenz, and others," said the minister.

"Today the highest honor and prestige of the Revolutionary Government is that it won this battle in the cultural revolution, teaching over half a million people to read, and at the same time it has awakened interest in the nations of Latin America in literacy programs. On the very day when our literacy program ends, a similar program is beginning in Colombia. Guatemala is also preparing another literacy campaign, and Honduras began one some months ago.

"In 1981 UNESCO is planning a special program to try to wipe out illiteracy in the nations of Latin America, and Nicaragua's experience will be used in this program. UNESCO will also publish a book on our Crusade.

"The Crusade has been both a great mother and a great teacher. It has fed us and taught us what contents and what form to use so that our people, only yesterday outcasts, can be emancipated and join in our technological development through a systematic and liberating form of education."

From this great experiment will arise the new educational system of the new nation of Nicaragua.

Revealing Statistics

When the Crusade started, the census listed 668,948 illiterates, and of this number, 617,069 were considered able to be taught to read.

When the UAS [Sandinist Literacy Education Units] were begun, they taught 464,508 people to read, but to this number must be added the members of the EPS /People's Sandinist Army/ who did not know how to read and write, a number calculated at about 20,000, plus 60,000 illiterates over the age of 10 who will be taught to read in the "Miskito" dialect in 186 communities. Along with some others not previously accounted for, the number totals over half a million people taught to read.

On 30 May, the statistics department of the CNA had 25,894 AP [Popular Literacy Teachers] registered, along with 47,665 brigade members of the EPA and 7,225 auxiliary technical instructors: a total of 80,784 persons.

The mass organizations provided valuable support for the Literacy Crusade, as the figures show: MOA /Workers Literacy Militias/, 2,085; CDS /Sandinist Defense Committees/, 6,630; AMNLAE, /Luisa Amanda Espinoza Women's Association/, 1,207; ANDEN /National Association of Nicaraguan Educators/, 1,340 (Rojinegra Brigade); ATC /Agricultural Workers Association/, 1,389; and Sandinist Youth, 27,134; this is a total of 39,782.

The ratio of the UAS in urban areas was five persons taught by one brigade member, and in rural areas, six to one.

Low Dropout Rate

The dropout rate of brigade members was very low, barely 3,044, and some were unable to continue because of illness. The minister of education said that students will now be more disciplined when they arrive, and will have a broader vision of our true situation.

Comparison

The literacy campaign in Cuba was conducted over a 2-year period, while ours lasted only 5 months.

In Cuba at that time the illiteracy rate was 23 percent; it was reduced to 3.9 percent; our illiteracy rate was 52 percent, and we managed to lower it to between 12 and 15 percent, which is a manageable percentage, and no longer an acute social problem.

Cuba at that time had about 6 million inhabitants; we have over 2 million. In Cuba 707,212 people took part in the Crusade: 268,420 literacy teachers and 100,000 brigade members, along with 34,727 teachers. Cuba is a small island which is traversed by a railway, while Nicaragua covers a larger area. But still our Crusade has prepared the new man for the new nation of Nicaragua, said the minister of education, Mr Tunnermann, who is pleased with the great task which is now about to be completed.

7679
CSO: 3010

PCU FIRST SECRETARY DISCUSSES PARTY'S ACHIEVEMENTS, STRUGGLE

East Berlin HORIZONT in German Vol 13 No 37, 1980, signed to press 8 Sep 80 p 12

[Interview With PCU Secretary General Rodney Arismendi: "The PCU--Backbone of Resistance"]

[Text] HORIZONT: On 21 September of this year, the Communist Party of Uruguay (PCU) is observing the 60th anniversary of its founding. What are your thoughts on the occasion of this anniversary?

Rodney Arismendi: In the past 60 years, the party has had to fulfill many difficult tasks, and has remained loyal to Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. Two characteristic features clearly mark the history of our party. First, the efforts of the PCU to organize the working class and raise its political consciousness, and to make progress in the struggle of the people of Uruguay for democracy, deep-rooted social changes, and for the defense of the interests of the working masses and the total population. The second characteristic consists of the international positions that our party has persistently pursued from the beginning.

Over the course of the years, the PCU has succeeded in developing into a true mass party with firm roots in the working class. About 75 percent of the party members come the working class. Through its press, radio programs, newspapers and other publications the party has performed extensive and aggressive propaganda work. Our party has fought patiently for the unity of the working class. It has made an essential contribution to the formation of the union association CNT which, at the time of the fascist putsch in 1973, united about 95 percent of all organized workers.

Communists fought for the unity of our people in the most advanced front lines by trying, first of all, to unite the left and later by organizing the Frente Amplio (Broad Front) that included Christian democrats, communists, socialists, leftist democrats and left-oriented members of the armed forces headed by General Liber Seregni.

In the hours of trial, the party had to face the most violent suppressive measures of the fascist dictatorship. It stood up honorably under this trial and became the most important organized force against the country's dictatorial regime. In its 60th year, our party has entered a new stage in its fight against the dictatorship. This stage is characterized by the fact that the PCU is making strong efforts to strengthen the unity of the Frente Amplio and all other democratic circles. We are sure that the progressive forces in the world will use the occasion of our party's anniversary to express their solidarity with the devoted struggle of the people of Uruguay against the willfulness of the regime.

HORIZONT: What are the conditions under which the PCU is presently carrying on its struggle, and how did the policies of the party affect the unification of all antifascist forces?

Rodney Arismendi: At the present time, our party is operating in complete illegality in Uruguay. There were times when 4,500 PCU members were imprisoned, among them members of the Central and Executive Committees as well as the leadership on various levels of the party. In spite of repression and torture, however, the dictatorship did not succeed in destroying the PCU. On the contrary, the party adjusted its activities to the new political conditions, published illegal publications like the magazine CARTA and other publications, and made progress in its propaganda work.

After the fascist putsch, the Communists are continuing their untiring efforts for the continuation of the Frente Amplio and are rallying loyally behind their heroic leader and first soldier, General Liber Seregni, in order to uphold the democratic anti-imperialist front as a center of all antifascist forces of Uruguay. We have now begun to fight for the unity and mutual cooperation of all opponents of fascism. The PCU policy has lately had the effect that the Frente Amplio has been strengthened and that abroad a "Committee of Democratic Cooperation" has been formed by personalities of the two traditional middle-class parties and the Broad Front.

Today, we are experiencing in Uruguay a revival of the struggle of our people against dictatorship, and the clearest marks of this revival are the workers' action against the union law as well as the demonstration of 1 May. Other expressions of this revival are increasingly strong demands by the unity-conscious opponents of the dictatorship to restore freedoms and rights in the country, to release immediately all political prisoners, to guarantee the freedom of democratic action for all parties, to open the way for a constitutional assembly, and to bring about a reorientation in the interest of the masses of economic policies that are now in the service of imperialism and international financial capital.

HORIZONT: How do the communists appraise the regime's attempts to give itself a democratic image through the "institutionalization process?"

Rodney Arismendi: At the present time, the dictatorship is making strong efforts to force on our country a wrong method of institutionalization through the so-called chronogram. This timetable plan wants to provide first a referendum on the constitution and then presidential elections with one or two candidates. In order to retain the structures of fascism, presidential candidates will be selected by the military while political parties are forbidden any kind of activity and thousands of patriots must waste away in prisons. This plan of the dictatorship is a maneuver to insure the power of the military. But the plan also reflects the increasing isolation of the regime here and abroad, and is a reaction to the worldwide solidarity campaign for the people of Uruguay in which the GDR also plays an important role. In view of its isolation, the dictatorship is trying to make headway by providing a fictitious restoration of constitutional rights in the country and an equally fictitious return of democracy. We believe we have succeeded, however, in unmasking the "chronogram" of the dictatorship on the international level. Inside the country, too, there is growing opposition to the timetable plan of the military. Even the two traditional middle-class parties, the Partido Nacional and the Partido Colorado, are increasingly condemning the "chronogram" and are even proclaiming that they will vote "no" during these false elections.

This development is the background for the fact that in recent times the dictatorship has increased its terror against our party, the backbone of the resistance movement in Uruguay. The recent arrest of Dr Pedro Cardosa, Socialist Party chairman, also demonstrated the repressive and fascist nature of the regime and its violation of rights.

HORIZONT: On account of the worldwide protest against the persecution, imprisonment and torture of political prisoners in Uruguay, several patriots were recently released. However, many leading representatives of the Frente Amplio are still in prison. What should the focus of the present international solidarity movement with the struggle of your people be?

Rodney Arismendi: The characteristic feature of the worldwide solidarity actions for our people is that they are carried out by a broad spectrum of social forces and political organizations. Among these people in the socialist brother states, representatives of churches, parliaments and democratic middle-class governments as well as the OAS and United Nations organizations.

Continued international protests against the willful measures of the dictatorship have forced the release of several thousand patriots. Nevertheless, about 3,000 political prisoners continue to waste away in prisons. Among them are eminent representatives of the Frente Amplio and our party, such as General Liber Seregni, General Victor Licandro, Jaime Perez, Luis Massera,

Alberto Altesar, Rosario Pietrarroia, Gerado Cuesta, Wladimir Turlansky, Jorge Mazzarovich, Leon Lev, Rita Ibarburi and others. The dictatorship, especially its fascist wing, plans to keep these patriots in prison until they are physically and psychologically destroyed. Therefore, the international campaign to release all political prisoners in Uruguay, which at the present time is closely tied to the fight against the "chronogram," must be intensified. There can be no doubt that these actions are an important factor in the defense of democracy in our country and in the continuation of the struggle against fascism and imperialism.

8889
CSO: 3103

YAMANI SEEN AS THREAT TO OPEC UNITY, FUTURE

Caracas RESUMEN in Spanish 12 Oct 80 pp 29-30

[Commentary by Erwin Arrieta Valera: "In Gravedigger of OPEC"]

[Text] Should the plans which the by no means clandestine foes of OPEC have been devising for some time materialize, history will unquestionably assign to Mr Yamani the mournful role of "gravedigger of OPEC," for all his "good and brilliant" offices performed on behalf of its disappearance.

Of course, that unfortunate role would be successfully culminated only if all, absolutely all of the other member nations in this entity, join the chorus of "perpetual adoration" which that sort of ill-fated horseman of the apocalypse of oil seems to enjoy, as has been repeatedly demonstrated by some of the funeral assistants that he has had within the very bosom of OPEC every time they have approached the windows of the world news media, displaying, without any shame, the nakedness of their solidarity with the crafty action to which we have been accustomed from Mr Yamani, since he decided to sell his soul to the devil at the conference held in Vienna in September 1975.

The systematic opposition that the Saudi minister has put up against the increase in prices of hydrocarbons, which is merely giving them the fair value that rationally belongs to that strategic as well as depletable resource, contributes nothing to the merit of a defender of the interests which he supposedly obliged to protect, for the benefit not only of the array of peoples grouped together in OPEC, but also of all mankind. His participation within OPEC, representing more of a feudal kingdom than the people of Saudi Arabia themselves, has been geared to the making of tactical moves, carried out on occasions when he has managed to take advantage of the opportunity offered him by the geopolitical problem typifying the Middle East, which are completely alien to and dissociated from the purposes for which OPEC was created. On those occasions, he has appeared as the resplendent leader, and defender of the cause which in the past motivated men of the stature of Juan Pablo Perez Alfonzo and Abdullah H. Tariki, and has succeeded in overpowering those who dream of imitating his thousand-and-one-faceted Saudi idiosyncrasy.

After completing his mission and succeeding in meeting the goals of the regional geopolitics, he retires to his quarters and begins maneuvering to give way to the pressure against OPEC which he has negotiated and accepted as compensation.

If anyone has used OPEC as a political weapon to settle the conflicts typical of the Middle East, it has been Yamani; and when he attains his goals, he clearly opposes making the price of hydrocarbons reach the cost of producing the energy generated from other alternate sources, which should be an immediate objective of OPEC, not because it is in the interest of the producing countries to become replete with petrodollars, but because it is time to forestall the apocalyptic crisis that is hovering over all mankind, if the squandering of a resource that is becoming irretrievably depleted continues. Whereas, in some of the OPEC member nations, there is retained a latent spirit of achieving and maintaining the unity which would lend the entity strength with which to resist the onslaughts of its foes and to defend the lofty goals which prompted its creation, Mr Yamani interprets and sells the theory that such unity is confined only to the prices that he wants to set, because he has been so instructed in the bilateral agreements which he has concluded behind the back of OPEC, conceding other purposes which are different from, alien to and dissociated from the principles of this important entity. Thus, without shame of any kind, he has been setting the ceiling on the prices which he has considered as a unitary goal, throwing into the abundance of the world market a meager million additional barrels per day, a decision which has not even been marked by the noble intention of mitigating the greed for energy of the squanderers, but rather, and this is the most serious and criminal aspect, in order to allow stocks to be stored and accumulated so as to create an over-supply that would later turn like a boomerang against the price structure of hydrocarbons. With this revolutionary feat, Yamani has assumed the right to turn over to the devil the interests and wealth, not only of the other peoples accompanying him in OPEC, but also of the people of Saudi Arabia themselves, who are the real owners of that million additional barrels per day which the feudal lord has ordered drained from the deposits where Allah had put them for better purposes and for the fortune of his own people, and where they are doing no harm to anyone. He has, rather, transferred that wealth to other artificial recipients, located beyond their borders, giving it to those who would use it to bombard the interest of the oil producing countries.

The unity of OPEC does not depend solely on the setting of a common price, as Yamani and his loudspeakers are trying to make us believe, because that is not feasible in the present international oil situation. That unity is far less likely to be achieved, particularly if it related to a single price that Yamani's strategy "gets wind of." The unity of views which should exist, and in this regard we agree with what Leonardo Montiel Ortega has stated on several occasions, need not necessarily coincide with the unification of prices, which does not always mean nor constitute a protection thereof. But, in order to achieve this so much desired unity of views, it will be necessary to adhere to the propositions and principles which gave rise to OPEC. The fact is that, in order to regain the spirit once inspired by the genius of Juan Pablo Perez Alfonzo, OPEC must be relieved of the detrimental and alien burdens that Mr Yamani has brought into it. Herein, Venezuela has the opportunity to revive the militant action which marked it in the past and which granted it the role of director and guide that it assumed when it was up to Juan Pablo Perez Alfonzo and Hugo Perez La Salvia to act. That role was later inexplicably abandoned and replaced with a "laissez faire, laissez passer" attitude, without any more significance than that involved in taking a faded, conciliatory position which, without any definition, has become the inveterate conduct maintained since the OPEC conference held in Vienna in September 1975, of unfortunate memory.

If Mr Yamani wants to arbitrarily take over a wealth that does not belong to him, that will be a problem for his conscience and for the settlement of accounts that the people of Saudi Arabia will have to make sooner or later, as the dialectics of history have proven in instances of similar depredation. But it is not for us to follow him because, in the defense of our own interests, we have found complete identification and coincidence in the common interest which the very existence of OPEC demands.

OPEC constitutes a very important and beautiful instrument of redemption, too much so to be buried in the ditch that Yamani has been digging for 5 years. The celebration of the 20th anniversary of its creation may be a propitious occasion to renew the faith in its principles and to give it a turn of the helm to resume the direction charted for it by its illustrious founders. We know that, in order to do this, it will be necessary to hold a crusade and to start a difficult endeavor, for which a large amount of courage will have to be mustered. But a thinking and rational courage, because, in all fairness, we are aided by reason which we can use to counter Mr Yamani's confusion. A courage nurtured with justice and dignity, such as that practiced by Hugo Perez La Salvia, when it was up to him to take up the cause bequeathed to him by Juan Pablo Perez Alfonzo, whose ashes scattered over the open sea did not mean burial, but rather symbolize and give notice that his endeavor and his effort can never be the object of the "gravedigger of OPEC."

2909
CSO: 3010

EDITORIAL CONDEMNS CAP ROLE IN CUBAN SABOTAGE CASE

Caracas RESUMEN in Spanish 12 Oct 80 pp 2-4

[Editorial by J.O.: "The Case of the 'Cuban Plane': Determinations and Warnings"]

[Text] In order to analyze the "case of the Cuban plane" it is essential that we first make some conceptual determinations in an attempt to put the difficult matter in an ethical, legal and logical context, the parameters of which must be used to evaluate the known facts comprising it, and the political consequences stemming from the entire affair.

Let us observe: The first determination is that this analysis must begin with the most absolute repudiation of the crime of having blown up an unarmed civil aircraft with 73 persons aboard. The crime is horrendous, repugnant and abominable. Those who have tried to see in it an "act of war" jusified by the implacable nature of the Cuban tyranny overlook the fact that even war has laws, and even though dying and killing are inherent in war, mankind has typified "war crimes," with the interpretation that, even though killing in combat is considered lawful, the cowardly murder of children, old people and unarmed civilians, and indiscriminate acts of violence or terrorism against hospitals or nonmilitary civilian targets, are not war, but crimes. The blowing up of the Cuban plane, even if one accepts the "war" theory, which is certainly not the case, is a war crime.

The second determination is that the incident cannot be included within the inevitable polarization of the enemies of the so-called "Cuban revolution" and those who explain, justify or defend it in a cold, lukewarm or heated fashion. The argument that, in Marxist dialectics and, especially, the practice of disregard for human life and dignity of the totalitarian regimes, crimes have been perpetrated which are as horrendous as the blowing up of the Cuban Airline Enterprise plane, or more so, cannot explain that abominable, cowardly collective murder of 73 persons, without succumbing to a paradoxical defense of fascism or its like. From an ethical and political standpoint, they are only different versions of an essentially identical model.

Now that these determinations have been made, we must give some warnings to prevent the reasoning process from falling into the countless traps that outward appearances, illusions and emotions place in the path of a dispassionate, logical analysis of this incident. The first warning is that we are confronted with an incident wherein the participants are consubstantially spurious and congenitally deceptive, and that the very repugnant nature of the incident in which they are involved, and of its presumed or alleged perpetrators, leads them to lie, distort, exaggerate, conceal and overrate to such an extent that each and every one of their words must be gaged and compared with the facts to which they relate, without being concerned nor wasting much time calibrating the sincerity of the moral indignation on which they claim to have based their action, nor the values that they claim to defend.

Who are the actors in this drama? What degree of credibility can be given to their statements? Let us see:

The first actor is Prime Minister Fidel Castro. He heads the government of the country of which the victimized plane and the majority of the passengers who were killed are natives. His moral authority to express indignation at the crime is null, although his reason may be valid and his right unquestionable. Therefore, we must suspect that his lack of moral scruples for the same or similar crimes might prompt him to use the valid reasons and rights of his protest for purposes other than those of the justice sought for those who appear to be the presumable perpetrators of the act. The crime seeks a guilty person at any price. In the case of Castro, it is not the justice of punishing the guilty person that matters, but rather the price, and a guilty person, whoever it may be. And if it is an enemy of his, all the better. Hence, the universal indignation at the repugnant crime could serve as a cloak for committing an additional crime, such as punishing someone who is not to blame, only because it suits Castro to do so.

The second actor in the drama is the heterogenous and almost incomprehensible group that may be categorized with the general designation of "Cuban exiles." Therein, the adventurer is alongside the mystic, the sadist alongside the hero, and the mercentary alongside the altruist. And it is increasingly difficult to distinguish one from the other.

Desperation appears to have broken all moral barriers, and from the pact that has been formed there has emerged the most complicated, incomprehensible series of betrayals, double-dealing and assassinations which have been far more effective in eliminating the opposition to Castro, on the part of the enormous mass of Cubans living abroad, than anything Castro has been able to do to combat and neutralize them.

It is with these two actors, Castro and the Cuban "exile," that the President of the Republic of Venezuela, C.A. Perez, joined and mingled, before and during the incident of the Cuban plane. Hence, the third actor in this drama is C.A. Perez. His contradictory nature has prompted him to seriously compromise his government, his country and the Armed Forces, in a repulsive and monstrous incident, and to commit crimes to conceal a legally and politically reprehensible conduct. The actions and reactions of the first two actors, Castro and the exile, while not morally justifiable, are at least humanly and political understandable. The conduct of this third actor is not morally justifiable nor humanly or politically understandable. Therefore, his conduct must be examined in the light of an analysis of a personality that is psychopathic, and as such incoherent and inexplicable from a logical standpoint.

The Background

The facts confirm this. The most relevant of them is that the main suspect in the crime, and the person on who public attention has been directed with the most intensive rage, Dr Orlando Bosch, did not come to Venezuela in 1976 either clandestinely or on his own, but at the behest of C.A. Perez, who had him called to Nicaragua by his chief of personal security, Orlando Garcia, also a Cuban. In the course of these proceedings, this fact was fully proven by the CANTV [National Telephone Company of Venezuela] bills which show that the calls to Nicaragua from DISIP [Directorate of Intelligence and Prevention Services] and from Orlando Garcia's office were made to Bosch's telephone. Further background for this incident is a pact made with Bosch in 1974, after the explosion of two bombs in Caracas, one at the Venezuelan-Cuban Institute of Culture and the other at the Panamanian Embassy in Caracas. On that occasion, Bosch, who was in Caracas, was arrested by DISIP and, in exchange for his release and impunity for this incident, a pact was made whereby Bosch promised that his organization would not make any attacks on Venezuelan soil, nor against Venezuelan property or citizens abroad. One notes here a "pact" similar to the type made by the North American "Mafia," and one perceives here the kind of duplicity that is typical of Perez; because the minister of interior, Luis Pinerua Ordaz was not informed of the "pact," and in good faith told the press that Bosch was neither under arrest nor in Venezuela. The fact that he was, and was also under arrest, was proven during the trial. He left Venezuela on 2 December 1974 with a forged Dominican passport with the name of "Luis Perez," which was supplied to him by his fellow countryman and favorite policeman of C.A. Perez, Orlando Garcia.

The call to Nicaragua 2 years later, in 1976, a few weeks before the attack on the Cuban Airline Enterprise plane, was precisely for the purpose of arranging an "expansion" of the area of "immunity" in the pact, to Panama, Colombia and Costa Rica, and a reconcentration of Bosch's terrorist activity in countries in which it suited Perez for it to take place.

But here the matter becomes complicated, divided, interconnected and involved in the same contradictions and paradoxes that are the essence of the multiple, pathological personality of Perez. With the second actor in this drama, the Cuban "exile," chief of "Division 54" of DISIP (maximum security-counterintelligence) was another Cuban, Ricardo Morales Navarrete, alias

"El Monki." Bosch did not want to come to Venezuela, because that individual was his mortal enemy. And he is, because in the past Morales Navarrete belonged to the same anti-Castro organization as Bosch, and it was with him that he had fired a bazooka at a Soviet ship anchored in the port of Miami. When the pair were arrested by the North American police, Morales Navarrete arranged for his release with the prosecutor, and, in exchange for this, served as a main witness for the 8-year sentence imposed on Bosch. So, Bosch spent 4 years in jail, and was released on bail for good behavior. With the passage of time, Bosch returned to his anti-Castro activity, and Morales Navarrete, through Orlando Garcia's auspices, landed in C.A. Perez' DISIP as top-ranking chief of an important division. Orlando Garcia himself is not without a background either. He was, among other things, the main actor in the abortive and irresponsible "Rupunini" episode in late 1969. All this prompted Bosch to fear coming to Caracas, a fear which he overcame when another Cuban entered upon the scene: Luis Posada Carriles who, in turn, had been a high-ranking official of DISIP during the previous government of Rafael Caldera, and who, after the change of government in 1973, had left and founded a private surveillance firm ("ICICA") in which the Venezuelan photographer, Hernan Ricardo, rendered services. It was with the backing of Posada Carriles that Bosch decided to come to Venezuela. On 8 September 1976 (a month before the crime involving the Cuban Airlines Enterprise plane), Orlando Bosch arrived in Venezuela. He came with a forged passport, and was received at Maiquetia with "VIP" treatment by Perez' police officials, Orlando Garcia and Ricardo Morales Navarrete. When the latter saw him, he said to him: "Let us leave everything in the past." Bosch did not reply. He greeted his friend, Luis Posada Carriles, and, shortly thereafter, they took off for Caracas on the freeway. Bosch stayed at the Anauco Hilton, at the expense of the Venezuelan Government. The next day, he was visited by DISIP officials. They gave him credentials in the name of "Luis Perez" to carry arms, and assigned him two vehicles for his personal use and that of his bodyguards. One of them was the photographer Hernan Ricardo.

The Events

The Capriles Network's photographer, Hernan Ricardo, was "helped" with occasional jobs done for his friend, Luis Posada Carriles, and with "operational photography" missions performed for DISIP. One of these missions was assigned to him in early October 1976. He was to travel to Trinidad and there board the Cuban Airlines Enterprise plane , and would make a landing, enroute from Guyana, to take photographs of some North Koreans who would be traveling to Havana. They were all experts in subversive guerrilla warfare. The Cuban Airlines Enterprise DC-8, carefully guarded the night before at the Georgetown airport, departed there at 0935 hours on the morning of 6 October, arriving in Trinidad at 1130 hours. No one got off, and no service was given to the plane. There, the Venezuelans Freddy Lugo and Hernan Ricardo boarded the plane, the latter with a forged passport.

The plane left Port-of-Spain and arrived at Barbados at 1225 hours. There, the Venezuelans got off. A few minutes after the plane had taken off, the pilot announced to the tower an explosion and smoke on board. With only a few miles to cover in its attempt to return, the plane crashed into the sea. Meanwhile, the Venezuelans were lodged in a hotel room for which they had made a reservation in Caracas. In the afternoon, they moved to another one, and, at night, boarded a BWIA plane and returned to Trinidad. The next day, they were arrested by the police in Port of Spain.

Where Should the Trial Be Held?

The mere fact that they had boarded the plane in Trinidad and left it in Barbados was sufficient to put the two Venezuelans at the very top of the list of suspects. The fact that Ricardo was a bodyguard for Bosch, an employee of Luis Posada Carriles, heightened the evidence considerably. Did Ricardo set the bomb in the plane's restroom? Meticulous tests conducted by British experts have proven unquestionably that the bomb exploded in the baggage compartment. And the Venezuelans never had access to it. This matter will continue to be discussed ad infinitum.

But what is important to stress now is another conduct, considerably more suspicious and far more obvious: the conduct of the President of the Republic of Venezuela, C.A. Perez and of the authorities under his command and influence. On the o[illegible], if anyone should know about Bosch's innocence, it was the DISIP itse[illegible], for which he worked. So, when the aforementioned evidence began to work against Bosch, and Ricardo's statements in Trinidad tended to incriminate him, the authorities of the Perez government protected Bosch, housed him as a privileged guest in the DISIP itself, and hired the services of a lawyer to defend him, in the event that he encountered problems with the justice system.

Meanwhile, Dr David Morales Bello, and the prosecutor in charge, Dr Victor Ortega Mendoza, traveled to Trinidad. As a result of these direct negotiations and those conducted by phone by C.A. Perez with Eric Williams and Fidel Castro, the Venezuelans being held in Trinidad were moved to Caracas. Why? This fact, inexplicable from the standpoint of international law, explains everything: Perez could not allow that trial to be held where it should have been held, in Barbados. The risk was enormous! If it were held in a place beyond his control, he would run the risk of having his grotesque and irresponsible duplicity exposed. Williams, for his part, would do what Castro asked him to do. This attitude is reasonable. After all, the crime had not been committed in Trinidad, nor did it affect the people of Trinidad, nor was the plane of that nationality. It was Castro to whom Williams acceded, and the latter acted thusly for two reasons. Because, although it was true that there were two suspects in custody in Trinidad, the main suspect, but also a really dangerous enemy, was in Caracas. Castro agreed to ask Williams to send the suspects to Caracas to be tried, if Perez would assure their conviction and that of Orlando Busch.

This was the pact that was made. And Bosch changed from being Perez' guest to being Perez' prisoner. The personages who acted from that time on are more than well known. They will appear again, and will show up in the "Carmona case," the "Sierra Nevada case," and all the cases on which the truculent personality of Perez casts its shadow. David Morales Bello and Otto Marin Gomez, Victor Ortega Mendoza and Judge Estaba Moreno; and, of course, the Cubans, Orlando Garcia and Morales Navarrete. The episode might perhaps have had a "happy" ending if it had not been for some obstacles: Despite the overwhelming circumstantial evidence, gradually, not only was it proven that the bomb was set by Ricardo, and that Bosch, who was at least the "intellectual" perpetrator, had nothing to do with that, but also the tests made and the meticulous review of the CU-455's flight route exonerated the "obvious" suspects from all blame. Prominent in this respect was the test made by a British office which proved that the bomb had not exploded where it had been thought, in the restroom, but rather in the baggage compartment. And Ricardo had not carried any luggage on his short flight, nor could he ever have had access to it. Thus, the mystery of the sabotaging or explosion of the plane was diverted from those on which it was focused at first to other areas obviously concerned about diverting attention toward "the guilty and the innocent." A few months ago, it was learned that Morales Navarrete had been arrested in Florida on charges of having been involved in drug smuggling on a huge scale. When he was jailed, "someone" paid a large bail for him. He had made it known that, if they abandoned him, he would talk. The one who paid the bail was Orlando Garcia. Orlando Garcia is the chief of C.A. Perez' personal bodyguards, today.

Abuse of Authority, Treason to the Nation and Other Things

If anything is clear in the case of the "Cuban plane" it is the gross violation of the law and of procedures. In the first and foremost place, the matter of jurisdiction is obvious. Venezuela has no jurisdiction to judge incidents related to the abominable crime of the terrorist attack on a Cuban plane, in which not even one Venezuelan was killed, and which took place under the unquestionable jurisdiction of Barbados. Why did a prominent attorney and member of the National Congress, accompanied by the prosecutor in charge, Ortega Mendoza, travel to Trinidad and secure the de facto transfer of the suspects in custody there? Were even the formal details required by international and internal law for extradition carried out? And, once here, the defects in procedure were so ridiculous and obvious that, in order to keep the records under control, they were removed from the common penal jurisdiction and taken to the military courts, after a visit, in broad daylight, made to Miraflores by Judge Estaba Moreno, who was, moreover, notoriously linked with the famous "tribe" of C.A. Perez' trusted attorney. The reasons for this change were obvious. Even under the control assumed by the fact that the trial would be conducted by Judge Estaba Moreno, what Bosch was saying bothered Perez, and some of his accusations were beginning to be believed and reprinted abroad. The MIAMI

HERALD sent three reporters to Caracas, and one of them recognized "Monki" Morales Navarrete as a CIA man. They were violently expelled from Venezuela. Subsequently, however, the TRINIDAD GUARDIAN published an editorial in which it asked Perez for an explanation of his pacts and ties with Bosch. It was then that Bosch was turned over to the military jurisdiction. There, at least, he could not talk, and it would be possible to guarantee Castro the results of the trial, as he had been promised on the night of 7 October. But matters became extended, complicated and prolonged. The year 1978 arrived. The country awoke to the "Carmona" case, which caught Morales Bello and the minister of justice on another "secret mission" in Washington. And, finally, December came and Perez was defeated, and had to give up the reins of power which he had exercised in such an irresponsible and arbitrary manner, compromising the country, its institutions, its justice system and its Armed Forces in a repugnant, monstrous incident, the assassination of 73 persons and the assassination of Venezuelan law and rights, to conceal what he might have had to do with that, in betraying Venezuela to a professed and confessed terrorist.

'...And Their Exercise Must Be Subject to Them'

Article 117 of the Constitution establishes a principle, a principle called that of "legality," the upholding of which determines whether a system and a government can be described as "democratic." This article reads as follows: "...The Constitution and the laws define the powers of the public authorities, and their exercise must be subject to them." What does this mean? "To define" is, as its etymology indicates, "de-finire," in other words, setting limits. This means that the public authorities cannot go beyond what the Constitution commands them and authorizes them to do. In other words, the president of the republic cannot do anything other than what the Constitution commands him to do, and he is only permitted to do what the Constitution and the laws allow him to do. And now we should ask, do the Constitution and the laws of the republic permit, command or authorize the president to make pacts with acknowledged terrorists? Does the Constitution authorize the president to make a pact with the autocrat of a totalitarian state on the results of a trial? Does the Constitution allow the president to force the republic's jurisdiction over an incident outside of the territory? Does his status as commander in chief of the Armed Forces authorize him to subject to the special jurisdiction of military justice a case completely outside of its venue? The records of the "Cuban plane" could answer all these questions, in a trial which should be started against C.A. Perez, for abuse of authority, treason to the nation and other crimes, if there were in Venezuela "a desire to settle this."

'Pepi'

"Pepi" began his political career as secretary of government for the state of Lara at the time of Betancourt. There, he enacted a simple, effective system. What the AD [Democratic Action] governor banned, he permitted.

What the AD governor punished, he pardoned. Anyone whom the AD governor would not receive, he called. What they did not achieve with the white, was obtained with the green. In this way, he made COPEI [Social Christian Party] powerful in Lara, and in this way he became regional strong man. Nothing is said about the effectiveness of a government which was ruled on the regional scale with this dichotomy. Now, in the Ministry of Interior, "Pepi" is still doing the same thing. But the office in Carmelitas is not the Government Residence of Barquisimeto. And what is at stake is nothing less than the COPEI candidacy for 1983. Hence, "Pepi" is not a minister, but rather a dispenser of favors. Hence,"Pepi" is not concerned about the security of the state (that is left to Remberto Uzcategui), but rather with the possibility of his candidacy. Hence, "Pepi" is a factor for serious upheaval in the government. "Pepi" arranged the policy on prices undoing everything that Minister Ugueto had done. Perez Rodriguez discusses the problem of sugar with "Pepi," not with the minister of agriculture. And so on, the examples are plentiful, until the latest one. On the afternoon of Monday, 29 September, the minister of interior "notified" the editors of the PTJ [Judicial Technical Police] operation. Hence, the PTJ appeared ridiculous; and "Pepi" virtually requested the resignation of his director. The seriousness of this incident needs no more colors to paint it; it paints itself.

2909
CSO: 3010

CORPOVEN TRAINING PROGRAM FOR 1980 OUTLINED

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 22 Aug 80 Sec 2 p 7

[Text] CORPOVEN, S.A., offered 546 courses during the first half of 1980 to satisfy the need to train its workers on the national level, it has been reported by Afra Escobar, supervisor of training for this subsidiary.

Those courses were attneded by 2,034 participants for a total of 117,910 man hours in the following areas: management, supervisory, technical, secretarial, administrative, languages and others. These areas are accorded priority within the complex of training activities carried out by CORPOVEN personnel.

In developing these activities, the firm had the decisive support of the Petroleum and Petrochemical Training Institute--INAPET--whose principle objective is to train petroleum and petrochemical workers at all levels, from the electrical solderer to the technical supervisor.

In those cases where INAPET is not equipped to satisfy the required training needs, the firm contracts courses directly with other institutions, in Venezuela as well as overseas, or gives internal courses using its own resources. Another important aspect is on-the-job training, which is done through rotating personnel in the various functions, special assignments, vacation replacements, etc.

All these activities are carried out in accordance with the Annual Training Program, as a result of the investigation of individual training needs in May of each year by the various supervisory levels. In that program priorities are pointed out which reflect the immediate requirements for optimal performance in current positions, as well as those requirements needed to comply with the development of medium and long-term career planning.

The training program developed by CORPOVEN covers the operational areas of Anaco, Barinas, El Palito, Maracaibo, Puerto La Cruz, Valencia and Caracas. It should be stressed that through technological agreements, CORPOVEN makes it possible for its professionals, especially in the fields of engineering and geology, to take advanced courses overseas which are not normally offered in this country. These people, on returning to the country, serve, in a way, as distribution agents, imparting the knowledge acquired to the personnel under their supervision.

Assistantship Program

In order to implement the National Assistantship Program, CORPOVEN has signed an agreement with the Education-Industry Foundation--FUNDEI. The number of assistantships granted is equal to 2 percent of the number of workers and is directed primarily at students who are in the last 2 years of study for technical careers; in this way the firm offers them the opportunity to add to their theoretical knowledge with practical experience, as required for their total training.

In addition CORPOVEN has its own Internal Assistanship Program, offered especially to university students, who must undergo a rigorous selection process.

8735
CSO: 3010

ALFONZO RAVARD DISCUSSES PDVSA FINANCIAL PICTURE

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 24 Aug 80 Sec 1 p 24

[Text] Consolidated gains reached 12.48 billion bolivars, compared with 6.621 billion in 1978.

State participation increased to 38.29 billion bolivars in 1979, compared with 24.564 billion in 1978.

Punto Fijo, 23 Aug (Special)--The financial reports of Venezuelan petroleum industry operations are very satisfactory, Gen Rafael Alfonzo Ravard, president of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc. [PDVSA], declared today.

General Alfonzo referred specifically to the 1979 results, saying that in that period there were substantial increases in state participation and in stocks of subsidiary firms, with the net result of an important increase in the nation's participation.

General Alfonzo said that the net consolidated profits of the industry in 1979 were 13.48 billion bolivars, compared with 6.221 [sic] billion in 1978. General Alfonzo thus gave a preview of some of the figures contained in the annual report of PDVSA, which is in the process of being printed.

He added that state participation increased 56 percent during the year 1979, from 24.564 billion bolivars in 1978 to 38.29 billion in 1979. The nation's particpation, through taxes, bonuses and the industry's profits, reached the record figure of 58.26 bolivars per barrel in 1979, surpassing by a large margin the 38.68 bolivars per barrel in 1978, that is, an increase of almost 20 bolivars.

When asked whether there are indeed increased operating costs in the Venezuelan petroleum industry, General Alfonzo responded as follows:

"PDVSA, aware of the need to maintain operating costs at the lowest possible level, has made constant efforts to insure adequate control of the same. However, it is inevitable that there should be a certain increase in costs as a result of various factors which are characteristic of the tasks confronting the national petroleum industry. There has been a steady expansion of operations, and it has been necessary to train the human cadres needed to face the levels of activity being planned and projected. Operations in traditional areas are increasingly difficult and require a greater effort due to the aging of the deposits; this means secondary recovery, repair and reconditioning work on wells which are becoming ever less productive. Finally, inflation, in Venezuela as in the countries where the special equipment required by the industry is purchased, contributes inevitably to these increasing costs."

With respect to investments, which in 1979 totaled 6.516 billion bolivars, Gen Rafael Alfonzo Ravard explained that these were earmarked for maintaining present operations as well as for creating the infrastructure and installations required in the future. He said that the sustained rate in investment figures and the industry's demonstrated capacity to invest efficiently permit the industry to predict that during 1980 investments will reach 8.5 billion bolivars. He added that this figure will increase progressively until it reaches a level of some 20 billion bolivars annually around the middle of the decade.

General Alfonzo also confirmed that PDVSA and its affiliates are continuing to develop their efforts to increase the purchase of materials and equipment manufactured here at home, which depends basically on whether these can meet the demands for the strict standards of quality, safety and trustworthiness which have always been traditional in the petroleum industry. Thus he emphasized that in spite of the complexity of the installations, more than 40 percent of the materials and equipment purchased for the projected changes in refining methods in Amuay and El Palito were manufactured by domestic firms.

"The petroleum industry is devoting increasing efforts to giving technological support to Venezuelan industries in their manufacturing process as well as in administrative matters, so that our national industry may fulfill two basic, unavoidable conditions: the goods and services that the petroleum industry requires must meet the conditions for quality adequately, and they must be available within the required periods," General Alfonzo warned.

The president of PDVSA declared that this firm, knowing the industrial development policy advocated by the national government, and in view of the development projects planned for its own subsidiary firms, encourages and performs an evaluation of national industry in those areas which affect the operations of the petroleum industry, for the purposes of ascertaining its technical capacity, promoting the manufacture of goods to the maximum degree and demanding that these goods be manufactured according to recognized standards.

He indicated that consequently, from the end of 1978 to the end of 1979, the following assessments were made:

Evaluation of the national metalworking industry, in August, 1978; soldered pipe plants, October, 1978; Venezuelan naval industry, March 1979; evaluation of the quality of valves manufactured in our country, May, 1979; the fire-proofing materials industry, July, 1979; the insulation industry, August, 1979; the manufacture of galvanic anodes for cathode safety, August, 1979; and a compendium of evaluations of manufacturers of goods for the petroleum industry, October, 1979.

The result of this research was delivered to the Ministry of Energy and Mines and to the Venezuelan Council for Industrial Standards (COVENIN), while at the same time, the individual firms evaluated were also informed of the outcome.

Finally he stated PDVSA's intention to announce--with enough lead time--to interested sectors the plans and programs which it proposes to carry out, in order to give those who wish to join in this effort actively, including all Venezuelans, the opportunity to participate.

8735
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

EXPLORATORY DRILLING IN ZULIA--An exploratory well seeking new hydrocarbon deposits is being drilled by MARAVEN, S.A., in the Los Manueles field in Colon District in the state of Zulia "to evaluate the petroleum potential of sediments of the cretaceous layer," as announced by geologist Jose Matos, superintendent of geology of the Production Operations Division of the firm. Los Manueles, Las Cruces and West Tarra are the three hydrocarbon production centers operated by MARAVEN, S.A., a subsidiary of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc., in the southwestern part of Zulia State. Well CM-45 has been drilled to facilitate investigation of the possible presence of hydrocarbons in a geologic structure which has been identified through samples and seismic interpretations previously made by the firm's technicians. Matos explained that the chief purpose is to evaluate the petroleum potential of the cretaceous sediments, in which it is expected there will be drilling to a depth of 10,152 feet (3,094 meters). "In well CM-45 we plan to reach a final depth of 14,300 feet (4,360 meters). The drilling of this well is extremely important, since if it turns out to be productive, we will be able to increase our hydrocarbon reserves. In addition, the future program of drilling development in the Los Manueles field depends on the results obtained." The cost of drilling exploratory well CM-45 has been estimated at 18 million bolivars. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 27 Aug 80 Sec 2 p 23] 8735

CARDON REFINERY PRODUCTION--Punto Fijo, 23 Aug (Special)--A total of 956,360 cases of twenty-four 1-liter cans each of automotive lubricant was produced by the packing plant of Maraven's Cardon Refinery during the period January-July 1980, representing a monthly average of 159,393 cases. Likewise, Cardon produced 138,186 19-liter pans of oils and 81,704 210-liter drums, representing monthly averages of 23,039 and 13,617 units respectively. A technical report also reveals that the Cardon Refinery produced 33,800 cubic meters of lubricating oil for bulk shipment. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 24 Aug 80 Sec 2 p 4] 8753

ANTI-CASTRO CONGRESS--Caracas, 8 Oct (AFP)--Anti-Castro leader Hubert Matos will attend a congress that Cuban exiles will hold here from 17 to 19 October on behalf of "an independent and democratic Cuba," one of the organizers of the event announced today. The congress is being sponsored by the communities of exiles in Caracas and seven other Venezuelan cities, several of which were recently visited by Matos' son, whose name is the same. The congress, it was announced here, seeks "to make a responsible effort to analyze and reflect on Cuba's problems," while studying initiatives aimed at "the immediate release of political prisoners." Soviet dissident Vladimir Bukovsky may also attend. The anti-Castro event is being held here at a time when relations between Fidel Castro's regime and that of Social Christian Luis Herrera Campins are at their coldest, practically on the verge of a total break. [Excerpt] [PA101329 Paris AFP in Spanish 2326 GMT 8 Oct 80]

END

CSO: 3010

JPRS 76724

30 October 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2208

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76724

30 October 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2208

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Controversy Over Haitians in Dominican Republic Continues
(Various sources, various dates)..... 1

Status of Exiles Described, by Juan Baez
Illegal Trade With Haiti
Haitians Illegally in Dwellings, by Tulio Navarrete

Savage Treatment of Salvadorans in Mexican Jails Denounced
(EL MUNDO, 29 Sep 80)..... 5

ARGENTINA

Daily Scores Government Plan on Political Activities
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 12 Oct 80)..... 7

BOLIVIA

Editorial Views Potential of True Peasant Integration
(Editorial; EL DIARIO, 24 Aug 80)..... 9

Paper Underscores Priorities in Peasant Sector
(Editorial; PRESENCIA, 4 Sep 80)..... 11

Critical Points in Mining Industry Outlined
(Adolfo Linares; PRESENCIA, 4 Sep 80)..... 13

BRAZIL

Press Comments on U.S. Presidential Elections
(Various sources, various dates)..... 17

'JORNAL DO BRASIL' Editorial
Effects of Elections, Editorial

Poll Reveals Decline in Prestige of Governors
(Various sources, 1 Oct 80)..... 21

Disapproval Ratings Given
Editorial Comments on Poll

UNE Demonstrates in NEC; To Hold Congress in October
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, various dates)..... 25

Student Demonstration
UNE Meeting
PP Repudiates Violence

Election Proceedings for Student Leaders Criticized
(FOLHA DE SAO PAULO, 24, 30 Sep 80)..... 28

Creation of Slates Scored
Viracao Slate Elected

Businessmen Favor Political Democratization, Blast Terrorism
(JORNAL DO BRASIL, 30 Sep 80)..... 33

OSI Denies Responsibility for Minas Bombings
(O GLOBO, 3, 12 Sep 80)..... 37

PMDB Councilman Arrested
Conegundes Denies Participation

BRASPETRO Negotiating Petroleum Prospecting With PRC
(Gerardo Mello Mourao; FOLHA DE SAO PAULO, 20 Sep 80) ... 43

EMBRAER To Become One of World's Largest Companies
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 23 Sep 80)..... 45

CHILE

Orlando Millas Sees Plebiscite as Negative for Pinochet
(Orlando Millas; TRIBUNA POPULAR, 26 Sep-2 Oct 80)..... 47

COLOMBIA

Ambassador Resigns To Enter Presidential Race
(EL TIEMPO, 26 Aug 80)..... 49

Presidential Hopeful's Candidacies Announced
(Various sources, 13, 28 Aug 80)..... 51

Liberal Hopeful, by Carlos J. Gonzalez
Conservative Hopeful, by Carlos Murcia

Heavy Investments in Mineral Prospecting Planned
(EL SIGLO, 13 Aug 80)..... 54

Uranium Deposit Found in Small Town in Caldas
(German Manga; EL TIEMPO, 29 Aug 80)..... 55

Periodic Gasoline Price Rises Foreseen
(Fernando Barrero; EL TIEMPO, 13 Sep 80)..... 60

El Cerrejon Coal Prospects Discussed
(Various sources, various dates)..... 63

World's Largest Coal Mine, by Fernando Barrero
A Hope or a Fraud, by Cecilia Rodriquez Maya

CUBA

Alarcon on Cuba's UN Stand on Puerto Rico
(Ricardo Alarcon Interview; VERDE OLIVO, 7 Sep 80)..... 71

'Imperialism' Seen as 'Chronic Decomposition'
(Osvaldo Ortega Nejme; CON LA GUARDIA EN ALTO, Jul 80)... 74

Cooperation Activities in Ethiopia Reported
(BOHEMIA, 12 Sep 80)..... 77

Guinean Envoy Hails Relation With Country
(Raoul Conde Interview; BOHEMIA, 12 Sep 80)..... 79

Western Army Prepares for New Training Year
(Lesmes La Rosa; VERDE OLIVO, 7 Sep 80)..... 82

FAR Enterprise Emulation Review Meeting Held
(VERDE OLIVO, 14 Sep 80)..... 85

Preparations for Cuban-Soviet Space Flight Noted
(GRANMA, 20 Sep 80)..... 87

Kubasov, Aksenov Interviewed
Final Days Before Liftoff, by Juan Marrero
Final Countdown, by Juan Marrero
Youth Organization Hails Flight

Party Leader Discusses Activities in Havana Province
(Luis Alvarez de la Nuez; BOHEMIA, 19 Sep 80)..... 94

Socialist Emulation as Incentive Discussed
(Jorge Luis Fillu; JUVENTUD TECNICA, May-Jun 80)..... 105

Child Discipline Measures To Correct Misbehavior
(JUVENTUD TECNICA, May-Jun 80)..... 109

Past Five-Year Education Program Results Noted
(Georgina Jimenez; GRANMA, 5 Sep 80)..... 114

Noncompliance With Labor Laws Causes Problems
(Editorial; TRABAJADORES, 6 Sep 80)..... 127

New Wage Guidelines for Teachers Issued
(TRABAJADORES, 9 Sep 80)..... 130

Briefs
Cubana Sabotage Anniversary 135
Che Guevara Anniversary 135
Envoy to Trinidad, Tobago 135
Envoy to Jordan 135
Nicaraguan Envoy Presents Credentials 136
Emulation Evaluation 136
Navy Party Conference 136
National Radio Meeting 136
CTC Information Meeting 136
Almeida in Santiago 137
Agricultural-Livestock Workers Day 137
Sugar Harvest Preparations 137
Port Workers Accomplishments 137
Manzanillo Modern Hospital 137
'GRANMA' Party Meeting 138
ICAP Independence Celebration 138
Canary-Cuba Friendship Group Farewell 138
OCLAE Medical Team in Nicaragua 138

EL SALVADOR

ANEP Fears Small Businesses Threatened by Multinationals
(EL MUNDO, 30 Sep 80)..... 139

GUYANA

New Constitutional Arrangements for Elections
(George Baird; SUNDAY CHRONICLE, 5 Oct 80)..... 141

NICARAGUA

Wheelock Reviews Anti-Somoza Struggle
(Jaime Wheelock; BARRICADA, 3 Sep 80)..... 143

Ramirez' Negative Statement on CELAM Scored
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 30 Sep 80)..... 147

Latin American Anticommunist Congress Scored as Menacing
(Irene Selser; EL NUEVO DIARIO, 30 Sep 80)..... 149

Need for Positive Revolutionary Atmosphere Stressed
(Pedro Chamorro; LA PRENSA, 24 Sep 80)..... 153

Alarm Expressed Over Country's Increasing Militarization
(Felix Pedro Espinosa; LA PRENSA, 26 Sep 80)..... 155

Victories Over Counterrevolutionaries Applauded
(Editorial; BARRICADA, 24 Sep 80)..... 157

FSLN Sums Up Results of Dialogues With Professionals
(EL NUEVO DIARIO, 25 Sep 80)..... 159

Industry Minister Explains Problems, Proposes Solutions
(LA PRENSA, 1 Sep 80)..... 162

PARAGUAY

Journalist Chides State Petroleum Enterprise
(Alcibiades Gonzalez Delvalle; ABC COLOR, 12 Oct 80)..... 165

Columnist Deplores Handling of Oil Price Increase
(Luis Alberto Mauro; ABC COLOR, 11 Oct 80)..... 167

PERU

Labor Minister Accuses Unions of Political Maneuvering
(EL COMERCIO, 18 Sep 80)..... 169

Commission Proposed To Alleviate Labor Problems
(Nemesio Rodriguez; EL CORREO, 14 Sep 80)..... 171

Million Man-Hours Lost by Strikes
(EL COMERCIO, 11 Sep 80)..... 174

Three Labor Unions Set Up Democratic Trade Union Front
(EXPRESO, 3 Oct 80)..... 176

Briefs
Strike in Universities 177
University Demands 177

SURINAME

Conditions After Government Coup Scrutinized
(Johan Van Den Bossche; ELSEVIERS WEEKBLAD, 27 Sep 80)... 178

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Briefs
Sugar Crop Disaster 185

VENEZUELA

Large CTV Holdings, Leadership Structure Analyzed
(Jose Suarez-Nunez; RESUMEN, 5 Oct 80)..... 186

Carlos Andres Perez' Political Past, Future Discussed
(BOHEMIA, 29 Sep-5 Oct 80)..... 202

Calderon Berti Discusses 1981-85 Energy Policy
(Cayetano Ramirez; EL NACIONAL, 26 Sep 80)..... 209

Briefs
Gas Discovered off Los Testigos 214
San Roque Refinery 214
Light Oil Discovered in Guarico 215
ALCASA Aluminum Production 215
Presumed Guerrilla Attack 215
Douglas Bravo Arrested in Paris 216

CONTROVERSY OVER HAITIANS IN DOMINICAN REPUBLIC CONTINUES

Status of Exiles Described

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 28 Sep 80 p 5

[Article by Juan Baez]

[Text] The chairman of the Chamber of Deputies Foreign Relations Committee denied that the committee is considering a bill to naturalize the Haitians who reside in the country.

Fulgencio Espinal, denying the allegation, said that the problem of Haitian emigration is an open case, to be determined by the Chamber of Deputies, due to concern for the fate of the anti-Duvalier leaders in exile and the illegal entry of Haitians across the border.

The congressman explained that for that reason the committee which he chairs called the leaders of the Democratic Movement for Haitian Liberation (MODELH) and the Jean Henri Dunant Refugee Center, in response to a petition by them that "we listen to the humanitarian reasons that should influence any legislative decision concerning this thorny issue."

Espinal stated that at no time had the Haitian exile leaders residing in the country, Luis Eugene Athis and Geral Lafontaine, put forth any written bill or orally implied that Dominican nationality should be recognized for Haitian nationals.

Espinal did not reveal by what means it was reported that the bill was being considered by the Chamber of Deputies Foreign Relations Committee.

In the first report published regarding the bill, in ULTIMA HORA, it was not stated that the bill was in that committee.

"The situation of Haitian immigration to our country is more complex," he said, referring to those who believe that the problem could be solved by a mass expatriation of those people to the eastern portion of the island.

The congressman expressed the opinion that the problem should be studied in depth to differentiate the groups involved: refugees, sugarcane cutters and exiles, "because there are three different categories, with political and social implications that should be taken into consideration in any decision regarding each case in particular.

"Under no circumstances can we agree to returning the refugees and exiles, who are political dissidents of the Duvalier dictatorship, to their country. That would mean turning them over to the clutches of the dictatorship, which runs counter to our position as a democratic government," he indicated.

He feels that because of the complicated nature of the problem, the Standing Committee on Foreign Relations of the Chamber of Deputies decided to consult with all interested parties in order to arrive at a just and responsible decision in any legislation that may be recommended to the body as a whole.

He added: "We should point out that the basic concern of our committee is for scrupulous respect for the asylum convention by national authorities; the Dominican Republic is a signatory of that convention. The deportation of Haitian leaders such as Paul Denis and Robert Moise should not be repeated."

Furthermore, Espinal reported that the committee had rejected a proposal to use the hiring of cane cutting braceros to leave hundreds of Haitian citizens in the country with no legal rights to be here.

Along those lines, the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD) deputy asserted that the committee will call the authorities of the National Migration Office, the State Sugar Council and the National Border Commission "to confront a situation which is causing serious problems for territorial and border security."

A report which appeared yesterday in an evening publication indicated that Dominican nationality would be granted to all undocumented Haitian nationals who are now residing in the country, in accordance with a bill which the report said would be introduced before the Chamber of Deputies.

According to that report, the bill was written or instructions from the Jean Henri Dunant Haitian Refugee Center.

Illegal Trade With Haiti

Santo Domingo EL NACIONAL in Spanish 29 Sep 80 p 7

[Text] A leader of the Antireelection Democratic Integration Movement (MIDA) yesterday accused unscrupulous businessmen of exporting illegally more than 20 basic commodities to Haiti, "which for that reason are in short supply on the domestic market."

Alfredo Mota Ruiz, first vice president of the party headed by Francisco Augusto Lora, stated that according to reports to that organization, goods such as chickens, tomato sauce, sugar, propane gas and salt are being exported to Haiti.

He pointed out that consequently these products are in short supply on the domestic market.

The political leader called upon the president of the republic to order the National Border Council to investigate the matter and determine whether the report is true.

He said that the businessmen who are engaged in this activity "are doing so because in that country there is a general shortage of the main items of daily consumption, and because more money can be obtained for them; payment is made in foreign currency, that is, dollars,"

These statements were made by Mota Ruiz on the program "Enfoque Nacional" [National Focus] which is broadcast by La Voz del Tropico every Saturday.

Mota Ruiz indicated that many government officials with links to the marketing of these consumer goods are aware of this situation.

On another subject, the first vice president of the MIDA stated that the Senate should demand that the State Sugar Council present a report on how that organization spent $70 million of the $90 million which it obtained in the form of loans.

He said that until now the State Sugar Council has not revealed the use that was made of the $70 million that was advanced on the $90 million.

He pointed out that the council does not need the approval of the $90 million, "because with the high prices that sugar is getting on the international markets, that institution can finance the harvest based on the production it will have this year."

He added that "it should stop spending so much money on publicity to get the Senate to approve the loan, because in the final analysis that money is coming from the Dominican people."

Haitians Illegally in Dwellings

Santo Domingo EL CARIBE in Spanish 1 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Tulio Navarrete]

[Text] The assistant director of the National Housing Institute (INVI) stated yesterday that the National Police were asked "to evict and imprison several Haitian families" that are occupying "some" of the homes in the Juan Pablo Duarte housing complex.

Manuel Salvador Gautier provided EL CARIBE with this information after confirming a report that groups of Haitians for some time have been occupying part of the housing development located to the northeast of the capital.

Yesterday morning the INVI assistant director was asked whether that institution was aware that Haitians had been illegally occupying homes in the project.

Gautier said that he was unaware that the Haitians were living there, but that he would order an investigation "immediately."

Gautier was interviewed when attempts to locate the head of the agency, Frida Aybar de Sanabia, were unsuccessful. He assured the reporter that the report would be investigated "as soon as possible."

Afterwards the official made a statement to the effect that the report had been confirmed by the director of the INVI Department of Placement and Supervision, Salvador Pou. The latter went to the project in the company of other individuals to verify it.

"At the project, we found several families occupying some apartments," indicated Gautier.

He stated that Pou reported that the police at the closest station were notified "to evict and imprison the Haitians."

However, at the Juan Pablo Duarte station on Avenida Las Americas, the closest to the housing project, it was claimed that no such request was received.

The same thing happened when EL CARIBE tried to determine the veracity of the report at other National Police stations.

The Juan Pablo Duarte project has about 800 individual units, multifamily dwellings and duplex homes.

Its construction was begun at the end of the administration of former President Joaquin Balaguer.

Although INVI maintains that part of the housing could be ready for use by the end of this year, the project still has no paved streets or other services.

The cost of the project is RD $11,101,900.00, according to Gautier.

The official stated that as of the beginning of this year, a total of RD $7.6 million had been invested.

8926
CSO: 3010

SAVAGE TREATMENT OF SALVADORANS IN MEXICAN JAILS DENOUNCED

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 29 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] Quezaltepeque, 29 Sep--Residents of this city who left the country in order to go to the United States and for various reasons were unsuccessful, have told of the desperate situation of many Salvadorans in Mexican jails, where they have ended up after trying to use Mexico as a passageway to the United States.

The informants claim that the Matamoros Penal Center in the state of Tamaulipas, for example, is overflowing with Salvadorans. To date, no Salvadoran authority has given any indication of interest in their situation. They have been completely abandoned to their fate, which consists of multiple abuses.

The Quezaltepeque residents state that they managed to return to El Salvador after suffering hardships on the trip there and back. They claim that the Salvadorans who had the misfortune to fall into the hands of the Mexicans in the above-mentioned place were stripped of their money and documents by the Federal Judicial Police, so that the police could accuse them of being undocumented aliens trying to enter the United States illegally across the Mexican border.

"Our fellow countrymen," say the travelers who left this place, "have been imprisoned in these dungeons, the most revolting places in Mexico, where they are surrounded by rats and despicable creatures, such is the degree of filth in those cells." They add that once a week they are taken out into the sun so they won't get sick. At that time their jailers take advantage of the opportunity to shove them around, beat them and insult them with the most vulgar epithets. At night they sleep on the floor, which makes their lives even more miserable.

The informants go on to say that in the morning the Salvadorans are given the dirtiest and most disgusting tasks, not fit for human beings. If they make an error, no matter how insignificant, the agents beat them and put them in solitary confinement for long periods of time.

The Salvadorans express their regret that the Mexican authorities are so brutal, and that they do not have penitentiary systems that meet modern civilized standards. "We cannot understand," they add, "how the Mexicans, who have always said they have a special affection for this country, can try to exterminate the Salvadorans who are in that country's jails."

Finally, the Salvadorans who have reached Quezaltepeque urge the Revolutionary Government Junta and the Ministry of Foreign Relations to intercede with the Mexican Government to lift the burden off the shoulders of our countrymen.

8926
CSO: 3010

DAILY SCORES GOVERNMENT PLAN ON POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

PY142024 Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 12 Oct 80 p 1, Section 2

[Editorial: "Restriction to Political Activity"]

[Text] It has been reported that members of the Radical Civic Union [UCR] met at Cruz Del Eje, a town in Cordoba Province, last Sunday to celebrate the birthday of former president Arturo Illia. On that occasion, several persons gave speeches on the current situation of the country. It was also reported that the meeting was held very secretly, since the provincial government had previously denied authorization to hold it at another place.

It is obviously unpardonable that a fraternal meeting of citizens who share the same political ideas has had to be held clandestinely, thus facing the risks of violating regulations that are in force. In times of institutional normalcy, the official ban on private or political meetings would have appeared incredible, particularly if such a meeting were held to honor, as in this case, a person who had been a wise and patriotic president, despite unavoidable disagreements.

Events like this and others, which have led to the application of regulations restricting the freedom of assembly, reveal a situation which contributes nothing to the purpose of the institutional normalization of the country, and least of all when official circles call on the public to cooperate in such a hard and delicate task.

Some justification could be recognized for many of the preventive measures adopted during the early days of the current government, especially those designed to counteract guerrilla activities and prevent those responsible for the chaos from persisting in their ignoble deeds. It seems unreasonable, however, that the precautions which have been taken in relation to party activities should be maintained with the rigor of the early days, over 4 years after the institutional change. During that long time, civic groups have been forbidden to exercise almost all the rights granted them by the constitution. They cannot hold private or public meetings because there is an official regulation which expressly bans them. The internal life of the parties is limited to watching over and maintaining their properties, without the possibility of renewing their leaders, holding congresses, publishing newspapers or promoting debates on serious problems which afflict the country. Some political statements have been published, but not as official pronouncements by the parties but rather by the members who dare to sign them.

The development of a public conscience on big Argentine problems is hindered by such restrictions. The same thing happens with the development of skills among the citizens to hold government posts. Under these conditions, a political dialogue with unclear purpose has been initiated where persons with a known or unknown public career are invited to express their opinions under ambiguous conditions. Anyway, how could these people transmit to government officials the points of view of their respective political groups if the latter are deprived of the right to meet and consult the opinion of their members?

The right to meet, which the constitution does not expressly state because it is a right inherent in the rights to expression and association for useful purposes, has become a dead letter in Argentine political life, precisely when it is most needed to exchange ideas and clarify them through debate and public confrontation. There has been no lack of official encouragements of political parties to renew their methods, programs and leaders. The question arises if any kind of renewal can be achieved, while the parties are frozen.

The limitation of activities theoretically applies to political groups and labor unions. It is unfortunate that restrictions have been particularly applied to the former, since it is clearly seen that labor union leaders, who do not disguise their ideological leanings, can hold public and private meetings without fear, even meetings to reestablish organizations which were first intervened and then dissolved by official resolutions.

CSO: 3010

EDITORIAL VIEWS POTENTIAL OF TRUE PEASANT INTEGRATION

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 24 Aug 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Peasant Integration"]

[Text] Much is said of the integration of the peasant into the national life. In fact, the peasant is within that life, but he somehow does not participate consciously, and his presence is only visible through the action of third parties or factors of a political nature. Basically, the peasant is alienated from economic life, for example, and along with it, in everything he does, from the country's activities. This is an absolutely negative fact, if we take into account the numerical superiority of the indigenous population in Bolivia, a difference which will remain for many more years.

The Indian--the peasant, as he is called now--was lord and master of these lands. He had his own culture and an incomparable code of living, in which lying, stealing and laziness were major ills for that society. That reality alone gives an indication of the high degree of morality of civilization prior to the conquest and the splendor which must have ruled over it. The arrival of the Spaniards destroyed it all. The Indian was morally and materially dispossessed. His lands were taken away, his morals corrupted and his spirit subjected to a situation which was totally alien to him. Little by little the inhabitant of these lands was converted into a true pariah. The subjection was so brutal that the American race in general shut itself up in a great silence, imitating the defects of its conquerors and gradually degenerating to the extreme of deserving the worst labels for its human condition.

The advent of the republic in no way changed that situation. Independence was achieved, improving the situation of the mestizos, but the Indian passed to another state of dependency, much more abject than the previous one. Slavery was its chief characteristic, a system in which not only did the Indian work the owner's land, but he had to serve him in domestic tasks, an obligation which extended to the other members of his family. His reward was insufficient food, and corporal punishment was the rule.

That brown-skinned majority remained static until the Chaco War. It was during that dispute that a lacerating national reality became obvious. Pushed toward the trenches with no precise notion of why he was going to war, the Indian began, little by little, to gain a sense of fatherland, of duty, and he became a strong soldier, mingling his blood with that of people of other social levels. From this came the stage of vindication for the peasant, under the encouragement of men who had begun to understand his needs. The result of this was agrarian reform, whose greatest virtue was the abolition of slavery and the elevation of the Indian to the category of citizen, although it did not create the actual conditions necessary for this. On the contrary, political elements exchanged personal for political servitude, and from that time on, the peasant was dragged along under improvised leadership and sometimes subverted with material rewards of one kind or another for his support.

Today, when one speaks of creating new conditions in national life, it is indispensable to take, as a point of departure, the true integration of the Indian into national life, without political, sectarian or social conditions. That great mass, which basically has great human potential, must be educated and led to its total liberation under irreproachable ethical standards and highly patriotic motivation. The redeemed peasant population can easily become one of the great factors in Bolivia's potential. For this we must rid the field of false leaders, of unscrupulous men who traffic with the peasants. These people, who from time to time change their ideology or support for certain political persons, are the ones who have harmed the peasant most. Peasant organization must be allowed, but without such traffickers. At the same time, the Indian must receive an adequate education, unbiased justice and opportunities for work. Thus we will truly integrate the peasant.

8735
CSO: 3010

PAPER UNDERSCORES PRIORITIES IN PEASANT SECTOR

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 4 Sep 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Peasant Credit"]

[Text] There is something which is continually repeated: Bolivia cannot take any decisive steps in its development as long as it does not succeed in raising that standard of living of its peasants in all areas. It cannot be said that a nation has progressed if more than half its population leads a life which is not in step with the advances of the present civilization.

Therefore there is a growing tendency to emphasize that the development of our peasants must occupy a priority place in all plans and programs being drawn up by the nation. One of the bases will have to be, doubtless, helping that worker--we refer chiefly to the small peasant producer--to have a higher economic income as a lever to improve in other areas.

Of course the solutions are not easy, given our general conditions, nor are they simplistic. Attention must be given to requirements in several areas: agricultural and livestock credit, select seed, the use of pesticides and fertilizers, the acquisition of adequate technology, which presupposes an entire system of practical education. All that must be done, over and above what concerns the peasant culture, which already offers solid bases, but which must be encouraged to continue to develop in step with the times.

The subject with which we are presently concerned is credit, which, of course, involves other things. The unfortunate truth is that, to date, as is generally recognized, the small peasant farmer has scarcely enjoyed the benefit of development credit. He has had financing difficulties, although in the last few years this new field has been somewhat opened to foreign aid. The agencies which give or administer credit must take rational precautions to recover what they lend; they must not change from credit agencies into welfare agencies; they must be managed, even in the smallest detail, by persons who know the field in which they are operating. These limitations have led to almost no credit being extended to the small producer who, in addition, has not received sufficient information as to how to learn what he can obtain and how to obtain it. He does not know to whom to turn under what circumstances; how to offer, although it may be limited, some type of guarantee; how he must use the credit given him.

One of the errors may be that only credit is offered, and nothing more, or that in its operation it isolates money from other production factors. Peasant credit must be part of a complete development policy, in which there is a concurrence of all factors capable of increasing production and productivity. It presupposes, as we said, a plan for education and for supplying resources, from modern plows to seeds, fertilizers, etc. One must not only offer money, but the information and training needed to invest that money in a fruitful way.

Well-integrated plans must be established, plans whose coordination will guarantee the success of the policy being followed with respect to the small farmers. If the plans are not approached in this manner, the credit will not achieve much by itself; perhaps in some cases it will even end up being harmful, since it would not lead to increased production, but to making the peasant a bankrupt debtor.

We all know this is not an easy task; but we also know that there are trained people who can carry it out, and that it is urgently needed. We know that as long as we do not have a successful agrarian policy, most of our people will remain outside the benefits of modern civilization, without doing all they can for the benefit of all.

8735
CSO: 3010

CRITICAL POINTS IN MINING INDUSTRY OUTLINED

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 4 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Adolfo Linares]

[Text] Until 1970 the country's mining industry held great preeminence over other sectors of production, due chiefly to its ability to generate foreign exchange. Later, the temporary boom in petroleum activities gave rise to the thought that the mining industry could be dislodged from that position. However, the severe drop in exports and the substantial reduction in petroleum production, especially in the last 3 years, demonstrated again that the mining and metallurgy sector is basic, as a resource in foreign trade, to sustaining the national economy.

If, in the light of the various official studies and reports, we observe the degree of development achieved by this most important mining and industrial activity, we will see that for the present it has not met the challenge. In addition, its present severe crisis situation and the series of difficulties it faces show that this is not only a question of a circumstantial phenomenon but, on the contrary, a structural problem motivated principally by a generally limiting geology; extraction tasks which require more and greater effort without the compensation of better prices and greater productivity; the persistent impoverishment of the deposits; the absence of new discoveries; greater requirements for risk investment; complex metallurgic solutions; lack of prospecting and exploration; insufficient incentive and stimuli for new investments; deficiencies in the financing policy; a defective tax system; the complicated relationship between producers and the National Smelting Enterprise (ENAF) etc. If we try to analyze the national mining industry, we cannot fail to mention, in the first place, the Bolivian Mining Corporation (COMIBOL) which because of its importance, complexity and extraordinary size plays a central role in the economic and social process of the nation.

In spite of the fact that since its creation all administrations have tried to give the chief state mining enterprise the characteristics of an independent economic entity, the truth is that its foreign debts have always been closely tied to those of the national state, and the providing of resources to cover its constant and numerous deficits has had severe repercussions on the public debt.

In addition, COMIBOL constitutes an instrument for the exercise of power in internal politics and social circles, and it is the public organism which causes greatest concern in the context of planning and programming of development, given its own importance and its influence over the other sectors of national activity.

COMIBOL provides approximately 59 percent of national tin production; 65 percent of copper; 70 percent of lead; 42 percent of wolfram; 86 percent of silver; 99 percent of bismuth and 78 percent of cadmium. However, it has had some serious technical, administrative and financial problems. Its production is falling day by day, due basically to the reduction in its reserves, in quantity as well as in quality (poorer ores); the use of antiquated and inadequate machinery; the lack of applied technological research (metallurgy); lack of rational administration; social and labor problems which have accumulated and worsened practically since its creation, etc.

The private medium and small mining firms and the cooperatives, however, whose total activities are very small in comparison with those of COMIBOL, are also faced with severe problems arising from the high and still rising costs of production and of machinery and equipment repair; the lack of a financing policy; a generally inadequate climate for investment characterized by high risk; lack of fiscal, tariff and monetary incentives; the continuance in force of a blind tax system which disproportionately pressures its economy, an inadequate physical and energy infrastructure for exploration, yield and industrialization; the growing costs of transportation from the mines to the smelters and the ports of embarkation, etc.

To all the foregoing can be added the difficult relations between ENAF and the producers of minerals and concentrates. For several reasons, attributable sometimes to the management policy of the smelters, and other times to problems of a technical character, and at still others to economic support between ENAF and the producers of minerals, whether they be COMIBOL or the private mining industry.

ENAF, which is a state monopoly, will soon have to work at less than its installed capacity, due to the constant reduction in the production of concentrates, and consequently, at costs which continue to be higher than the prices at which the product is transferred to the producer, with a resulting negative repercussion on its economy and without the possibility, furthermore, of establishing any control or regulation over them. In the last resort, the producer of minerals must absorb any level of inefficiency in ENAF. To all this can be added the fact that ENAF, because of its feeble economy and chronic insolvency, is unable to meet the urgent needs for financing of the producers of minerals and concentrates.

In a short summary, then, these are the chief inherent factors which together form the environment and the setting within which the national mining sector must develop.

As to the inherent factors which negatively affect exploitation, yield, industrialization and sale of this nonrenewable natural resource, we must refer to the conditions of the international mineral market, and particularly to those of tin.

The market for this mineral, like that for most raw materials, is subject to great fluctuations which are caused by critical conditions for the producers, chiefly those in developing countries.

This situation is even more serious because of the fact that our country is dependent to an exaggerated degree on tin exports, which represent about 70 percent of its total exports.

In this context, there are two factors which heavily affect the Bolivian tin industry: the International Tin Convention and the extracommercial sales of its strategic reserves by the United States.

Bolivia is a member of the International Tin Convention. The consultative organ of the convention is the International Council, made up of the principal tin-producing countries and the most important consumers, including the United States, who absorb about 30 percent of world production.

The composition of the International Council--producers and consumers--has limited the defensive action which is so necessary for the producing countries. The metropolitan and monopolistic interests of the consumers in some producing countries, notably Thailand and Malaysia, prevent the producers from strengthening their negotiating position.

In accordance with the convention, there is a "buffer stock" reserve, formed by contributions which the producing countries make, according to the characteristics of the market, either in metal or by financing special purchases of metal.

Unfortunately the minimum and maximum price levels have never responded to the expectations of just and reasonable prices suggested permanently by Bolivia in the council.

The American strategic reserve is even further aggravating the instability of tin prices because of the sustained danger presented by extracommercial sales planned periodically by the government of the United States through the strategic military reserve administered by the General Services Administration (GSA).

This extracommercial system has a tin reserve which apparently is more than 200,000 metric tons and represents more than a year of world production. Its presence implies both a psychological and a real depressant on the market, which became much more acute when the U.S. administration approved, as it recently did, the sale of a certain tonnage on the market.

The seriousness of these extracommercial incursions, which constitute real economic threats to the producing countries, contradict in practice all those programs of economic cooperation which the U.S. Government might approve for the producing countries.

In view of these negative circumstances, domestic as well as foreign, it is up to the national government to adopt urgent solutions, beginning with COMIBOL, which is one of the country's crucial problems; it must be faced within the framework of a stabilizing national policy, with a view to guaranteeing a suitable and efficient management for this powerful economic instrument which at this time is one of the negative factors in the country's future development, since it is responsible for the exploitation of enormous non-renewable, unchangeable natural resources, which to date has favored foreign economies and will contribute in the long run to weakening the national economy.

The solutions for COMIBOL must be generated in the executive branch, which is called to redefine first the objectives and goals to be achieved by this extremely important public enterprise, and then to give it a scientifically studied and structured administration.

To direct and take charge of the highest management area of COMIBOL, it must choose and designate an administrator capable of carrying out--because of his training, experience and leadership capabilities and regardless of his nationality--within precisely established periods, all the work programs and plans which will have been previously formulated with the concurrence of a professional interdisciplinary team (technical, financial, economic and social), which will work under his direction. Of course the government, in addition to approving those plans and programs, must guarantee its most decided support of and cooperation with the administration chosen.

Another problem requiring urgent attention concerns the treatment to be accorded the private mining sector, with a view to achieving through its activity--in addition to contributing efficiently to development through the qualitative and quantitative increase of production of the deposits under its control--the objectives which are inherent in any private enterprise.

The following measures, among others, would generally favor the mining industry: strengthening of the National Fund for Mining Exploration; the implementation of a tax system favoring new investment and encouraging the use of risk capital; establishment of credit lines through which the urgent needs for working capital and resources earmarked for modernization and expansion of these activities may be met; research into new technologies, chiefly in the field of metallurgy, and the establishment of adequate cooperative relations between ENAF and the producers.

8735
CSO: 3C10

PRESS COMMENTS ON U.S. PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

'JORNAL DO BRASIL' Editorial

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 29 Sep 80 p 10

[Editorial: "American Vacuum"]

[Text] Serious crises usually accentuate the importance of great leaderships or their absence. Applied to the North American picture in a electoral year, this confirmation shows a negative hypothesis: not even the very serious threat to the petroleum supplies of the West was capable of raising the rhetoric of Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan a little bit above the level of the diatribe in which they have placed themselves.

In one of his reasonings, as categorical as it was unsubstantiated, the challenger accused the president in office of being one of those responsible for the war between Iran and Iraq because he had not supported Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. As far as the president is concerned, he has repeated throughout the country that the possible victory by Reagan very probably would drag the country to a war, which is also an unsubstantiated campaign slogan.

Writing about the campaign, Hugh Sidey recalled an old saying by Harry Truman: "You have to appeal to the best instincts of people and not the worst, in the second hypothesis, you can win one or two elections but only by doing great harm to the country."

For the American press, the most paradoxical thing about the venom Carter has been dripping methodically is the fact that it is coming from a man who based his first campaign on an almost evangelical position, intentionally emphasizing his religious beliefs. Because of the cadence he imposed on the campaign, the president remains suspected of insincerity, or in the best of hypothesis, of meanness, with one aggravating factor: Carter is the president in office, which carries some advantages, but also greater responsibilities.

A few weeks before the elections, and with the previous elections indicating a close finish, the "presidential" position adopted by Carter when Reagan was still a poor bet appears very different. The two candidates appear even in mediocrity and in the apparent or real lack of prospects.

That leadership crisis cannot but be linked to the broader crisis the country is undergoing—the famous "crisis of identity," which followed earthshaking events like Watergate and the defeat in Vietnam. As Seymour Lipset said in an interview published in JORNAL DO BRASIL, "The candidates of the two parties today seek the same group of votes more and more. If the climate of the country shifts to the right, then the Democrats are the ones who speak a more conservative language; if it shifts to the left, it is the Republicans who must show themselves to be more progressive."

This lack of direction may be of more than circumstantial origins. Particularly fascinating is the analysis by Octavio Paz, the great Mexican essayist and intellectual, for whom the United States is toying momentarily with the idea of decadence and with the nebulosity resulting from it.

This subject has arisen in the United States since it became obvious that the country no longer had the same relative power as some years ago. This circumstance could be perfectly natural, resulting from the appearance of new forces and the change on the international scene itself. However, besides an understandable frustration, it would, in the analysis by Paz, also offer some recompenses which are not to be disdained, to the American conscience. Continuous progress is associated with variable doses of turbulence, friction and tension. Decadence, for those who have already reached the highest point, brings with it an unexpected love of pleasure, something which can be associated with the Proustian climate.

However, there is more. While they jovially led the world, the United States felt behind its back the caustic murmers of older countries: The leaders of the postwar period would be the "new barbarians," a people without a culture and a past. The idea of decadence, for Paz, even if it is more an intellectual game than a reality, allows identification of the United States with all the other great empires of history, which also had their rise and fall. If decadence is announced, then the country already has a past, it becomes as much a part of history as any other. It can abandon the complex of adolescense and enjoy all the pleasures of maturity and sophistication.

Correct, completely or in part, those analyses point toward the same phenomenon: a national identification, which at the same time that it appears to be waiting for new leaderships, also makes it more difficult for those leaderships to appear.

As long as those leaderships do not appear, it is necessary to be content with that which exists. The question posed is: once reelected would Jimmy Carter be a more convincing president than during the past 4 years? This is also an unsubstantiated hypothesis. It is this theory to which the principal natural allies of the United States seem to cling as Ronald Reagan commits successive gaffes such as the resurrection of the problem of Taiwan, which had been resolved in a very Chinese, pragmatic way.

The Soviet Union itself, which complained about the absolute unpredictability of Carter's policy and viewed the rise of Reagan in public opinion polls with apparent sympathy, now appears to have changed its opinion. Reagan, believe the Soviets, could try to behave like Eisenhower, delegating responsibilities, but to whom is he going to delegate them?

Since no position by Moscow is gratuitous, the sudden renewal of understandings between the two capitals through Edmund Muskie and Andrei Gromyko is already being interpreted as a sort of subtle way of strengthening the position of the Democrats: If Carter can once more find the road of dialog, hints this reasoning, why change horses in midstream?

Effects of Elections

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 10 Sep 80 p 3

[Editorial: "The U.S. Elections and Us "]

[Text] Some of those who yearn for the authoritarian days of yesterday, who possibly bet on a win by Ronald Reagan in the U.S. Elections so as to feel at home in the future in Brazil, must at this time be deeply disillusioned with what one of the principal advisers on Latin American affairs for the Republican candidate said in Brasilia. He is Roger Fontaine, a young man who for years has been studying Brazil and the continent. He was clear in declaring that those who think that a Republican administration in the United States will facilitate the emergence or activities strong regimes in South America are deceiving themselves. "Preoccupation with human rights and the development of political democracy did not begin with Carter nor will it end with him," declared Fontaine, asserting that Reagan, if elected "will have preoccupations similar to those of Carter" in this aspect, changing the tone and methods, however.

It is precisely the tone and methods, not the intentions or the spirit, which created difficulties for the Carter administration in its relations with Latin America. The failure in continental policy, progressively being overcome, was also pointed out by Reagan's advisers to such a point that referring specifically to Brazil, Fontaine says that the Republican candidate considers relations with our country "a question of priority" within the framework of a general strengthening of the understanding between the United States and the great Latin American nations of the continent, particularly Mexico, Argentina and Venezuela.

Reagan and his advisers do nothing more than confirm a reality. Brazil is today the second country in the hemisphere, exceeded in industrial and productive capacity or in population only by the United States. Traditionally, we are a partner of the United States. Our domestic situation (despite our many political or developmental problems) is progressively placing us in a relationship of equality.

U.S. investments in Brazil border on $6 billion, according to U.S. estimates, or they reach $4,375,000,000, as is officially acknowledged by Brazilian statistics. The difference between the two figures is in itself a demonstration of the old bonds which joined both economies in basic tasks: estimates differ because many decades ago U.S. investors brought their dollars in suitcases, using them here without passing them through the sieve of accounting statistics in a relationship in which reciprocal good faith overcame legal problems.

The forthcoming U.S. elections are an internal event of that country which in no way will interfere with the direction of bilateral relations unless it is in the sense of invigorating them or bringing them up to date, removing obstacles, overcoming barriers, whatever the results are, whether Carter or Reagan wins. The policy of the present president and Democratic candidate for reelection is known. What remained as an unknown were the general features of the line of action of the Republican candidate with respect to Latin America. His principal adviser for continental affairs revealed the secret in an almost perfect way, recalling that a return to the policy of Kissinger would be received with pessimism and for that reason it is necessary to intensify the dialog.

Relations with Brazil, he says, will be given priority, however, within an overall and close understanding with Venezuela, Mexico (petroleum exporters) and Argentina (self-sufficient in oil). A view which does not differ from the present Brazilian foreign policy and which breaks the false idea of an alleged Brazilian "hegemony," which for a time artificially intimidated our best neighbors.

8908
CSO: 3001

POLL REVEALS DECLINE IN PRESTIGE OF GOVERNORS

Disapproval Ratings Given

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 1 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Sao Paulo--More than 70 percent of the population of Sao Paulo is against the administration of the state by Paulo Maluf, according to a poll revealed yesterday by the Gallup Institute, while only 21 percent of the people agree with the methods of the Sao Paulo governor. In Rio, 61 percent of the people disapprove of the administration of Chagas Freitas.

The Gallup Institute poll was taken in August through questioning of people in the seven most populous states. Sixty-five percent of the people were opposed to the administration of Francelino Pereira in Minas Gerais. The only two governors with favorable ratings are Ney Braga of Parana and Marco Maciel of Pernambuco.

Disapproval

By comparison with surveys made before, the people's disapproval of the majority of the governors of the seven states is growing. This means that the people are showing a general dissatisfaction with their administrators. The persons surveyed linked the idea of "government" to the activities of the federal government as well as to state and municipal administrations. The poll says that the governors "rarely manage to prevent their local image from being tarnished when dissatisfaction grows against the government, government being understood to be the overall number of persons and bodies exercising political power."

In a comparison of the results obtained by the poll in the seven most heavily populated states, it is observed that the only two governors who have won approval (governing "well" or "very well") are the governors of Parana and Pernambuco. Despite this, Ney Braga and Marco Maciel show a decline by comparison with their previous ratings. The poll was made in the states of Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, Minas Gerais, Rio Grande do Sul, Bahia, Pernambuco and Parana.

Chagas Freitas of Rio de Janeiro obtained the following: approval of his administration, 16 percent of those polled, while 61 percent disapproved. In Sao Paulo, 21 percent approved of the administration of Paulo Maluf but 71 percent disapproved. In Minas, 24 percent approved and 65 percent disapproved. In Rio Grande do Sul, 29 percent are in favor of Amaral de Souza and 66 percent are against him. In Bahia, Antonio Carlos Magalhaes obtained an approval rating of 40 percent and a 55-percent disapproval. In Pernambuco, Marco Maciel received the following: 50 percent approve of his administration and 48 percent disapprove. The best position is that of Ney Braga: 50 percent approve his way of governing and 46 percent disapprove.

The Decline of Each

Governor	1979				1980
	May	Aug	Oct	Dec	Mar	May	Aug
Ney Braga (PR)
Approve	43	59	58	47	53	54	50
Disapprove	37	35	35	40	38	41	46
Marco Maciel (PE)
Approve	49	66	55	54	49	56	50
Disapprove	40	29	33	42	47	41	48
Antonio Carlos Magalhaes (BA)
Approve	38	36	45	45	39	54	40
Disapprove	53	61	48	47	53	45	55
Amaral de Souza (RS)
Approve	39	44	50	40	39	47	29
Disapprove	49	51	40	51	54	46	66
Francelino Pereira (MG)
Approve	30	22	32	33	32	34	24
Disapprove	48	67	60	56	56	61	65
Chagas Freitas (RJ)
Approve	36	38	36	34	30	37	16
Disapprove	46	51	48	47	58	56	61
Paulo Maluf (SP)
Approve	28	35	29	18	24	30	21
Disapprove	59	61	63	69	68	65	71

Editorial Comments on Poll

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 1 Oct 80 p 3

[Editorial: "The Opinion of Those Who Did Not Vote"]

[Text] By means of polls made periodically in the seven most populous states of the federation, the Gallup Institute confirms that the prestige of the governors is in noticeable decline: the numbers of those who approve of their endeavors decline, while those who disapprove increase. Between May and August of this year even the only two governors who almost always received favorable ratings (they are governing "well" or "very well") from one-half or more of the people, suffered a certain reverse in confrontation with public opinion. In May, 54 and 56 percent approved of the administrations of Governors Ney Braga and Marco Antonio Maciel, respectively, but in August those percentages declined for both to 50 percent, with the percentage of those who disapprove climbing from 41 to 46 percent for Ney Braga and from 41 to 48 percent for Marco Antonio Maciel.

Below the two, and in declining order of their approval rating in the last 3 months, are Antonio Carlos Magalhaes (BA), Amaral de Souza (RS), Francelino Pereira (MG), Chagas Freitas (RJ) and Paulo Salim Maluf. Some suffered a considerable decline in the period, if one is to judge by the increase in the rates of disapproval, which were 10 percent for Antonio Carlos Magalhaes and 20 percent for the governor of Minas Gerais, a native of Piaui, Francelinio Pereira, while during the period May 1979 to August 1980, all five had more than half of the people against them: Paulo Salim Maluf, 65.1 percent; Francelino Pereira, 59 percent; Chagas Freitas, 52.4 percent; Antonio Carlos Magalhaes, 51.7 percent; and Amaral de Souza, 51 percent.

Would it not be, however, more surprising if these governors' approval ratings were on the upswing? Chosen as they were, they had an almost always thankless beginning under the just resentment of a people, whose capacity for expressing an opinion was once more disdained for the benefit of a restricted and spurious circle of privileged "electors," whose criteria for selection no one would have the courage to evaluate since from all appearances there was always fear of revealing them publicly. It was also a thankless beginning because the natural response of public opinion to that monopoly in the selection of governors is to demand more of them. Whoever arrogates himself the right to choose for all must be aware of the responsibility to choose better than everyone.

Appointed through a process which was always a mockery of legitimacy and which public opinion never accepted, the governors then had to imbue themselves with the necessary humility and seek a genuine, if after the fact legitimacy. Few, however, are those who appear to worry about something which is only a patriotic imperative. They fill themselves instead with the spirit of vassalage in the same measure that they grasp the power received from the hand they kissed, daring even to lie subsequently about the following phase of a career, which is without glory or merits. Creatures of centralized power, those men tend to make of it the guiding star of their administrations, thus becoming much more a court figure (and as soon as there is a swearing in at the higher echelons of the federal administration they will be there unfailingly to make their presence known and to given and solicit embraces; note, for example, the newspaper accounts of the swearing in of Costa Cavalcanti as chief of ELETROBRAS [Brazilian Electric Power Companies, Inc.]) than representatives of the interests and aspirations of the people of our states. For the sad role they play, the judgement made by public opinion is all too benign. It is a judgment probably only supported by hope, which as is known, is the last to die.

8908
CSO: 3001

UNE DEMONSTRATES IN MEC; TO HOLD CONGRESS IN OCTOBER

Student Demonstration

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 12 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] Brasilia--The National Students Union (UNE) held a demonstration yesterday at the Ministry of Education, which had been emptied as a result of two false alarms for bombs that, according to an anonymous source were set to explode at 1515 and 1530 hours. The UNE representatives wanted to present a document to Minister Eduardo Portella regarding the student strikes. The demonstration was viewed by 150 military policement armed with rifles and nightsticks.

The students did not get to see the minister, who received the document from Deputy Heitor Alencar Furtado (PMDB for Parana). The demonstrators told the deputy that in refusing to receive them, the minister was demonstrating that his statements in favor of dialog "were just a big lie."

The deputy explained: "As a minister he will be always and constantly open to dialog. But he also has to obey current legislation, which does ot recognize the organizations that signed the document." Professor Portella promised to reply to the UNE manifesto through the press.

UNE Meeting

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 14 Aug 80 p 18

[Text] Campinas--The president of the National Students Union (UNE), Ruy Cesar Costa Silva, confirmed yesterday that the 32nd congress of that organization will be held in Piracicaba from 13 through 15 October. Unlike earlier meetings, the students already have the official support of several local sectors, such as the city hall and the Methodist University of Piracicaba (UNIMEP).

Mayor Joao Hermann Neto of the PMDB told a delegation of student leaders yesterday that he will place all of the infrastructure of the municipality at the disposal of the congress delegates. The plenary sessions will probably be held in the Baron de Serra Negra municipal Stadium, with a capacity of 35,000 people, or in the covered sports gymnasium, which holds about 10,000. In the meantime, the rector of UNIMEP, Elias Boaventura, epxressed his readiness to suspend classes during the period of the congress, converting the university facilities into lodgings for the delegations from the whole country, which are going to be mobilized as of now.

The students will also be able to use the auditoriums of the Council Chamber, the Municipal Education Foundation and the Municipal Theater for accommodations or for parallel meetings.

Yesterday, the president of the UNE and the director of the State Students Union (UEE), Mauro Pereira Lopes, accompanied by other students, met with Mayor Hermann Neto and the rector of UNIMEP, who promised them all support to hold the congress.

PP Repudiates Violence

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 12 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] In Brasilia yesterday, Popular Party expressed its "solidarity with the government measures aimed at ascertaining the facts of the attacks" and made an "appeal to its political sensibility in the sense of being disposed to convene a National Constituent Assembly." Those positions were adopted by unanimity during a 2-hour meeting of the provisional National Executive Committee of the PP.

In an official note, the party also announced the following decision of its leadership:

1. To reiterate the anxiety shared by all the people that the investigations pertaining to the terrorist attacks may not arrive at conclusions that will calm and bring security to the nation, by not punishing those responsible for the hideous crimes;

2. Nevertheless, to express the hope that the decision of the president of the republic is complied with in the shortest time and with the announced firmness;

3. To confirm the position assumed from the outset, of complete support for the government's action in combating all acts of terrorism, regardless of their origin and the social position of their possible perpetrators;

4. To urge the government to convene the National Constituent Assembly that will give the country the constitutional order it needs, demanded more and more by democratic consciousness, entrusting that important task to the national congress that is to be elected in 1982. If this is done, it will remove focal points of anxiety and will insure the political stability that is essential for the goals of national security and the solutions of the serious problems that affect the people;

5. To reaffirm the concern with which it witnesses the negative effects of the economic policy adopted by the government on the pretext of fighting inflation and which in reality further increases the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few without achieving those objectives, and intensifies in the minds of the people, particularly the wage-earning class, the feeling of social injustice to which they are cruelly subjected.

Constituent Assembly

During the discussions, the president of the party, Senator Tancredo Neves, expressed the conviction that "the government will capitulate on the issue of convening a constituent assembly the same way that it capitulated on the question of amnesty. The constituent assembly," he stressed, "is an idea that prevails throughout the country: the National Conference of Brazilian Bishops (CNBB), the Brazilian Bar Association (OAB), the Brazilian Press Association (ABI), the unions, students, all want it. I must say that I have gathered that same impression in government sectors."

Tancredo supported the argument that "though congress is prevented from doing the ideal, it should not for that reason abstain from doing the possible." That observation was made in reply to the criticism of Minas Deputy Carlos Cota that the PP is getting into the habit of opting for the lesser evil rather than opposing everything that is wrong." Cota referred to the support given by the party the night before to approval of the government message establishing new criteria for the executive collection of debts: "We are going to make the government assume sole responsibility for what it proposes which does not suit the community."

In that connection, the regional chairman of the PP in Sao Paulo, Olavo Setubal, read messages from several state organizations opposed to the original plan and to the substitute approved by congress. Gilvan Rocha, leader in the senate, supported the advisability of "the systematic presentation of democratizing election reform plans as a means of organizing parliamentary resistance against the government's aim of destroying the opposition."

Conventions

The Popular Party set 29 March 1981 for municipal conventions, 3 May for the state conventions and 7 June for the national convention that will select party leaders.

The decision was taken based on the argument that by letting the Social Democratic Party (PDS) and Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMDB) hold their respective conventions first, the PP could benefit from divisions that might occur within those parties.

8711
CSO: 3001

ELECTION PROCEEDINGS FOR STUDENT LEADERS CRITICIZED

Creation of Slates Scored

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 24 Sep 80 p 15

[Text] Elections for the renewal of the State Students Union (UEE) directorate will begin today throughout the state of Sao Paulo. There are four competing slates: Viracao, Mobilizacao Estudantil, Maos a Obra and Unidade e Democracia, which were formed in meetings, many times isolated, of the many factions making up the student movement. Unlike the two previous years, the process of formation of slates did not take place in the meetings, which should have been widespread, of the State Council of Student Organizations (CEE), the body which enfolds the rank and file organizations representing the Sao Paulo university students.

The divisions which took place in CEE meetings is being harshly criticized by student organizations, who blame the present UEE leadership for not rallying the Sao Paulo university students around their common struggles. With respect to the elections beginning today, FOLHA yesterday interviewed leaders of academic centers, unions and DCE's [expansion unknown] as to their opinions on the competing slates and the UEE.

"Important Elections"

The president of the 11 de Agosto Academic Center of the University of Sao Paulo Law School, Tadeu Modulo, declared that elections for the UEE are very important for the students of Sao Paulo because they will serve "to show that we are supporting our general organization." According to him, the main role to be played by the UEE is that of unifying the students' struggles and for that reason "It is very important," he emphasized, "that we have a strong organization representing the students at a state level." Tadeu Modulo preferred not to give his opinion on the competing slates.

Such, however, was not the opinion of the president of the 22 de Agosto Academic Center of the Pontifical Catholic University (PUC) Law School, Alexandre Inojosa, who criticized the UEE for not representing all the factions and tendencies of the student movement. According to Inojosa, "The sectarianism existing in the UEE has driven the university students away from the body and this can be proved by the meetings of the CEE: In the last three meetings there was no quorum."

As far as Alexandre Inojosa is concerned, the elections for the UEE are disorganized and he cited the case of the PUC where "few people know of the election and only two of the four slates are waging a campaign." The president of the 22 de Agosto Academic Center also declared: "We are supporting Unidade e Democracia, where all factions are represented."

The director of the University of Sao Paulo (USP) Politechnical Union, Marcio Motidone, declared in turn that the UEE elections at this time acquire a most important role for the students since "the degree of the intensification of struggles for more money for education and against paying for education requires the students to know how to choose who is going to lead the UEE, the body which has as its main role the unification of those struggles."

According to the director of the Politechnical Union, the programs presented by the slates is important but the students must also know what the university students who present themselves as candidates did previously as leaders of the student movement. Of the six leaders of the Politechnical Union, he declared, four support the Viracao slate, one supports Mao a Obra and the other Unidade e Democracia.

Doing Nothing

Pedro Henrique Mendes de Oliveira, president of the Mackenzie University DCE, described the UEE "as necessary for the unification of the students" and he criticized the present leadership for having estranged the student body, sinning because it did nothing." For this reason, he declared, "the elections come at a good time." In the opinion of Pedro Henrique, the Unidade e Democracia slate will win in Mackenzie University, where it is being supported by most of the leaders of the DCE.

Another rank and file organization, which criticized the present leaders of the UEE, was the Luis de Queiros Academic Center of the School of Agronomy of Piracicaba. According to the director of the body, Julio Cuco, "The UEE showed itself to be deficient in directing the elections."

Julio Cuco declared: "We did not participate in the process of forming slates and for that reason we are not doing well in the elections of which we learned only because of the presence of campaign representatives in the campus of our school. However, we are not seeing a marshalling of the student body."

The director of the PUC DCE, Marcio Correia Toledo, declared that the organization is viewing the elections as a moment for defining the directions of the student movement and that for this reason "it is doing everything it can to convoke the students of the PUC." However, he pointed out, the position adopted by the organization is that of strengthening the organization and that the instructions given to the PUC students is to write the inscription "For the Unification of Sao Paulo Students" on the ballots.

The justification presented by Marcio Correia Toledo is that "none of the slates presented a program which would unite the students and for that reason they do not have the requirements for leading the Sao Paulo university students."

Voting Will Be Today and Tomorrow

Elections for the new directorate of the UEE will begin today at 0700 throughout the state. Four slates will be entered: Mobilizacao Estudantil, Viracao, Maos a Obra and Unidade e Democracia. Elections will close tomorrow at 2230, counting of votes to begin immediately after close of the election. The State Central Election Office will function at the Sao Paulo PUC campus in Beta Hall.

All Sao Paulo university students, students who are about to graduate and postgraduates, who are duly enrolled in schools which up to last night registered to participate in the elections, may vote in the elections for the UEE directorate.

Viracao Slate Elected

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 30 Sep 80 p 16

[Text] The new directorate of the UEE, consisting of members of the Viracao slate elected last week, is going to advocate freezing of the amount of monthly school fees during the present semester of the school year, pursuant to instructions from the National Students Union [UNE].

The program of the new directorate was explained yesterday after the announcement of official election results in which the Viracao slate obtained 22,803 votes in 250 schools which participated in the election, to 19,692 votes of the Maos a Obra slate, which came in second. The Movimento Estudantil and Unidade e Democracia slates received 17,847 and 13,803 votes respectively. There were 3,102 blank and 1,934 invalid votes.

Budget and Annual Tuitions

The new directorate also intends to pressure deputies so that the Legislative Assembly will only approve the 1981 budget if the first and second grades (presumably University) and the three state universities receive more than 12 percent of the total budget (Governor Paulo Maluf said last Friday that the executive branch will allocate 100 billion cruzeiros, which means 20 percent of the entire state budget, to education--first and second grades and universities).

The Viracao slate, according to its future president, Patricio Prado Filho, a student of economics at the USP, intends to "fight against abusive increases in monthly payments in private schools in an attempt to create conditions so that all can remain in higher education without great financial difficulties." The UEE, according to the recently elected president, is going to advocate the freezing of monthly payments in the present semester, pursuant to instructions from the UNE.

Patricio Prado Filho also made an appeal to his colleagues: "We believe that those objectives will only be reached in the degree that there is a specific amount of participation by the students within our organization and if we all participate actively in the movement which seeks a solution to the education crisis in Brazil."

The members of the Viracao slate promise to encourage political participation by the students but they do not support any party in particular. Its members come from the "youth wing" of the Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMDB) as well as from the PT [Labor Party]. According to Fabricio "The party question is not important. What unifies us are the banners raised today by the UNE and UEE of no increase in the second semester of paid schools and a minimum share of 12 percent of the state and federal budget for education.

The Elected.

In addition to Patricio Prado Filho, the following are members of the elected directorate: Edgard Steffen Jr (Architecture of Pucamp), Carlos Santana (Psychology of the University of Moji), Antonio Carlos (Administration of FGV), Marcelo Borges (Engineering of Bauru), Cassandra Nunes (Geology of USP), Silvana Tofora (Social Sciences of PUC/SP), Carlos Oliveira (Journalism of the Methodist Institute of ABC), Sonia Castellar (Geology of USP) and Antonio Jose Meireles (Food Engineering of the University of Campinas).

Counting of the 79,181 votes was done at the DCE office of the PUC of Sao Paulo. The Viracao slate was supported by the members of the present UEE directorate.

According to the new president of the organization, generally the number of students increased. However, there was a decline in the total of voters in the "traditionally most combative schools, something which must be resolved by speeding up the functioning of the UEE. We believe that next year, with an increasingly effective UEE at the side of the students, we shall be in a condition to overcome that decline."

8908
CSO: 3001

BUSINESSMEN FAVOR POLITICAL DEMOCRATIZATION, BLAST TERRORISM

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 30 Sep 80 p 21

[Text] Sao Paulo--The principal leaders among Sao Paulo businessmen, meeting yesterday in the GAZETA MERCANTIL Forum, scored any and all forms of political regression, saying that those who devote themselves to making the democratic opening fail and dare to use the "abominable recourse of terrorism" shall not prevail over the overwhelming will of the people. They emphasized that nothing "shall halt our movement in the direction of an economically prosperous, socially fair and politically open society." They conclude saying that under the "firm and well-intentioned" leadership of President Figueiredo "we have already begun the journey."

They advocate the point of view that necessary changes in the economic structure "can only be successful in the midst of permanent discussions and negotiations," stressing that the development plan must be prepared under a democratic system. They are convinced that any national mobilization aimed at these objectives "demands strengthening of the free enterprise system, whose endeavors cannot, and must not, have restrictions other than those inspired and based on the collective interest."

The document is signed by businessmen Antonio Ermirio de Moraes, Claudio Bardella, Luis Eulalio de Bueno, Vidigal Filho, Olavo Setubal, Abilio dos Santos Diniz, Jose Ermirio de Moraes Filho, Laerte Setubal Filho, Mario Garnero, Jorge Gerdau Johannpeter and Jose Mindlin. All of them were elected as business leaders by direct votes of other businessmen and they now make up the GAZETA MERCANTIL Discussion Forum, which issued the manifesto yesterday. The 94-line document is also signed by businessmen Manoel da Costa Santos, Paulo Villares and Paulo Vellinho.

The Document

Meeting in the GAZETA MERCANTIL Forum, we believe it timely to express our point of view on the present economic, social and political situation. Aware of our responsibilities to the nation, and particularly to the business community, we could not avoid making a clear statement on the problems of the present.

No one is unaware of the difficulties afflicting us now. It is necessary, therefore, to lay aside once and for all any shred of pessimistic feeling that may be harbored on the future of Brazil. We managed to overcome the formidable obstacles which resisted the advance of our economic development. Two generations witnessed the birth of a modern industrial economy, an unprecedented event in the Western World of the 20th Century.

It is in this perspective, therefore, that we must evaluate our vicissitudes and project our hopes.

With all certainty we shall be capable of the free, prosperous, fair and democratic society to which we all aspire in the decade just beginning.

The path of progress, social justice and democracy must avoid the dangers of recession. Recession would be the worst of solutions. The peculiarities of the Brazilian social structure would make the consequences of even a temporary paralyzation of growth unbearable. In addition to meaning a tragic reduction in job opportunities in a country such as ours where hundreds of thousands of young people come into the labor market every year, it would also mean privation in many homes, since we do not have the mechanisms capable of providing even a subsistance income to the unemployed. On the other hand, national business in all sectors could be swallowed by the maelstron of recession, allowing the unleasing of a generalized process of denationalization and of state ownership. In the wake of unemployment and a decline in wages--without the slightest assurance that inflation would be contained--a profound social crisis would certainly remain. In a climate such as this, the enemies of democracy could breath new life into their totalitarian objectives.

We therefore reaffirm the need for a gradual effort for the stabilization of prices and a balance in foreign accounts. That is why we warn of the dangers of a strategy which supports the reduction of real liquidity and the indiscriminate and linear curtailment of public spending.

It is not, however, enough to reject the adoption of a strategy of recession. It seems to us to be essential to clearly define a number of medium and long-range priorities which will allow the country to see its horizons of growth.

We consider it to be an absolute national priority that we achieve a reduction in energy dependence during the present decade with a decline of petroleum imports to a tolerable minimum. This goal is fully feasible because we have an excellent energy potential. We wish to emphasize that the success of substitution programs depends on a broad participation by private enterprise.

Agricultural development must continue to receive special attention. Results obtained this year in the increase in agricultural products have already been very encouraging but they still do not appear to be enough to insure the role required, whether it be in the effort to combat inflation, the increase in exports or the maintenance and increase in the level of employment. Fulfillment of these functions requires a consistent policy of minimum price fixing, establishment of credit conditions and regulation of the prices of supplies and the sale of crops capable of instilling confidence in the farmer during coming years.

Finally, as was emphasized by the "First Businessmen's Document," whose positions we reaffirm completely, it is necessary that the state face the pressing shortages in matters of health, basic sanitation, housing, education, urban mass transit and environmental protection. That program of social spending would come to alleviate centers of tension for city and rural workers. A measure of an elementary sense of justice, it would also bring beneficial effects to income and employment.

It is on these three pillars: reduction of energy dependence, agricultural development and activation of social spending, that medium and long-range strategy must be based because they are the most suitable for the national interest.

We are sure that the necessary changes in economic structure can only be successful in the midst of permanent discussion and negotiation. The development plan must be prepared under a democratic regime. We are also convinced that any national mobilization around these objectives demands the strengthening of the free enterprise system, whose endeavors cannot, and must not, have restrictions other than those inspired and based on the collective interest.

In the same way that we advocate the free enterprise system, we reaffirm our conviction that no truly democratic society can do without union organizations, management as well as labor, under the aegis of legislation resulting from broad participation of sectors involved.

Economic freedom can only germinate in a democratic climate. The smothering of public freedoms sooner or later compromises the exercise of private enterprise. In this respect, a continuous improvement of institutions is called for under the protection of a balance among the Executive, Legislative and Judicial Powers, whose prerogatives, rights and authorities must be maintained within a climate of independence, mutual respect and harmony.

It is because of the solidity and balance of democratic institutions and because of the exercise of economic freedom that there is the possibility of absorbing the natural conflicts of interests in a climate of justice and tolerance.

For all these reasons, any form of political regression is inadmissible. Those who devote themselves to plotting the failure of the democratic opening in the shadows--and worse than this they dare to use the abominable recourse of terrorism--shall not prevail over the will of the overwhelming majority of the people.

It is the daily exercise of dialog and understanding that allows us to overcome the difficulties of the present. Nothing shall halt our movement in the direction of an economically prosperous, socially fair and politically open society.

Under the firm and well-intentioned leadership of President Figueiredo, we have already begun the journey.

8908
CSO: 3001

OSI DENIES RESPONSIBILITY FOR MINAS BOMBINGS

PMDB Councilman Arrested

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] Brasilia--The presidency of the republic issued a note yesterday confirming the arrest of a Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMBD) councilman and two other persons, charged with three bombings in the Minas municipalities of Barbacena and Antonio Carlos and painting subversive and antigovernment graffiti in those cities. They are being held by the Department of Political and Social Order (DOPS) in Belo Horizonte. They have also been charged with belonging to a clandestine group called the Internationalist Socialist Organization (OSI), a Trotskyite organization.

After reading the note, the press secretary of the presidency of the republic, Marco Antonio Kraemer, said he did not see any connection between the terrorist acts in those municipalities and the attacks that occurred in Rio de Janeiro--where the Brazilian Bar Association (OAB) employee, Lyda Monteiro da Silva, was killed--and the destruction of newstands in other parts of the country, which continue to be secretly investigated.

Kraemer said also that President Joao Figueiredo was informed of the investigations in Minas and stressed that the data contained in the government's official note are based on investigations of the security organs, both civilian and military, which are working on the case.

According to the note, Councilman Eduardo Paulo Vilanova assumed responsibility for the three bombing attacks, declaring that the other two arrested--his brother, Luiz Crisostomo Vilanova, and Caetano Cesariano de Oliveira--"participated only in the preparation of and the posting of the placards with subversive messages." Vilanova admitted also that he planned to set off a fourth bomb, confiscated in his home by the security organs, and that another younger brother, Paulo, helped place the bombs which, however, were set off by him alone. The councilman confessed also that he belonged to the OSI and indicated the names of six other participants, among them three other politicians: Councilman Joirajara Bertoletti, of the Barbacena PMDB; Professor Manoel Conegundes, defeated candidate for federal deputy for the defunct Brazilian Democratic Movement (MDB) in the last elections; and Marco Antonio de Araujo Lima, also a candidate for councilman for the PMDB who was defeated in 1978. The four politicians, together with two female students and a man known only as "Nonato," constituted the OSI municipal committee for Barbacena.

The attacks occurred on the night of 28th of last month, the bombs having exploded in the academic directorate of the school of philosophy and in a vacant lot near the military airfield in Barbacena; and at the military enlistment board in the neighboring municipality of Antonio Carlos. On the following night, Luiz Crisostomo and Caetano Cesariano were arrested as they were posting placards and painting subversive graffiti, and then named Councilman Eduardo Paulo Vilanova as the leader of the group and responsible for the attacks. Vilanova was arrested on the morning of the 30th.

Passarinho: Investigation Is Being Conducted Properly

The majority leader in the Senate, Jarbas Passarinho, yesterday expressed "absolute confidence" in the correctness of the investigations that are being conducted in Minas with regard to the bomb attacks, stressing that he "had no doubt" about their results.

"The fact that in the course of the inquiries the depositions were followed by a public prosecutor," he argued, "reinforces my conviction about the correctness with which those depositions were taken. The confession of Councilman Eduardo Vilanova is a definitely enlightening fact for me.

"In the general Brazilian panorama," continued the government leader, "I attribute responsibility for the escalation of violence we are going through to the resentful minorities, prepared to prevent the political opening from continuing."

The PMDB leader in the Chamber of Deputies, Deputy Freitas Nobre, termed the government note on the Minas attacks "distorted and untrue," and announced that the opposition parties are going to decide today on a joint position on the matter.

"The morbid and unfair preoccupation with trying to compromise our party is ridiculous because we hold a defined position against terrorism, including police terrorism," declared Nobre, referring to the fact that the councilman charged with the attacks belongs to the PMDB.

"The nation knows what is the origin of the terrorist attacks," Freitas Nobre declared. The president of the OAB, who followed the police investigation regarding the attack on the jurist Dalmo Dallari, declared that it was perpetrated by a parmilitary group allied to the police of Sao Paulo. At the same time, a government party federal deputy explained this week that when he was secretary of public security for Sao Paulo, he called the people responsible for the attack on the Brazilian Analysis and Planning Center (CEBRAP) and warned them not to repeat it."

"Today, however," he continued, "while the serious attacks in Rio de Janeiro remain with no sign of clarification, the authorities present distorted and untrue information with regard to the events in Barbacena and Antonio Carlos."

Afterwards, the leader of the Workers Party (PT), Deputy Airton Soares took the floor to declare that the attacks in the country come from the right "and the government tries to attribute responsibility for the crimes to the left.

"There are 106 attacks that have gone unpunished, that have not been clarified. On the contrary, they are being covered up, as in Sao Paulo where people were arrested and then released without any action having been taken. The situation we are witnessing is that the president of the republic does not have the power to ascertain the facts of the attacks."

Text of the Note

Report to the Press:

In view of the questions by the press with regard to the terrorist attacks that occurred by Barbacena and Antonio Carlos (Minas Gerais), we wish to report the following information gathered from the security organs that participated in the investigations:

1. On the night of 28 August 2 bombs exploded in the city of Barbacena: 1 in the academic directorate of the school of philosophy and the other in a vacant lot near the military airfield. That same night, a third bomb exploded in the city hall of the city of Antonio Carlos (Minas Gerais), a neighboring municipality, directly hitting the Military Service Enlistment Board in that city. The three explosions caused only material damage.

2. In view of the incidents, the security authorities in the area (Secretariat of Public Security of Minas Gerais and Military Command) ordered the immediate intensification of specific investigations of the terrorist attacks, investigations that were already being carried out in Minas Gerais since last June when a bomb exploded in the Press Building in Belo Horizonte.

3. After the investigations conducted by members of the Minas Gerais Department of Public Order (DOPS) and the 4th Army Division, on the night of 29 August (Friday) the regional police department team arrested Luiz Crisostomo Vilanova and Caetano Cesariano de Oliveira, who were posting a large number of placards with subversive and antigovernment messages and painting graffiti in the streets of that city. After the first depositions were taken in the city of Barbacena, the aforementioned individuals declared that Eduardo Paulo Vilanova, brother of Luiz Crisostoma, was responsible for the bombings that had occurred the previous night in Barbacena and Antonio Carlos.

4. On the morning of 30 August (Saturday), Eduardo Paulo Vilanova, who was elected councilman for the PMDB in Antonio Carlos in 1978, and who is also a fourth-year student of mathematics at the President Antonio Carlos Foundation of the city of Barbacena, was arrested.

5. The three individuals arrested were transferred to Belo Horizonte where they are being held in the facilities of the Minas Gerais DOPS. An inquiry was immediately initiated to ascertain the facts connected with the terrorist attacks.

6. In the course of the inquiries, Eduardo Paulo Vilanova declared, according to the deposition that was signed by him and witnessed by public prosecutor Dr Jose Maria Santos, that:

He, Eduardo, was responsible for placing and activating the three bombs that exploded in Barbacena and Antonio Carlos on the night of 28 August 1980;

His youngest brother, Paulo Vilanova, helped him place the bombs in the academic directorate of the school of philosophy, in the building near the military airfield and in the military enlistment board in the Antonio Carlos city hall;

He, Eduardo Vilanova, activated the bombs;

His brother, Luis Crisostomo Vilanova and Caetano Cesariano de Oliveira participated only in preparing and posting the placards with the subversive messages in addition to painting graffiti on the night of 29 August 1980 in Barbacena;

He, Eduardo Vilanova, is a member of the municipal committee of the Internationalist Socialist Organization (OSI) of the city of Barbacena and was responsible for mass mobilization among the student sector.

The following individuals are also members of the OSI municipal committee in Barbacena:

Ubirajara Bertoletti, councilman in Barbacena, elected on the MDB ticket in 1978 and currently a member of the PMDB, also a teacher and lawyer in Barbacena; he was defeated as a candidate for deputy on the MDB ticket in 1978.

Manoel Conegundes, teacher and lawyer in Barbacena; he was defeated as a candidate for federal deputy on the MDB ticket in 1978.

Marco Antonio de Araujo Lima, also a resident of Barbacena; he was defeated as a candidate for councilman on the MDB ticket in 1978.

"Nonato," whole full name, activity and source of income are unknown; all that is known is that this individual participated in the meetings of the OSI committee and was one of the members of that organization.

Ivone, surname unknown, student at the school of philosophy of Barbecena and her colleague, cousin of Professor David Maximiliano de Souza, member of the OSI in Ouro Preto who is under arrest in the penitentiary in Linhares in Juiz de Fora, Minas Gerais, awaiting trial, having been indicted following a police investigation after explosives were confiscated from his residence in the city of Ouro Preto at the time of the visit of the president of the republic to that city on 21 April 1980.

7. Eduardo Vilanova stated also that he had a fourth bomb ready to be set off. That bomb was confiscated by the security organs after a search of his residence of 84 Bias Fortes Strees in Antonio Carlos, Minas Gerais.

8. The Internationalist Socialist Organization (OSI) to which Councilman Eduardo Paulo Vilanova belongs is a leftist group comprised of Trotskyites connected internationally with the reconstruction committee of the Fourth International (CORQUI), which advocates the assumption of power through armed struggle.

It has been active in Brazil since 1979 when its first indications appeared, It was formed by the merger of four Trotskyite groups: Trotskyite Bolshevik Faction (FBT), 1st of May Combat Organization (OC-1 May), October Group, and the Workers Mobilization Organization (OMO).

The OSI held its Third Congress clandestinely in August 1979 and prior to that, through a member of the central committee, it participated in a meeting in Paris of the eighth section of the International Bureau, the leading organ of CORQUI.

The OSI's political line is close to the line of the International Workers Party (POI), indicating that the two organizations are merged.

The OSI has been active in the Brazilian union movement, trying to arouse the workers with its slogans.

In 1979, under the cover of the POI, the OSI organized into the National Line for the Workers-Student Alliance (TNAOE), drawing together several student groups, in an attempt to control the National Students Union.

August 29 was the 40th anniversary of Leon Trotsky's death. Clandestine meetings sponsored by the Socialist Convergence and the newspaper O TRABALHO, were held in various parts of the country, including Brasilia, to commemorate the event. The OSI is Trotskyite.

Conegundes Denies Participation

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 12 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] Belo Horizonte--The chairman of the Popular Party (PP) committee in Barbacena, Prof Manoel Conegundes, yesterday termed "a joke" the accusation by Councilman Eduardo Paulo Vilanova made in the course of the DOPS investigation into the explosion of bombs in that city, naming him as the organizer of the Internationalist Socialist Organization (OSI).

Conegundes testified in the DOPS yesterday for about 4 hours and will return this morning to conclude his testimony. He arrived at the DOPS at 1420 hours yesterday in a Legislative Assembly vehicle accompanied by Deputies Danton Canabrava, leader of the PP, and Genesio Bernardino and Milton Lima, also of that party.

Before entering the DOPS, he said that he had learned of the accusation through the official note issued by the Secretariat of the Mass Media (SECOM), stressing that he has never heard of the OSI. Conegundes attributed his involvement in the investigation to the intent to strike at the leadership of the PP in Barbacena.

After saying that Vilanova "must be out of his mind," he stressed that he had never participated in clandestine organizations. "I have the testimony of even political adversaries on my behalf," he said, citing among them the chairman of the Minas Social Democratic Party (PDS), Deputy Bias Fortes.

"Bias Fortes has a reputation in Minas politics, a name to protect, and he would not lie on my behalf or even slander me because he is a loyal adversary," he said.

OSI Denial

The leader of the OSI, Vitor Letizia, said yesterday that the organization does not have any members in Barbacena and considered the SECOM note "a smokescreen." He said that OSI has headquarters in 10 Brazilian states, among them Minas Gerais, and has about 1,000 members.

8711
CSO: 3001

BRASPETRO NEGOTIATING PETROLEUM PROSPECTING WITH PRC

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 20 Sep 80 p 17

[Article by Gerardo Mello Mourao: "BRASPETRO Mission Looks For Oil in China"]

[Text] Beijing--This week I found the trail of BRASPETRO [PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] International,Inc.] personnel at the Petroleum Corporation of China. One of the Chinese leaders in the area told me that the trip was highly profitable for Brazil as well as for the negotiators. It was the best possible. "The gentlemen in Brazil may not have petroleum, but they understand the subject," said the Chinese.

The BRASPETRO men who were here were Joel Mendes Renno, president of PETROBRAS International, who headed the small and discreet delegation consisting of only two other persons: Luis Reis, BRASPETRO general manager for geophysics, and Kazume Miura, chief of one of the most important areas of geology of the company, who is primarily assigned to the China area.

Joel Renno is already a known trading partner in China, where he sold minerals previously as president of Vale do Rio Doce, while Luis Reyes arrived here with the background of 3 years in Libya as BRASPETRO general manager.

For those who may not know, BRASPETRO is a company which does abroad what PETROBRAS should do in Brazil, it finds oil. It is through this subsidiary of the state company that Brazil is seeking petroleum at this time in six countries: Libya, Iraq, Guatemala, Angola, Algeria and China.

Joel Renno declared: "We are partnered with other foreign enterprises in China, making seismic surveys on the international shelf in a 110,000 kilometer belt. These surveys are necessary for the identification of the area for putting contracts into effect subsequently. BRASPETRO is partnered with ELF, British Petroleum, Phillips, Chevron, Texaco, Mobil, Esso and Amoco in China."

Opening Markets

For the BRASPETRO executive, activities of the company abroad contribute positively to opening the market for other Brazilian products. This is so to such a degree that sales this year should exceed $1 billion, all resulting from the work of BRASPETRO.

Moreover, it is not by accident that 50 percent of Brazilian petroleum consumption is assured by suppliers whose areas have received the contribution of BRASPETRO work.

The BRASPETRO executive believes that explorations abroad do not prejudice the expansion of exploration work in national territory. "Brazil should be the second or third country in the world in production efforts, with nearly 80 drilling rigs in operation, 45 percent of them on the Atlantic shelf. The PETROBRAS budget for 1980 under the heading of petroleum prospecting in the country is around $1 billion.

PETROBRAS in China

BRASPETRO talks in China, which according to the Chinese took place with great success, were aimed at seismic survey work to expand information and necessary details for placing international contracts for participation in offshore exploration into effect. Renno, however, is also making efforts for the possible extension of work by the Brazilian company to the continental areas of China, areas which Brazilian technicians such as Kazume Miura consider to be those with the greatest potential in the universe of petroleum reserves.

With great interest, the Chinese Petroleum Corporation is examining the possibilities of expanding oil deliveries to Brazil and of taking advantage of Brazilian technical cooperation, placed at the disposal of the Chinese by the vice president of BRASPETRO, who made an invitation to specialists of that country who decide to study at PETROBRAS.

The directors of the Chinese Petroleum Corporation, Yon Den Hua and Shin Ming, believe that the present quota of oil purchased here by Brazil--nearly 20,000 barrels per day--can be increased considerably. The men of BRASPETRO were provided here with all necessary information and should be making a careful evaluation of figures so as to be able to carry out the survey work already underway, placing China in an important position in Brazilian petroleum policy.

8908
CSO: 3001

EMBRAER TO BECOME ONE OF WORLD'S LARGEST COMPANIES

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 23 Sep 80 p 6

[Text] Sao Jose dos Campos--The Brazilian Aeronautics Company [EMBRAER] should have an annual income of somewhat more than $700 million per year within 5 years, becoming one of the group of companies which makes the most sales in the world. But there are even more optimistic forecasts pursuant to which EMBRAER income as of 1986 could exceed $1 billion per year. Of that total, two-thirds would come from the export of aircraft, primarily those for exclusively military use.

This growth in only 4 years is primarily linked to the assembly-line production of a military fighter and attack airplane, the AMX, which should be sold for $10 million each, with forecasts calling for the sale of two units per month.

Bandeirante

According to sources of the company itself, as of January 1986 the company should be manufacturing an average of nearly seven Bandeirante aircraft per month at a price of $1.4 million per unit. As of 1982, the Bandeirante will be pressurized. The Brasilia model, also according to forecasts considered pessimistic, are being assembled at the rate of four units per month at a unit price of $3.2 million. The latest model built by the company up to now is the T-27, which will be built at the rate of four units per month in 1986 at a price of $900,000 each.

At the same time, based on cautious estimates of EMBRAER executives, an average of 40 light aircraft ("executive") will be assembled per month, representing annual production of approximately $50 million, in addition to at least two Xingu type aircraft every 30 days, representing a monthly production of $3 million.

Expansion

Meanwhile, the AMX aircraft, a fighter-attack airplane being developed by Brazil with two Italian aviation companies, should become the new annual moneymaker for EMBRAER. According to company management, one unit will be assembled every 15 days as of 1986, and they will be sold at a price of $10 million per unit.

For the assembly of the AMX alone, EMBRAER, which has an area of two million square meters in Sao Jose dos Campos, should expand its installations by 50 percent, at this time around 200,000 square meters of enclosed area where 5,500 persons work. To execute this work, EMBRAER should practically double its number of employees in the next 4 years, "primarily engineers and technicians."

To examine the AMX project, a high-level commission shall be formed in coming days consisting of representatives of the Ministries of Air, Foreign Affairs and Planning. The aircraft, to be built jointly by EMBRAER and the Italian companies Air-Italia and Aeromacci, will be able to guarantee vigilance and security of all Brazilian airspace, serving for air attack and defense.

8908
CSO: 3001

ORLANDO MILLAS SEES PLEBSCITE AS NEGATIVE FOR PINOCHET

Caracas TRIBUNA POPULAR in Spanish 26 Sep-2 Oct 80 p 13

/Article by Orlando Millas, member of the Chilean Communist Party's political commission and party secretary: "By Reason or By Force Chile Will be Liberated"/

/Text/ There are two results for the so-called plebiscite held in Chile on 11 September, 7 years after the bloody coup that brought the fascist regime to power. One of those results is the one announced by Pinochet before the polls closed. In regard to this, what had been known beforehand occurred and the tyrant presented the figures prepared beforehand as the actual figures. But there was also another result which differed from their estimates and will have a greater impact: the people joined together and became aware of their strength as expressed by the overwhelming "no" vote.

A Cynical Show

There was no possibility, not even the remotest chance, that this second figure would be reflected in the official tally. The so-called plebiscite was a farce from beginning to end. Instead it was a cynical show.

The plebiscite was held without an electoral register. The fascist officials set up polling places under the direction of people who enjoyed their confidence. The latter were told beforehand on the basis of a rigid plan how many "yes" and "no" votes would be cast as well as the number of votes which would be nullified. These figures in no way would be affected by the actions of the electorate. Early in the day the polling places were opened without the people knowing how many votes had already been placed in the ballot boxes surreptitiously. During the day the people added their ballots to those that were already in the locked wooden boxes. In the evening the observers were asked to leave so that no one would be aware that the recount, which would be done out loud by the regime's straw men in charge of the polls, did not agree with the actual results. The deception, forgery and mockery were exceedingly low and brutally vulgar.

Any conclusions drawn from the Pinochet supplied figures will be off base because the figures are capricious, whimsical and unreal.

Corrupt Minority

The fact is that only a minority, corrupted and alien to the Chilean people's values, were shameless enough to accept Pinochet's constitution, made by Pinochet for Pinochet. The text of the constitution proclaims in a picturesque manner, using Christian and last names, that "army general Augusto Pinochet Ugarte" will be president in his own right until 11 May 1989 and he can remain in office after that date until 11 May 1997 if the military junta votes to keep him in office. It enables him to exercise absolute control without a congress or limitations of any kind and it even goes to the extreme of allowing him, since he is the sole holder of constituent power, to expand the terms and powers of office.

But the millions of "no" votes have changed the situation in Chile. Pinochet in vain finds solace in the numbers and percentages which he prepared, announced, explained and with which he tried to shape the framework of his regime. He was forced to use the plebiscite as a last resort because he is faced with a crisis and popular protest is growing as dissension is seen at the top levels of the fascist regime. Today in every block, on every street in all cities throughout Chile the people know that a clear majority voted "no" and this news is spreading to every town, district, commune, rural hamlet and village, factory, office, school, mine, port and to both the private and public services sector.

Popular Mobilization

The mobilization of the people, the degree of unity and the willingness to join in the struggle has been significant. This time Pinochet's opponents have included, in addition to those who fought against the 11 September 1973 putsch, those who like the Christian Democrats became aware of the deceipt and reconsidered, those who had a harsh experience and began to join the opponents of fascism as well as other sectors which played a role in the coup and now understand that Chile needs to return to a democratic form of government. The tyrant's base of support has narrowed. Even a former junta member has said that the armed forces should become aware of the direction they are headed. Pinochet, who used them to protect fraud, is making them play a dishonorable role.

A new phase has begun. The tyrant wants to present things as though the battle had just ended. No, the battle has just begun. The Chilean people will free themselves "by reason or by force," as it is written on our national seal. The secretary general of the Chilean Communist Party, Luis Corvalan said: "Day after day the key to the situation will lie in the unity of the working class and the people, their indomitable spirit of combat and in the reaching of an agreement between all the democratic forces. There is no tyranny that can resist the onslaught of the masses."

The new period will see an even harsher struggle, an even broader and more dynamic one. There will be less sectarianism as tested methods of combat are improved and as new, sharper methods of combat developed by the people are introduced.

8599
CSO: 3010

AMBASSADOR RESIGNS TO ENTER PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 26 Aug 80 pp 1-A, 8-A [Text] Virgilio Barco, our ambassador to the United States announced his resignation yesterday in a letter to President Turbay Ayala and said he will return to the country to contact all sectors to study problems and contribute to their solutions.

Barco did not refer specifically to his presidential candidacy, but it is evident (and this is how political circles understand it) that he is coming home to work for that nomination.

The diplomat was in Bogota just 10 days ago and decided, in a dialog with the chief of state, to resign from his post.

The letter sent yesterday from the U.S. capital to the president of the republic reads as follows:

Washington, D.C., 25 August 1980

Dr Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala, President of the Republic

Dear Mr President:

In accordance with our conversation I am submitting to you my resignation as ambassador to the United States, a post I have held since 1 June 1977, when I was appointed by the administration of Dr Alfonso Lopez Michelsen, and which I have retained for the past 2 years through the confirmation you were kind enough to grant me at the start of your administration.

Recently I have received from you, Mr President, the most generous demonstrations of your trust, which have encouraged me to play an active role in carrying out the instructions received directly from the chief of state and from the Ministry of Foreign Relations for the discharge of my duties vis-a-vis the government of the United States. I am deeply grateful for the way in which you, Mr President, have made it possible-- with your constant attention to problems which it has been my job to expedite and the timeliness of your decisions concerning such matters--for the embassy to carry out its task in the manner in which you surely expected and I desired.

The sole reason for my resignation is that I understand that I can now serve the nation and my party in another way, and I have decided to study the circumstances of each in conjunction with my compatriots and in particular with my fellow party members, in the development of joint action in the immediate future. My absence for 3 years from our country, even though I was involved in the negotiation of very delicate international matters for the Colombian Government, helping to present them in the best light and solving them within the existing possibilities, inclines me, and I would even say forces me, to develop, in a more immediate and permanent fashion, my relations with members of congress, political leaders and leaders of the social and economic sectors for the purpose of examining the various events which are occurring at a dizzying pace at all levels of national activity. Bearing in mind also that the process of our party's organization, in which I had a part, appears to be ended, with good results and unanimous agreement, I have heard the opinions of well-known people and of numerous friends who have asked me to return to the country for the purpose I have mentioned.

I do not need to tell you, Mr President, that nothing will change my spirit of cooperation and support for the government, whose link with the party of which I am a member is inexorable, as the documents of former presidents and leaders of the Liberal Party attest. Of course, my personal loyalty to you goes hand in hand with my recognition of the special bonds which have united us for many years and by our close cooperation during these last 2 years. Please accept, Mr President, with the sentiments of my highest consideration, the expression of my best wishes for the continued success of your administration and for your personal future. Virgilio Barco.

Virgilio Barco

8735
CSO: 3010

PRESIDENTIAL HOPEFULS' CANDIDACIES ANNOUNCED

Liberal Hopeful

Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 28 Aug 80 pp 1, 2

[Article by Carlos J. Gonzalez]

[Text] With 205 votes cast for Dr Victor Mosquera Chaux and 40 for Jorge Mario Eastman, and with 36 abstentions, the president of the National Liberal Directorate, Dr Victor Mosquera Chaux, was chosen last evening by the Congress, meeting in plenary session, to be a candidate for president of the republic.

Dr Mosquera Chaux had been entered as a candidate for that high office 5 hours prior to that time, at 1100 hours, in a close vote in a caucus of Liberal parliamentarians in which he had received 80 votes compared with 84 in favor of his rival, Jorge Mario Eastman.

The voting in the full Congress, which began at 1600 hours, came after several Conservative congressmen expressed their discontent with the fact that Mosquera was nominated without any consultation with the Conservative Party, which is part of congress.

In this regard, Conservative congressman Alberto Casas Santamaria said that since there was no previous agreement to support the Liberal group's nomination, he was inviting Conservatives to vote for Dr Mosquera Chaux or some other candidate, or to abstain.

Liberal Caucus

As EL SIGLO had reported in its previous day's edition, the forces which supported the two candidates for the office--Drs Victor Mosquera Chaux and Jorge Mario Eastman--appeared to be equally divided until yesterday morning. This was fully confirmed when the vote was taken in the Liberal parliamentarians' caucus, which began at 1130 hours and ended after 1300 hours. In that voting the count was taken by a radio system very much like that over which an afternoon of horseracing is broadcast, and Drs Victor Mosquera and Jorge Eastman alternated in the lead, with very little difference showing in the vote count.

Finally the count showed 80 votes for Dr Mosquera and 84 for Jorge Mario Eastman.

Neither Winners nor Losers

Having received the majority in the Liberal Caucus, Dr Mosquera Chaux, in an emotional speech, thanked the caucus for the honor bestowed on him, suggested the possibility that through popular vote his position as a presidential candidate might be replaced by that of candidate for vice president of the republic, and highly praised his rival of up to only a short time before, Dr Jorge Mario Eastman, who, he said, was in line for one of the highest positions in the republic.

Between bursts of applause from Eastman supporters who were present, Mosquera Chaux said that in the close contest he had just finished there were neither winners nor losers.

Final Election

As was expected, the plenary session of the congress to choose the candidate began at 1630 hours, with Dr Mosquera Chaux standing for the Liberal Party, and with several Conservative congressmen expressing their reservations about the manner in which the choice was made.

Finally the election was held, with the result noted above.

Conservative Hopeful

Bogota EL ESPECTADOR in Spanish 13 Aug 80 p 4-A

[Article by Carlos Murcia]

[Excerpt] The candidacy of Rodrigo Marin Bernal, former minister of labor, will be launched today with a tribute to him at the Hotel Tequendama at 2000 hours. Speakers at that ceremony, in addition to the guest or honor, will be Senator Alvaro Gomez Hurtado, who expects to make some important suggestions about Conservative policy, and Cundinamarca union leader Alvaro Ramirez.

Marin Bernal, who belongs to the Alvarist sector of the Conservative Party, has been insisting that the presidential platform of his party be opened up to create new options among which the convention might choose in good time.

Rodrigo Martín Bernal

8735
CSO: 3010

HEAVY INVESTMENTS IN MINERAL PROSPECTING PLANNED

Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 13 Aug 80 p 12

[Text] Pedro Pablo Morcillo, the manager of the Colombian Mining Enterprise [ECONOMINAS], announced yesterday that the national government will invest 700 million pesos in studies on potential deposits of copper, bauxite, phosphoric rock and gold.

Morcillo pointed out that the government has given top priority to four large mining projects, which are solidly based on important existing reserves in different areas of the national territory.

The manager of ECONOMINAS said: "We can single our four very important mining projects:

"The first is a technical-economic feasibility study which we are carrying out on the phosphoric rock mines of Pesca (Boyaca) and Sardinata (Norte de Santander). This study will be completed in the coming year, and will permit us to build a phosphoric rock processing plant for the production of phosphate fertilizers and phosphoric acid for the improvement of agricultural soils. Approximately 250 million pesos will be invested in this project.

"We have also started two studies on copper deposits in the Pantanos-Pegaporcito-Choco area and in Mocoa-Putumayo. We will undertake feasibility studies to determine the size of the reserves and to study the technical and economic aspects which will then allow Colombia to enter definitively into the copper age.

"Also in progress is the project for mechanizing the mining of gold in the national mines of Marmato, which are very rich but are being exploited in a very primitive way. These studies at present involve an investment of 100 million pesos and will also cover the mechanization of the processing of gold in those mines.

"Other projects which the government is contemplating in the field of mine development--aside from the phosphates, cooper and gold projects, which are short term--are the long term aluminum projects based on studies of bauxite in Cauca and south of the Cauca Valley, in order to produce alumina and then reduce it to aluminum."

9204
CSO: 3010

URANIUM DEPOSIT FOUND IN SMALL TOWN IN CALDAS

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 29 Aug 80 p 6-A

[Article by special correspondent German Manga]

[Text] Berlin, 28 Aug--On 22 December 1976, after having walked more than 1,000 km from Guajira and as they were crossing a cattle ranch where 50 cows were grazing, engineers Jaime Torres and Jorge Bogota listened as the instruments they were carrying started to emit the same beep-beep that electronic alarms emit.

They then looked at each other in surprise and checked the instruments. They thought they were suffering from a hallucination caused by fatigue, but as they moved forward the needles of the instruments tilted more and more and the sound increased.

Although they had spent months as salaried workers traveling all over the country on foot, testing, this was the only productive day's work they had had since the very beginning, but it came ahead of time because analysts had expected that it would occur in Los Llanos and it surprised the engineers that it came in the southernmost part of Caldas.

By means of a heavy old telephone reminiscent of those in a train station in a Western movie, they transmitted the news 12 hours later to their immediate superiors: "We have found several deposits of uranium in Berlin, Caldas. We are sure of its location. The only problem you will have to solve when you send the geologists will be to find the town on the map."

A Shock to the Town

There is now a group of engineers, geologists and experts of various nationalities who live in a camp at the edge of the town of Berlin.

Sometimes townspeople come close enough to greet them but when they speak to each other it is as old enemies who have learned to tolerate each other thanks to the passage of time.

Berlin had indeed been a quiet town, too far away from the rest of the world to accept all at once the change brought about by the uranium and the engineers of Minatone, the French company which undertook the prospecting. This was easily demonstrated during the first few days when local men, frightened, fought the helicopters with gunshots, or when crowds of people formed around the blond engineers, who they thought looked like television actions, in order to hear them speak French.

The crux of the discord, however, was that no one in Berlin had heard of uranium before.

Berlin is a town located at the top of a hill which is reached by means of winding roads full of yellow dirt on which, at any point, there is the possibility of a landslide. The nearest cities are Manizales, which is a 10-hour walk away, and La Dorada, which is a 6-hour walk away.

A priest who goes to the town every week to preach gathered the people together and, in an attempt to explain the elementary principles of radioactivity, made reference to the childlike tales the truckers bring to Berlin about their trips to the city. "Uranium is like krypton," he said, "and has enough energy to illuminate the world for 20 years."

The explanation came across as vague and too inexact for that group of good people who had no reason to suddenly understand that they have always lived on what may be the largest uranium deposit in Colombia and who until a few days ago were worried about the possibility of being the target of an invasion by horse thieves.

But these primitive people, who have always made their living from agriculture and cattle raising and who in less than a year have come to know more things than they ever imagined existed or would ever see--Europeans, the helicopter, radio networks, metropolitan newspapers, engineering machines, plans, drilling machines, photographic equipment, air conditioning, silk ties and French perfume, among others--were convinced that they had won the lottery 4 days ago when they had the opportunity to meet a minister of state--the minister of mines and energy--who said to them: "The nation's largest uranium deposits may well be in Berlin."

There Is Sleep

Previously, strangers did not arrive in Berlin aside from the tricksters and certain dishonest Antiochian merchants who had been thrown out of the other Caldas towns.

For months now, the stores have been filling up early in the morning and have had to remain open until almost midnight to serve the gangs of men who came to break open the mountains and the skilled personnel who came to map the region and find out with instruments--from ordinary picks to high-powered drills--where the uranium is.

Thus far they have announced that in Berlin there is definitely a large deposit of uranium in the shape of a huge buried egg. Along the length of its curvature there is an exploitable layer of 1.2 meters.

But nothing definite will be known about the quantity and quality of the uranium that exists there until the men have drilled the entire subsoil, like moles, with their powerful machinery.

So far, they have reached the exploitable outer layer at different places and have taken samples which they turn with machines into lumps shaped like bullets, which are then analyzed in nuclear laboratories in France and Canada.

There, expert physicists as smart as Einstein have said that the Berlin minerals contain an average of 1.6 parts of uranium per million and that if it is plentiful it constitutes a source which will produce billions of dollars for the country in a short time.

Because of the oval shape of the deposit there are parts of the surface where pieces of mineral are found which contain uranium. They are actually black rocks which do not look at all like krypton and which many of the peasants of the area have known about for a long time. They thought it was a useless type of coal because it would not burn. The geologists explain that these rocks are masses of phosphates rich in uranium and demonstrate--with the counters which the engineers used to find the deposit and which look for all the world like the instruments used by gold prospectors in the Rico Mc Pato comic strip--how in the presence of one of these rocks the instrument's dial indicates a high degree of radioactivity.

However, the French engineers and geologists warn that although it is clear that the deposit is rich, exploitation can only be carried out over a long period of time because it requires going through long drawn-out stages.

These days, where previously the darkness concealed only the pastures, dozens of workers get up every day to drill the uranium deposits.

They use high-speed modern drills which push aside the mud and remove the water until they reach the exploitable layer. In order to probe the productive capacity and the extent of the areas in which there are what the engineers call "anomalies," they have up to now built 79 trenches and tunnels and they will build many more in the coming months. Because of this, if it were possible to take an X-ray picture of the areas near Berlin, the immense mountains with their virgin growth and the pastures used for raising zebu would look like a gigantic rat maze.

This first stage of prospecting, according to present estimates, will take 2 years, but it is possible, depending on the findings, for this period to stretch out to 5 years.

Later it will be necessary to carry out the stages of exploiting and, above all, of producing uranium.

In Berlin there are now people who know the general facts and even some of the obscure facts about uranium. In the main plaza several men wearing wide linen trousers and white and black striped hemp-soled sandals which make them look as though they are standing on two rats, argue, with reason, that thanks to this hitherto unknown town, Caldas may become the richest department in Colombia, because the engineers have explained to them that in the future uranium may be more expensive than coffee.

Uranium was discovered at the end of the last century by the French scientist Becquerel, who wrote in his personal notes that "It gave off strong radiation." This comment served as a point of reference for Marie and Pierre Curie who, using it as a base, undertook research to determine what this radiation was all about.

Thus they discovered that uranium changed into other elements. That was the principle involved in discovering radium, and as a result of the research which won for them the Nobel Prize for Physics, the uses of radium were discovered as well as the complete cycle of the transformation of uranium into radium, then into plutonium, and finally into ordinary lead. The energy of uranium is enormous. It has been calculated that in its transformation microscopic particles are emitted at speeds of more than 14,000 km per second. Now, based on this, studies are being conducted all over the world which will shortly allow uranium to be used as a generating source of different kinds of energy. A Berlin woman explained it by saying that soon uranium will be used for everything "from moving trucks to lighting bulbs."

The studies which Minatone is carrying out at the present time will be used by the government in deciding whether to create a governmental or a mixed enterprise for the exploitation of uranium. That is something which must take place during the next 10 years because it requires the building of a plant for separating the uranium from the phosphates.

In Vaupes and Guainia

What has happened in Berlin represents the materialization of discussions about uranium in Colombia which started in 1978 in the districts of Vaupes and Guainia. At that time Eduardo Gaitan Duran, minister of mining and petroleum, announced a contract for exploratory work to locate radioactive deposits in a 50,000 square km area.

The contract referred to, signed by the Colombian Institute of Nuclear Affairs and the National Uranium Enterprise Corporation (ENUSA) of Spain, was the third establishing an association. ENUSA was at that time prospecting in the departments of Santander, Norte de Santander, Boyaca, Cundinamarca and Meta with a team of 70 Colombian experts and 4 Spanish technicians.

It was also stipulated in the contract that there would be a prospecting stage lasting 8 years, which could be extended to 12 years in the event of a lack of the necessary support facilities.

In 1979 the Geological and Mining Research Institute (INGEOMINAS) pointed out in an official report that Colombia might have deposits of 40,000 tons of uranium, principally U_3O_8 (uranite, 1 pound of which produces heat equivalent to 8 tons of coal).

For the present, while the people of Berlin understand that for many years they have had their homes and their animals on top of kilograms of a mineral which will be one of the most coveted in the world before the millenium ends, and that their cows have been stepping on the black rocks and their children have been throwing chunks of phosphate and uranium at one another, in Bogota learned studies are being carried out to decide the future of the deposit. And later on it is possible that this semi-isolated community, which is now being constantly astonished by new things, may see its belief that it has won the lottery become a reality because, in addition to employment during these first stages and later on, it will receive compensation as it becomes necessary to use its property for the exploitation of uranium.

The members of the community heard this straight from the mouth of Humberto Avila, minister of mines, and also from the municipal inspector the same day that he and another prominent person of the town attended a meeting of important officials where they became acquainted with turkey pate, French bread, caviar and French champagne.

9204
CSO: 3010

PERIODIC GASOLINE PRICE RISES FORESEEN

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 13 Sep 80 pp 1-A, 8-A

[Article by Fernando Barrero]

[Text] The government has revealed that it proposes to reintroduce the system of gradual rises in the price of fuels to avoid the trauma caused by sharp although spaced increases.

Luis Enrique Giraldo Neira, deputy minister of mines and energy, said that this point of view was advocated by the minister of Mines and Energy, Humberto Avila Moara. It also has the support of former minister Juan Jose Turbay, at present vice chairman of the board of directors of the Colombian Petroleum Enterprise (ECOPETROL).

Giraldo Neira stated to EL TIEMPO it is sought to "make a gentler transition for the people, not monthly as was done at one time, but not as has been carried out recently."

Precisely in order to decide on a similar mechanism, the member nations of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) are meeting Monday in Vienna (Austria).

With regard to the establishment of gradual price rises in Colombia, Minister Avila Mora told EL TIEMPO recently, in Riohacha, that "there is a price rise at any time. Notification is given the day after, not even on the same day."

Other sources consulted by this newspaper stated that ECOPETROL's losses so far this year, 1980, already exceed 1 billion pesos. The enterprise is importing oil and gasoline at very high international prices and it sells those products at a low price in Colombia.

According to the Petroleum Industry Information Center (CIIP), in 1979 Colombia imported 8,995,136 barrels of oil, costing it $210.5 million. It also bought 9,302,998 barrels of gasoline for $314.6 million.

The president of ECOPETROL, Jose Fernando Isaza Delgado, said, on this topic, that, in order to save fuel, "it is necessary to touch the most sensitive spots of the consumers and one of those spots is the pocketbook.

"There is no doubt that it is necessary to attain real prices," Isaza said in the recent forum organized on the National Integration Plan (PIN) by the National Federation of Businessmen (FENALCO) and the University of the Andes.

Isaza added: "Efficient use of crude oil in Colombia will be achieved only with realistic price policies. In 1979, owing to domestic price rises, the increase in fuel consumption was only 2 percent, while in the last decade that figure had been 5 percent."

Former minister Juan Jose Turbay, who initiated the system of gradual rises in the Lopez Michelsen Administration and continued then by his successor, Jaime Garcia Parra, stated that gasoline should be treated in the same way as the foreign exchange certificate.

He pointed out that by making increases quarterly, for example, trauma and shock to the economy would be avoided. He mentioned four more strategies, which, together with that one, would enable ECOPETROL to fulfill its goals of exploration and exploitation, namely:

1. A strict, effective fuel economy plan that will include a progressive restriction of consumption.

2. Establishment of a marketing agency that will be responsible for the amount of fuels required, in order to take care of domestic consumption. That is the only way in which ECOPETROL could be freed of the "overwhelming burden" and allocate its industrial profits for carrying out the goals of the PIN in the energy sector.

3. Establishment of the National Exploration Fund, already provided for in the PIN, by means of grants and contributions that possibly require legislation, owing to their origin.

4. Promotion of a program for replacing gasoline with other energy products that will contribute, together with restriction of superfluous consumption, to decreasing the amounts of imported fuels.

Turbay stated that, among the various energy substitutes for petroleum with present possibilities in Colombia, are coal, geothermal energy, synthetic fuels and bituminous shale that may be affordable at future prices.

Then he pointed out the following: "No substitute source of energy can replace oil in the next 10 years and, consequently, every possible effort must be made by the country and its oil policy must be oriented toward the discovery of new producing fields that will guarantee us a period of self-sufficiency for the rest of this year."

The former minister pointed out that 55 percent of the price of automobile gasoline to the consumer goes to the National Highway Fund plus a 10 percent sales tax. "Thus, from every increase in domestic prices, only about 40 percent is real income for ECOPETROL. This has to be changed," Turbay concluded.

Self-sufficiency

In turn, the president of ECOPETROL, Isaza Delgado, stated that, in spite of its difficulties, the enterprise will drill 37 wells this year.

He felt confident that Colombia will succeed in a few years in returning to petroleum self-sufficiency. He stressed the importance of the contract for exploitation of crude oil at Cocorna, which will be up to a daily production volume of 20,000 barrels in 7 years.

On its part, the CIIP, headed by Simon J. Martinez Emiliani, also assigned importance to the Cocona field, as well as to the Castilla field, and it pointed out that "they are a good omen for a reduction of crude oil imports."

It estimated that, in 1985, these discoveries and development of other fields will probably be producing 50,000 barrels a day, which would continue to be increased gradually until they attain 98,000 barrels a day in 1990.

It is estimated that this production will remain constant until the end of the century and by then, according to Martinez Emiliani, synthetic products could contribute some 146,000 barrels a day. With this contribution, by the year 2000, it would no longer be necessary to import crude oil.

Martinez stated that with those expectations, import projections for the next 20 years will probably be as follows (in barrels a day):

1981, 72,500; 1982, 85,600; 1983, 99,200; 1984, 101,500; 1985, 53,100; 1990, 52,000; 2000, self-sufficiency.

At present, Colombia is importing an average of 45,000 barrels a day.
A barrel equals 42 gallons.

10,042
CSO: 3010

EL CERREJON COAL PROSPECTS DISCUSSED

World's Largest Coal Mine

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 6 Sep 80 p 2-B

[Article by special correspondent Fernando Barrero]

[Text] Riohacha, 5 Sep--President Julio Cesar Turbay served as a guarantor for implementing the most ambitious industrial program ever undertaken in Colombia, and thanks to which the country will have the largest coal mine in the world in less than 5 years.

The event took place at noon today in the presence of the whole cabinet and almost 300 special guests who also witnessed the signing of the commercialization contract between the state enterprise Colombian Coal Company (CARBOCOL) and International Colombia Resources Corporation (INTERCOR).

The ceremony took place in the Hotel Gimaura and the first speaker was the governor of the department, Eduardo Abuchaibe Ochoa, who pointed out that, on 20 May, they had sent the chief of state a message in which they informed him of the "dark forebodings" hovering over La Guajira, especially owing to a large number of unfulfilled promises, in spite of President Turbay's personal concern.

"Industry and commerce were in an incredible status quo," Abuchaibe stated.

He stated that 2 weeks later, he received an assignment from the government to take over the destiny of the department and he noted that today insecurity is still a big problem due to the huge amount of illegal weapons.

Nevertheless, he pointed out that there already are new highways, bids for others, repairs on several others, aqueducts and sewer systems, housing plans, expansion and remodeling of hospitals and progress is being made in the process of replacing hydrocarbons, in addition to bringing drinking water now to the native population.

He stated that the departmental government and the councils of the largest municipalities have received authorization to contract loans amounting to 850 million pesos for public works of various nature. He admitted that, although "it is not possible to fish at night in La Guajira, the situation is quite different from what it was months ago."

He stressed the collaboration of the Armed Forces and of the citizens in general and he indicated that he favored continuing the discussion concerning the Palomino industrial project, but in concert with the government.

After the speech by Abuchaibe Ochoa, President Turbay Ayala spoke. His speech is published in another place in the present issue.

The minister of mines and energy, Humberto Avila Mora, spoke in third place. He said that the El Cerrejon project will entail a challenge for CARBOCOL in technical and economic matters.

In technical matters, there will be contracting of highly qualified technical Colombian and foreign personnel, while economically it will mean investments on the order of $1.25 billion.

He emphasized the activity of the present minister of Finance, Jaime Garcia Parra, who created CARBOCOL while he was minister of mines and awarded the contracts that brought that initiative into being today.

Avila stated that implementation of the coal project will be the basis for other industrial development projects beneficial to the coast, to La Guajira and to Colombia. He concluded:

"The pastoral stage has ended and we are entering into modernization of La Guajira," Avila Mora stated.

Then the president of INTERCOL, Ramon de la Torre, spoke. He stressed the good features of the program from the point of view of the energy crisis and he pointed out that the job was initiated by the then president, Misael Pastrana Borrero, was contracted by the Lopez Michelsen Administration and today put in concrete form by the Turbay Ayala Administration.

He stated that he was pleased to be among those who have an opportunity to serve Colombia with this great work. Cerrejon has reserves estimated at 1.6 billion metric tons. The infrastructure for its exploitation will require investments amounting to 150 billion pesos and it provides, among other things, for a 160-kilometer railroad line, two airports and a sea terminal larger than any other now in the country.

Then the manager of CARBOCOL, Fernando Copete Saldarriaga spoke. He praised his predecessors, Hernan Garces and Andres Restrepo, and he said that thanks to Law 61 of 1979 Colombia will be the leading country in coal exploitation in Latin America.

After signature of the document in which the government's decision to commercialize the mines takes concrete shape, the minister of Enrique Vargas Ramirez spook briefly. He pointed out the content and importance of the announcements made by President Turbay.

He also handed over to the National Municipal Development Institute (INSFOPAL) checks for 17 million pesos for public works in La Guajira and he concluded his short speech by stating:

"I am going to propose to my department, Norte de Santander, that we become of the coast again, because the coast will be the pole of the country's development."

When it was believed that the ceremonies had ended, the second vice president of the Association of Professional Men of Guajira, Unaldo Fajardo Aguilar, spoke. He asked President Turbay several questions on the coal project.

He stated that it is not known whether the annual production will be 5, 15 or 25 million metric tons. It is not known on what basis royalties will be paid or whether half of the production will be for Colombia. He wondered why the railroad was run to Portete, making it 50 kilometers longer, and he raised doubts on the efficiency of the kind of train that will move the coal.

Minister Avila Mora answered and stated that the suggestions will be taken into account, but he pointed out that initiation of the infrastructure work is an irreversible fact.

Finally, Governor Abuchaibe spoke again to point out the importance of setting up a petrochemical complex in La Guajira and to praise the decision to turn Maicao into an industrial and commercial free zone.

Today was a holiday in the department. Therefore, businesses were shut down. At the conclusion of the events, President Turbay and his party left Riohacha for San Andres and Providencia islands.

The map shows the location of what will be the largest coal mine in the world, El Cerrejon, and some of the construction jobs provided for, like the 150-kilometer railroad that will go to Portete, where the largest sea terminal in the country will also be.
Key: 1. Caribbean Sea; 2. railroad; 3. Lake Maracaibo

A Hope Or a Fraud

Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 8

[Article by Cecilia Rodriguez Maya]

[Text] From the initial joy in the government when the matter of exploitation of the largest coal mine in the world, located at El Cerrejon in La Guajira took concrete form, the atmosphere has turned into serious doubts, charges, suspicions and accusations.

Nothing less could be expected, when a contract of those proportions, meaning the largest investment made by the country in all its history, is made. The feasibility studies alone, which took almost 4 years, cost $56 million, and the infrastructure costs to start exploitation within 5 years approximately have been estimated at $3 billion or some 150,000 million pesos, 607 times greater than the largest contract made up to now and half of which is the responsibility of the Colombian state.

During the exploitation period, 11 metric tons of earth will be removed for every metric ton of coal mined and the aim is to make sales of 15 to 25 million metric tons a year.

The map shows the exact location of the immense coal-bearing area that is entering into development for industrial exploitation of the largest project in the world. Area A is the sector being mined by CARBOCOL [Colombian Coal Company]. Area B is the part corresponding to the project signed by Colombia with the American company and that is being subjected, at present, to heated controversy because of alleged irregularities.

The contract between INTERCOL [International Colombia Resources Corporation], a subsidiary of EXXON in the United States, and CARBOCOL was signed for 23 years and, according to the study, in that time only one-fourth of the coal found at a depth of 200 meters would be extracted.

All the figures range in the millions. Hence, the present doubts, the charges and the mistrust that are beginning to spread among important persons like former president Carlos Lleras who has requested a public debate to clarify the negotiations between CARBOCOL and INTERCOL and to determine its suitability or unsuitability to the country.

In addition, the vice president of the Association of Professional Men of La Guajira stated serious doubt on that project to the president of the Republic during the inauguration ceremony of the jobs for putting the mine in operation. He stated that the amount of coal that will be extracted annually has not been specified, that the bases for payment of royalties are not clear either and other doubts on the conditions.

In the Senate of the Republic, the minister of mines and energy was summoned, among others, to examine the government's decisions in connection with the El Cerrejon contract, regarded as the most important one made in Colombia. The senators who will be responsible for the debate have requested guarantees to have access to all the documents on the subject.

International Intrigues

Rumors are also current stating that the accusations against INTERCOL and on the conditions of the negotiations unfavorable to the Colombian enterprise are merely interventions spread about like powder by large international companies interested in participating in the project costing millions and who were left out of the bidding. The name of the World Bank, the largest finance agency in the world, is among the schemers.

It is rumored, in circles close to the problem, that some of those international firms have stooped so low as to undermine the image of EXXON in Colombia and jeopardize the contract signed.

Accusations and Criticisms

At any rate, those who made the call to start the controversy that is beginning to show signs of a national debate, three economists working with CARBOCOL and who resigned their posts in the enterprise to back up their charges, stated that from 1976 to 1980, the costs of the project went from $350 million to $3,263,000,000, that the participation of the Colombian company is subject to a regressive table that may cause smaller income up to $5 billion, that EXXON will be the one benefited, because it will operate the project and that the railroad to transport the mineral from the mine to the port is not the one most advisable and it was laid out on too long a route.

One by one, the points in the accusation have been answered by officials of the contracting parties:

The coal mine has been located for the last 100 years. When bidding was closed, the necessary technical studies had not been performed and talks were in estimated terms. It was possible to establish the mine's production capacity in the millions of metric tons only after 3 years and a half. Therefore, the investment cost estimates went up from $300 million to $3 billion.

With regard to participation in the profits, both the representatives of INTERCOL and of CARBOCOL and the minister of mines flatly denied the accusation that a contract based on a regressive table is involved and they pointed out that both parties will have 50 percent and 63 percent of possible excess profits will be for the Colombian company.

With regard to the railroad, they pointed out that originally a diesel type was scheduled, owing to the fact that the area does not have a thermoelectric plant sufficiently large for an electric railroad, but that decision is not irreversible, if, on completion of the setup period, construction of a thermoelectric plant has been completed.

Concerning the increase in the mileage on the route of the railroad, it is based on the fact that Portete Bay, where the arrival point will be, offers natural conditions that will make it a natural channel for large tonnage ships to enter. In that way, greater expenditures on dredging and conditioning at another point on the coast will be saved.

Explanations

"It is ridiculous to think that any of the contracting enterprises is going to prefer what may prove to be more costly and unfavorable in a project of world magnitude and investments in the many millions," the representatives of INTERCOL and CARBACOL stated.

They also said that EXXON merits all the confidence of the Colombian Government no only because it is the largest oil company in the world but also because it has been associated with Colombia for 60 years.

They also observed that the feasibility studies were prepared by a specialized firm and the results are the product of 3 years of analysis contained in over 100 volumes.

In La Guajira: Complications Because of Coal

And while the conditions of the contract are being discussed in high places, the inhabitants of La Guajira are preparing for the event that will change the life of the region completely and will produce all the positive and negative effects entailed by the surprise entrance of progress.

In the first place, installation of the mine will require a labor force amounting to 8,000 jobs in direct employment during construction and 4,000 permanent jobs during exploitation. There will be centers for training personnel, a new community composed of the professionals who will work in the mine and their families, cars, aircraft, demand for products, trade, supermarkets, high school to take care of the population growth.

The region is regarded as underpopulated with 300,000 persons inhabiting its deserts and coasts and many of them belonging to native tribes.

The arrival of "development" and industrialization will bring with it their corresponding complications, but also an improvement in basic services, access roads and sources of work.

It is a fact known to all that La Guajira has become an emporium of rings of drug traffickers and many of its inhabitants grow marihuana and live on trading in the product. Reports have also been made on the high degree of insecurity prevailing in the region, practically in the hands of rival gang leaders with sophisticated weapons, automobiles, aircraft and ships for their productive business.

The obvious interference that this illegal trade will undergo with the arrival of the enterprise has already begun to be felt. The governor has already announced that drug traffickers and members of the various gangs are being controlled more severely. He said that "at present, in La Guajira, it is not possible to fish at night, but the situation is quite different from some months ago."

While some anticipate with anxiety that "progress will ride roughshod" over them, others see the arrival of the coal-mining industry as "a dark foreboding."

10,042
CSO: 3010

ALARCON ON CUBA'S UN STAND ON PUERTO RICO

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 7 Sep 80 p 16

[Interview with Ricardo Alarcon, Cuban vice-minister of foreign relations and former Cuban permanent representative to the United Nations, by Pedro Martinez Pirez, time and place not given]

[Text] [Question] Alarcon, I would like to know your opinion of the significance of the recent agreement of the United Nations Committee for Decolonization regarding Puerto Rican independence.

[Answer] I think that this is a very important resolution, for several reasons. First of all, because of the things defined by that resolution, the principles it stresses and the proposals it makes; it is also important because of the votes cast in its favor; and finally I think it is additionally significant because of the timing of its approval.

As far as the contents are concerned, the resolution clearly reaffirms the right of the Puerto Rican people to independence, and points out in great detail the obligation of the United States to turn over completely all power to the people of Puerto Rico. It also demands that the United States present as soon as possible a plan for the decolonization of Puerto Rico, in accordance with Resolution 1514 of the General Assembly. Since 1960 that resolution has demanded that all colonialist states take the necessary immediate steps to return all power to colonized peoples so that they can exercise complete dependence [as printed].

The resolution also states that any measure to modify the status of Puerto Rico without the consent of the people is unacceptable. Thus, the resolution deals a direct, well-aimed blow to the annexation plans and manipulations of American imperialists and those sectors which currently control the colonial government in Puerto Rico.

With the approval of this text last Wednesday, the United Nations Committee for Decolonization makes it illegal, illicit and inadmissible (in terms of the United Nations) to make any attempt such as the one announced by Puerto Rican colonial Governor Romulo Barcelo. He has announced that next year he will hold a plebiscite, assuming, of course, that he will be reelected in the upcoming elections.

The resolution also constitutes a rejection of the annexationist phrases in the Republican Party platform, the positions of Mr Reagan; and any maneuver those people may try to make in the future has already been condemned and rejected by the international community.

This event is very valuable and important to the people of Puerto Rico, since it guarantees international solidarity in case anyone tries to put into practice such annexationist proposals in the near future.

It is also important to note that the committee that has been studying the situation in Puerto Rico since 1972, has arrived at clearer and clearer definitions; year after year it has presented more and more accurate and precise descriptions of the measures that must be taken to decolonize the island. It has also become much clearer in its demand that the United States adhere to the anti-colonialist position of the United Nations, while drumming up support for this resolution. That is, far from weakening, support for the Puerto Rican independence movement has expanded and become much sharper in this year's debate, as international proposals become more specific. Of course, the widespread support is due to changes that have taken place in the world--progressive changes--and to the growth of popular backing in Latin America for the Puerto Rican struggle for independence. As a result, the U.N. member states and the members of the committee have had to pay much more attention to popular sentiment and take on much stronger positions.

In this United Nations resolution, in addition to what I mentioned earlier, there is also a much clearer condemnation of the activities of the U.S. Navy on the island of Vieques, where provocative actions have taken place that affect the lives of the Puerto Ricans who live in that area. Some Latin American regimes have even cooperated with the Yankees in these activities. Moreover, the resolution criticizes all U.S. military activities in Puerto Rico, and the repression by the U.S. Government against patriotic groups. It once again demands that the United States agree to allow a United Nations mission to go investigate the situation.

[Question] You also said, Alarcon, that the timing of this United Nations agreement was important. Why?

[Answer] Sure, because on the one hand the United Nations discussion coincided with an election year in the United States, so that country exerted pressure to prevent decisions from being made that would run counter to its interests. That pressure tends to make some people try to avoid confrontations or any decision that would openly antagonize the United States. However, that factor evidently carried no weight this time; as we said, the measure adopted was clearer than any in the past, and the yes vote was much higher. On the other hand, we have the fact that this resolution was passed before the United States held its elections, before it was decided who would be in the next administration. It is possible that it will be headed by an extremely reactionary man, Ronald Reagan, with an extremely reactionary platform, that of the Republican Party. Among other things, that platform advocates the annexation of Puerto Rico.

The approval of this resolution, thus, means a check, an obstacle, to the colonialist and assimilationist designs that the United States may have after the elections; it will also affect the decision that is made regarding the new colonial administration that is to be elected in November in Puerto Rico.

So now the Puerto Rican patriots have one more tool which they can use in their struggle for independence and their efforts to counteract the annexationist plans of the imperialists.

8926
CSO: 3010

'IMPERIALISM' SEEN AS 'CHRONIC DECOMPOSITION'

Havana CON LA GUARDIA EN ALTO in Spanish Jul 80 p 24

[Commentary by Osvaldo Ortega Nejme]

[Text] The general crisis of capitalism has entered a cyclical phase of chronic decomposition, basically characterized by a progressive weakening of the economy and an aggravated militarist aggression.

The constant debilitation is due directly to the break-down of the colonial and neocolonial system in the world; the intensification of the class struggle on an international level; the inevitable strengthening of socialism; and the powerful solidarity of the dozens of "Third World" countries, recently liberated, that have joined the combative Non-Aligned Movement.

One of the outstanding features of the current phase of capitalist disintegration on the international level is reflected in the uncontrollable inflation that is asphyxiating capitalism, and the aberrant stagnation of its economic growth that has practically immobilized it.

Economists, with a touch of satire in ambiguity, call this dual phenomenon "stagflation," from the English words "stagnation" and "inflation."

In other words, it is an explosive cocktail of investment capital recession mixed with a ferocious attack on the consumer through prices.

With regard to stagnation, the financial analysis firm Chips Economic Indicators reported recently that for the third quarter of this year, American economic activity could shrink by up to 3.1 percent, while the estimated growth of the Gross National Product (GNP) of 0.1 percent that had been forecast would actually be a drop of the same amount.

Inflation has reached the most disturbing proportions in the steady plummeting of workers' buying power, which suffered a comparative decrease of 7.9 percent in 1979.

According to statistical forecasters, that figure should range between 18 and 20 percent this year.

Food and fuel are among the products that cover the broadest range of the inflationary horizon, with 5.3 percent for the former and 3.9 percent for the latter.

An economy that declines instead of growing, that suffers continuing price increases instead of making products more accessible, is inexorably doomed to disintegration, especially if that economy is exposed to the corrosive rigors of monstruous military budgets, which spend billions of dollars annually without any return.

All these factors put together necessarily involve a high rate of unemployment; at this time it is more than 8 percent of the nation's work force.

In order to temporarily contain the inflationary spiral, Wall Street experts recommended a prohibitive increase of bank interest rates for loans, from 12¼ percent in September 1979 to 20 percent in April 1980. To give an idea of what this surge in interest rates represents, it is worth noting that until recently, federal laws considered 14 percent to be usury.

The purpose of these desperate measures is to contain and dampen demand for "cheap money" in order to curb inflation. But at the same time, these stratagems cut off the flow of investment capital, and manage only to deepen economic stagnation.

It would be naive, on the other hand, to limit this phenomenon to the U.S. economy. We are using it as a mere reference, and the pertinent references should be used in the case of other less powerful and developed capitalist nations.

A report read by the president of the Club of Rome on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the founding of that institution, reads as follows:

". . .(there are no) valid plans or even ideas about how to provide jobs for 300 million men and women who are currently unemployed in the world, or how to create the billion more jobs that will be indispensable during the eighties and nineties. . ."

"Not even the powerful industrial nations of the West," adds the study in question, "know how to absorb their 17 million unemployed and control inflation at the same time."

Of those 17 million people, at least 7 million, more than 40 percent of the unemployed, are youths under 25 years of age.

The statistics could not be more telling. Capitalism, in its imperialist phase, is internationalizing its political conflicts as well as its economic decomposition. The bourgeois world, in its agonizing convulsions, is spreading inflation and stagnation to the far corners of the Earth. It is also thrusting weaker economies that are more dependent on imported hydrocarbons and single export products, into the depths of bankruptcy and catastrophe.

In order to escape this apocalyptic vision, there is only one alternative: the socialist way of production, which is thriving and flourishing on a third of the Earth.

The system of bourgeois exploitation, which according to Marx came into the world spouting blood and mud, will return to the grave being dug for it by the international working class, in all the repulsive glory it was born in. It has not been beautified much during these years by the mud of an ideology that raised lies to the rank of science, by the blood spilled in its countless wars of useless expansion, and by a hegemony that today is dying like the ashes of a finally extinguished fire.

8926
CSO: 3010

COOPERATION ACTIVITIES IN ETHIOPIA REPORTED

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 65

[Text] Cooperative relations between Cuba and Ethiopia on the civilian level began in March 1977 when Commander in Chief Fidel Castro visited that country. Since then various documents have emerged establishing cooperation in sectors such as: agriculture, public health, education at various levels (including higher education), construction, the sugar industry, fishing, transportation and communications, physical planning, etc.

There are now more than 500 Cuban advisers in Ethiopia under these programs. They have cooperated in the construction of the entire irrigation system to develop agriculture in that country, where the shortage of water requires conservation efforts seen in few other places in Africa. This work included the construction of dams and canals, as well as a microdam in Debre Zeit. Important work has also been done in veterinary medicine, in terms of the vaccination of animals and measures to preserve their health.

These efforts in the agricultural sector and in public health are considered among the most fruitful. Within the latter sector the most notable work being done is the vaccination of the Ethiopian population. The brigade of doctors and health technicians in Ethiopia is the largest Cuban brigade in Africa. The Cubans work in 12 of the 14 provinces of the country. In the field of education, assistance is being provided at the secondary, technical-professional and university levels. There are also plans for consultation by Cuban educators at a primary education center.

The Cuban technicians in Ethiopia are taking the first steps toward building roads to and from the coffee plantations. It is well known that coffee is one of the most important sources of foreign currency for that African nation. Cubans are also participating in the preliminary work on the cement plant that is to be built in Ethiopia with the assistance of the German Democratic Republic. The Cuban advisers will participate in the actual construction and assembly of the plant in Murgar.

Cooperative efforts also include care for more than 2,000 young Ethiopian students who have received scholarships to schools on the Isla de Pinos, where they study from the primary grades to the pre-university level. Another group of Ethiopian scholarship students is studying at Cuban universities.

Two inter-governmental sessions have taken place between Cuba and Ethiopia, the first in Addis Ababa and the second in Havana. They have resulted in the identification of new areas in which internationalist cooperation can be expanded. After the second session concluded in Havana, cooperation with Ethiopia was extended to the food industry, light industry, transportation and communications, and consultation in project offices.

The Cuban workers are engaged in study, training and research projects in nearly all the sectors of the economy and services in Ethiopia.

8926
CSO: 3010

GUINEAN ENVOY HAILS RELATION WITH COUNTRY

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 12 Sep 80 pp 80-81

[Interview with Raoul Conde, ambassador of the Republic of Guinea, by Fulvio Fuentes, in Cuba; date not specified]

[Text] An oil painting of Jose Marti presides over the interview. The bookcase contains several books concerning Che Guevara. On the wall, there is a picture of President Sekou Toure and a map of the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea, highlighting the political and geographical unification of the fraternal African nation. There are no specific questions or answers. This is the 20th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries, and the Guinean ambassador, His Excellency Raoul Conde, lets his thoughts flow.

He says, "First, it is a great honor and a no less great stroke of luck for me to be in Cuba at the present time, an exciting time in a 20-year friendship that has linked two courageous peoples, two illustrious brothers, who are joined together by a gigantic endeavor as brave revolutionaries and indefatigable combatants for the just causes that have been inscribed indelibly in the remarkable history of the two continents, and in the eternal memoirs of the oppressed peoples of the world. And I am referring to Commander in Chief Fidel Castro Ruz, and the supreme head of the revolution, President Ahmed Sekou Toure."

Then Ambassador Conde recalls his experiences in Cuba since he was accredited as his country's diplomatic representative to Havana in June 1977.

"The milestones in my life as a militant in the victorious struggles of the Democratic Party of Guinea are unquestionably implanted in the course of the historic relations between the Republic of Cuba and the People's Republic of Guinea. Those milestones are the essential events, and I shall mention only a few, such as the 24th, 25th, 26th and 27th anniversaries of the storming of Moncada Barracks; happy anniversaries, splendid demonstrations, the only ones of their kind, which I have experienced among the fraternal Cuban people, in the various provinces in which they were marked, consecutively. There is also the 11th Festival of Youth and Students, the success of which is an example to be imitated; and the success of Carifesta-79, which is also unforgettable, as is that of the Sixth Summit of Nonalined Nations, the splendid organization and success of which defied the cynical predictions of the international imperialists and the despicable maneuvers of their lackeys. The 20th anniversary of the Cuban Women's Federation, a brilliant victory which made a reality of one of the most enlightened political concepts of the great comrade, Fidel Castro Ruz, is also an event which reunited us; one which, although unassuming in form, was extremely profound and important from the standpoint of its historic, political, human and economic significance."

The ambassador described the scope of the relations between the two countries, backed by deepseated historical grounds.

"Moreover, while those relations are for the Republic of Cuba one of the first contacts with the African countries, its brothers, we must also admit that they are also for Guinea, both in the case of the Caribbean nations and those of Latin America, and the Greater and Lesser Antilles; all countries in which the population of African origin is at least significant, and the status of which is more or less like that of our countries.

"I also think that, before discussing with you the development of the relations between our two countries, we should take note of what exists in the order and spirit of those relations, that is, a combative, militant and profound friendship uniting two builders of nations, Presidents Fidel Castro Ruz and Ahmed Sekou Toure; a friendship based on trust and sincerity originating from the thorough analysis made by two brave combatants integrated into the history of the peoples and with a faithful calling to service for the peoples.

"Those worthy sons of our people have analyzed, as only they could have done during those difficult times of the end of colonial and neocolonial domination, the similarity of our histories, and the identification of the causes of the struggle which was carried out and which is still being carried out against the same evils: colonialism, neocolonialism, the bourgeoisie and the neo-bourgeoisie, exploitation, indignity, etc; in short, the common nature of our revolutionary goals, all aimed and directed toward the creation and constant development of the best conditions with which to achieve the happiness of the Cubans and Guineans in particular, and of all peoples in general, in peace, justice, active solidarity and creative work.

"Therefore, for 20 years, Cuba and Guinea, having barely emerged from the exploitation of capitalism and neocolonialism, have surmounted distance and anticipated time, with its essence of vicissitudes and misfortunes, to extend their hands and establish between the two countries strong, variegated bonds of material and non-material exchanges, concrete solidarity and operative assistance in various fields, including education, agricultural development, health, fishing, poultry raising, construction, technical assistance in sports and, why not?, within a short time, the industrial exploitation of the fabulous deposits of minerals, iron and bauxite which abound in the Guinean subsoil, as well as the more intensive use of science, technical facilities and technology which Cuba is about to obtain, at the cost of a thousand and one sacrifices of its courageous sons."

The ambassador listed some of the categories of that cooperation.

"We should mention that, since 1960, Cuba has trained for Guinea several hundred youths, including doctors, veterinarians and engineers in various special fields, such as agronomy, mechanics, machine construction, mechanization, irrigation, drainage, architecture and navigation, as well as specialists in sugar cane, poultry raising, etc., to which will soon be added teachers for child day care centers.

"To this invaluable human capital injected into the life of our society, we should add the intervention in Guina by Cuban brothers: courageous and conscientious doctors engaged in treating thousands of patients; self-sacrificing builders, who were responsible for constructing landing strips and several hundred kilometers of highways, representing a major economic benefit, as well as schools and training centers of the greatest importance, and poultry farms.

"We expect, among other immediate activities, the participation by our Cuban brothers in urban renewal, both in the area of technicians and that of supplying various construction materials; because, fortunately, Cuba has the most modern manufacturing facilities."

And the ambassador summarized his remarks:

"Thus far, I have cited roughly and briefly the present, past and future of the many results of the relations established between our two countries 20 years ago. We also want to tell you that we have not attempted to give an exhaustive report on those results. Furthermore, we realize that Cuba, like our country, is facing imponderable situations against which it is staunchly fighting, with bravery and determination, certain of surmounting them.

"In conclusion, we can assure you that the Cuban-Guinean relations, based on mutual trust, permanent accord and a common revolutionary cause, will, against all obstacles, become strengthened, expanded, diversified, consolidated and imposed as a tangible reality on which we must count, like it or not; because they represent the concrete fulfillment of the enlightened thinking of two illustrious, indefatigable combatants, Fidel Castro Ruz and Ahmed Sekou Toure, resulting from the intense desire of two great fraternal peoples."

And the diplomat from the fraternal African country took his leave of us with the slogan of his people equivalent to our "fatherland or death!" "Ready for the revolution."
2909
CSO: 3010

WESTERN ARMY PREPARES FOR NEW TRAINING YEAR

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 7 Sep 80 pp 5-9

[Article by Lesmes La Rosa: "Western Army: Welcome to a Good Year"]

[Text] "We had a good training year; but the coming one must be better."

With perhaps a few slight changes in the wording, we heard that idea many times in this motorized infantry unit of the Western Army. We heard it from the lips of both commanders as well as officers and enlisted men.

We gave ourselves the task of finding out the reasons behind this collective awareness. First of all, the elements with which the personnel interviewed act up the statement that the recently concluded year was "a good training year."

In this respect, Lt Col Orelve Rodriguez Cancio told us: "We are not trying to measure facts by the volume of tasks accomplished--and there were many of them--but by the results. In all exercises, in all training sessions and maneuvers which we carried out, the grade obtained was good. Under the heading of unit support services we got the 'Model Unit' pennant.

"We got the grade of good also in political and Marxist-Leninist training and in the way we checked on it. We accomplished many tasks, which we had outlined for ourselves in honor of the Second Party Congress, ahead of deadline. We finished the year with satisfaction because among our personnel we have two vanguard members of the Revolutionary Armed Forces--a commander and a sergeant--and ten vanguard members on the army level."

The words of Lt Col Rodriguez Cancio satisfied us in our investigation but we wanted to go further. Walking toward the engineering compound, there was not a single place where activities were not under way for the 1980-1981 training year.

Putting the final touches on a trench for squad defense training, we met Sgt 3rd Class Ariel Benitez Quintana, a vanguard member of the FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces]:

"Well, we had a good training year because there were no tasks or missions which we did not accomplish with enthusiasm and because of the discipline displayed by all comrades. Besides, this was also due to the constant support we got from all political organizations. Today I have the honor of being a vanguard member of the FAR. But that did not depend only on me; I am also a product of the work and the tenacity of my collective."

Then came the moment for us to review our conclusions. The exercises, training sessions, and maneuvers of the unit proved their combat readiness; an important component of the latter is military discipline while political, moral, and psychological training of personnel occupies an important place in the multilateral training of fightingmen. And, while all aspects of the unit were graded as "good," there were many reasons that enabled all members of the unit to say with complete rejoicing: "We had a good training year!"

Returning from other areas, we listened to the martial sounds of the Hymn of the National Revolutionary Militias. There were infantry training commands, specifically those relating to "march in review." The firm and dry echo of the steps of the small units shook the semiasphalted grounds of the compound.

"How is the training program going?" we asked First Lieutenant Calderin.

"No, this is practice."

"What kind of practice?"

"The practice we are putting in for the parade that will open the 1980-1981 training year in the Western Army. This unit was selected as the base for higher headquarters because of its work. We all fell very stimulated and committed."

This spontaneous chat reaffirmed the words of Lieutenant Colonel Rodriguez and Sergeant 3rd Class Benitez.

At the Turn of a Year

After this first survey, the best thing was to observe how the military collective was preparing to come up with an aggressive welcome for the new training year. But the fact that we met Lt Julio Leguen Malville--who had graduated as an officer of the FAR a year earlier--momantarily diverted us from this undertaking. He told us of his impressions:

"This unit has been a school for me, a continuation of the Interservice School. Here I was able to put into practice the knowledge I acquired and to learn from officers with more experience and seniority. I am very grateful to them. They helped me greatly; they did not over protect me but gave me advice, they helped me complete my training as a command cadre, and then I was able to develop my initiative and I had autonomy in my work.

"I have had some success in the small units that were under my command. The principal experience which I had is that I learned to work directly with individuals. The unit as a whole made considerable progress and our achievements mean that we must make the coming training year better than the last one."

After we completed our chat with the young officer, our curiosity was attracted by a beautiful mural at the entrance to the unit. There, among the army-level vanguard members, appeared the photo and the name of Lt Julio Leguen Melville.

And It Will Be a Good Year

Going through the main installations of the unit and talking with some of its members, we can say that the new training year will yield new and better results for them.

First of all there is the morale factor. There is not a single fighting man who did not, in the course of conversation, say that the best way to hail the Second Party Congress is to raise the level of combat readiness even higher.

But this involves not only conviction and objective. At the proper time, supported by the irreplaceable assistance of the organizations of the party and the UJC [Union of Young Communists], the command took the pertinent measures. There was not a single man who did not have a task and there was no task that was not matched up with a man. As always, socialist competition provided the incentive for the personnel. It is possible that this contribution can now be measured in terms of hours; but one can never measure the sweat and the enthusiasm which made the unit build and renovate the material study base and improve the installations and living conditions.

Even more so than the men, some of their works speak out: the huge firing range for artillery weapons, backed up by an efficient material base, also featuring ornamental flowers and plants; the engineering compound, where instruction possibilities are being expanded with new training aids, many of them built by the enlisted men, using recycled materials.

Permanent witnesses of these days also are the chemical and AA defense areas, as well as the communications area. Beautification has been a constant task here. Something has been done in every corner of this military base in an effort to have another good training year. And they will achieve it. Here are the essential elements: the commanders and officers with optimum training, the support of the party and the UJC, the material study base backing up the entire process, and the collective commitment to hail the Second Party Congress with a high level of ability and combat readiness.

5058
CSO: 3010

FAR ENTERPRISE EMULATION REVIEW MEETING HELD

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 14 Sep 80 p 55

[Article by Veloz: "Second Inter-Enterprise Competition Checkout"]

[Text] The second inter-enterprise competition review of the year was held at the facilities of the "Granma Landing" EMI [Military Industrial Enterprise] under the slogan "During the Year of the Second Congress We Will Be More Efficient"; the ceremony was presided over by Div Gen Julio Casas Regueiro, alternate member, Central Committee, Communist Party of Cuba, and CG, Eastern Army.

Also present at the ceremony were Col Francisco Cruz Bourzac and Comrade Julio Machado Tamayo, deputy minister of the FAR for armament and equipment and secretary-general of the CNTC-FAR [National Union of FAR Civilian Workers], respectively.

The "Granma Landing" EMI was the site of this activity which for the first time was being carried out in the eastern region. Both the sponsors and the visitors from other enterprises expressed exceptional joy over this meeting on the soil of Santiago and reaffirmed their determination to raise the combat readiness level of the FAR.

The central report was presented by Jose A. Gutierrez, competition secretary of the SNTC-FAR, who, after recalling the fundamental objective of this competition, which consists of "over fulfillment of production plans with proper quality, efficiency, savings, and productivity, as well as the decline of the absentee rate," listed the winners.

In the laboratory group, first place went to the DAAFAR [Antiaircraft Defense and Revolutionary Air Force]; among the enterprises competing in groups 1 and 2, first place went to "Liberacion" and "Municiones de Oriente."

Div Gen Julio Casas Regueiro and comrade Julio Machado Tamayo presented the banners to the first-place winners; this was accompanied by cheers and applause from the federation members present, accompanied by the sound of eastern drums to provide harmony for this activity. The pioneers were received with similar jubilation; they urged the officers and workers of the competition-winning EMI to hold on to the victories gained.

This competition review was summarized by Col Francisco Cruz Bourzac who congratulated the winners in the name of the FAR minister. Talking about the work of the enterprises, he pointed out that it is necessary to raise the requirement level as an effective form of solving the problems that still exist in production and he added that accomplishment of the goals outlined in honor of the Second Party Congress is one of the fundamental tasks which the workers of these collectives will accomplish during the next period of time.

5058
CSO: 3010

PREPARATIONS FOR CUBAN-SOVIET SPACE FLIGHT NOTED

Kubasov, Aksenov Interviewed

HavanaGRANMA in Spanish 20 Sep 80 p 9

[Interview with cosmonauts Valeriy Kubasov and Vladimir Aksenov by Joaquin Rivery, special correspondent, GRANMA]

[Text] Flight Control Center, 18 September--Cosmonauts Valeriy Kubasov and Vladimir Aksenov arrived in the press room when nobody expected them. The Cuban newsmen were surprised but rapidly got their tape recorders going and began to question the conquerors of extraterrestrial space.

The questioning naturally began with their opinion on Tamayo whom they had known well for 2 years and a half and who was in training in Star City.

"We play a lot of soccer together, he is a very cheerful fellow. We are very happy that he is now going to fly," both said.

Not much time was left until the launching of Soyuz 38 when we began the conversation which lasted about 40 minutes. Kubasov answered the questions always with a smile. Aksenov proved to be a little more serious and both responded to the questions that rained down on them with gusto.

"Of course, we are not just going for a little walk. One cannot say that this is going to be easy for him, especially during the very first moments. He has a very good spaceship commander and besides, at the station there are another two cosmonauts of ours who will help him accomplish the entire program."

It was not very easy for Kubasov and Aksenov. The Cubans would ask the next question without waiting for them to finish answering the preceding question.

"Although I have flown in the cosmos three times already," Kubasov said, "I think that there are three very important stages in any flight. The first one is when you go into orbit and that is complicated from the emotional and technical viewpoint. During that stage, the cosmonaut cannot take any action regarding the operation of the system. The rocket works automatically and the cosmonaut cannot change anything.

"The second important stage is the return to earth, when the ship turns on the braking motor and begins the automatic descent; if you ask which is more important-- takeoff or landing--it would be very complicated to answer that question. For me, emotionally speaking, it was more important to come down during the first and second flights but during the third flight I had more of a sensation during the takeoff phase because I was flying together with the Hungarian cosmonaut and he worried me a lot, he made me nervous.

"The other important stage is the linkup with the station because the rest of the program depends on that operation and, to link up, the crew has to perform all of the approach maneuvers. After the cosmonauts feel that they can relax, they are happy and begin to work calmly. The linup is accomplished automatically but the cosmonaut exercises full control over the maneuvers and, during the last phase, he can take full command in case of any irregularity. This control is very complex, very important, also because of the cosmonaut's psyche because he cannot be calm until the linkup has been accomplished."

Very soon, they will receive Tamayo and Romanenko in the Salyut. This is why we wanted to know how those who have spent a long time in space feel when they receive a visit.

Kubasov, who made the flight with Bertalan Farkas, the Hungarian cosmonaut, and who remembers how Popov and Ryumin received him, replied quickly:

"The crew of the Salyut was a little bit nervous but maintaind a magnificent spirit and the two members of the crew were very happy when their friends arrived. They are going to be very happy now that a crew is coming to visit them which will include a Cuban cosmonaut. When we (Kubasov and Farkas) were there, you could see their emotion, they could not hide it. It was simply magnificent."

Aksenov piloted the Soviet space ship Soyuz T2 which made a linkup with Salyut several months ago. This is the space ship which is to replace the current Soyuz within a certain time.

He explained that one cannot see any changes on the outside because the shape of Soyuz and its subdivision into two compartments were retained.

"This is a routine process of engineering perfection. There is a possibility now--taking into account the latest achievements of science--to create a ship with more perfect systems and with greater possibilities. That ship has already been created."

Final Days Before Liftoff

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 20 Sep 80 p 9

[Article by Juan Marrero, special correspondent, GRANMA: "The Last Days On Earth"]

[Text] Baykonur.--What do they do and how do they spend their days--the cosmonauts--on the eve of their departure for outer space?

We thought that they would only rest, considering that an exhausting task of several days awaits them.

We thought so even more when, on Wednesday, 17 September, at 1700, we visited the comfortable "Kosmonavt" Hotel, located in the city that rises near the cosmodrome; there, Aleksey Leonov, the man in charge of training the crew for the Soyuz-38, told us that both Yuriy Romanenko and Arnaldo Tamayo were sleeping at this time.

But it turned out that this sleeping session is only one part of a work and rest program which was being carried out over the past 2 weeks in Baiykonur so that Romanenko and Tamayo might get used to the kind of life they would have to lead in outer space for several days.

This schedule has its peculiarities and is completely different from that of the entire community of Baykonur. The cosmonauts go to sleep practically when most of the people get up and they work when the majority rests.

They have two sleeping sessions every day, from 0500 until 1130 and from 1600 until 1830. When, for example, they get up at this last-mentioned hour, they continue their physical preparation exercises for 90 minutes. For that purpose the hotel (or the House of Cosmonauts, as they say it here) has available athletic fields and an outdoor swimming pool.

After 2 hours of individual training for the flight or medical examinations, the cosmonauts eat and later on at 2330 they have some free time which they generally spend watching some movies in the hotel auditorium.

At 0100, they start 4 hours of flight preparation work. Leonov told us that the cosmonauts continue their training until the last day and, in particular, they do so in the simulator for the linkup of the Soyuz space ships with the Salyut-6 orbital station. They more over submit to tests in three equipment units, the orthostatic tables where overloads are applied to them so that they may get used to them or in a rotating acceleration chair to check the reactions of their organism at such moments.

There is a strict epidemiological control system in effect at the "Kosmonavt" Hotel. It suffices to note that any person entering the hotel must, before doing so, obligatorily wash his hands with a medical preparation in order to prevent the transmission of bacteria or microbes.

Aleksey Leonov, who accompanied us throughout our inspection of the House of Cosmonauts, showed that he loves space travel as much as nature. We learned that Leonov loved painting and that he himself paints. The night before, during the press conference for Romanenko and Tamayo, he made an excellent profile drawing of one of the fellow Cuban newsmen, Eddy Martin, of national television.

Now we saw a new aspect in him: a jealous lover of trees. He taught us that each of the cosmonauts, who went on flights, from Gagarin all the way to Pham Tuan, the Vietnamese, every cosmonaut had planted a tree here. And he showed us the place where Arnaldo Tamayo would plant his tree.

In this semidesert place, love of trees is like the love for anything that has to do with the science of outer space. There are few trees, as is. The climate is very dry. It only rains one or two days a year. The Kazakhs here say, jokingly, that they see sudden, heavy showers frequently: the sand storms. But in spite of these difficulties, the people of Baiykonur, including those who, like Leonov himself, are not from here, keep busy planting and growing trees and grass. There is a tree here which does rather well in these parts; it is called the karagache, and it is the tree that is seen most frequently in the city and in the gardens around the home of the cosmonauts.

Like a sincere lover of nature, a man who practically already has a home in Baykonur—this year he told us, he had to come three times—Aleksey Leonov shares the dreams of all the people of Baykonur and the nearby city: that the modern sections of town and the streets be filled with greenery, poplars, karagaches, and finally, as many plants as can thrive in this dry soil, the gateway to outer space.

Final Countdown

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 20 Sep 80 p 9

[Article by Juan Marrero, special correspondent, GRANMA: "Final Flight Preparations"]

[Text] Baykonur—About 60 hours were left to go until the start of the joint Soviet-Cuban flight and the booster rocket and the spaceship Soyuz-38 were placed in a vertical position on the launch pad of the Baykonur space center.

This is a solemn moment which starts when, about 2.5 kilometers from the launch pad, we see approaching a railroad car carrying, already assembled, in a horizontal position, the rocket and the ship which together measure some 50 meters.

The three-stage space complex advances slowly on the railroad line which ends just at the point where the liftoff will take place. Almost everything is silver-gray in color, with an orange-colored stripe marking the dividing line between the first and second sections of the latter and in the upper part, the spaceship Soyuz-38 is linked up; it is covered with a white insulating material.

At dawn on 16 September, we newsmen went to the vicinity of the launch pad. This is the same one that was used to launch the first Sputnik in 1957, the same which handled the launchings of the three-stage rockets with the spaceships Vostok and Voskhod. Precisely at this place, an obelisk was erected in honor "of the genius of Soviet man who began the intrepid assault of outer space." It is the same one from which the launchings of the Soyuz spaceships are being handled now.

We must say that, at this launch ramp, at the departure for these well-known cosmic exploits, we experienced moments which we will never forget. Some people said that the strongest emotions are always experienced when we face something new and unknown for the first time. That may be so. Nevertheless, with us was a group of Soviet newsmen, most of whom had been at the Baykonur space center many times ever since Yuriy Gagarin opened the doors to the road of the stars and in their faces and reactions we noted that they experienced this intensely and that this event moved them, just as if they were watching for the first time. Petr Pelekhov, the commentator from Radio Moscow, said that this was the 19th time that he was in Baiykonur and he noted that "every time, everything looks more beautiful to me, even though these operations are repeated."

It is also moving to watch the measured advance of the space rocket by railroad but feelings become even stronger as you watch the iron hands of a gigantic hydraulic jack incline it gently, as if it were not holding a pointed cylinder weighing 300 tons but rather a newborn child, putting it into a vertical position, in other words, pointing it toward the zenith.

All of this happens in just a few minutes. Very few men are involved in this operation. The automated machines reliably carry out the commands given them from the control station and the booster rocket and the Soyuz-38 spaceship assume their final position for liftoff.

Then it seems that the almost 50-meter tall rocket and the spaceship rise above the desert, the place where the Baykonur space center was built, a facility which in June of this year completed its first quarter of a century of operation. But as we move closer to the launch pad, we note that a part of the rocket, about 7 meters long, has been hidden under ground, in a huge hole, surrounded by concrete walls. The lower portion of the rocket is placed almost at the bottom of that hole.

Then we see how the hydraulic jack raises the rocket and the ship into the vertical position, leaves them there, and, in their place, almost simultaneously, other support structures surround it and sustain it like straitjackets. At this moment, the rocket, like a building under construction, seems to be surrounded by scaffolding which covers it in part.

Only at this moment do they start the work involved in checking out all of the rocket systems and those on board the spaceship. This is another test because, before the railroad car brought the rocket to the launch pad, the rocket had been checked out, piece by piece, and system by system, including the cameras that are to work in a vacuum.

After these safety tests and only when all parameters look normal, the order is given to fill the engines with the fuel components. We thus enter a new stage, prior to liftoff.

We stayed at the launch pad that morning for almost 3 hours. With every passing second, our admiration grew for this beautiful work of Soviet man. Only by taking as close a look as possible at it were we able to grasp the grandiose and complex thing represented by the way to outer space and we moved on from a state of fascination to a state of understanding even though it was only elementary, considering our limitations.

Besides, in looking at this beautiful work, we were able to understand why here in ykonur and throughout the Soviet Union there is so much respect and admiration for Sergey Korolev, the late chief designer of those rockets.

Before leaving the pad that morning, we once again looked at the booster rocket and, in its upper part, the Soyuz-38, for a long time, waiting for the elevator to bring Yuriy Romanenko and first Cuban cosmonaut, Arnaldo Tamayo, waiting to see them enter the spaceship, waiting to watch the object of cosmic genius rise from the ground, anxious that the less than 60 hours that were left to go would pass as quickly as the rocket flies on its way into outer space.

Youth Organization Hails Flight

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 20 Sep 80 p 9

[Cuban-Soviet Youth Bureau Message: "Today Socialist Cuba Has Achieved a New Conquest—One of its Sons, a Son of 'Our America' Has Flown in Outer Space"]

[Text] The bureau made up of young Cuban militants from the UJC [Union of Young Communists], who are studying or working in the Soviet Union, released the following document on the occasion of the space flight of Lt Col Arnaldo Tamayo, the first cosmonaut of Cuba and Latin America.

Great is the joy and the happiness that fills all of us at this moment, when a Cuban brother, in a spaceship, goes into outer space while we young Cubans study and work in the USSR; we feel doubly happy due to the fact that the first Cuban to fly in outer space is doing so in a Soviet spaceship and side by side with a son of that great country in which we are being trained and from which at all times we have received and are receiving solidarity, aid, and strong affection toward all of us.

This event, unprecedented in the history of scientific conquests of Cuba, clearly underscores the essence and real significance of proletarian internationalism which colors all spheres of our country's life. But at the same time, this specially confirms the fact that only socialism offers the advantages which provide the most audacious forms of collaboration between peoples, in turn constituting a new and concrete contribution to the cause of world peace and the principle of mutually advantageous collaboration among all peoples of the world.

Great importance also attaches to the countless scientific experiments provided for in the work program of the cosmonauts; this, on the one hand, will contribute to further enriching man's knowledge on the various branches of science and, on the other hand, in the particular case of the Cuban students, those of us who are taking courses in the great fatherland of Lenin, we are thus pledged to study with greater devotion, with greater awareness, and to develop in depth our scientific research, certain that perhaps some of us, some day not too far off, will contribute through our modest efforts to strengthen the gains of our revolution, likewise in the important field of space research.

This Cuban-Soviet space flight, as well as the six earlier ones, carried out by international crews, is a manifestation of the faithful internationalist vocation of the USSR, confirming that the Soviet Union did not conquer space for itself but enabled the brother countries of the socialist camp to share in this, inviting many capitalist nations to collaborate and making sure that this conquest would benefit all mankind, keeping in mind the importance—to peace and the development of peoples—of their participation in the greatest, most expensive, and most transcendental technological undertaking of all times.

Allow us, Soviet brothers, on the occasion of this so memorable day, to express to you our thanks and satisfaction for the possibility you gave us in enabling a humble Cuban of peasant origin, a member of our Revolutionary Armed Forces and a militant of the glorious Communist Party of Cuba, to become the first Latin American citizen who fulfills the centuries-old dream of humanity to fly to the stars and from there to unfold the unbeaten banners of the first socialist country in the Western Hemisphere.

Long live the USSR-Cuba space flight; long live the victory of socialism!

Long live proletarian internationalism!

Long live the indestructible Cuban-Soviet friendship!

5058
CSO: 3010

PARTY LEADER DISCUSSES ACTIVITIES IN HAVANA PROVINCE

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 19 Sep 80 pp 44-49

[Interview with Luis Alvarez de la Nuez, first secretary of the party in Havana Province, by Tania Quintero, date and place not given]

[Question] Comrade Alvarez de la Nuez, we would like you to give us an overview first of all of the characteristics of the province of Havana.

[Answer] The province, as you know, resulted from the new political-administrative division in 1976, when Havana was divided into two provinces. The fact that Havana Province was a part of the capital gives it a somewhat unique nature. Our province is the "granary" of the nation's capital: it produces fruits, vegetables, milk, but it also has other important activities such as water supply, since the south underground basin lies here; the production of electric energy, construction materials, above all cement, and other industries. It also has greatly to do with the students, a group with great weight in our province, since 50 percent of them come from the capital.

[Question] Is this one of the reasons you have no capital?

[Answer] Yes, and this is related to the fact that we need the aid of the city of Havana where the labor force, cadres and teachers for the schools are concerned, and many of the services the capital offers are used, above all the hospital, commercial, cultural and food services. And also there is the fact that a large number of the inhabitants of Havana work in the city and vice versa, establishing a very close link between our two provinces. This is one of the most outstanding characteristics and one of the reasons precisely why we have no capital.

[Question] One always thinks of Havana as a basically agricultural province.

[Answer] It is a province with great agricultural weight. The volume of its production of fruits, vegetables, milk, eggs and poultry accounts for between 25 and 30 percent of the national production.

People think of us as basically agricultural. However, the province is also very important in industrial production, which has a total value greater than that of agriculture. It is also important in the construction and educational sectors, basically in secondary, pre-university and technological education.

[Question] This interview will be published at a time when the communists of Havana are holding their assembly for assessment, renewal, and/or confirmation of mandates. What can you tell us about the assembly and the internal life of the party in these years?

[Answer] The assembly process is going well in the province. The municipal assemblies were very combative: the party assessment reports were discussed in depth and very good speeches were made, contributing to enriching the analysis which the party bodies had made.

The assembly process made it possible to note the authority, prestige and support our municipal bureaus have. In all the municipalities, the assemblies developed in satisfactory fashion. The votes were very good and there were even a number of municipalities in which the first secretary and the members of the bureau won 100 percent of the votes. Good representation in the candidacies was also achieved: the slates included many outstanding comrades, with the necessary virtues and requirements to serve on the municipal party committees.

In general, we can say that we are satisfied with the quality of the assembly process in our country, which shows that, although there are errors and shortcomings, the results of the work of the party have been positive.

During this period, our province has seen great growth. We can say that we have fully implemented the resolution of the first congress with regard to an increase in and change in the social structure of the membership. In 1976, when the province was established, there were 13,017 party members and candidates, and now, going into the assessment assembly, we have 27,803 members and candidates. In other words, we have doubled the party membership.

This is the quantitative aspect. In terms of quality, we have improved the party structure. From 2,459 workers with party membership in 1976, we have increased to 10,628 today. While the proportion of workers within the party membership was 18.9 percent, it is now 38.2 percent. In other words, the proportion of workers too has doubled. And while 45 percent of the members were directly linked with production, education and services in 1976, the figure is now 61.5 percent.

[Question] What about the role of women?

[Answer] We now have a membership which is 22.3 percent feminine. Of every three comrades joining the party ranks in these years, one has been a woman. This is very important, for it shows how female representation in the ranks of the Communist Party of Cuba has increased, and it reflects one of the resolutions of the first congress on the equality of women. It should be added that the bulk of these women are, for the most part, workers.

[Question] Overall, how do you assess the substantial increase in the party ranks in Havana in these 4 years?

[Answer] I think that the most important aspect of the growth is not only the fact that we have increased the party ranks and have improved its structure, but that this means its ideological strengthening, due to the larger worker component. The influence of the party on the mass of the workers has increased substantially. And today we have not only party organizations in all the production, education and service centers, but also we have a large and strong membership in the major centers. There are centers such as the Ariguanabo Textile Complex where the ranks of members and candidates total more than 700 persons. This has logically had its effect on political work with the masses and production results.

[Question] What other question do you regard it as important to stress with regard to this fruitful period?

[Answer] The other question, Tania, which I believe it important to stress and one related to the main resolutions of the congress is the establishment of the organs of people's government and their strengthening and development. We can be content because in this period not only were the organs of people's government established, but in this province they have consolidated and have been gaining experience.

It should be said first of all that the party has devoted great concern to the people's government and has helped it to gain ever more authority and to play its government role. And this latter aspect is very important, because it contributes to the ability of the party itself, in turn, to play its political leadership role better, not having to interfere constantly in daily administrative problems but dedicating itself basically to checking on and promoting the fulfillment of the political line. On the contrary, the party has allocated ever more authority to the people's government so that it can cover more in its government work in the municipality and the province.

[Question] But we know that party aid has gone beyond . . .

[Answer] We have provided help to cadres as well. Not only at the time of establishment, but afterward. In these years we have given up experienced cadres with great mastery of various economic sectors, with a view to strengthening the executive organs of the people's government in the province or the municipalities.

[Question] What in your view are the main successes achieved by the people's government in this province?

[Answer] I will try to synthesize my answer in two parts. First, in all of the accounting assemblies in these years, the people's government has maintained an attendance rate for electors of about 79 percent, which shows the confidence the electors have in their government. Of the some 110,000 problems set forth by the electors in this period, 99 percent have been resolved or provided with a concrete answer. This does not mean that there are no shortcomings, no bureaucratic responses, no delays in the solution of problems. The people's government still has shortcomings, but in this period it has really been possible for them to consolidate, develop, acquire further prestige and play an ever more active role in the government of the province.

Secondly, I must say that the organs of people's government have had to devote great concern to the development of the infrastructure, because due to the fact that it was a part of the province in which the capital was located, this territory was less developed than other provinces in the country. In some respects we were developed, such as agriculture and industry, but where services and telephone communications were concerned, we suffered a serious lag and the people's government undertook the task of developing this infrastructure and it has made a notable advance.

[Question] To what other aspects has the party devoted special concern?

[Answer] In accordance with the resolutions of the congress, we have devoted special concern to education in general. Let us first examine that pertaining to the party membership.

We have implemented the resolution of the congress to the effect that a majority of the party membership should reach the eighth-grade level: 88 percent of our membership will have reached that educational level by the date of the congress.

In the battle to achieve the sixth-grade level, one of the tasks the congress also discussed and analyzed, we can say that the FMC [Federation of Cuban Women], ANAP [National Association of Small Farmers] and CTC have announced triumphs. The workers' movement will do so before the assembly is held. In this stage, about 51,000 workers, peasants and housewives have completed the sixth grade.

In other educational aspects, everyone knows of the difficulties Havana has been facing in these years on the secondary level. This has served to spur the efforts of all the party organizations, the UJC [Union of Young Communists], mass organizations and educational and people's government organs. From the 1976-77 school year to date we have added 52 secondary schools and more than 26,000 students. We have about 50,000 students on the secondary level, some 20,000 in the IPUEC [Preuniversity Farming and Academic Institutes] and technological institutes. If we add to these figures those for the primary, higher, adult and other levels, the total would come to about 200,000.

In these years there have been various objective difficulties and also shortcomings of a subjective nature. The struggle to overcome them has been arduous, thanks to which the percentage promoted has been improving and, this year in particular, was positive.

[Question] The situation was critical in both Havanas when the Political Bureau made its plans . . .

[Answer] The Political Bureau criticism came in August of 1977, prior to our evaluation meeting, at which we adopted a series of resolutions with regard to education. Precisely as a result of the implementation of these resolutions, it has been possible to overcome the objective difficulties, of which there are a number, as well as the subjective ones.

In this regard the students themselves, the cadres and teachers, and the greater links established between the parents and the schools have helped greatly. Also the active participation of the cadres of the Ministry of Education, particularly during this school year, has also been very important. They have given us direct aid and the results have not only been favorable in promotions, but in discipline and care of social property as well. An improvement has also been seen in methodological and advisory work.

On the primary level we achieved a promotion rate of 92.4 percent; 91.1 percent for the ESBEC [Basic Secondary Farm Schools], 91.9 percent for the urban secondary schools, 95.9 percent for the preuniversity day schools, 94.4 percent for those in the rural sector, and 96.8 for technological institutions. It can be said that we will bring to the second congress very encouraging results and an established basis for achieving better results in the coming years, when we do not expect to have spectacular promotions, but to improve in quality, in work on formal education and in coordination with agriculture.

[Question] But the other sectors have not lagged either . . .

[Answer] Indeed not. There are other sectors in which, with a view to implementing the resolutions of the first congress, considerable work has also been done in these years, and in which our province had serious problems. These sectors include transportation and communication.

In transportation we had one of the oldest public bus fleets. The majority of the vehicles had been in use between 16 and 33 years. Some even dated from the World War II era. In this sector, the party has given the people's government full support. A great emulation movement was launched and the workers have contributed many inventive initiatives, replacing the engines in the Leyland vehicles, which were already obsolete, with engines produced in the Soviet Union and other socialist countries.

In these years we have not acquired new vehicles, except for the Giron V, and recently, as a part of the general policy of improving transportation, we have been allocated a number of buses retired from service in the city of Havana. They are of the Olympic III Leyland model, somewhat outdated now, and have been rebuilt in the province. In the first half of this year we were given 150, and in salute to the 26 July anniversary and the provincial assembly, the workers repaired 113 and put them back into operation. With this old fleet we are substantially improving transportation and today we are making about 7,000 runs daily.

[Question] When will you receive new buses?

[Answer] Well, it is thought that beginning in the next 5-year period, we will get some new ones every year, to replace the old buses gradually.

[Question] What about communications?

[Answer] When we were a part of the old province our situation was very backward. There were very few municipalities which had automatic communications. All the facilities used the magnetic system. However, during this period, we have built 14 new telephone switchboards and have added 4,300 telephone lines, in addition to other postal facilities, etc. There are automatic telephone facilities in almost all of our municipalities today. We now have 2.6 telephones for every 100 inhabitants, while before this proportion was much lower. There has been a revolution in communications.

[Question] How has the sugar industry developed?

[Answer] Since the first congress, sugar production has been increasing in our province. In 1975 we produced 660,000 metric tons of sugar; in 1976, 691,000; in 1977, 718,000; and in 1978, 784,000, marking the highest annual production in the whole sugar industry in the province. In 1979 we produced 740,000 metric tons, a little less than in 1978, but still high, and in 1980, as a result basically of the infestation of rust, there has been a sharp drop to 598,000 metric tons. The Barbidos 4362 variety covered 23 percent of our plantation area.

Last year more than 900 caballerias were planted, and a part of the Barbidos 4362 was replaced. This year, in the spring, 1,191 caballerias were planted, overfulfilling the plan. With what we plan to plant now, some 1,150 caballerias, we will have eliminated this problem of rust. And the changes will be seen in the coming harvest, but not until 1982 will we begin to regain and exceed the levels achieved.

[Question] How many sugar mills have you?

[Answer] We have 15 sugar mills, but 1 is located in the city. We supply it with the cane. Despite the problems with the rust, the effects of Hurricane Frederick, the lag in the delivery of some supplies for the repair of the mills, shortcomings in the quality of repairs at some sugar mills and problems with the cane-cutting force, affecting the utilization of capacity, we have succeeded this year in reducing oil consumption to 0.43 gallons per metric ton obtained. In earlier years more than 2 gallons of oil was consumed. The recovery was also higher than that we achieved in the last 5-year period, increasing from 84.04 in 1975 to 85.86 in the harvest just ended. And the most important thing is that sugar quality was regained this year. In earlier years there were difficulties in this regard.

[Question] Havana Province has in recent months made the front pages of the newspapers because of its magnificent work in livestock breeding. What can you tell us about this?

[Answer] This is another of the sectors in which the party has worked intensively to implement the resolutions of the first congress. This year, as everyone knows, one of the most outstanding results was achieved. But if indeed work has been done on the shortcomings of a subjective and objective nature, we must say that great investments have been made in livestock facilities, roads, microdams, dams and irrigation systems in Havana Province. More advanced techniques have been introduced. The initial livestock with which development was begun was on the one hand the old livestock we had and, on the other, the imported Holsteins. Artificial insemination has been utilized, and large research centers such as the CENSA [National Animal Health Center] and the ICA [Institute of Animal Science], which have made a very direct contribution, have been established. More than 20 communities to incorporate the peasants' land have been created. Also thousands of workers have been trained in the livestock sector, in which hundreds of technicians, engineers, veterinarians and other experts are also employed.

At the 1 September ceremony the commander in chief was presented with the pledges of the livestock breeders for the 5-year period. The document also reflected the results achieved in these recent years, thanks to these large investments we have mentioned and the policy established by the commander in chief for the development of livestock breeding, to which must be added the discipline and high level of conscience which have been developing.

[Question] Could you give us figures?

[Answer] In milk production during the 5-year period we reached a total of 1,204,300,000 liters, thus overfulfilling the pledge to the first congress, which was to achieve an increase of 75 percent over the preceding 5-year period. In producing this volume, we achieved an increase of 105 percent.

In provincial beef production, 9,752 metric tons were produced in 1975, while last year, to speak of levels achieved, we reached 25,287 metric tons, thus tripling beef production.

Improvement of the breed structure and increasing the percentage of milk cows were also included in the resolutions of the first congress. Currently 83 percent of the production herd are high-quality cows: either they are Holsteins, or a Holstein cross, with a greater milch potential. In 1975, we were milking 49 out of every 100 cows, while this year we have 61 of every 100 in production. The average yield has also increased: from 7.6 liters in 1975, we have achieved 9.3 this year, an increase of almost 2 liters per cow.

The motivation for these results, I want to stress, was the holding in 1980 of the second congress, and a good example of this is that the livestock breeders in the province produced more than a million liters of milk per day for 40 days. At the peak moment, we reached 1,082,000 liters. As Fidel said, this is no longer a matter of the cows or the food and water provided to the animals, but the fruit of the labor of man.

[Question] The other day a comrade asked me how it is, if these are the same cows as last year, that they have given more milk this year?

[Answer] First of all, it must be made clear that they are not the same cows. Each year we have been improving the breed structure. In 1975, for example, we had a very large number of F-1 cattle, a cross which is 50 percent Holstein and 50 percent Cebu, but today the majority are F-2 and F-3, crosses which are mainly Holstein, and a large number are pure Holstein adapted to our climate. Of the cows we are milking, 27 percent are Holsteins and this 27 percent produces 40 percent of all the milk in the province. What does this mean? That as we approach 100 percent Holstein cows, we will achieve higher milk production.

[Question] What is the total volume of milk produced this year?

[Answer] We have already produced 206 million liters. The total for the year will be 300, some 40 million more than last year.

[Question] And what can you tell me about the poultry and swine sectors?

[Answer] Every year the poultry sector has been increasing. This year we should produce 600 million eggs and 20,800 metric tons of poultry meat, with a yield of 250 eggs per bird. We should produce some 16 metric tons of pork.

[Question] Is the picture for fruits and vegetables equally favorable?

[Answer] For fruits and vegetables too substantial production has been achieved, for there has been growth in these years. In 1975,

3,905,000 quintals of vegetables were produced while by 1979 we had reached the 4,850,000-quintal level and this year we should come close to 5,500,000 quintals. The situation has been difficult in the truck gardening sector because there were problems. In 1975 a total of 2,851,000 quintals were produced and this year we should have about 2,400,000. Thus far this year we have produced 2,719,000 quintals of potatoes, the highest production in the whole potato-growing history of the province, with very high yields--more than 5,515,000 quintals per caballeria. We have produced 950,000 tons of tomatoes, and deliveries of this product to industry were overfulfilled in the first 4 months of the year, with more than 20,000 tons.

We will have an important upsurge in citrus fruits this year as well: we expect production of 1 million quintals. I do not hesitate to make that statement.

[Question] Is there as much citrus fruit in Havana as in Matanzas, for example?

[Answer] No. The greater part of our citrus fruit is exported, because it is of excellent quality. This million quintals of citrus fruit will be the double of the production achieved in 1975, totaling 505,000 quintals.

This extraordinary effort in these agricultural sectors was made in salute to the congress and in fulfillment of the resolutions of the Ninth Plenum of the Central Committee, as well as the guidelines set forth by Fidel at the National People's Government Assembly, setting priorities for the production of foodstuffs for the population.

[Question] Have there been successes in the socialist transformation of agriculture?

[Answer] Serious work has been done. Fifty percent of the peasants in the province have now integrated their land in state enterprises. The others, who for the most part are engaged in raising sugarcane and fruits and vegetables, are organized in credit and service or production cooperatives (CPA [Agricultural and Livestock Cooperatives]). There are still very few of these latter: we now have 42 CPAs.

I would like to say that in Havana we have been consolidating the state areas and those of the peasants. We are making an exchange of land with the peasants who have plots in the state area. In this way, we can develop mechanization and we are creating the conditions for cooperativization. Progress is being made in this direction, but obviously it is more difficult in Havana, because of the high income the peasants have, the quality of their land, the increased use of technology and the proximity to the market in the capital. Historically it was the peasants who earned most from the land and today they are earning still more thanks to the aid provided by the state.

Much greater progress has been made in sugarcane. Already a cooperative with 70 caballerias has been created in Mariel. Some are being organized in other municipalities and another will be established in San Nicolas, with more than 40 caballerias. In general the peasants are struggling to hail the congress with a larger number of CPAs and, above all, with large cooperatives.

[Question] It seems that the industrial sector has been left till last.

[Answer] Another serious effort to implement the resolutions of the first congress and salute the second has been made by the workers in industry. The energy industry merits special mention. The Maximo Gomez Thermoelectric Plant in Mariel has been implementing the resolutions of the congress. In 1978, for example, it generated 2,216,554 megawatt hours. This year it generated more electricity than the entire total produced by the Cuban Electricity Company in 1958. Last year it generated 2,396,104 megawatt hours, and this year it is proceeding along those lines as well.

Our two factories in the cement industry, Martyrs of Artemisa and Rene Arcay, expect to produce more than 1 million tons of cement between the two this year, bearing in mind that the first line at Rene Arcay has been commissioned and in the last quarter of the year the second is expected to go into production, provided some problems related to replacement parts which have not yet been received can be resolved. There is a great emulation movement between the two plants in the effort to reach a million tons before the congress. This would mean practically doubling the cement production of the province in comparison to 1975, when 529,000 tons were produced.

Another branch, and for the sake of brevity I will mention the three most important in the province, is the textile industry, which is working and advancing with a firm step, above all the Ariguanabo Textile Complex, which we think will surpass 50 million meters of cloth, as well as its yarn plan, this year. On 1 September, in accordance with the resolutions of the congress and the guidelines from the commander in chief, the fourth labor brigade began rotating shifts in the spinning sector. The three textile plants together--the other two are Alquitex and Mayabeque--should produce approximately 95 million meters of cloth, representing about 30 percent of the total produced in the country. These plants have made pledges for a worthy salute to the congress.

The port workers in Mariel handled 46,000 tons in the month of August, between loading and unloading. It should be stressed that they have been doing extraordinary work and have set some 56 national records. The emulation there is very intensive.

[Question] What about construction?

[Answer] Important investments have been made. The Rene Arcay Cement Factory has been expanded; Units 6 and 7 of the Maximo Gomez Thermoelectric

Plant have been commissioned; a plant producing asbestos cement pipes and tiles has been built and will produce goods worth between 12 and 15 million pesos; the production line for glazed tile and plumbing fixtures has been expanded to make it possible to achieve a total of 70 million and 300,000 plumbing fixtures; the bagasse panel plant which should produce some 36,000 tons when it is operating at full capacity has been built; the Ariguanabo Textile Complex has been modernized, making it possible to reach production of more than 70 million meters of cloth; and the expansion of the Santa Cruz Rum Plant, which will produce some 30 million liters of Havana Club annually when it reaches full capacity, should basically be completed this year.

During this period the prefabricated IMS plant was built, with a view to the construction of some 1,500 housing units per year, and construction was completed on the soy sauce and ice plants, the bulk sugar terminal in Mariel, the citrus fruit processing plant in Ceiba, and a poultry processing plant, and the canning factory in Batabano and the Conrado Benitez Cable Factory were expanded.

We have built 242 livestock centers, including dairy and calf-breeding facilities; 15 poultry farms and hog-breeding centers; 2 fattening facilities for bulls (and 1 has been expanded). And now 122 more agricultural projects are under construction, and an effort is being made to complete them in salute to the second congress.

We have built 3,109 housing units, 5 ESBECs and 11 ESBURs [urban basic secondary schools], 3 children's nurseries and 2 primary schools. The Higher Agricultural Sciences Institute in Havana and an Provincial Physical Education School are under construction.

In general, I have tried to touch on the most outstanding economic aspects. In all of these matters there are difficulties and problems, but a struggle is being waged to overcome them.

Finally, I do not want to fail to mention the work of the mass organizations and the UJC in the province, which have been doing great work. In all of these economic results, the mass organizations have played an important role. They too have their plan in salute to the congress and the provincial assembly and have been fulfilling their pledges.

Through the mass organizations the party is linked with the workers, the peasants, housewives and students, and truly they have been an excellent driving pulley. To illustrate this it will suffice to mention the contribution to the 11th World Festival of Youth and Students, and the recent demonstrations in defense of sovereignty, such as the Marches of the Combative People and the 1 May gathering, and in particular, the mobilization making it possible for the Mariel-Florida route to function efficiently, without, however, failing to fulfill and overfulfill the plans for the various industries in this municipality, in response to Fidel's appeal for the conversion of revolutionary energy into productive energy.

5157
CSO: 3010

SOCIALIST EMULATION AS INCENTIVE DISCUSSED

Havana JUVENTUD TECNICA in Spanish May-Jun 80 pp 51-53

[Article by Jorge Luis Fillu, CTC National Organization Department: "How to Motivate the Psyche?"]

> [Text] Socialist emulation is an effective instrument that contributes to the formation of the technical and economic base of communism and to the harmonious development of the personality under our socialist system where man is the most important element and is treated as such by society.

Emulation, a way to optimize the productive process, is organized at all levels by the CTC [Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions] and its unions with the cooperation of the administration. This gives emulation its labor and union character. Our great working mass has the opportunity to use its forces to constantly increase work productivity which leads to greater satisfaction of the spiritual and material needs of man, the basic objective of the socialist society.

Socialist emulation is one of the many tasks Lenin undertook. Its organization is ruled by three principles: publicity, comparison of results and generalization and diffusion of advanced techniques.

Socialist emulation is an expression of work motivation. It contains the principles, norms and ideals of the new socialist morality.

In the emulative process, the objectives of man's activity keep getting further from his personal needs in order to respond to the social needs determined by man's conduct.

Man, in his conscious activity directed toward satisfying his material needs (clothing, food, etc.), also expresses specifically human needs through his creative work like the need for self-affirmation, the need to relate and the need for social recognition. In this process, the social nature of man is expressed and serves as impetus for established tasks in the emulation plan.

We can define socialist emulation as a set of motives that influence man's psyche and direct his productive activity toward overfulfillment of the goals that he and society have established. This process enriches the motivational context of the dynamics of personality, contributing to a restructuring of the hierarchy of motives. Before, purely individual motives were most important but they slowly give way to social motives, establishing a dialectic interrelationship between the two.

When a work group agrees on individual or collective emulation, it works together. It interacts, builds a structure and develops behavior standards to guarantee the tasks that he and the group have established. The standards that the group develops are based on the norms prescribed by society and its organization; they also serve as a means of communication within the group.

The interaction that is established between groups in an emulation and within each group itself makes its members share concern about the aspirations of the group and the way to achieve the victory for which they fight.

Under socialism, the production relations among men change and man preying on man no longer exists; man becomes man's battle comrade. The necessary conditions are created for the group to become a collective which is the highest expression of relations among men who work for the common good.

The collective is characterized by:

1. Close correspondence between its formal and informal structure;

2. Correspondence between individual and group merits--that is, individual needs are channeled through social needs;

3. Collective leadership with individual responsibility;

4. Efficiency in the realization of established tasks;

5. Aid to formation of the personality through the activity that the individual performs; and

6. Relations among members characterized by mutual aid, fellowship, criticism and self-criticism, discipline and responsibility.

Emulation with its competitive strength stimulates and materializes the worker initiative and is a highly effective means that helps the group become a collective. Emulation is far from egotistical and mean competition. Emulation is based on mutual aid, developing new qualities in the personality which contribute to its complete development.

The simplicity and clarity of the emulation indicators help to make a clear and objective evaluation of the tasks fulfilled by those in the emulation in order to reward and honor the real winners, avoiding subjectivism which causes so much harm to the work morale of the group. The effort is recognized but only the results are rewarded; therefore, each center that receives an award or any other stimulus displays it proudly.

Comrade Pedro Miret, a member of the Politburo, stated: "A center that has high work morale receives an award, a certificate, a banner of the revolution proudly. However, to receive a recognition that is not merited, one which has not really been won, must be a disgrace for the one who receives it and criticizable for the one who gives it. That does not educate or teach; it distorts the meaning of emulation and the moral context of revolutionary stimulus."

Under the conditions of socialist production, the meaning of work to the worker is based on social motives.

Material reward acts as stimulation; that is, although it strengthens activity, it also has the main function of giving it meaning. In addition to encouraging activity, it gives it a personal meaning; this does not change in spite of the emotional problems that the activity might include.

The moral stimuli have the function of providing meaning, thus their importance in the motivational sphere, especially in the hierarchy of motives.

The motives' functions of stimulation and formation of meaning in one activity--in this case, socialist emulation--aid in understanding the important relations that characterize the motivational sphere of the personality and the hierarchy of motives.

The Cuban workers are aware that their initiatives, responsibility and personal sacrifice will be properly recognized by society. Individual work is remunerated, according to the principle of socialist distribution: "From each according to his ability; to each according to his work."

The wages that each worker receives for the contribution that he has made to society are the material stimulus to individual effort in work. At the same time, they are the expression of social recognition for work done for the good of all society.

The unions play a major role in the improvement of stimulation systems, remuneration for work and the most appropriate combination of moral and material stimuli. The organizational role that they play in the productive process permit them to carry out educational work with the workers, contributing to their integral formation.

The use of moral stimuli--diplomas, pennants, banners, honorary degrees, etc.--strengthen the initiative, morale, spirit of sacrifice and the revolutionary conscience of the workers.

The appropriate combination of these moral and material rewards contribute to the formation of a motivational structure where the stimulating motives are subordinate to formation of meaning. The latter has a higher rank on the scale of motives for our workers.

A. N. Leontie, a prominent Soviet psychologist, stated: "At the beginning, man is motivated by satisfaction of his vital, elemental needs; later, this relationship changes and man satisfies his vital needs in order to motivate himself."

7717
CSO: 3010

CHILD DISCIPLINE MEASURES TO CORRECT MISBEHAVIOR

Havana JUVENTUD TECNICA in Spanish May-Jun 80 pp 44-47

[Text] Training children and youths is only possible through a planned consistent, integral and single system which includes all the social factors that affect them. Daycare workers play an important role in this. This analysis is useful for everyone.

The misbehaved or poorly socialized child, as he is technically known, is a child that, without showing any type of disturbance that could be considered psychopathic, is capable of being a real problem within the daycare center by upsetting all the internal discipline and becoming a true scourge for the workers and parents. Different from other similar problem children like the hyperactive or aggressive child, the poorly socialized child is typically a product of his environment whose behavior is easy to understand. He is perhaps the type of child on whom the daycare center can exercise a quicker and more lasting effect.

How is this child recognized?

These are the principal features of the misbehaved child.

He has bad behavior, lack of discipline and lack of control of his impulses and emotions.

Since there is no self-criticism, he does not know what is good and what is bad and, therefore, does not feel obliged to do anything. He gives full rein to his impulses, without worrying about the effects of his behavior or how he is going to be judged.

He is rough in his play, ruins furniture and throws things. If he is scolded, he resorts to anger and sometimes aggression.

He is disrespectful, insolent and crafty. He loves noise and is not used to having consideration for anyone except those persons to whom he is attached.

If he is punished, he gets angry but does not repent, quickly committing the offense again.

He frequently uses vulgar language and bad words.

The causes of poor socialization are typically environmental although there might be a child who has some type of disturbance but is also poorly socialized. In the case of the misbehaved child, we find that his problem lies in bad or improper use of discipline, the result of the environmental conditions in which he has lived and the handling he has had. This might mean:

A home with a very low cultural level where the parents have little or no concern for controlling the child so his conduct is a reflection of the world in which he lives.

Excessive tolerance from parents who permit the child to do whatever he wants, creating such a low level of frustration that he does not tolerate any type of restriction, is immature and behaves like a younger child.

A contradictory home where something is prohibited one time and permitted at others; it improperly limits the needs of the child who does not know what to do facing certain situations.

Discipline is a necessity for the child since it helps him control his natural insecurity and helps him direct his energies in approved ways and behave in a socially correct manner. A misbehaved child is a confused child who has not been taught proper behavior. Facing restrictive situations, he lets himself be carried away by his impulses, upsetting himself and others.

Children learn discipline by direct teaching or by imitation, focused not on tacit inculcation but on the creation of a basis for self-discipline which can be maintained permanently and adapt itself to new, unlearned situations. A proper home education should supply this but if it does not, the handling of a misbehaved child at the daycare center should be based on the following recommendations.

Discipline must be consistent. This means that whatever is forbidden or permitted should always be forbidden or permitted without contradictions or changes.

It must not be irregular or sporadic; regularity in discipline accelerates the learning process.

Prohibitions must not change from one situation to another or the child will not know how to act. If he is forbidden to have something and then permitted, he will not understand why he cannot take a toy away from a friend.

Authority must be firm without being rigid. Prohibitions must never become permitted. However, if we see that there is progress, the small offenses that the child commits can be ignored.

Discipline must be consistent. This means:

Everything that is forbidden or permitted must be based on the basic needs of the child. It is logical that he is forbidden to climb or jump from a table. However, he should be allowed to leave a group which is listening to a story if he does not want to participate in it.

Discipline must not be arbitrary. All the adults around the child should be generally agreed about what things are going to be forbidden or permitted.

A child must be judged as a child and not as an adult. It is logical that an adult can remain calm and attentive for a long time. However, it is not misbehavior if a child gets up or entertains himself at something else after he has been passive for a long time.

It must be adjusted to the age of the child. There are children who are overprotected and act like younger children. Discipline for these children must consider their maturity and not their real age.

A child who is not old enough to understand what is expected of him must never be disciplined. A child less than 2 years old cannot be subjected to discipline but it can start at the age of 2.

If there are changes in the child (sleep, poor health) or special events, discipline should be modified and be somewhat more liberal.

The child must be accepted as he is, without the worker rejecting him or not looking for his good points. If, from the beginning, the worker likes the child and gives him affection, it will be easier to control him later.

The worker should speak with the parents to learn the causes for the child's behavior and, as much as possible, try to modify them while, at the same time, achieving agreement on how to handle him. The educational work should be coordinated and practiced at home, in the daycare center and society.

It cannot be expected that the child will automatically adjust to the new situation of the daycare center. The worker must not be very demanding of him at the beginning or overburden him with prohibitions. The worker should only indicate a few to him, the most important, in order to avoid rejection of the daycare center.

The worker should not stress the negative aspects of his behavior and ignore the positive since this limits his comprehension.

Since this child is a negative example for the other children, the daycare worker must be careful that the others do not change their discipline. The example of these children can be a factor to encourage the misbehaved child to imitate them.

This child cannot be expected to repent immediately since he might say he is repentant out of fear and not because he really is. The best thing to do is to talk to him about this when he is calm or has not done anything wrong, trying to make him reason. With the older ones, it is not enough to tell them what they should and should not do but to explain to them why certain behavior is acceptable and other behavior is not.

The child must not be made to feel that his misbehavior is very important; this can reinforce his bad behavior. Therefore, any criticism in front of the others or any outbreak because of his misbehavior should be withheld. The worker should be calm with him and criticize him privately, away from the other children, without making an example of him.

The worker must be careful to be a good example so that the child does not see and imitate negative behavior. The worker must respect the child as a person in order to be able to expect the child to respect her.

At times, the mere fact of giving the child responsibilities serves as an effective control of his bad behavior.

Praise and reward achieve better results than punishment and scolding. His good behavior should be praised and any criticism, ridicule or fear withheld. When he is praised, it must be directly related to his actions.

Although praise is better for this child, sanctions for bad behavior must not be eliminated. The following must be kept in mind:

Sanctions are necessary for him because they define good and bad, permitting him to realize the possible negative consequences his bad behavior might have for him.

Before carrying out a punishment, it is necessary to understand the reasons the child committed the offense. At times, it can be very logical; for example, a child refuses to obey because the worker has kept him "glued" to his chair.

Whenever there is punishment, it has to be understood and deserved by the child. He must be told why he is being punished and made to understand. It must be done immediately after the offense is committed because if it is left for later, he will not understand why he is being punished.

The punishment must always be proportional to the offense committed so that it fulfills its educational function. The same punishment cannot be used for a child, for example, who says a bad word and another who overturns the meal trays. In the second case, the punishment should be harsher since the misbehavior is more serious.

The sanction or punishment must be based on age.

Children under 2 years of age must never be punished.

For those from 2 to 3, a mere expression of displeasure, a firm or severe tone or the withdrawal of some privilege like a favorite toy should be sufficient.

For those older than 3, in addition to the above, play or exploration can be limited. He can be put on a chair for a few minutes, with the punishment being a logical consequence of what he has done.

Corporal punishment must never be used nor should the child ever be denied food, drinking water, etc., whatever his age.

Isolation must not be used as a punishment. If he must be put in a chair for a few minutes, he should not be in a separate corner where he cannot see anything. He should be kept apart from the group but where he can see the rest in their activities.

Once the punishment is over, he must be treated as if nothing had happened. The worker should be kind and affectionate toward the child.

His punishment should not be discussed with other people in his presence. This embarasses the child and makes him worse instead of helping him.

Since the child might be misbehaved because he comes from a home where there is a low educational level, there should be an intensive stimulation program (teaching him habits, how to relate, etc.) as an additional way to eliminate his misbehavior.

7717
CSO: 3010

PAST FIVE-YEAR EDUCATION PROGRAM RESULTS NOTED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 5 Sep 80 pp 2-3

[Article by Georgina Jimenez: "Education in 1975-80 Period"]

[Text] This 5-year period that is ending has revealed a before and after picture of education. There have been profound transformations in the contents and structure of our educational system as a result of the elaboration and implementation of the transition period of the improvement plan. This is also true for the double process (quantity and quality); this includes urgent training of tens of thousands of intermediate education teachers in response to the enrollment explosion and the improved quality of the teaching staff expressed in the three-grade increase in the entrance level at the centers where they are trained and where primary teachers are trained (with subsequent increased quality in study plans and programs). At the same time, there has been advancement in teachers already employed. One of the most important objectives achieved in this sense was guaranteed certification for primary teachers who are teaching classes this year. The establishment of a degree in primary education and postgraduate courses and studies are better forms of advancement implemented during this period.

The investment involved in the massive educational expansion in our country is demonstrated by the 1,483 new centers constructed since 1970, 894 of which were built in the last 5 years. This year's school budget (which represents 11 percent of the overall social product) is about 1,340,800,000 pesos, 16 times higher than the budget in the year before the revolution.

The result has been the culmination of the educational expansion process which has permitted universal primary education and the subsequent guarantee of continuing studies for hundreds of thousands of sixth and ninth grade graduates in spite of this explosive increase. This has permitted their passage through that level and their access, in unprecedented numbers, to advanced studies. The number of intermediate education graduates in the 5-year period, not including adults, (954,000) is higher than the total number of graduates of that level in the almost 57 years of the neocolonial republic.

In evaluating the effort made in this sense, the great expansion of the work-study centers in the country at the intermediate level should be considered. This meant a total change in the organization and use of a large part of these educational centers.

During this same 5-year period, the ministers of education of the Latin American and Caribbean countries met in Mexico in December 1979. They recognized "the presence in the region of 45 million illiterates in an adult population of 159 million" and "an excessive dropout rate in the first years of enrollment," among other "serious problems." They declared as one of their aspirations: "to propose as a goal to incorporate all school-age children by 1999." In Cuba, as a result of all these efforts, we have established the concrete conditions for a minimum ninth-grade education for all the children and youths in the country. We are culminating the battle for sixth grade this year with more than 850,000 adults graduated; this represents a satisfactory change in the educational level of our people.

Also in this 5-year period, there has been an important modification in the relationship between the enrollments in the three educational levels (primary, intermediate and advanced) which makes our enrollment structure approach that of the developed countries.

At the same time, we have been able to contribute to the educational work of other fraternal peoples since we have teachers trained in the internationalist spirit which is part of true communist training. More than 3,000 are now teaching in fraternal countries.

Quality in education is conditioned by the historic process; it depends on the possibilities and conditions of each period of time. Much remains to be done. It is necessary to extend the formative nature of the educational process by making educational work a creative and important act of our teachers, bringing the flow of knowledge that they acquire and the pertinent provisions and regulations to life in the classrooms. It is necessary to improve organization and leadership at the different levels of the organizations responsible for education and to increase demand.

The material and human conditions have been established to extend the battle for increased quality in our education in the coming years, as Fidel directed.

Improvement Plan

This has been the most important educational task in the 5-year period. The 1975-76 school year was the beginning of its progressive implementation or transitional stage which will culminate in the 1980-81 school year. This progressive application permits changing all levels of general education in 6 years, half the time that would have been taken by applying it year by year for 12 grades. The planned stages in the improvement plan of the National Education System for the changeover to new education contexts were carried out at all levels and types of education.

Enrollment by Education Level
(in thousands of students)

Education Level	1975-76	1979-80*
Total	3,244.4	3,452.9
Preschool	126.6	122.6
Primary	1,795.8	1,550.3
Intermediate	604.0	1,150.3
Basic Secondary	382.6	690.5
Preuniversity	37.7	135.3
Technical and Professional	100.0	214.6
Training of Teaching Staff	83.7	109.9
Special	12.5	25.0
Youth	22.9	12.3
Adult	597.6	392.0
Advanced	84.0	200.2
Others	1.0	0.2

*Includes the centers under organizations that do not specialize in education in the intermediate level and, in the advanced level, the State Committee for Statistics' official figure of 146,240 was added to the number of students abroad, in the military and party courses and the students enrolled at the beginning of the year in directed studies (free education).

This process has meant a complete change in study plans, programs and texts and in the training of teaching staff. It cannot be understood as merely the necessary updating of the subjects, which it has included, but also as a transformation of these contexts based on polytechnical education, a Marxist focus in the courses and organizing, balancing and structuring the contexts on the basis of scientific pedagogy in order to impart a greater volume of material in less time and an appropriate balance between specialization and generalization.

Important aspects of this process in the 5-year period include the implementation of the structure from 12 to 13 grades in general education, the increased entrance level to 9th grade for the pedagogical schools and polytechnical institutes and 12th grade for the advanced pedagogical schools and the adoption of a new organizational form in the first cycle of the primary level--the teachers go with their students from first to fourth grades. This last has contributed decisively to school promotion and continuation and to the psychological development of the students.

School Construction

From January 1976 to December 1979, 894 school projects have been built; they include ESBEC [Basic Secondary Farm Schools], IPUEC [Preuniversity Farming and Academic Institutes], military vocational schools, polytechnical schools and institutes, pedagogical schools, sports schools, urban basic secondary schools for 60 to 1,200 students, pedagogical branches, schools for handicapped children, primary schools for foreign and semiboarding students, daycare centers, schools for training daycare teachers, university installations, health polytechnical schools, schools for physical education teachers and nursing schools. These 894 projects represent 60 percent of the 1,483 projects constructed since January 1970.

Teaching Staff

At the beginning of the 5-year period, in the 1975-76 school year, there were 81,830 primary teachers in the country; 46.8 percent were not certified and 92.9 percent were in the process of being certified. Nevertheless, in the last 5 years, the number of primary teachers increased until 67,900 graduated in the 1978-79 school year, 42,200 as practicing teachers and 25,700 from pedagogical schools. This has guaranteed that all primary teachers who work in the classrooms this school year are certified, thus fulfilling the agreement of the First Party Congress.

As a result of the improvement in the subsystem of training and advancement of the teaching staff, the entrance level to pedagogical schools was raised to ninth grade in the 1977-78 school year, changing the study plans and programs. The teachers who enroll this school year will (for the first time in our country) have a level equivalent to the advanced intermediate (preuniversity) level; this will permit them to enroll directly in primary education degree programs. The teachers who have obtained their certification through the former plans while they were teaching and those who enrolled in the pedagogical schools until the 1976-77 school year (when the required entrance level was sixth grade) will take 2 years of study (one while excused from work and the other through meetings) so that they can also reach the advanced intermediate level.

At the same time, in the school year that just ended, 20,000 teachers participated in the preparatory course for primary education degrees throughout the country and the study plans for the specializations of preschool and handicapped education and psychology, this last being started this school year, were completed. In this 5-year period, the training and advancement of the teaching staff were combined in a single subsystem.

As for intermediate education teachers, an education degree with an entrance level of 12th grade was established in the 1977-78 school year. The first will graduate at the end of this school year. The teachers in the contingents before the 1977-78 school year who enrolled in the detachment with a lower entrance level have been studying for the degree through work programs. Two advanced study contingents have already graduated. In the 5-year period, 27,700 basic secondary teachers have graduated through studies at meetings as have 23,500 advanced university teachers. This means a total of 51,200 intermediate education teachers graduated in only 5 years.

The number of teachers at all educational levels who graduated in the 5-year period reaches 132,400.

The most recent school year is closing with the impressive figure of 152,407 people being trained as teachers or advancing as teachers in all types and levels of education and a total of 212,678 teachers and professors in all types and levels of centers. The integration of the three internationalist detachments of students and teachers--the Che Guevara Internationalist Pedagogical Detachment and the Frank Pais and Augusto Cesar Sandino Primary Teacher Contingents which work in Angola and Nicaragua, respectively--should be pointed out.

The decreased enrollment in the primary level and the increased number of intermediate-level teachers in the next 5-year period will permit a better ratio of students to teachers. Along with the undeniable increase in the quality of our teaching staff, this will contribute to the consolidation of real possibilities for the quality of the educational process to reach superior levels.

1) NUMERO DE PERSONAL DOCENTE POR NIVEL DE EDUCACION

2) AÑOS ESCOLARES 1975-76 y 1979-80

KEY:

1. Number of teaching staff by education level
2. 1975-76 and 1979-80 school years
3. Primary
4. Advanced
5. Intermediate
6. Other levels
7. Primary
8. Advanced
9. Intermediate
10. Other levels

KEY:

1. Enrollment structure (percentage)
2. 1975-76 and 1979-80 school years
3. Advanced
4. Intermediate
5. Primary
6. Advanced
7. Intermediate
8. Primary

Enrollment Structure

Today, 55.3 of every 100 students are in primary education, 38.1 are in intermediate education and 6.6 are in the universities. This is expressed in the pyramids of educational levels which show how the intermediate and advanced (university) levels have grown in comparison with the primary level. This makes our enrollment structure closer to that of the developed countries.

Continued Studies Guaranteed to Sixth, Ninth Grade Graduates

The growing effectiveness of our education at the primary level and the improvement of the system of evaluation of learning contributed significantly to producing the greatest number of graduates from sixth grade in the period analyzed in our educational history. In the past 5 years, 1,290,494 students have graduated from sixth grade. In other words, /in a single 5-year period, there was practically the same number of graduates as in the first 16 years after the triumph of the revolution/ [in boldface].

This led to an unprecedented increase in enrollment in the intermediate level. As the 5-year period ends, we can state with satisfaction that although the largest number of graduates from primary level in our history occurred, in the past school year 40,000 more students graduated from the intermediate level than the primary level. This is an important qualitative advance in education.

To fully evaluate this multiple effort, it is necessary to remember that at the same time enrollment in the intermediate level exploded, there was extension of the work-study centers in the country to a great number of schools at this level and the application of the transitional stage of the improvement plan.

KEY:

1. Graduates of primary, secondary and preuniversity schools
2. 1975-76 and 1979-80 school years
3. Thousands
4. Primary
5. Basic secondary
6. Preuniversity

The number of sixth-grade graduates in the 5-year period 1976-80 is equivalent to the first 16 years under the revolution and 269,000 more than all the sixth-grade graduates from 1902-1958.

The number of basic secondary graduates in the last 5-year period (574,800) is 3.22 times larger than the number of basic secondary graduates in the first 16 years under the revolution and 57,000 more than the eighth-grade graduates from 1902 to 1958.

The number of advanced intermediate graduates in the last 5-year period is almost twice the number of graduates in the first 16 years under the revolution and almost 130,000 more than the number of graduates from 1902 to 1958.

KEY:

1. Expenses devoted to education per person (millions)
2. Actual
3. Plan
4. Population
5. Current expenses and investments
6. Expenses per person (pesos)

Cost of Education

In spite of the economic problems in the 5-year period because of decreased sugar prices and diseases in basic crops, the budgets for education increased in these 5 years. In the first school year after the triumph of the revolution, 12 pesos per person were allocated for education; this year 137 pesos per person were used. More than 11 percent of the overall social product is devoted to education.

The budget this year is 16 times larger than the budget in the year before the revolution.

As of 1975, a yearly average of 23 million copies of textbooks has been printed.

In 1979, 26,454,600 books were printed. For 1980, the printing of 25,125,000 textbooks is planned.

Adult Education

This 5-year period has included the battle for sixth grade which will end this year with more than 850,000 sixth-grade graduates among workers, peasants, housewives, etc., fulfilling the agreement approved by the First Party Congress. The victory in this battle represents a satisfactory change in the enrollment level of the people which has been made possible by the massive aid of teachers and people in general.

The task that the construction of socialism presents to our working masses at a time characterized by accelerated development of science and technology means that sixth grade is the minimum educational level which is indispensable to begin the true education of the man of today. The culmination of this beautiful battle is the starting point for a more ambitious objective: the ninth grade as the minimum education level of our workers. The conditions for its realization are already beginning to be created. At the same time, the planned stages of the improvement plan were implemented in the adult education subsystem in order "to guarantee the best articulation of its three levels (worker-peasant education, basic secondary courses and worker-peasant faculty) and their equivalent in the National Education System," according to the First Party Congress thesis on educational policy.

Technical and Professional Education

Enrollment in technical and professional education practically doubled in the 5-year period and its teaching staff increased from 6,900 to 13,066. There were more than 50,000 graduates--skilled workers and intermediate-level technicians--in the last school year. With this great qualitative increase and as a result of improvement in that subsystem, there was a

KEY:

1. Intermediate-level enrollment
2. 1975-76 and 1979-80 school years
3. Thousands
4. Note: These figures include the intermediate-level students in the centers under organizations that do not specialize in education.

new structure of specializations. These totaled 272 but will be reduced to 235 in the 1980-81 school year.

This school year, new study plans will be applied in all the specializations offered in the different types of polytechnical institutes and schools. This required the elaboration of 320 study plans, 1,010 programs and 350 textbooks during the last 5-year period. The required entrance level for the polytechnical schools (where the skilled workers are trained) was raised to the 9th grade and the required level for the polytechnical institutes (where the intermediate-level technicians are trained) went up to 12th grade. The increase in night and evening courses and directed studies has increased the technical skill of the workers in production and service branches.

Higher Education

Higher education is now facing the task of improving the study plans and programs of specializations and increasing the quality and effectiveness of this educational process. It experienced increases in the largest enrollment in its history during this 5-year period.

All the transformations in this process made it necessary to establish a central leadership organ: the MES [Ministry of Higher Education].

The improvement in the educational process includes several aspects that can only be understood as a whole: the revision and elaboration of study plans and programs; the establishment of a structure of specializations that correspond with present and future development of production and services; rational exploitation of the time for education; creation of a national network of centers and the improvement of its organization and structure to strengthen the leadership function scientifically; continued increase in the quality and effectiveness of scientific research projects; expansion and standardization of postgraduate courses; improvement of the technical-material base of the centers; and continued increase in the planning level of enrollees and graduates.

The directive of the First Party Congress thesis on educational policy concerning the need to link study with work has been fulfilled based on the expressed criterion: "Work is done based on the study plan with the intention of completing the study plan." In this sense, the experience of the past school year in incorporating students from the last course in engineering, economics and chemical sciences to the sugar mills, linking their degree work with their future work, has been very positive.

One important achievement in this 5-year period was the initiation of directed study (free education) in the specializations of accounting, history and law. This new modality of advanced study based on self-education provides this educational level to workers, housewives, retired persons, etc., with maximum economy in teachers and sites which are only used for examinations. There are prospects for a much greater increase in enrollment in higher education in the next 5-year period with the arrival of even more intermediate-level graduates. This will increase the number of students in the higher education centers to approximately 300,000 which implies a great effort in construction, equipment and training of the teaching staff.

Enrollment more than doubled. To have an idea of this rapid growth, the number of students who entered this education level in the past school year (81,517) is practically the same as the number of all students enrolled in this level at the beginning of the 5-year period (83,957).

KEY:

1. Enrollment in advanced level
2. 1975-76 and 1979-80 school years
3. Thousands

Scientific Degrees

In the entire higher education subsystem, there are 1,232 scientific-pedagogical cadres and 431 candidates for doctorates in science. At the end of 1980, the MES should have approximately 600 or 650 candidates for doctorates in science.

Scientific Research

The MES participates in 53 of the 77 main government research problems; in 11 of them it is the main organization. About 66 percent of all the professionals in the organization worked on the 1979 plan and 75 percent is expected to participate in the plan approved for 1980. This progressively leads to total incorporation of the scientific-pedagogical cadres in research work.

In the research done this year, special attention was given to research related to livestock development, industry, social sciences and education.

Postgraduate Courses

In 1979, there were 575 postgraduate courses and 25 postgraduate programs. A total of 10,045 graduates passed the courses and 463 finished the programs. An advanced stage in the process of establishment and consolidation of this system of professional advancement began.

KEY:
1. Advanced level graduates
2. 1975-76 and 1979-80 school years
3. Thousands

7717
CSO: 3010

NONCOMPLIANCE WITH LABOR LAWS CAUSES PROBLEMS

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 6 Sep 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Concerning the Coming Mass Trade Union Inspection to Find and Deal With Violations of the Labor Legislation"]

[Text] It is a secret to no one that lack of control and of administrative exigency, linked with certain limitations and imperfections in our laws, have had as their consequence an evident and systematic breakdown in labor and administrative discipline, with its sequel of economic loss and undesirable habits of conduct.

The trade union movement, as Roberto Veiga, general secretary of the CTC [Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions] has repeated on more than one occasion, would be playing a very unimportant role if, given this situation, it merely blamed the administration of its responsibility for these violations, calmly awaiting corrections in the state apparatus and failing to struggle, using every means, to prevent these violations from continuing or recurring.

In recent periods the existence of a large number of wage violations has been established. In some cases Law No 12 designed to prevent the establishment of new historic wages has been violated. There have been flagrant violations of Resolution 24 on the assessment of workers' skills and thousands of jobs have been filled without evaluating anyone and without taking the rights of seniority and the requirements set forth in Resolution 70 on the drafting of personnel lists into account. Law No 1225 establishing labor records and Resolution 111 on the right to paid vacations are being violated.

The trade union movement, even though it is perfectly aware that the struggle being waged for discipline and exigency is not a battle which can be won overnight, but must be waged every day, at all times and in all places, has decided that in the course of this year more than 250,000 trade union leaders should attend seminars to study, even if only on an elementary level, the labor provisions which have suffered the most violations in recent times.

Also this year, and benefiting from this knowledge carried to the base level of the trade unions, the CTC directed that a mass trade union inspection be undertaken to cover the broadest possible range of labor centers and files, with a view to detecting violations and most energetically demanding immediate correction of them. The majority of these violations directly attack the economy of the country and the rights set forth in the law for the benefit of the workers.

This vast task, the inspection of thousands of labor centers and the verification of the status of tens of thousands of labor files, must in addition be carried out in the short time remaining between now and the end of November, the date set as the deadline so that the results can serve as a factor in information and basis for analysis at the most important meeting of Cuban society: the second communist party congress.

The purpose of the trade union inspection is based on realistic criteria: it is not a question of taking the heavens by siege. No one should expect that all of the violations, in all respects and in all places, will be found and corrected. No one can hope that tens of thousands of trade union leaders who are beginning a study of the laws today will suddenly become keen experts capable of finding a needle in a haystack.

What should we expect of the inspection? First of all the machinery which has really functioned very poorly when it comes to combating practices in violation of the legislation must be set in motion, and this launching must be on a grand scale. The speed the present situation requires obviates the regular and orthodox methods. We must break the vicious circle and end inertia and this must be done in drastic and exemplary fashion.

The inspection will make it possible to train many thousands of trade union leaders in practical and useful fashion to become familiar with what a labor file really is and how it is handled, to learn to discover the intolerable techniques of bureaucratic concealment in order to cover up what has been done wrong, and will enable them to become, in brief, more capable of directing the workers and defending their rights in the wage and labor sector.

The inspection will produce, as its first fruits, a large number of documents signed by the administrations and the trade unions, setting forth a description of the violations found and the pledge to correct them as soon as possible. This alone, inconceivable without rigorous and demanding control, would constitute an invaluable contribution by the trade union movement to the development of our socialist society and a worthy salute by the workers' class to the highest meeting of Cuban communists.

This task, which is yet another test of the capacity of our trade union movement to deal successfully with all types of vestiges and vices of the past, cannot be undertaken without a large measure of optimism which, naturally, does not preclude a profoundly-thought-out and rational strategy.

At no time will the policy of training trade union specialists in legislative measures be abandoned, in the belief that mass activity can take its place. The determined and concrete support of state inspection in all its aspects will not be abandoned. This process, which has justifiably been compared with a kind of literacy campaign for labor laws, will not stop here. In this field too a battle will be waged to achieve the sixth-grade level and then the ninth-grade level.

In order to carry out this great imminent task, enthusiasm, a combat spirit and optimism are needed. And it will be carried out because these are virtues inherent in the revolutionaries, the communists, the heirs to the glorious tradition bequeathed us by the unforgettable Lazaro Pena, whose living presence is felt whenever the workers' class needs to undertake a great and useful effort.

5157
CSO: 3010

NEW WAGE GUIDELINES FOR TEACHERS ISSUED

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 9 Sep 80 pp 1, 3

[Text] The General Salary Reform approved by the Executive Committee of the Council of Ministers calls for a new salary organization for technicians, including educational workers affiliated with the National Education System, who are to be given varying treatment, depending on effort, additional time in service and evaluation of their work.

In order to fairly assess the endeavor of the educational workers, the State Committee for Labor and Social Security has issued Resolution No 504, which regulates the salary treatment to be applied to those rendering service on the preschool, elementary, basic intermediate, upper intermediate, special, adult, technical and professional levels of education.

Also included are the workers engaged in the training and improving of the personnel for teaching and supplementary training in the National Education System; those engaged in teaching, administration, counseling and inspection of teaching, as well as in administrative management; and those affiliated with the educational centers attached to the local People's Government organs, and the agencies of the central state administration.

The salary of the technical workers in education consists of the following components: monthly salary, additional pay for years of service rendered in education, increment for holding management positions, increase for performing duties involving educational counseling or inspection, increment for special working conditions, and increase based on the work load, the educational center in which the services are rendered and the performance of work in addition to that in the job description.

Three salary levels have been set as salaries for educational workers: a minimal, intermediate and maximum, so that those salaries can be raised or reduced depending on the qualitative and quantitative results achieved in the work; the latter being determined through the evaluation process established for that purpose.

The salaries vary depending on the level of qualifications, and whether or not the individual has the proper degree or equivalent training, under the terms and conditions recognized by the Ministries of Education and Culture, and the Institute of Sports, Physical Education and Recreation, for holding the technical position involved.

When a worker without a degree obtains a degree, he starts earning the salary corresponding to the minimal rate for the position as a degree-holder, and he is exempted from the salary treatment established for new graduates.

In such instances, when the salary for the minimal level of the position as a degree-holder coincides with the maximum level of that position as a non-degree holder and the worker is earning the latter, he will be given the salary established for the medium salary level as a degree-holder.

For purposes of additional payment for years of service rendered in education, those wherein the worker has held any teaching position after obtaining the proper degree or equivalent training, under the terms and conditions recognized by the Ministries of Education and Culture, and the National Institute of Sports, Physical Education and Recreation, are to be considered such.

The increment for holding educational management positions is contingent on the specific conditions under which those positions are discharged, according to the stipulations made by this regulation for that purpose.

The Salary of Technical Educational Workers

The following factors are considered for setting the monthly slaries of technical educational workers: level of education or supplementary training in which they are engaged; position held; degree status; and years of service rendered after obtaining the degree.

There is a special salary treatment for those just graduated or incorporated into positions on the preschool, elementary, basic intermediate, and upper intermediate levels of education, and in special, sports and art centers. Excluded from this treatment are: teaching aides, schoolmasters, instructors, school librarians and licensed elementary schoolmasters.

The monthly salaries set for technical educational workers are as follows, according to Article 15 of the aforementioned Resolution No 504:

Preschool and elementary education: instructor, schoolmaster (with degree), 148.00, 160.00 and 171.00; instructor without degree, 111.00, 119.00 and 128.00; licensed elementary schoolmaster, 198.00, 205.00 and 211.00; teaching aide with degree, 111.00, 119.00 and 128.00; and without degree, 97.00.

Basic intermediate education and language school: teacher (intermediate level graduate), 171.00, 185.00 and 198.00; without degree, 148.00, 160.00 and 171.00; teacher (higher level graduate), 211.00, 221.00 and 231.00.

Special education and diagnostic and guidance centers: therapist schoolmaster, (intermediate level graduate), 171.00, 185.00 and 198.00; without degree, 148.00, 160.00 and 171.00; therapist schoolmaster (upper level graduate), 198.00, 211.00 and 231.00; basic intermediate schoolteacher (intermediate level graduate), 198.00, 211.00 and 231.00; without degree, 171.00, 185.00 and 198.00; teacher, teaching psychologist, clinical instructor, psychologist and speech instructor (basic intermediate), upper level graduate, 211.00, 231.00 and 250.00; without degree, 171.00, 185.00 and 198.00; teaching aide, 128.00, 138.00 and 148.00; without degree, 111.00; reeducation aide, with degree, 148.00, 160.00 and 171.00; without degree, 128.00.

Upper intermediate education: teacher with degree, 211.00, 231.00 and 250.00; without degree, 171.00, 185.00 and 198.00.

School librarian: in elementary education and equivalent levels of supplementary training, with degree, 148.00, 160.00 and 171.00; in basic intermediate, upper intermediate and equivalent levels of supplementary training, with degree, 171.00, 185.00 and 198.00; without degree, 128.00, 138.00 and 148.00

Adult education: worker-peasant schoolmaster, with degree, 128.00, 138.00 and 148.00; without degree, 119.00; worker-peasant secondary teacher, with degree, 160.00, 171.00 and 185.00; without degree, 128.00, 138.00 and 148.00; worker-peasant faculty teacher, with degree, 211.00, 221.00 and 231.00; without degree, 148.00, 160.00 and 171.00.

Technical and professional education instructors: worker instructors in basic intermediate education and the youth movement will receive their salary as skilled workers; graduate intermediate technical and upper intermediate education instructor, 171.00, 185.00 and 198.00.

The salaries are also set for technical teachers and teachers aides in specialized cultural centers, with pay ranging between 17.000 and 280.00 for teachers with degrees, and between 128.00 and 198.00 for those without degrees. As for the coachers, instructors and teachers of athletics in specialized centers, the salaries range between 148.00 and 310.00 for those with degrees, and between 111.00 and 231.00 for those without degrees.

Increment for Holding Educational Management Positions

There are two different specific conditions for giving the increment for holding educational management positions: directors who discharge their functions in educational centers and those who do so on the territorial level.

For general education and specialized sports centers, divided into five categories, the increment for personnel in boarding school management will be between 100.00 and 20.00; in semi-boarding centers, between 80.00 and 10.00; and in day centers, between 60.00 and 10.00.

Increases are also to be received by the directors of specialized cultural centers, depending on their rating and their boarding, semi-boarding or day status; and of child day care centers, and diagnostic and guidance centers.

Additional Pay for Years of Service Rendered in Education

The technical educational workers receive additional monthly pay for years of service rendered in that activity, in the following amounts and forms:

Upon completely 5 years of service as a degree holder, the worker will be given 7.00; in 7 years, 5.00 will be added, making a total of 12.00; in 10 years, he will obtain 17.00; in 15 years, 27.00; in 20 years, 37.00; and, upon completing 25 years of service as a degree holder, he will receive 47.00.

Salary Increment for Holding Educational Counseling and Inspection Positions

The workers who hold positions as methodologists, methodologist inspectors, technical consulting inspectors and coordinators of art schools, all in education, depending on the area in which they perform their functions, and whether or not they possess the qualifications required for this purpose, will receive increments of between 70.00 and 40.00.

Salary Increases for Special Working Conditions

Monthly salary increments are stipuated for educational workers and directors who perform their functions in the basic secondary schools, preuniversity institutes, and polytechnical schools and institutes, when those centers are located in rural areas and the workers are housed in them.

These increments will be reckoned on the total salary, including the monthly salary, the increment for holding management positions and the additional pay for years of service. The amounts thereof will be:

a. 10 percent of the total salary when the leave system is weekly.

b. 15 percent of the total salary when the leave takes place after work periods of 12 days and 3 months.

c. 25 percent of the total salary when the leave takes place after work periods exceeding 3 months.

The text of Resolution No 504 also deals with various aspects of salaries, such as the salary of administrative managers, athletes or referees who have started giving courses, performers and those who give courses on television or radio programs.

Study on Workloads

The State Committee for Labor and Social Security, in cooperation with the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Culture, the National Institute of Sports, Physical Education and Recreation and the pertinent national unions, will make a study of the different workloads involved in the endeavor of teachers and instructors, the type of center in which they work and other activities added to their job description, for the purpose of regulating the payment for this activity when it is fitting. The aforementioned study must be concluded so that it may go into effect as of 1 January 1981.

Resolution No 504, of 3 September 1980, signed by the chairman of the CETSS [State Committee for Labor and Social Security], will go into effect as of the date cited therein, when it has been published in the Official Gazette of the Republic.

2909
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

CUBANA SABOTAGE ANNIVERSARY--Chaired by PCC Politburo member Sergio del Valle and Central Committee members Jose Ramon Fernandez and Oscar Iser Mojena, a ceremony was held today at the Martires de Barbados School for Sports Teachers in Havana on the occasion of the fourth anniversary of the sabotage of a Cubana airliner off the coast of Barbados, killing 73 persons aboard. The main and only speaker, Oscar Iser Mojena, devoted a major portion of his speech to praise the youths making up the Cuban fencing team who were killed in that sabotage and the pilot of the airliner. He urged the students at the Martires de Barbados school to work hard and be better athletes, better teachers. He said Cuba must have athletes as good as the ones killed in that tragic event, who were returning to Cuba after winning all the gold medals in a Central American and Caribbean tournament. He then quoted Fidel Castro in his speech at the mass rally on the anniversary of the Committees for the Defense of the Revolution and demanded justice for the dead and punishment for the four monstrous criminals. [FL062230 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2123 GMT 6 Oct 80 FL]

CHE GUEVARA ANNIVERSARY--Chaired by PCC Politburo member and Interior Minister Ramiro Valdes, Secretariat member Antonio Perez Herrero and Central Committee members Jose Ramon Fernandez and Osmani Cienfuegos and Ernesto Guevara Sr, a ceremony was held today at the Che Guevara Preuniversity School to commemorate the 13th anniversary of the death of the heroic guerrilla. PCC Central Committee member Oscar Fernandez Mell made the keynote speech which was entirely devoted to praise the revolutionary work of Ernesto Che Guevara. In his 18-minute biographical account, Fernandez Mell referred to Guevara's early days as a youth devoted to the cause of the poor, and subsequent encounter with Fidel Castro in Mexico. He noted Guevara's rapid climb through the ranks to the top of the guerrilla leadership in the Cuban war for freedom from the tyranny of Fulgencio Batista. [FL090112 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 0032 GMT 9 Oct 80 FL]

ENVOY TO TRINIDAD, TOBAGO--It has been learned that the Council of State has designated Comrade Ivan Cesar Martinez Montalvo ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the Republic of Cuba to the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago with residence in Georgetown, Cooperative Republic of Guyana, where he holds a similar post. [Text] [FL031506 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1412 GMT 3 Oct 80]

ENVOY TO JORDAN--The Council of State has designated Comrade Lester Rodriguez Perez ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the Republic of Cuba to the government of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan with residence in Damascus,

Syrian Arab Republic, where he holds a similar post. [Text] [FL041207 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 4 Oct 80]

NICARAGUAN ENVOY PRESENTS CREDENTIALS--Carlos Rafael Rodriguez, vice president of the Councils of State and Ministers, today received His Excellency Mr Marco Antonio Valle Martinez, who presented the credentials accrediting him as ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the Republic of Nicaragua. At the conclusion of the ceremony the ambassador went to the Plaza de la Revolucion where he laid a floral wreath at the foot of the Jose Marti monument. [Text] [FL092327 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 9 Oct 80]

EMULATION EVALUATION--Light Industry Minister Manuel Millares today chaired the ministry's national emulation plenum at which the fulfillment of the technical-economic plan was analyzed. The report showed that as of 30 November [as heard] execution of the plan was 94 percent; that is, 35.4 million pesos behind schedule. Administrators were urged to encourage emulation so that enterprises that are in a position to do so may fulfill their plan prior to year's end. Of the 88,345 workers in light industry, 78,900 signed their emulation commitments but only 61,710 are fulfilling their pledges. Of the 115 enterprises grouped in the National Light Industry Workers Union, only 23 achieved the winning emulation index and 91 [as heard] are falling short in one or more indexes. [Havana Domestic Television Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 7 Oct 80 FL]

NAVY PARTY CONFERENCE--Div Gen Abelardo Colome Ibarra, member of the Central Committee and first vice minister [as heard] of the Revolutionary Armed Force, has closed the Revolutionary Navy's 7th Party Conference. The conference analyzed the work done by the party committee adjunct to the political section and elected the committee's members and alternate members, and delegates to the 2d party congress. [Text] [FL301707 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1137 GMT 30 Sep 80 FL]

NATIONAL RADIO MEETING--Miguel Cano Blanco, member of the party Central Committee and party first secretary in Holguin, has made the opening remarks at the third national radio meeting of the Cuban Radio and Television Institute [ICRT] which will be held until Friday at the Comdr Manuel Fajardo Sports Training Center. More than 100 delegates representing the national networks, provincial and local radio stations, and the directorates of the central organization [ICRT] are attending the meeting to examine the work done, future development of Cuban radio and exchange of experiences with other friendly countries. Directors of Nicaraguan radio stations are participating in the meeting as special guests who have come to expand their knowledge of the role of this important communications media. [Text] [FL161552 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1500 GMT 16 Oct 80 FL]

CTC INFORMATION MEETING--Party Secretariat member Antonio Perez Herrero has made the closing remarks at the national information meeting of the Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions (CTC) held at the Palace of Workers. The party official emphasized the importance which the party attaches to the information campaign for the economic education of workers and to the study clubs undertaken by the labor movement throughout the country. He also spoke of information work regarding implementation of the general wage reform, of the importance of the production and services meeting and about the existing labor legislation. [FL160234 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2032 GMT 15 Oct 80 FL]

ALMEIDA IN SANTIAGO--Commander of the Revolution Juan Almeida Bosque, member of the PCC Central Committee Politburo, has toured various social projects under construction in Santiago de Cuba in honor of the party provincial assembly meeting and the Second PCC Congress. During his tour he was accompanied by Jose Ramon Balaguer, first party secretary in the province, Rene de los Santos and Lino Carreras, all members of the PCC Central Committee, as well as Eddy Fernandez Boada, president of the People's Government Provincial Assembly. [Text] [FL032132 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 3 Oct 80 FL]

AGRICULTURAL-LIVESTOCK WORKERS DAY--The National Agricultural and Livestock Workers Union has presented a certificate of recognition to Army Gen Raul Castro Ruz, second secretary of the party and first vice president of the Councils of State and Ministers. Rene Penalver, secretary general of the union, made the announcement as he spoke at the national commemoration of agricultural-livestock workers day held at the Matanzas Livestock Breeding Farm. Penalver said the certificate is in recognition of Raul's support in setting forth work guidelines since creation of the union in 1973. Politburo member Jose Ramon Machado Ventura and a group of comrade leaders of the agriculture sector and national vanguards representing the 7,000 who have served 25 years in the agricultural-livestock sector also received certificates of recognition. [FL032132 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2103 GMT 3 Oct 80 FL]

SUGAR HARVEST PREPARATIONS--Party Politburo member Jose Ramon Machado Ventura has chaired a meeting held in San Cristobal, Pinar del Rio Province, to examine the status of preparations for the next sugar harvest. In his closing remarks at the meeting, he explained that deficiencies of the past cannot be allowed this year; therefore, work must be done with the canecutters so that they will achieve greater productivity. Machado Ventura also said that there has to be growth in other sectors such as livestock and tobacco so that positive results are obtained on all fronts. Jaime Crombet, party first secretary in Pinar del Rio, explained that work is being done to solve transportation problems. [FL022324 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 2 Oct 80 FL]

PORT WORKERS ACCOMPLISHMENTS--PCC Central Committee Secretariat member Jorge Risquet has made the closing remarks at a meeting on the accomplishments of the port-transportation-domestic trade network during the month of September in the provinces of Ciego de Avila, Camaguey and Las Tunas. Terming positive the results in the three territories, Risquet urged the participants to maintain the same pace. The party leader said that during the current month some 755,000 tons should be unloaded throughout the island. He reiterated that the levels which have been attained must be maintained to raise the level of efficiency. [FL092229 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2133 GMT 9 Oct 80 FL]

MANZANILLO MODERN HOSPITAL--PCC Politburo member and Public Health Minister Sergio del Valle has toured the modern provincial 630-bed hospital under construction in Manzanillo. The leader visited the X-ray department where he expressed interest in the time it took to assemble the equipment, its technology and cost. He also visited the urology and ophthalmology wards, the blood bank offices, surgery rooms, the dental clinic, the intensive care unit, laboratories and other areas. During his tour of the hospital the public health minister also toured the dermatology department, emergency room and one of the classrooms. [FL092229 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2138 GMT 9 Oct 80 FL]

'GRANMA' PARTY MEETING--Chaired by PCC Politburo member Arnaldo Milian Castro, the second assembly meeting to evaluate, elect and/or reelect party officers is being held in Granma Province. During the morning session, Roberto Damian Alfonso, first party secretary in the province, read the main report which points out accomplishments and deficiencies in party work in that territory since holding the previous meeting. The leader greeted the workers for their efforts in weeding canefields and planting sugarcane as well as for their active participation in the militant people's marches. Damian Alfonso announced there had been favorable results in saving fuel and fulfilling repair plans of agricultural equipment and sugar mills, and called for making the next sugar harvest the most efficient to date. [FL092229 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 2150 GMT 9 Oct 80 FL]

ICAP INDEPENDENCE CELEBRATION--The 159th anniversary of Central American independence was celebrated last night at the Cuban Institute for Friendship with Peoples [ICAP] with a call to all peace-loving men to join in solidarity with the people of El Salvador and Guatemala. Speaking of the situation of present-day Latin America, ICAP Vice-President Jorge Gallardo said, "We are calling upon all progressive men, revolutionary and progressive organizations, independent movements, international, regional and world organizations, the International Red Cross, the organizations which sincerely defend human rights that are denouncing the reign of terror, murder, and crime in El Salvador and Guatemala." Representing the Unified Revolutionary Directorate of El Salvador, Rafael Mejivas stated that last year the ICAP honored the Nicaraguan revolution, which is in power today, and next year will commemorate the people of El Salvador, who will also soon be in power. [Text] Havana GRANMA in Spanish 16 Sep 80 p 3]

CANARY-CUBA FRIENDSHIP GROUP FAREWELL--A delegation of the Jose Marti Canary-Cuba Friendship Association, which was here on a 15-day visit, was bid farewell in a friendly meeting with leaders of the Cuban Institute for Friendship with Peoples [ICAP] at ICAP headquarters. The visiting group, which toured various provinces and held interest meetings with mass organizations, was led by Francisco Gonzales, president of the Canary-Cuba Friendship Association, who presented a plaque dedicated to our commander in chief as a remembrance of the group's visit to Cuba. Accepting the plaque, Alfonso Guillen Zelaya, vice president of ICAP, thanked the delegation and invited them to return to our country. [Text] [Havana GRANMA in Spanish 16 Sep 80 p 3]

OCLAE MEDICAL TEAM IN NICARAGUA--Prensa Latina--The Francisco Meza Rojas medical team of the Continental Organization of Latin American Students [OCLAE], composed of Cuban, Chilean and Uruguayan specialists, has agreed to extend their term of service in the rural areas of Nicaragua until the end of the year. The decision is in response to a request by the Nicaragua Ministry of Public Health and the 19 July Sandinist Youth. The international medical brigade has been working since last February in a vast region that includes the departments of Bosco, Chontales, Rio San Juan and Zelaya Sur. [Text] [Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 2 Sep 80 p 1]

8587
CSO: 3010

ANEP FEARS SMALL BUSINESSES THREATENED BY MULTINATIONALS

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 30 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] "The National Private Enterprise Association (ANEP) reiterates its deep concern for the strong negative impact on the national economy as a result of the violence unleashed by extremist groups," says a communique released yesterday. It goes on to say:

"For more than 2 years, the productive sector of the nation has been subjected to a series of barbarous acts which range from kidnappings to the assassination of businessmen and the destruction of commercial and industrial facilities. All of these activities against private enterprise are placing our economy at the brink of collapse. The social consequences are difficult to quantify.

"This critical situation, from all viewpoints, justifies ANEP's concern for the immediate, uncertain and gloomy future that awaits the Salvadoran productive sector. To these extremely disturbing events on the national scene we must add other circumstances which threaten the abused private sector of El Salvador. The large international firms which provide raw materials and machinery for local production are exerting legal pressures against Salvadoran firms due to the latter's inability to meet their economic obligations. In view of the above, the National Private Enterprise Association (ANEP) declares and proposes the following:

"1) That it is essential to analyze this problem in all aspects, at the private and public levels, and to adopt alternative solutions as soon as possible to avoid the impact of the legal embargoes by the largest companies against the smallest ones.

"2) That the embassies of the countries that supply raw materials and machinery should inform their respective governments, through the usual channels, of the need to adopt flexible policies for the handling of the liquidity problems of the Salvadoran firms, and to take into consideration that any drastic measure would only lead to the definitive sinking of the Salvadoran economy.

"3) That by the same token and for the same purpose, the large Salvadoran companies should not take drastic measures against the medium and small firms, because that would result in the immediate closing of numerous enterprises which cannot meet their economic obligations due to these very political circumstances.

"4) That the positive attitude of the Salvadoran banking system should be recognized, because it implemented a refinancing policy for the enterprises that are enduring the current national political crisis, allowing a brief respite for the majority of enterprises.

"5) That despite the critical situation our country is experiencing, ANEP urges the entire business community to continue struggling indefatigably to prevent the breakdown of our economy. With the cooperation of the majority of the labor sector, we should keep open our workplaces throughout the republic."

8926
CSO: 3010

NEW CONSTITUTIONAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR ELECTIONS

FL151450 Georgetown SUNDAY CHRONICLE in English 5 Oct 80 p 1

[Article by George Baird]

[Text] President Arthur Chung in one of his last official acts, yesterday made an order to bring the electoral processes in the existing constitution in line with those in the new constitution being promulgated tomorrow.

The constitution of the Cooperative Republic of Guyana (adaptation and modification of laws) (elections) Order 1980 makes amendments relating to presidential, national assembly, and regional elections.

And with the local democratic organs act recently enacted to sanction the holding of regional elections simultaneously with general elections, official sources said Guyanese voters would be able to vote for president, members of parliament and regional councils' representatives at one time.

President Chung who vacates office tomorrow, signed yesterday's order to give his successor Prime Minister Forbes Burnham powers "to such an extent as may in his opinion, be necessary or expedient to enable the constitution to function on or after the appointed day." (tomorrow).

Clauses in yesterday's order relate mainly to the representation of the people act and the national registration act, constitutional experts said.

One of its features is to permit the chief election officer to shift polling places from one division to another providing notice of the switch is published not later than 20 days before the elections.

Geographical problems, particularly in places like the hinterland, were cited as necessitating this move.

For the first time, yesterday's order also made provisions in the electoral process for the parties contesting to name a presidential candidate on their lists. Presiding officers must also now not only be furnished with copies of the representation of the people act but also with amendments for their guidance to deal with any on-the-spot difficulties.

Instead of only the Guyana defence force and the police, Guyana national service and Guyana people's militia personnel can also now be present at polling places because of another amendment which deletes the special service unit, now disbanded.

There is also a clause to legalise the use of the same procedures usable in general elections to be used in regional and local elections.

"These amendments are not only necessary but significant because the new constitution also ushers in a new system of representation of the people. Not that we are voting differently but some members of the National Assembly are being elected under different arrangements," said one official.

CSO: 3020

WHEELOCK REVIEWS ANTI-SOMOZA STRUGGLE

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 3 Sep 80 p 3

[Speech by Commander of the Revolution Jaime Wheelock during ceremonies commemorating the second anniversary of operation "Death to Somozism," at the headquarters of the Council of State on 22 August 1980]

[Text] We are truly celebrating the second anniversary of the revolutionary action which erupted that midday of 22 August 1978 in the rooms of the Somozist Congress to deal the dictatorship a severe political blow and to give our masses a more definite confidence in the victory of the Sandinist Revolution. It is fortunate that we are celebrating this second anniversary in the room of the Council of State which is, as Comrade Dora María Tellez said, the faithful representative of a people legislating in a free country. We would like to point out several facts, circumstances and characteristics within this whole extraordinary and complex operation, which is so full of fruitful meaning.

In a way, the facts are known to everyone. The entire world--we would say--must have felt itself directly linked to that operation carried out by a group of young men--a deed of extraordinary bravery against one of the bloodiest and most genocidal dictatorships known to the history of mankind.

Struggle Only Possible With Weapons

We would like to point out some elements about this action: We must consider in the first place that by the year 1978, as a result of the prolonged struggle begun 20 years earlier by the Sandinist National Liberation Front [FSLN] of the increased opposition by all the Nicaraguan people, the military dictatorship of Somoza had been weakening rapidly. It was known that in reactionary circles in the United States, Latin America and even within our own country, a certain distrust was already beginning to surface regarding the ability of the Somozist dictatorship to maintain its everlasting control over the political, economic and military structures of the country.

Of course the FSLN had indicated from the beginning that the head-on struggle of the Nicaraguan people should be for the revolutionary defeat of Somoza, the national independence of Nicaragua, true democracy and the social progress of the country. We all knew it was impossible to launch any kind of struggle in Nicaragua without weapons. However, those who in the past had even been in Somoza's government felt frightened by the rapid deterioration of dictatorial power, and they began to seek, find, experiment with and explore political solutions which would be favorable to continuing Somoza's plan, which meant, besides the oppressive character of Somozism, the continuation of imperialist oppression and the exploitation of broad popular masses.

We must say that there was confusion in some sectors of society. In a way some groups thought, partly because of their own interests and partly because of their ignorance, that Somoza would leave and a new government would be organized which could bring some advantages to the Nicaraguan people. By August 1978 the Nicaraguan people were already preparing to launch a tenacious and open resistance to Somozism. Gone were the days of August and September 1977, when the popular masses from the slums in the industrial centers, the students and the peasant sector in the surrounding mountains had launched a struggle against Somoza which, though still new was nevertheless broad-based. The event of October 1977, the January strike, and the first uprisings of the people which began in Monimbo and Diriamba were already past; in 1978, there was already a climate--shall we call it a national uprising--of popular, antidictatorial insurrection. However, in contrast to our vanguard organization's attempts to reunite all of society--an entire people, the entire country--against the Somozist dictatorship for its revolutionary overthrow, some groups were seeking antipopular solutions.

The People Fought Not Only To Kick Somoza Out, but To Take Over Power

For this very reason we say that the events of 22 August were basically a political action, but they were carried out primarily to destroy the possibility of that kind of solution. There could be no compromises, no half-measures, as long as there were people trying to solve the problem of power and not the problem of getting rid of Somoza.

Some said it was like pulling a tooth; an attempt to see whether the disease could be cured by pulling the bad tooth. On 22 August the FSLN launched a tremendous blow against the dictatorship, knocking out all its teeth once and for all; this meant the Sandinists were willing to maintain and keep the vanguard position in the defeat of Somozism and at the same time to show the people once more where they might converge their forces. We recall that besides the extremely intrepid, daring and highly revolutionary action, a program was announced, a message to the people and the world in which not only was Somoza condemned, not only was the dictator condemned, but the dictatorship and the whole system, as well as the oligarchy which was Somoza's accomplice, the turncoats, the Conservatives who were Somozists, and other Somozists--the exploiters and the oppressors.

We did not deceive anyone, nor did we say that these were the enemies of the Sandinist Revolution. At the same time, the attack was launched against the National Congress, the Somozist Congress where Conservatives and Liberals, the opposition and the governing party were having meetings. It was also a question of telling the Conservatives that they were just as much enemies of the people as the Somozists themselves, and thus to draw clearly the battle lines. Of course, it was also a military action, and there was a willingness to fight against the National Guard to the last man. In other words, the action had both political and military value.

Order To Open Fire Given on 22 August

Let us recall also that on that occasion the circumstances were already such that a few days later our people would rise up in a national revolt. Some of us thought it was not yet time to launch the national uprising, chiefly because we wanted the uprising and the insurrection to be victorious, and we saw that there were some military, organizational and unification matters among the revolutionaries which were not sufficiently clear. But we must also admit that under the political circumstances there was virtual agreement between the fighting spirit and resolution of the people and the same elements within our own political and military strategy; in other words, our people decided, before they were massacred and murdered by the dictatorship, to attack Somoza's forces directly. Either they killed us or we defended ourselves by attacking. And that probably led to the fact that we, over and above any disagreements, had to give the order and take the lead in that great uprising which had begun almost spontaneously in Matagalpa. We might say, in this regard, that the action of 22 August further weakened the dictatorship and practically represented an order to open fire.

We should also like to refer to some aspects of the action which are of everlasting value: the generosity, courage, fighting spirit and bravery of the fighters who participated in it.

It would not have been difficult, with all the elements in favor thereof, to retreat; that action had no retreat. From the tactical point of view, it was to be carried out in the center of Managua, in an extremely dangerous and complex terrain. Scarcely 25 men were involved and they did it, freeing many of our brothers from prison, among them some members of the National Directorate, so that they could join the fight for national liberation and support the Sandinist struggle with their experience and their direct participation.

The Assault on the Palace Reflected the People's Fighting Spirit

This action, from our point of view, has a significance and valor which are undoubtedly unique, but we would like to mention how that courage and audacity, like the action itself, are the reflection of the experience, the bravery and the fighting spirit demonstrated by the Nicaraguan people throughout an extraordinarily prolonged period of our history. We will not go back too far. We will point out, for example, the actions at Rio Coco and Bocay which, although small, still displayed great fighting spirit and bravery; we will mention the actions by small groups, which wanted to break through, to open up history for Sandinism, in Pancasan, in Zinica; we will also recall the battles in the cities, where Julio Buitrago became the champion of bravery and courage. And surely imprinted on those fighters and helping to encourage them was the revolutionary spirit, the spirit of standing up for our free fatherland or dying; the fighting spirit of Julio, of Leonel, of the comrades in the mountains, of Silvio, Borge and Carlos, and finally, the spirit of many of our brothers who for long years had been fighting the dictatorship in the mountains, maintaining national resistance there at a time when our movement was still scattered; when it was difficult to organize a cell or group in the cities; when the dictatorship practically occupied the country, from the economic, political and military point of view; when that flame, that small spark which remained in the mountains for 5 or 7 years meant real existence, the shout of independence, national liberation, democracy, the defeat of Somizism and the hope of victory--no action can exceed its history and its scope.

And it is clear that this is also one of the most extraordinary expressions of Sandinism, which is also expressed in moral values, combat experience and the ideas of Sandino, Rigoberto and Carlos Fonseca.

Comrades, allow me to ask you today to pay tribute to those brothers of Rigoberto Lopez Perez who later died fighting against the dictatorship, and on their behalf to remember forever, with the gratitude due them, those who also made it possible for our country to be free and our people sovereign and masters of their own destiny. Thank you.

8735
CSO: 3010

RAMIREZ' NEGATIVE STATEMENT ON CELAM SCORED

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 30 Sep 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Attacks on CELAM Which Arouse Suspicion"]

[Text] During the recent "Face the People" program involving the JGRN [Government Junta of National Reconstruction] and the Nicaraguan clergy, the carefully considered and constructive position maintained by the government's representatives was noteworthy.

This occasion was, in fact, a summation, avoiding the needless aftermath that is sometimes produced by ill-considered insinuations or attacks. Unfortunately, however, the next day, Saturday, we read an interview with Dr Sergio Ramirez, in which he reiterated the insinuations made by the minister of housing, Miguel Ernesto Vigil, against the top-ranking Church organization in Latin America, CELAM [Latin American Bishops Conference].

CELAM is the gathering of all the national bishops conferences that exist on this continent. Our bishops belong to it, through the head of the Nicaraguan Bishops Conference, now Monsignor Obando, and a delegate. Possibly because of being misinformed, Dr Ramirez called CELAM a "political entity," whereas, strictly speaking, it is the highest ranking Church organ in Latin America, inferior only to Rome. The bases for his accusation were as weak as those shown by Minister Vigil: statements made by Monsignor Lopez Trujillo, head of CELAM, on the occasion of the election of the bishops conferences, in which he said that, "if Nicaragua should become a Marxist-Leninist state, there would be problems for the Church."

This statement, plus some criticism of the personality of Monsignor Lopez Trujillo, sufficed to prompt these two members of the government of Nicaragua to bring the entire CELAM into question and to utter serious insinuations aimed at evoking suspicions about its purposes.

Fortunately, it was the Nicaraguan Bishops Conference itself which set forth to discredit the accusations, publicly thanking CELAM for the cooperation that it is lending our Church at the request of the Nicaraguan Church.

When, from the plains or in these pages, some Nicaraguans point out disturbing signs in the government or express distrust toward certain measures, many of the government's officials resent it, making countercharges against those who do so, accusing them of deliberately spreading distrust and instigating suspicion of the revolution. Hence one finds surprising the ease with which some of the same people at times harbor suspicions for reasons as unjustified as those cited, and launch forth to spread distrust of the intentions of the Catholic Church of Latin America.

The attacks on CELAM by Dr Ramirez and engineer Vigil, rather than doing the revolution the slightest good, inevitably lead to a countersuspicion that perhaps there is a self-interest in causing division within the Church whether internally, between the clergy and the hierarchy, or externally, between the Nicaraguan Church and the Universal Church of which it is an integral part. Using the aforementioned instance involving Monsignor Lopez Trujillo as an argument, moreover, only gives the impression that this is a mere excuse.

Good relations with the Catholic Church and with the Christian people of Nicaragua will not be cultivated with such needlessly belligerent attitudes, but rather by showing the strictest respect for the Church's local, regional and Roman authorities; because the Catholic Church is one and universal.

2909
CSO: 3010

LATIN AMERICAN ANTICOMMUNIST CONGRESS SCORED AS MENACING

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 30 Sep 80 p 2

[Commentary by Irene Selser: "Fourth Congress of the Latin American Anticommunist Confederation"]

[Text] On 1 September there appeared in the leading newspapers of the Mexican capital a cable from Buenos Aires reprinting the comments made by the Paraguayan defense minister, Maj Gen Marcial Samaniego, who, upon his arrival in Argentina, stated that, although one could not say that there was an alliance for defense among the nations of the American Southern Cone, "for some time there has been a tacit pact," and an "understanding." "We have always held meetings associated with the understandings related to Southern Cone policies. There is a practical aspect and a reality that we have been materializing for some time."

These remarks verbally support something that is already a fact, and has been for a long time, relating to the repressive coordination of Southern Cone armies and police forces. As early as 1977, 21 Chileans residing in Bolivia were turned over to the Chilean authorities in the border zone of Arica, as exiles accused of engaging in political activities of a "Marxist tendency." A year before, at the time of the most harsh repression of the popular sectors by the Argentine Armed Forces, two Uruguayan children were kidnapped, with their parents, in Buenos Aires. They were Anatole and Victoria Grissonas, aged 2 years and a few months, respectively. A few months later, they showed up abandoned on a square in Santiago de Chile. It was not until August 1979 that, thanks to the identification that someone made of them, it was learned that they had been adopted by a Chilean family.

Hence, there is a long list of cases of abductions in one area of the Southern Cone, the victims of which, after their capture, showed up dead or alive thousands of kilometers away, if they did not disappear without leaving a trace. To mention only the most widely publicized, we could cite the case of the Uruguayans Universindo Diaz and Lilian Celiberti, who were captured in Porto Alegre, Brazil, through the intervention of the Uruguayan and Brazilian police, and concerning whom there has been no word to date; the disappearance of the Argentine journalist, Norberto A. Habegger, who disappeared in August 1978, in Brazil; and the more recent case of the five Argentines kidnapped in Peru, one of whom, Mrs Noemi Esther Gianotti de Molfino, a member of the Plaza de Mayo Mothers Movement, showed up dead in an apartment in Madrid, Spain. If there were any lingering doubts, these incidents confirm the fact that the state terrorism practiced by the governments of the Southern Cone countries recognizes no boundaries for its action.

Furthermore, in May 1979 the Brazilian weekly, ISTO E, reported on the agreement among Argentine, Brazilian and Uruguayan police that has allowed the "trafficking of political prisoners on the Southern Cone of the continent." On the same date, the newspaper FOLHA DE SAO PAULO reported that the cardinal of Rio de Janeiro, Eugenio Salles, "admits the presence of members of the Argentine police in Rio."

These abductions and murders, the latest example of which is the recent kidnapping of the top-ranking leader of the Paraguayan Communist Party, Antonio Maidana, who was residing in Buenos Aires, had their ideological reinforcement in the 23d Conference of American Armies, held in Colombia during 1979, at which the groundwork for the coordinated action of Southern Cone armies and police forces was laid.

It was in this context of joint action by the repressive apparatuses that the Fourth Congress of the Latin American Anticommunist Confederation (CAL) was held in Buenos Aires from 1 to 3 September of this year. Unlike any of the three preceding it (in Mexico, Brazil and Paraguay) since its founding in 1972, it had the unconcealed support of several military regimes, especially that of Argentina.

According to the statements emanating from the organizers of the event, the meeting "is intended to devise a strategy that will make it possible to counter the Marxist infiltration in the continent;" adding: "The Confederation is a private entity, but its recommendations are generally heeded by the anticommunist governments on the continent."

The verbatim congratulations sent by Gens Jorge Videla, of the country where it was held, Alfredo Stroessner of Paraguay, Luis Garcia Meza of Bolivia and Luis V. F. Queirolo, commander of the Uruguayan Army, left no room for doubt of the official nature of the conclave, which was chaired by Gen Suarez Mason, former chief of the First Army Corps, with headquarters in Palermo, Buenos Aires. The chief of the Argentine Federal Police, Gen Juan Bautista Sasiain, and the ambassador of Chile, Sergio Onofre Jarpa Reyes, did not fail to attend the opening ceremony.

As the Buenos Aires newspapers indicated, also not missing from the sessions attended by 200 delegates from 20 countries of the continent was the former vice president of Guatemala and leader of the ultraright wing National Liberation Movement (MLN), Mario Sandoval Alarcon, who attended in the company of an entourage of well-known "anticommunist leaders," such as Roberto Cordon, Julio Villarreal, Ramiro Fernandez Grandiz and Hector Ramirez, as well as Deputy Georgina de Piraval. Arriving to represent Bolivia were the officials Alfredo Candia and Luis Canedo Reyes, and the vice minister of worship, Father Luis Rojas (who was recently appointed by the Garcia Meza government for the purpose of attempting to cause dissociation among the Bolivian ecclesiastical sectors).

A representative of the Argentine Armed Forces, Maj Gen Cristino Nicalaides, commander of Military Institutes, received the members of the party, to whom he mentioned the "high honor" and "lofty mark of distinction" represented by the presence of such distinguished visitors on the nation's soil, adding that "those representatives have one common target, which is the threat hovering over the liberty and democratic way of life in our countries." He then noted that, "Marxism is an irrelevant philosophy which attempts to violate national honor, seeking to upset the foundations, the meaning and the philosophy of an entire way of life." In conclusion, he declared that, "These delegations are a true symbol of a Western awakening," and wished them success in this respect.

There emerged from the meeting expressions of support for the regimes of Argentina, Guatemala, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile and Bolivia, for their outstanding participation in the battle against "Marxist subversion." There was also a denunciation of the Carter administration's foreign policy, "as an instrument of a Marxist neocolonial plan aimed against Latin America in particular and against the developing nations in general."

Finally, the remarks of the Mexican anticommunist delegates, Rafael Rodriguez and Raimundo Guerrero, are noteworthy. The former stated that "a conspiracy is afoot against our nations, which is not only coming from Moscow and Havana, but also has bases of support in Washington and New York, with accomplices in Venezuela, Panama, Costa Rica and Mexico, and among quite a few treacherous bishops." He added that Nicaragua has been "lost," not for "lack of courage," nor "because the munitions were depleted, although they were meager. We lost Nicaragua because we are still unwilling to believe that there are many very powerful enemies behind the visible enemy." And he summed it up by saying: "This conspiracy is acting like a clamp in the jugular vein of our peoples and governments. On the one hand, the communists are fomenting chaos, terrorizing the population and launching guerrillas to murder with impunity, so as to provoke reaction from the armed forces and the forces of order; or else some horrible attack takes place which is later blamed on a right wing group."

The president of CAL, Gen Suarez Mason, gave the meeting an ostensibly more balanced quality when he expressed ideas on strategy that have presumably been discouraged: "This battle is without doubt more for the combination of basic individual liberties in jeopardy than the official convenience of the states (...).We want to convince more than to conquer materially (...). Our statements have the enormous value of demonstrating unconcealable realities which will certainly have an effect on the official policies (...) in our America."

And he added: "We understand the limits on our action. Neither the Latin American Anticommunist Confederation nor any international power or agency has a right to violate the sovereignty of states, attempting to impose on them its method of conceiving and interpreting democracy and liberty. Any attempt to impose on other Latin American governments one's own interpretations of democracy and liberty, in addition to being an intolerable instance of ideological and doctrinal imperialism, would catastrophically divide the anticommunist camp, destroying a unity which is indispensable."

He concluded by saying: "The Argentine Government, resorting to the legitimate means that are available and that can rescue us from the chaotic confusion which prevails, undertook the military struggle with determination and energy, without heeding the voices of disoriented external mentors(...) and succeeded in restoring calm and order. Hence we are valid witnesses to advise the unbelieving and to encourage the unwary and good combatants to aid the defenders of liberty and mankind."

In short, there will emerge from this Fourth Congress of Latin American Anticommunists major ideological reinforcement that is more precise and delineated for the repressive action of the Southern Cone dictatorships, the very instruments of state terrorism established in the various countries in an attempt to deter the advancement of the democratic processes on the continent.

But, while there are military toasts to their "victories in the battle against Marxist subversion," the peoples of our America are still learning that the defeats inflicted by the enemy on occasion are not such, but rather the painful but necessary steps in the process of accumulating forces for the definitive transformation of the structures of oppression. Let Nicaragua once again serve as an example.

2909
CSO: 3010

NEED FOR POSITIVE REVOLUTIONARY ATMOSPHERE STRESSED

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 24 Sep 80 p 2

[Commentary by Pedro Chamorro: "Unity, Reconstruction and Victory"]

[Text] It is a premise universally accepted by all the political and social sectors of our population that, in order to be able to reconstruct this country completely, there must be unity of action among all sectors, and, furthermore, that in order to be able to win the victory of the revolution, the material and moral reconstruction of Nicaragua is a necessity. The victory of the revolution does not consist solely of ousting Somoza; that was one of the prerequisites for being able to win it. The victory of the revolution stems from the economic and social (in health, education, housing, transportation, culture, etc.) betterment of the great majorities.

In order to achieve these goals which are truly national, it is essential to create a propitious atmosphere which will bring about actual national unity that is not so much political as patriotic. Because we are fighting a common enemy, namely, a really disastrous economic situation, in order to achieve that reconstruction, which the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] National Directorate has estimated will take about 4 or 5 years, production must increase, for without production there can be no reconstruction, and without reconstruction there will be no revolution.

Revolution is not distributing poverty, nor artificially fostering gratuitous enemies; revolution is creating more wealth and distributing it so that it may reach the most underprivileged classes, thus closing the gap between the rich and the poor. But wealth is not created by holding political or mass demonstrations, or constantly halting production, much less by calling everyone who does not think like a certain political group destructive names such as "mummies, counterrevolutionaries, traitors and reactionaries;"because the time would come when so many people were so described, and for harmless reasons, that it would appear that there are more counterrevolutionaries than revolutionaries.

In order to have unity, there must be understanding. Unity is not created with a "magic wand," while what is being preached is destroyed by a crude vocabulary. A negative vocabulary cannot produce positive solutions. Only positive, conciliatory and intelligent vocabulary and actions can bring about positive solutions: a national unity within a framework of ideological pluralism wherein we all respect one another and consider one another Nicaraguan fellow countrymen who want the best for our nation, some with one ideology and others with a different one, without setting ourselves up as almighty judges of intentions. For such an attitude means destroying and not creating; it means disuniting and not sticking together.

2909
CSO: 3010

ALARM EXPRESSED OVER COUNTRY'S INCREASING MILITARIZATION

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 2

[Commentary by Felix Pedro Espinosa]

> [Text] "Countries with an army become jailers of their own people." (Rodrigo Carazo Odio)

We Nicaraguans, using the only form of combat against the tyranny that was open to us, had to turn to arms when there was no other civilized alternative possible; everything had been tried and had failed: peaceful resistance, dialogue, plebiscites, intercession, etc.

We all agreed that only in that way could we win the victory and it was with this goal in mind, for this vital need that we saw all our people armed and fighting: from children, young people, women, to elderly people. A single ideal united us: Liberty!

It was the military imposition and armed violence against the people on the part of the tyrant which led us to take up arms "temporarily" in order to uproot this militarization from our nation and to enter in a new and truly civilian era, in which we would only have the military forces needed to maintain order, national security, and the security of our citizens: a trained police corps to protect all honest working people.

Nonetheless we are surprised to see that Nicaragua is now a nation with the largest armed forces in Central America: an army that appears to be the largest in the area, the police, the air force, state security force, and popular militias. And now it seems that even the fire department is to be militarized.

Every day we see great mobilizations and troop deployments in special trucks (recently purchased) equipped with guns, machineguns, rifles, grenades, etc., all over the country: Military Zone No 1, Military Zone No 6, Military Zone No 7, etc: thus read the signs throughout Nicaragua. Everywhere in the country large military complexes have been set up and constructed, and as we can see from their size and shape, they must have cost the Nicaraguan people millions.

To this we also have to add the military and militaristic lexicon that has become official usage throughout the country: everywhere we hear talk of general staffs, squadrons, columns, etc. Even organizations with a definitely civilian nature, such as the literacy program, have a military organization: the Literacy Army, Workers Literacy Militias, etc. This was deliberately done in order to try to disorient the literacy teachers and to get them used to taking military orders from above. This is further reinforced by the fact that some agitators among the literacy teachers have created the slogan of: National Direction: order! and that they have been named (without consulting them about it) FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] militants and guerrillas.

After seeing so much militarization and so much interest in making Nicaragua a military society, we should ask some questions about this.

Why are there so many armies and why is there so much display of high-power military elements and artifacts, if we are friends of all countries of the world and if none of them is interested in attacking us militarily?

Will these military movements inspire confidence in the working people who want to devote themselves with perseverance to the construction of this country?

Are we expecting a war?

Are we creating a police state?

And finally, how many civilian citizens will we have left in Nicaragua?

7679
CSO: 3010

VICTORIES OVER COUNTERREVOLUTIONARIES APPLAUDED

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 24 Sep 80 p 3

[Editorial]

[Text] The annihilation of Dimas and the main ringleaders of his gang, along with the capture of "Pocoyo," the destruction of the leaders of another counterrevolutionary group that was operating in Wiwili, and the recent arrest of Bernardino Larios have shown the efficiency of our state security forces and the armed forces in the effort to crush the counterrevolutionary groups who are conspiring against the Sandinist people. These achievements reflect the most recent results of the raids conducted by the forces of the ministry of the interior; they are a harsh blow struck against the counterrevolutionary gangs which are attacking the stability of our process and the peace which was won at the cost of a great deal of blood shed by our people.

It cannot be said, though, that the counterrevolution has been rooted out from our country, but we can say that with the arrest and annihilation of these individuals, new attacks, assaults, and aggressions against the people have been prevented. It is important to make it clear that, while the security forces and the armed forces are the specialized organs of the Sandinist authority used to combat counterrevolution, it is still the duty of all the organized people to wage this struggle in the various areas in which it crops up, so that its roots can be destroyed. To the extent that the people are better organized, that they are stronger politically, and the economy is stimulated, to that extent will the counterrevolution's room for maneuver and its social base be diminished.

Revolutionary Commander Humberto Ortega said on 23 August: "We are confronted with a permanent state of counterrevolution. While this revolution has been moving forward, winning battles like the literacy campaign in which our Nicaraguan youth took consistently revolutionary positions, while our working class led by the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] has been constantly deepening and extending this process, at the same time the forces of counterrevolution and of reaction have to that same extent been on the attack."

That is why, while we should rejoice about each victory won by the organizations which defend our revolution, we must continue to speed up the process of the integration of all the people in the tasks of organization, defense, and construction of our economy.

The statements made by Guerrilla Commander Lenin Cerna have showed the bond that exists between all the counterrevolutionary groups in our country. The ties between Bernardino Larios, Dimas, the FAD [Democratic Armed Forces], the 11 November group, and the former Somozist guards who are now in Honduras give us an idea of the plan that the enemies of the people had prepared to disrupt the stability of the Sandinist process. But with the destruction and arrest of some of the main ringleaders, they have suffered an overwhelming blow.

The revolutionary people are on the offensive, with the FSLN and the Sandinist militants in the vanguard; patiently, silently, day by day they are perfecting the mechanisms of defense to preserve our revolutionary conquests.

7679
CSO: 3010

FSLN SUMS UP RESULTS OF DIALOGUES WITH PROFESSIONALS

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 7

[Text] Guerrilla Commander Omar Cabezas and Agustin Lara of the Departmental Committee of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] held a press conference in which they summarized the major points that the commission touched on in the seven meetings that it held with various professional groups.

Omar Cabezas summarized the background information, discussing the proposal that was being worked out by the special commission appointed by the Council of State.

He said that the political parties that are not involved in the process and part of the sector that is strong economically wanted to make use of this proposal to set the professionals against the revolution.

He emphasized that the FSLN had not yet completed the draft of the bill because it had not consulted with the professionals.

He said that the FSLN had spoken with CONAPRO [National Confederation of Professional Associations] so that they could work together in these talks. Some members agreed, others did not. In the end the decision was made that CONAPRO would not go to the meetings, he said.

He added that this weekend the report of the concerns raised will be delivered to the FSLN leadership, along with some recommendations formulated by the commission.

Agustin Lara then spoke, explaining that after the seven meetings with the professional groups were concluded, they could say that the general outcome was quite positive.

These results came about because of the interest that the FSLN has in establishing contacts with all sectors of the nation.

He said that it had been determined that the professionals lack a solid and extensive organization.

He pointed out, however, that their interest in organizing themselves and joining in the work of the revolution was quite evident. He said that the political attitude of the persons attending the meetings was one of support for and confidence in the revolution.

This is significant, he reported, because the professionals who have shown their patriotism are quite an important group.

He added that there are other important elements included in the report which will be delivered this weekend.

Omar Cabezas commented that the ideas of the professionals were quite important; they form a common denominator which should become part of the Professional Regulation Law.

He added that the FSLN leadership will later indicate what steps will be taken, and that the commission had been appointed solely in order to gather ideas from the various members.

When asked about the major recommendations made by the professionals, he said that he could cite as an example the case of the architects and engineers. They said that companies in some cases won bids for five projects and that they worked on the five projects, but were paid as if they were only working on a single project.

Doctors asked that schedules be adhered to in hospitals, because when some doctors do not perform their duties, these responsibilities cause added burdens for the others.

The public accountants reported that the multinationals registered with the public accounting office were paying foreign public accountants twice what was paid to Nicaraguan accountants. This is a clear case of discrimination.

The chemists pointed out their need for protection, since they work in conditions which directly endanger their health if their laboratories are not properly protected.

To another question, Agustin Lara answered that now professionals will be entitled to take advanced courses; in the past these were offered only to an elite.

He also pointed out that the FSLN is the driving force behind the organization and unity of all the professionals of Nicaragua.

On the topic of professionals who have years of experience but who have not received their degree because they have not published a monograph, Commander Cabezas said that he knows that the National Council on Higher Education is studying this matter, and there are good indications that these professionals will be given credit for their years of work experience as the equivalent of a monograph, as their years of work have given them vast experience in their field.

He concluded by saying that all the professionals who attended the meeting deserved praise, and adding that they could not conclude without recognizing the magnificent work done by journalism by reporting objectively on all the sessions that were held with the various professional groups. And for the communications media which remained silent on the subject, he said that the eloquence of their silence reflects their attitude.

7679
CSO: 3010

INDUSTRY MINISTER EXPLAINS PROBLEMS, PROPOSES SOLUTIONS

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 1 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] Two principal points stood out in the speech given by Industry Minister Federico Cerda at the monthly luncheon of the American Chamber of Commerce of Nicaragua on Tuesday, 26 August, at the Intercontinental Hotel. The minister's speech, entitled "Present Industry and the Industrial Policy of Nicaragua," awakened great interest among Managua businessmen, who filled the Ruben Dario Room of the aforementioned hotel that day.

The two aspects of the speech were: the characteristics of our national industry's capitalist dependency and the new course the present government is trying to chart for industry.

